Missionary Policy The meeting of the Vermont Congregational Club recently held in Bennington had an open discussion on the subject of Missions, in which there was greater freedom of utterance than is common in the consideration of that subject. The Vermont Congregationalists have opened a door through which we imagine many others will soon pass. The question of missionary policy demands instant and serious consideration. The Rev. George W. Phillips, D.D., for instance, in the discussion at Bennington emphasized the duty of concentration upon fewer fields. That is important. The previous policy has been to extend as rapidly as possible, but Dr. Phillips argued that if one country could be evangelized at a time, in the end the work would be more swiftly accomplished. Finish Japan, China, and India, and then go on to other countries. But really there need be no undue concentration if there is only proper co-operation. This is the point which we would emphasize. The missionary treasuries are embarrassed, and many of them deeply in debt, and one reason is because there is so much competition between societies and so little co-operation. The missionary work in its present proportions could be administered with far greater economy both of men and means. If all individual societies would concentrate and co-operate, at least so far as to advise with one another as to what fields they should enter, there would be better service in all the fields, and few if any would long be without the leaven of missionary influence. One of the sad things of the present embarrassed condition of the treasuries of the various Boards is the fact that there has been so little mutual consultation as to how the work might be conducted more economically. Instead of that, a new force of agents has been put into the fields to raise the debts. Possibly no other course could have been followed, but we should like to see the experiment tried of all the American societies meeting with but one object in view, and that the consideration of the question how the whole work might be conducted with greater efficiency and economy. The result would be some very revolutionary changes, no doubt, but we believe that among them would be no contraction of salaries on the field and no reduction of appropriations. Does not denominationalism stand in the way of the wisest administration of the great and glorious missionary enterprises of the Church? And why should not the denominations co-operate?

Forward Movement in Australia About thirty-five years ago the Wesley Church in Melbourne was erected, and was intended to be a kind of Methodist Cathedral. It was regarded as the finest church building of the denomination in the world. At the present time there are few that are finer. It is a Gothic structure of imposing proportions, and accommodates about two thousand people. As a church for the "classes" it was never a success. Recently, however, it has been utilized in the interests of a movement similar to that which is led by Hugh Price Hughes in the West End Mission of London. Its location is favorable, being near to the center of the city and also near to many of the worst localities. The need in that city is great for something which, in the best sense, shall be a forward movement. For this work the Rev. A. R. Edgar has been secured. He is a famous open-air preacher, and is said by the writer in the "Christian World," from which we take these facts, to be hated by the publicans, or saloon-keepers, more than any other man in Victoria. He is about six feet six inches in height, and as large every other way as he is physically. Under the new order the great building is thronged both winter and summer. The subjects considered are level to the comprehension of common people. Manifestation of approval is welcomed as in a public hall, and all are made to feel at home. About four hundred are enrolled as members of the "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Club." The "Sisters of the People" are of great service in visitation. On Sunday evenings a brass band plays in front of the church, and sometimes marches round the neighborhood leading a procession to the church doors. Occasional stereopticon services are held, to the great delight of the people. Among the agencies used none render better results than what is known as the Sisters' Department. Four Sisters are in constant service. "One attends the police court daily to look after women and children who may be 'run in.' She also leads a large class, gives Christian instruction in a day-school, and visits among the sick and poor. Another looks after the converts who give in their names, and also speaks at evangelistic meetings. Another is employed in rescue work, living in a refuge for unfortunate women." In such ways these Sisters are proving themselves the true friends of the people. Another branch of work is the Relief Department, which uses a large warehouse as the center of its activity. There is a night shelter, for those who are out of work, in which are seventy beds, and any man, sober and destitute, can obtain one for the asking. Many are fed there, and it is a center of charitable work. The bakers and produce-dealers of the city have become so interested in this movement that they regularly contribute, and we read that "only once has a half-crown been spent in meat since the place was opened." These centers of the forward movement in London, Birmingham, Melbourne, and other places are more like the service originally rendered by Wesley and his followers than anything to be seen elsewhere in the world. The need of such a movement in Melbourne was as great as in London. It was far more sensible to utilize that great church for such a purpose than it would have been to sell the building and move the church to a neighborhood where it would be surrounded by the homes of the rich and well-to-do. The example could be followed with profit in many other cities.

Foreign Missions Again The "Review of the Churches" for the month of April contains a Round Table Conference on the subject of a commission to examine into the way in which foreign mission work is conducted. The Conference is the outgrowth of a suggestion made at the Parliament of Religions. Among the writers is Mr. Arnold White, who has traveled widely, and who is quite severe in his criticisms. "What we want to know," he says, "is whether it is worth while to spend another hundred millions sterling on Protestant missions as they are now conducted, or can we do better with the money?" He says: "We have spent seventy millions already, and are keeping up fifty-four societies at a cost of a million sterling a year." He thinks the public are not well informed as to the results of mission work as a whole. He says: "We have spent seventy millions sterling in teaching a lesson we have not begun to learn ourselves." By that he means to say that the churches at home have not reached the standard of the teaching of the missionaries abroad. Another writer is Dr. Cust, of the Indian Civil Service, who supports the views advanced by Mr. White. On the other side Mr. Eugene Stock, Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, and Mr. Wardlaw Thompson, of the London Missionary Society, defend the missionary policy with great earnestness. The former says that the character of the missionaries is steadily improving; that the annual expenditure of all Protestant missions is only equal to the cost of a single Cunarder. Mr. Thompson grants that in some respects the positions of missionaries are preferable to those who minister among the poorer classes at home, but claims that so far as that may be true it is a reflection on the home churches rather than on the foreign field. Most of the discussion concerns India, and is, as we said before, largely from the point of view of the Anglican missions. It has been our privilege to study mission work on other fields, and we are able to say that, however it may be in one or two lands, the statements of Mr. White and Dr. Cust are not true in all lands. The missionaries whom we have seen are devoted and self-sacrificing. Most of them could do better at home, if they were actuated by selfish motives. They are earnestly seeking the welfare of the people, and are tireless in preaching the Gospel. They live with the greatest frugality, and have proved their heroism in ways that do not need to be recounted.

Another Criticism Another criticism of the same kind as that to which we have referred is in an article published in the "Far East" by Professor Ukita, of Japan. Like Dr. Cust, he arraigns the nations which are only nominally Christian for sending missionaries to the "heathen." If sending missionaries assumed that all the people in the lands from which they were sent were Christian, there would be an absurdity in the whole missionary enterprise; but the Christians from among whom missionaries are sent are equally faithful at home. They are tireless in the great cities and on the frontiers. Foreign missions are only one branch of the whole service. The theory of foreign missions is that the people must hear and know the Gospel before they can have the strongest motives for living righteous lives. We do not send missionaries to Japan because we are entirely Christian in the United States, but in order that Japan may know the Christian Saviour. The missionary enterprise in Japan and India is only a small part of what the Church is doing. It is easy for the Japanese professor and the English official to sneer at England and America as unchristian nations. No one knows what truth is in that statement better than the Christian people who are not relaxing their efforts at home because of what they are doing abroad; but America and England know the Gospel as some other nations do not, therefore missionaries are sent.

Brief Mention

Last week the Rev. W. H. Davis, D.D., formerly of the First Congregationa Church of Detroit, was installed pastor of the Eliot Church in Newton, Mass. The church is one of the strongest suburban churches in New England, and its new pastor is a man who has been well tried in other fields of labor. During his ministry in Detroit a new and beautiful church edifice was erected and nearly eight hundred new members were received.

American and English Christians, among whom he is widely known, will sympathize with the Rev. Henry Loomis in the loss of his home at Yokohama by fire. Mr. Loomis is no longer a missionary of any Board; he represents the Bible Society in Japan. His denominational connections are with the Presbyterians, but almost all Christians who visit that Empire have received courtesies from his hands. His hospitality is large, and his position in the leading port of the nation gives him peculiar opportunities for meeting and greeting those who come from England and America. We extend to him our hearty sympathy.

The Rev. George Leon Walker, D.D., of Hartford, Conn., has been selected this year to deliver the course of lectures annually given at the Hartford Theological Seminary on the Carew foundation. Dr. Walker is well known for his historical studies, and his subject is "Some Phases of the Religious Life of New England, with Special Reference to Congregationalism." The titles of the individual lectures, with the dates on which they will be delivered, are as follows: (1) "The Religious Life of the Puritan Period" (approximate time, 1620–1660), on April 15; (2) "The Decline of Religious Feeling in New England" (approximate time, 1660–1735), on April 20; (3) "The Great Awakening and its Sequels" (approximate time, 1735–1790), on April 22; (4) "The Evangelical Reawakening" (approximate time, 1790–1859), on April 27; (5) "The Current Era" (approximate time, 1859–1896), on April 29. The lecturers in other years on this foundation have been such men as the Rev. Charles Cuthbert Hall, D.D., on "Qualifications for Ministerial Power;" President E. Benjamin Andrews, LL.D., on "Wealth and Moral Law;" and Maurice Thompson on "The Ethics of Literary Art."

The Home Club

The Parlor Lecture

The day has really come when the American woman would be justified in praying to be delivered from the parlor lecturer. The parlor lecturer now almost equals in number the insects that plagued Egypt. This is especially true during Lent. It may be that there is a desire to increase the gloom of the season that is supposed to be spent in sackcloth and ashes; certainly many women feel that sackcloth and ashes would be light penance in comparison with that which they pay sitting in overheated, unventilated parlors listening to rambling talks on subjects in which they have no interest, or one only just awakening. True, they are responsible for their own sufferings, and it is rather a curious state of mind, for they usually pay a large price for their experience. Every year this plague of parlor lectures increases in number; would that we could say in the dissemination of knowledge! Why is it that a woman who is kind-hearted, honest, and fair-minded will become sponsor for some woman—usually the parlor lecturer is a woman who has failed in everything else—and introduce her to her friends as a lecturer, when the woman has no equipment or training, nor is there any justification in her appearance in public in the light of a teacher, except her financial need, or her love of prominence. Now, in the first case, she is entitled to all that generosity can give her, but why in the world should this generosity be disguised by giving her the title of lecturer? Why cannot her friend, who wishes to help her, state the woman's needs to her friends, and make up a purse of money and give it to her? We all give away during the winter a great deal of money that does no good, and it surely is a pleasant thought that one has saved a gentlewoman from being hungry or cold or barefooted, or even unfashionable. But why should a hundred gentlewomen be tortured in order that one may meet a measure of protection? Is it not time that the intelligent American woman should rise in her might against this form of pseudo-charity? Is there anything more unkind than wrapping the cloak of pretense of learning about ignorance? What does it mean when a half-trained woman dares to appear in public with a series of lectures on subjects that are beyond her capacity to understand, about which she has never had, and never can have, an original thought? Why should we have women who are unequipped giving lectures? There are women who have something original to say about a subject to which they have given years of time, of study, of thought, and investigation; and the world owes them a debt of gratitude, in this day of rush and hurry, for digesting their subject thoroughly, and giving their thoughts to the people who will not take the time to read, and hardly the time to think. Honesty demands that a woman should be very cautious when she assumes the duty of sponsor. It is no light or trifling matter to get an audience of women together in these busy days, nor should it be done except when the sponsor knows that they will be paid for the time they give. The lecture season is practically over for '95, but '96 lies before us, with scores of men and women ably equipped to arouse new thought and ambition for learning, and to widen and deepen the culture of the women of a young nation; but back of them are hordes of men and women poorly equipped who will be paid for giving out ideas that are not their own, for they never had any, their need being the only reason advanced for afflicting the public. The pity of it is that the very class of people who need the very best teachers (for the parlor lecturer is a teacher) have not the standards which enable them to judge of good work. This it is which makes the unequipped lecturer possible and enables women to eke out a miserable existence in what they call a profession—but which is rapidly becoming a procession, to see which the audience grows smaller as we grow more intelligent. The parlor lecture has an office, and a noble one, but it can maintain it only as the projectors have personal ambition to stand before the public as its protectors against poor work. This mixing of charitable impulses and general sympathies with educational opportunities is nearly always disastrous. It is not the lecturer who is guilty, but the women who place her in the wrong position.

Physical Culture

The American Association for the Advancement of Physical Culture is, as its name indicates, an organization having for its purpose the awakening of a wider and more intelligent interest in physical education. This Association was organized in 1885 at the Adelphi Academy in Brooklyn, and while its growth has in no measure been phenomenal, it has been a steady one that indicated the earnestness with which the members were working to accomplish the ends for which they organized. Without doubt there is a wide field for this organization, for much that is termed physical culture is not so. This is especially true of much of the work done for children and working-girls, and very much of the work that is done by so-called professionals is conducive to harm, and establishes false standards—not the least of the great evils with which the American people at the present time must contend. The Association declares as its object the increasing of interest in physical education and the spread of accurate knowledge as to what physical education is, and to further a knowledge of the best athletic pastimes in the education of children and youth. Active membership is possible only to those engaged in physical education, but the Association has created an associate membership which will include all who are interested in the cause of physical education and who desire to be associated with the society. This Association has decided that branch organizations must be established. Any persons interested can secure copies of the constitution and by-laws, and such information as they need, by addressing George W. Fitz, Corresponding Secretary, Cambridge, Mass.

Child Study

The awakening interest of our readers in the subject of child study justifies the unusual space given in this column to this subject. The Department of Psychology of the University of Wisconsin has done and is doing practical work. A syllabus issued by it is of great value. The subject is, "Studies in the Moral Development of Children." The object, as stated, is to get the attitude of young children toward authority, with a view to determining what sort of discipline, instruction, and appeal is best calculated to develop in children a proper recognition of authority and readiness to submit to it. To get these data close observation must be given to the expressions of anger or willfulness when the child's voluntary actions are interfered with; the first acts of voluntary obedience, and the motives that promoted them. What kinds of punishment affect the child? Does he submit as without will, or is he made angry or sulky by interference with his plans? Is he affected by the manner in which a command is given? Does he yield to the authority of others than his parents? Does the form of command affect his obedience? Does the child disobey because of a strong, self-assertive spirit? Does he play and work harmoniously with other children? Does he lead or follow best? Keep the records of each child separate; nationality, age, condition of health, and peculiarities of temperament should be recorded. The condition of the child at the time of the act should be recorded. A child nervous or angry, irritated or calm, ill or well, will not in each condition act the same; justice requires that his condition should be known. This syllabus of child study can be obtained by addressing J. F. Morse, Wisconsin University, Madison, Wis.

Mothers' Club in St. Paul

Dear Outlook: I read with interest in the Home Club an article on "Child Study," and an account of the Mothers' Club of Buffalo. We have had a Mothers' Club in this city for two years, not for scientific child-study alone, but taking up the special physiology and psychology of woman, the kindergarten idea, the "new education," and all the difficult problems of child-rearing, from ante-natal influence to the perilous "age of transition."

Our method is in general that of the literary "Woman's Club" of the day, including courses of reading, papers and discussion by members, and frequent lectures by outsiders—physicians, clergymen, educators. This year we have had a course of twelve lectures on Applied Psychology by a Normal School ex-president, and look forward to another course upon Chemistry of Foods and Household Sanitation. You see we do not propose to neglect either the mind or the body.

I am glad to be able to add that three other Mothers' Clubs have lately been established in other parts of the city, through the efforts of our Board of Directors, including at present over one hundred women, and an Executive Board is about to be formed, consisting of representatives from all four clubs. We hope to extend this work very largely during the coming year. Will not others who are doing similar work correspond with us?

ELAINE GOODALE EASTMAN.

St. Paul, Minn.

Made of Pure
Cream of Tartar

No Alum, No Ammonia
No Adulteration of any sort.

Blood

That is impure is a constant source of danger. Circulating as it does to every part of the system, carrying nutriment to the nerves, muscles, and the great vital organs of the body, it is absolutely necessary that the blood should be pure if good health is to be expected. The great secret of the cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla lies in the fact that the blood is

Made Pure

By this great medicine. It is in fact the One True Blood Purifier. A great variety of diseases yield to its power because a great variety of diseases are caused solely by impure blood. All forms of scrofula eruptions, boils, humors, pimples, and sores, are perfectly and permanently cured by

Hood's

Sarsaparilla

The One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Notes and Queries

I have had a discussion by letter with an esteemed friend on the matter of religion. I want to submit a few questions to you and a page of his letter, where he speaks of his father, now between seventy and eighty, who has always been moral and strictly honest, but who is not a church member, and refuses to believe in the fall of man and many things found in the Bible. Kindly tell me if what he lays down as to his father's liability to endless punishment is correct according to Christianity as taught nowadays. Also if we are to take literally the account given of the creation of woman out of the rib, and what we are to understand in the matter of the sun standing still for Joshua; and, finally, if a man acts honestly in all his dealings, is charitable toward other people's failings, has sympathy for the poor and unfortunate, and detests the methods by which the rich by usury and purchased legislation pile up wealth created by others' labor, and legalize their thefts (allowing also that by bathing and by proper thinking he keeps himself clean physically and mentally), but withal fails to believe that Jesus Christ was miraculously conceived by the Holy Ghost, refuses to believe in the fall of man, and holds that no good God would ever write or have written in his book that verse in the Bible, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live"—must he, according to the Christian religion as now taught, be doomed after death to eternal torment or be "lost"? S. W. B.

Your friend writes: "Morality is not Christianity, and God requires more than the virtues named." We hold that in the truly spiritual view the two are one. His father's difficulty is threefold: 1. He regards Christian faith as essentially more than mere loving obedience to Christ, as our Saviour from sin rather than from punishment. 2. He regards morality as something apart from the spirit of loyalty to the Eternal Goodness, for he has not cured himself of swearing. 3. He imagines God to be responsible for the truth of everything ascribed to him in the Bible—especially in the Old Testament. False church-teaching has probably set him wrong on these points. The New Testament says that "the Father judgeth according to each man's works." Consequently God discriminates what is strictly a man's own from what his parents or teachers have put into him. In the case before us, this principle rules out all despair. Salvation is not getting into a place called "heaven," away from a place called "hell," but getting into a state of moral soundness and spiritual health. This is a thing of many degrees, from the most imperfect to the most perfect. So far as not completed here, it must be completed hereafter. But, in whatever degree, its vital principle is in the subjection of conscience to the law of God, with faith in God's saving power through our discipleship to his dear Son. Of course, we must see something of this saving process going on here, in order to hope that it will be completed hereafter. Not what a man believes about the birth of Christ, but the yielding of his conscience to Christ as Master and Guide, is of consequence to his real salvation. Christianity is no set of opinions, but a life of sonship to God in fidelity to Christ. The story of woman's creation and the fall is imaginative. The story of Joshua and the sun came from the fragment of a Hebrew war-song.

1. Please give me the distinction between the deity and divinity of Christ. Does the Bible teach the former or the latter? Do any churches hold to the deity of Christ? 2. Is faith an impulse or a certitude? 3. Is it possible to explain the existence of the spiritual nature of man as an expression of what is potential and prophetic of what is to come, and that its indefiniteness and obscurity are due to the fact of the imperfection or immaturity of this nature under material conditions? In other words, is not the spiritual nature of man in strict accordance with evolution and development and its laws, but limited under present conditions from this fact? 4. Is the intellect egoistic and the heart altruistic, and is it possible to bring these together so as to preserve the authority of both? J. W. B.

1. So far as any make this distinction, which not all do, the "deity" of Christ signifies that he was "very God of very God." His "divinity" denotes his godlikeness as above that of any other. In the various points of view which the Scriptures take, they teach both, in consonance with the underlying truth of an essential identity of nature between deity and humanity. The deity of Christ is an article of orthodox belief. 2. Incipient faith is an impulse: when fully developed, it is a certitude (see Heb. xi., 1). In the New Testament faith is the fellowship of love, trust, and endeavor with Christ, in entire self-committal to him. 3. By "spiritual nature" understand moral nature; then the indefiniteness will clear up. History shows a moral evolution going on, but at present it is largely in the embryonic stage. 4. We are not thus built in compartments. The raw material of our nature is feeling, and intellect is always involved in it. At first unreasonable and egoistic, as in a young child, it becomes reasonable and altruistic by culture. The authority ascribed to intellect over feeling is nothing but the authority of reasonable feeling over unreasonable.

1. I was asked the other day how Christ could be free from all conceit when he said, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly." What should have been the answer? 2. Is the age of Christ at his death known? 3. Is it believed to be really true that when man was created, the serpent had the power of talking to Eve, and that God walked and talked in the flesh in the Garden of Eden? 4. In the many passages of the Bible where Christ speaks of coming from heaven, as John vi., 38, does it mean that he really was in heaven before he came to this earth?

A SUBSCRIBER.

1. "Professors" of any branch of learning profess their qualifications, and are not deemed conceited, as they state what it is important to know. Conceit is in thinking or professing above one's measure—which Christ did not—and in a self-regarding way. Christ's spirit in his profession was not self-regarding, but philanthropical. 2. As he was thirty years of age (see Luke iii., 23) at the beginning of his three years' ministry, he must have been thirty-three at his death. 3. Scholars generally regard the Eden story as "a spiritualized legend," i.e., the product of the religious spirit, which worked up primitive traditions for the illustration of moral and spiritual lessons. 4. This and similar expressions (see John iii., 13; viii., 58) show that Jesus regarded himself as having been with God before he came into the world.

1. Can you tell me if there is a large printed and illustrated edition of the Bible for children? I want the Revised Version, and the illustrations the productions of the great masters. 2. What papers of an illustrated nature, both general and religious, are there that would be good to have in a family where there are children? Do you think such papers would be a good educational force for children? 3. What magazines and papers are the best to keep one posted in the affairs of the world—political, scientific, and religious? 4. What is the best New York daily for a minister? What the best Boston? C. L. S.

1. There is no illustrated edition of the Revised Version. 2. "Harper's Weekly" is our preference for an illustrated newspaper. "The Christian Work" is a valuable religious journal, which not only deals instructively with general news, but devotes a number of pages to illustrated articles. "Our Dumb Animals" (Boston) is an illustrated monthly of special educational value in a family. 3. "The Review of Reviews," "The Popular Science Monthly," "The New World," and "The Missionary Review of the World." 4. The only way to find out is to take a vote by postal card.

On Easter Sunday, April 2, 1893, Dr. Abbott preached from the text, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead" (Phil. iii., 11), taking the ground of conditional immortality. Is it fair to make this text look in that direction, when we know from other passages (e. g., Acts xxiv., 15) that Paul believed in "unconditional" immortality, or the immortality of all men? A. S.

Entrance into life after death is resurrection. This is what Paul's saying in the Acts is limited to. Continuance of life after resurrection is immortality. This Paul never refers to as unconditional. Such continuance of life most probably depends on power to live, and this depends on living obediently to the divine laws of life. The effort to "attain unto the resurrection," which Paul makes, has regard to something more than man's natural survival of death. Paul is striving for "the resurrection of the just," in that soundness of spiritual life to whose immortal continuance thought can set no limits. This idea is indicated by the peculiarly emphatic word he uses (exanastasis), whose intensive signification we can hardly reproduce in any one English word.

1. Please give me the name of an able book—not a large work—on theology from the standpoint of the school of theology known as the Progressive as distinguished from the Conservative. Would prefer a book by a Congregationalist, and by a moderate, rather than a radical or extremist. 2. Is there a book by Dean Stanley called "The Body and Blood of Christ," and, if so, by whom published and at what price? L. P. A.

1. See the essay on "The New Theology" introductory to Dr. Munger's volume, "The Freedom of Faith." 2. See chapter on that subject in Stanley's "Christian Institutions" (Scribners, New York).

Can you tell me the proportion of the population of the large cities who are regular or occasional church-goers? Also the classes which are most negligent in this respect. I. S.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

There are no statistics available. Canvasses of particular cities are occasionally made and the results published in the newspapers at the time, but that is all.

What is the authority for Unitarians to affirm that the doctrine of the Trinity as now formulated was unknown till the second or third century after Christ?

A SUBSCRIBER.

All church historians agree that the first Trinitarian creed (though some orthodox writers call it only semi-Trinitarian) was formulated by the Council of Nicæa, A.D. 325.

We are very glad that the following has been called out:

In your issue of April 11, page 683, in a notice of Tufts College, it is stated: "We doubt if there is another college in America, at least in the Eastern States, where it is possible for a student to take up the study of Greek after admission." I desire to state that from my own very limited observation there are two (at least) Eastern colleges where a student can take up Greek after admission; viz., Bryn Mawr College of this place, and Haverford College, within a mile of my house. In the former institution the "Beginning Greek" class is a regular course, and at Haverford such a course is always given when requested by three or four students.

C. J. R.

Please tell who wrote the eighteen lines beginning:

"O that mine eye might closèd be
To what becomes me not to see:
That deafness may possess my ear
To what concerns me not to hear!"

I have just met the lines alluded to in a manuscript written about 1809. That writer attributed them to Dr. Ebenezer Gray, who lived from 1697 to 1773. I suspect that Dr. Gray quoted, and the author of the manuscript made a mistake. I should very much like to know. E. S.

Where can I find the lines ending

"But in the ways of men I find him not"?

I think they are by Tennyson. A. P. A.

I want to know of the services of Romaine's Battery, from New York State, War of 1812. Can any reader refer me to a history or records that will give this information? A. R. A.

H. E. B.—I refer you for a history of the "Doomed Man" to the "Life of Dr. J. Addison Alexander," Chapter XIII., p. 415, and to "Forty Years' Familiar Letters of J. W. Alexander, D.D.," Vol. II., p. 285, edited by my father, the Rev. Dr. Hall, Trenton, New Jersey. C. K. J.

A Thief at Night and a worthless silver polish produce like results by different methods; one carries, the other wears your Silver away. We guarantee not to wear or scratch your Silver, although producing an unusual brillancy; absolute protection against loss when cleaning is thus afforded to all who use it exclusively.

SILVER ELECTRO-SILICON POLISH

Trial quantity for the asking or box post-paid, 15 cents.

Sold
Used Everywhere.

THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., NEW YORK.

The Spectator

The Spectator saw it stated in a paper the other day that there is an English "Society for the Prevention of the Desecration of Rural Scenery by Advertising"—or a society with that object, whether or not it is actually known by this cumbrous name. It is a most worthy society, certainly. The Spectator only wishes that it would establish a branch here in America, where there is a field for its activity as wide as the continent. But why, asks the Spectator, should this English society be exclusively "rural"? Certainly no city in the world is more obtrusively afflicted with the nuisance of staring advertising than is the city of London. "'Buses," for example, are so completely covered with placards in the interests of various shops, shows, nostrums, and wares that it is next to impossible to make out their destination. Again, in traveling by the Underground, the stations seem to be filled with announcements of everything conceivable except their own names. One is at a loss where to get out unless one has learned the trick of looking at the lettering of the small globes of the inconspicuous station lights. It struck the Spectator, fresh from a recent visit to London, as typically English to start a society to save rural scenery from vulgar advertising, but to grant to that same vulgar advertising the unrestrained license of excess in London, apparently without protest.

⁂

The English objection, then, is not to vulgar advertising in itself, but to vulgar advertising in certain places and under certain conditions. This explains to the Spectator, apropos of certain current comments he has noticed on the striking difference in head-lines between American and English newspapers, why it is that English journalism has failed to develop that end-of-the-century development of American journalism, the "head-line artist." English newspapers are ready enough to advertise their special "attractions" by all sorts of staring placards—like those which advertise shops, shows, nostrums, and other wares. Indeed, they do this more generally than do American newspapers. But they practice a commendable self-restraint in "heading up" these attractions in their own columns. In short, English newspapers do not take advantage of their own advertising space. This kind of self-puffery is apparently regarded as "bad form." It has been truly said that the absence of the American kind of head-line in English newspapers has much to do with their non-sensational character. This difference, the Spectator may note in an aside, has also much to do with the complaint of Americans in England that they can find "no news" in English newspapers. Missing the familiar signboards on which they have learned to rely, they cannot pick their way intelligently through long columns of type.

⁂

To illustrate the difference in sensational effect due to the difference in head-lines, the Spectator ventures to relate a little experience of his own. While in London he stumbled upon (such an "item" or "story" would never have been "stumbled upon" in an American newspaper) the evidence in a divorce suit brought by a well-known woman, a novelist. The head-line over it was of the most conventional sort: "Divorce Court; Blank, Judge; So-and-so vs. So-and-so." The fact that the plaintiff was a public person, at least a person in whom the public took an interest, was simply mentioned incidentally in the body of the article. On the other hand, the abhorrent details of the woman's unfortunate married life were given with a brutal frankness of speech impossible in any American newspaper of the same class. They might, perhaps, have appeared in a medical or sociological journal. Hardened by the American habit of taking newspaper horrors with his breakfast, the Spectator was able to digest these details without a qualm between chipping eggs, munching muffins, and drinking coffee. At the next table to his in the Metropole sat a clergyman and his daughter, a young woman of about twenty. Before them lay, spread open, a copy of the same paper. Between glances at his own copy the Spectator glanced occasionally at father and daughter. He pictured to himself the shock that good man would experience could the conventional British head-line over that divorce suit be suddenly changed into a "spicy" American head-line—to attract to it the daughter's attention.

⁂

"The truth of the matter is," said the journalist with whom the Spectator was discussing the subject, "that few people, even among newspaper men, appreciate the extent to which its head-lines determine the character of a newspaper, or how largely newspaper reform is a matter of reforming head-lines. Of course everybody of refinement is shocked by a vulgar or coarse head-line, whose words are startlingly shameless. Their obtrusiveness challenges attention. I recall a case of only the other day, where the death of a well-known college president was announced in his home paper by a 'scare head' reading 'He Has Gone Above,' and running across a double column at the top of the page. But there are many other examples of misused head-lines by no means so obvious. For, as pose and arrangement of drapery make the difference in painting between the 'naked' and the 'nude;' as the art of suggestiveness determines in writing the degree of lasciviousness; so the skillful use of head-lines in newspaper editing predisposes to a certain point of view and subtly instills a bias before a single word of the article is read." And then the journalist paused and gave the first two examples which came to mind.

⁂

Said a man well known in public life, in speaking of an editor of his own party with whom he had quarreled: "He never 'heads' me but to be-head me." The point of the matter was this: The editor always gave the public man "his say," printing his letters of protest, but seldom deigning to reply to them editorially. The editor's answer, an all-sufficient one, was the head-line that "beheaded." "Let me wield the scissors of a newspaper, and I care not who writes its editorials," is the dictum of an influential metropolitan editor. By "scissors" this editor is far from referring solely to the selection of articles to be reprinted. He includes as well the form of their reappearance, the head-lines introducing them. "The evolution of the head-line peculiar to American journalism," said the journalist, resuming the thread of his comment, "is entirely—one might almost say inevitably—the result of the evolution of the news page itself into what we know it to be to-day—so well described by Max O'Rell when he said, 'The American newspaper is a huge collection of short stories.' As you know, everything is called a 'story' in newspaper slang, however important, however serious, from a funeral to a murder trial. This word 'story' is more than a bit of exaggerated slang, for it states a fact. The 'story' quality dominates all others in American newspaper-writing. The American head-line adds the artistic finishing touch. The completed whole accentuates the deeply truthful comment of an observing philosopher—Balzac, was it not?—that 'there are in the newspapers no such things as principles—there are only events; there are no such things as laws—there are only circumstances.'"

⁂

The Spectator entirely agreed with the journalist in his serious view of the significance of the head-line. For himself, he confessed, however, to a weakness for American head-lines. He said that he should miss the occasional cleverness and humor of the "head-line artist" were the American head-lines reformed to conform to the staid English pattern. Especially did the Spectator recall a certain hearty laugh he once had over the ingenuity of this head-line: "875 Tongues Short." It introduced the account in a Monday's paper of a service in a once famous church whose congregation had been reduced to a handful by quarrels over the pastor—the account beginning something like this: "A congregation of just 125 worshipers opened their service yesterday morning in the Rev. Dr. Blank's church by disconsolately singing the hymn, 'O for a thousand tongues to sing!'"

You wish, in buying silverware for table use, or for any use that is to be long continued, to have positive assurance on the following points:

- That it is of sterling quality, 925-1000 fine;
- that it is of good weight, that it may have the strength for long service;
- that it is of good design, the general outline such as will permanently please the eye educated to the beauty of form;
- that the decoration be in harmony with the shape, and suitable to the purposed use of the article;
- that the marking be done in a finished, artistic manner.

These requirements we endeavor always to meet in a most carefully chosen stock, one of the largest, if not the largest, of solid silverware exclusively, in the United States.

THEODORE B. STARR
206 Fifth Avenue
Madison Square, New York

ALFRED PEATS
PRIZE
WALL PAPER
SAMPLES FREE—FREIGHT PREPAID.

We will mail you samples free of our Prize Patterns, 1896 Series, and our "Guide, How to Paper," if you will send us a description of your rooms to aid us in selecting suitable patterns and colorings.

OUR NEW $1,000 PRIZE DESIGNS are the handsomest and most artistic papers manufactured and are only 10c. and up per roll.

The New York World says:
None so beautiful, so perfect, or offered so cheap.
The Chicago Tribune says:
They will be in great demand by people of artistic taste.

Over 2,000,000 rolls of other paper,
3 cents per roll and up.
WE PREPAY THE FREIGHT.

Agents Wanted.—One Agent in each town who can furnish good references, to sell from our large sample books on commission, and to whom we can refer all requests for samples in their vicinity. Experience not necessary, Agent's outfit complete, $1.00.
Write to nearest address.

ALFRED PEATS
CHICAGO 143-145 Wabash Ave.
NEW YORK 41-43 W. 14th St.

When buying buy the best
LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT OF BEEF
The extract of beef that is all beef

Ideal Spring Beds

"Wide awake facts about sleep."
Our booklet, illustrating and describing them, sent free.
An up-to-date pocket map of your State sent for three 2-cent stamps.
FOSTER BROS. MFG. CO.
137 Broad St., Utica, N. Y.

Babies of 1866

were first fed by artificial means. Ridge's Food was the food used by mothers of those days. These babies have grown up and now the whose mothers well remember how their bodies were nourished and made strong by Ridge's Food, are still fed on this old standby, the original food of America. The reason is simply this: Ridge's Food is all nourishment—no waste—and easily assimilated. Manufactured all these years by Woolrich & Company, Palmer, Mass.

Babies of 1896

An

American Express Co. "Travelers Cheque"

is practically a certified cheque made payable to one's order, for a fixed amount named on its face, in gold or its equivalent, in the currency of the country, at 20,000 places throughout the world, by an extensive list of Bankers and Hotels.

More available, economical, and secure than Letters of Credit, Circular Notes, or other forms of Travelers' credit.

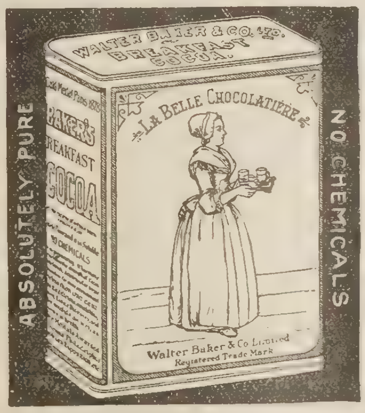
Cheques, rates, and further information may be obtained at any Agency of

THE AMERICAN EXPRESS CO.

or at the principal offices of the Company.

65 Broadway, NEW YORK
78 Monroe St., CHICAGO
45 Franklin St., BOSTON

Absolutely Pure–
Delicious–Nutritious



THE

BREAKFAST COCOA

Made by

WALTER BAKER & CO. LIMITED

Established Dorchester, Mass., 1780

Costs less than one cent a cup. No chemicals.
Always ask for Walter Baker & Co.'s

BREAKFAST COCOA

Made at Dorchester, Mass.

It bears their Trade-Mark, "La Belle Chocolatière," on every can.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

Two leading hymn-books

The Plymouth Hymnal

By LYMAN ABBOTT

contains many new hymns and tunes not hitherto published in this country, and also the best of the old that through long use have become endeared to the churches. It is essentially "a discriminating selection." and includes a sufficient variety of the old and the new to satisfy different tastes.

The Plymouth Sunday-School Hymnal

By THOMAS G. SHEARMAN and WALTON N. ELLIS

has only to be seen to be appreciated. Many schools of different denominations now testify to its superiority over all other Sunday-school hymn-books.

Write for specimen pages or a returnable copy of either of the above books to

THE OUTLOOK CO., 13 Astor Place, New York

1896 bien ou rien

The Riverside Press

MESSRS. HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND COMPANY ANNOUNCE THE FOLLOWING
NEW BOOKS:

Tom Grogan

By F. HOPKINSON SMITH, author of "A Gentleman Vagabond," "Colonel Carter of Cartersville," etc. Beautifully printed, and bound in a strikingly artistic style. Illustrated with nineteen designs by C. S. REINHART. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

This is the strongest and most striking story Mr. Smith has yet written. The heroine, "Tom Grogan," is a superb and original character; the incidents are dramatic, and illustrate some burning questions of the day; and the style and humor lend peculiar charms to a remarkable story.

Spring Notes from Tennessee

By BRADFORD TORREY, author of "A Florida Sketch-Book," "Birds in the Bush," "A Rambler's Lease," "The Foot-path Way." 16mo, $1.25.

A delightful group of papers, several never before printed, containing observations of birds and scenery in Tennessee, some of them on famous battle-fields—Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, etc.

Pirate Gold

A Novel. By F. J. STIMSON ("J. S. of Dale"). 16mo, $1.25.

A story of Boston in the middle of this century. It is not an historical novel, but reproduces with great fidelity and charm the social atmosphere of the place and time. The season will bring few brighter or more readable novels.

Four-Handed Folk

By OLIVE THORNE MILLER, author of "Bird-Ways," "In Nesting-Time," "Little Brothers of the Air," "A Bird-Lover in the West." Illustrated. 16mo, $1.25.

A very attractive book describing observations of various pets—the kinkajou, "living balls," the lemur, marmoset, chimpanzee, ocelot, and several kinds of monkeys.

Froebel's Occupations

Vol. II. of "The Republic of Childhood." By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN and NORA ARCHIBALD SMITH. 16mo, $1.00.

"Froebel's Gifts" has been received with great favor as of special value to both kindergartners and mothers. This volume continues the admirable scheme begun in that.

Tom Brown's School Days

By THOMAS HUGHES. From new plates, large type, and bound in cloth. 12mo, $1.00.

A very desirable edition of one of the most interesting, most popular, and most wholesome English books ever written.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.
Boston and New York

Christian Endeavor

Official Badge, Scarf or Catch Pin. Solid gold, $1.00; silver, 25 cents. . . . . .

Topic Cards Beautiful embossed designs.

Send for samples, free. Complete price-list of all supplies sent free.

United Society of Christian Endeavor,
646 Washington St., Boston. 155 La Salle St., Chicago.

AGENTS WANTED—To present to Christian people the grandest, best-selling book of the age, THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE HISTORY. Exclusive territory and attractive commissions given.
THE HENRY O. SHEPARD CO., Chicago, Ill.

NOW READY:

MARK TWAIN

An article on this popular author by his long-time friend

Rev. Dr. JOSEPH H. TWICHELL

With Portrait and Other Illustrations.

HOWARD PYLE

in a beautifully illustrated paper, tells the story of a journey made last summer

THROUGH INLAND WATERS

by canal-boat, from New York to Lake Champlain, during which he sketched bits of picturesque life and landscape by the way.

JACQUES DE MORGAN

the Egyptologist, describes his important discoveries during 1895 in a paper called

THE DASHUR EXPLORATIONS

With Illustrations and Maps.

England and America in 1863: A Chapter in the life of Cyrus W. Field

Showing the attitude of England toward the Civil War in America, in two letters written in 1862 and 1863 by WILLIAM E. GLADSTONE to the late CYRUS W. FIELD.

An analysis of The English Crisis is contributed by an Eastern diplomatist.

Professor WOODROW WILSON has another Paper on George Washington.

SHORT STORIES
By MARY E. WILKINS, JULIAN RALPH, and HARRIET LEWIS BRADLEY

IN THE MAY NUMBER
OF
HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York

"One of the most valuable collections of theological works in print."—N. Y. EXAMINER.

The International Theological Library

Edited by Prof. C. A. BRIGGS, D.D., and Prof. S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D.

A NEW VOLUME JUST ISSUED

HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE

By Prof. GEORGE P. FISHER, Yale University. Crown 8vo, $2.50 net.

This work is the fruit of many years of study and experience in instruction in this branch of Church History. It comprises not only an account of the rise of dogmas which make up the established creeds, but, also, of the course of theological thought and discussion from the foundation of the Church until the present time. It includes thus a comprehensive survey of modern theology in the Protestant and Roman Catholic bodies, with a clear statement of the influence exerted by the philosophical and scientific researches and theories of recent times.

"It is the classic treatise on its subject."—Prof. G. B. STEVENS, Yale University.

VOLUMES PREVIOUSLY ISSUED

Apologetics; or, Christianity Defensively Stated. By Prof. A. B. BRUCE, University of Glasgow. Crown 8vo, $2.50 net.

"The work is one of preeminent value for educated laymen, as well as for clergymen."
—Prof. GEORGE HARRIS, Andover.

An Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament. By Prof. S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Oxford. Crown 8vo, $2.50 net.

"It is the most scholarly and critical work in the English language on the literature of the Old Testament."
—Prof. PHILIP SCHAFF.

Christian Ethics. By NEWMAN SMYTH, D.D., New Haven. Cr. 8vo, $2.50 net.

"It is a noble book. In treating Ethics from the Christian point of view, Professor Smyth has made a notable contribution, both philosophically and practically."
—Dr. LYMAN ABBOTT.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

"The Prayer of Silence"

Part 3, revised and enlarged edition of "The Open Door," by J. H. DEWEY, M.D., author of The Way, The Truth, and The Life, etc. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1.00, postpaid.

J. H. DEWEY PUB. CO., 111 West 68th St., New York

THE HAIR 24th edition, 25c. (or stamps). Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy. By Prof. HARLEY PARKER.
W. E. LONG & CO., 1013 Arch St. Phila., Pa.
"Every one should read this little book."—Athenæum.

SONGS FOR SPRING TIME

HIGHEST PRAISE, FOR THE SABBATH-SCHOOL
$30 per 100 copies.
CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR HYMNS, FOR YOUNG PEOPLE
$30 per 100 copies.

Do not substitute inferior books because of lower price
The best are cheapest!!

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my INVISIBLE Tubular Cushions. Have helped more to good HEARing than all other devices combined. Whispers HEARd. Help ears as glasses do eyes. F. Hiscox, 858 B'dway, N.Y. Book of proofs FREE

D. Appleton & Co.'s New Books

The Warfare of Science with Theology

A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom. By ANDREW D. WHITE, LL.D., late President and Professor of History at Cornell University. In two vols. 8vo. Cloth, $5.00.

In this important, suggestive, and instructive work, which embodies the study and researches of twenty years, the author "simply tries to let the light of historical truth into that decaying mass of outworn thought which attaches the modern world to mediæval conceptions of Christianity, and which still lingers among us—a most serious barrier to religion and morals, and a menace to the whole normal evolution of society. . . . My belief is that in the field left to them—their proper field—the clergy will more and more, as they cease to struggle against scientific methods and conclusions, do work even nobler and more beautiful than anything they have heretofore done. And this is saying much. My conviction is that Science, though it has evidently conquered Dogmatic Theology based on Biblical texts and ancient modes of thought, will go hand in hand with Religion; and that although theological control will continue to diminish, Religion, as seen in the recognition of 'a Power in the universe, not ourselves, which makes for righteousness,' and in the love of God and of our neighbór, will steadily grow stronger and stronger, not only in the American institutions of learning but in the world at large."—From the Introduction.

The Reds of the Midi

An Episode of the French Revolution. By FÉLIX GRAS. Translated from the Provençal by Mrs. CATHARINE A. JANVIER. With an Introduction by THOMAS A. JANVIER. With frontispiece. 12mo. Cloth. $1.50.

"In all French history there is no more inspiring episode than that with which M. Gras deals in this story: the march to Paris and the doings in Paris of that Marseilles Battalion, made of men who were sworn to cast down 'the tyrant,' and knew 'how to die.' His epitome of the motive power of the Revolution in the feelings of one of its individual peasant parts is the very essence of simplicity and directness. His method has the largeness and the clearness of the Greek drama. The motives are distinct. The action is free and bold. The climax is inevitable, and the story has a place entirely apart from all the fiction of the French Revolution with which I am acquainted."—From Mr. Janvier's Introduction.

The Dancer in Yellow

By W. E. NORRIS, author of "A Victim of Good Luck," "Mademoiselle de Mersac," etc. No. 190, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

Mr. Norris is always entertaining, agreeable, and delightful, and he is seen at his best in this excellent novel.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers.

D. APPLETON & CO.
72 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

OUR BOOK,
How to Disinfect,
Sent Free.

We desire to mail free our complete illustrated book, prepared at great expense, giving rules in cases of infectious diseases, and also in everyday life. The care of sinks, sewers, etc. Remember — the intelligent use of true disinfectants is the surest defense against one half our sickness. Send your address to-day.

"How to Disinfect,"

* * "Sanitas" Co. Ld., 636 West 55th St., N. Y.

Longmans, Green & Co.

HAVE NOW READY

The Last Years of St. Andrews:

SEPTEMBER, 1890, TO SEPTEMBER, 1895

By the author of "Twenty-five Years at St. Andrews," etc. 8vo. $4.00.

⁂ No part of this volume has previously appeared in any periodical.

"This book has all the characteristics of its predecessors. There is much of it to attract and hold the reader—much that deals with English places and people, much which has to do with Scottish places and people, in which and whom all educated persons are interested. . . . Dr. Boyd is always characteristic, and he is always readable: . . . and, above all, an agreeable sense of humor. He has met and known many notable men and women, and has always something fruitful to say about them."—Globe.

Conversations Between Youth and Age

By ELIZABETH M. SEWELL, author of "Amy Herbert," etc. 12mo. 75 cents.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION

Problems of the Far East

JAPAN—KOREA—CHINA

By the Right Hon. GEORGE N. CURZON, M.P., late Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford; Author of "Russia in Central Asia," "Persia and the Persian Question," etc. With 9 full-page Plates, 35 Illustrations in the Text, and 2 Maps. 8vo, 468 pages, $2.50.

"In this New Edition, which has been carefully revised throughout, I have corrected a few mistakes that had crept into the first, and have introduced a good deal of additional matter, supplied or suggested by the events of the past year. The Revision Treaty between Great Britain and Japan, and the Treaty of Peace between Japan and China, are printed as appendices; and in a fresh chapter I have endeavored to sum up the main issues of the recent conflict, and to forecast its bearing upon the Asiatic situation."—Preface.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
PUBLISHERS
91 and 93 Fifth Avenue, New York

HARTFORD Single-Tube Tires are the standard single-tubes. Their success has caused a host of imitations. But who will have imitations when he can have the genuine?

IF IT'S A HARTFORD TIRE IT'S RIGHT.

The Hartford Rubber Works Co.
HARTFORD, CONN.
New York Chicago.

FREE Cut this out and send it to-day for catalogue. Bicycles from $15 to $60 You save 50 per cent if you buy A HIGH GRADE OXFORD. Shipped direct from factory. Don't pay agents' and dealers' profit. Oxford Mdse. Co. 305 Wabash Ave Chicago

LITTLE BOOKS ON RELIGION

Cloth flexible, 50 cents, net

1. The Upper Room

By the Rev. JOHN WATSON, D.D. (Ian Maclaren), author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush."

"They are eloquent sermons, all the more effective because they are strongly marked by the qualities of mind and skill in writing which have gained their author his conspicuous successes in another department of literature." -Scotsman.

2. Christ and the Future Life

By the Rev. R. W. DALE, LL.D.

"As good as anything Dr. Dale ever did. Most people know the kind of work which the author could do, and the tone and quality of it, the spirit and power of it. Well, here we have Dr. Dale at his best."—Aberdeen Free Press.

3. The Seven Words from the Cross

By the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, D.D.

"The contents are admirable. They consist of a series of meditations on Christ's words from the Cross, which are full of suggestive thought and devout feeling, expressed in very fresh and felicitous style."—Glasgow Herald.

4. The Visions of a Prophet

By the Rev. MARCUS DODS, D.D., author of "The Parables of Our Lord, Mohammed, Buddha, and Christ," etc., etc.

Dr. Dods is Professor of Exegetical Theology in New College, Edinburgh, and these studies in the Life of Zechariah, the prophet, will be a welcome addition to the many forcible and keen analytical expositions which this famous divine has already contributed to Biblical helps for the Bible student.

5. The Four Temperaments

By the Rev. ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D., Minister of Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh.

Dr. Whyte discusses in a delightful, half-humorous manner, with a vein of deep underlying earnestness, the relative differences and effects of the four distinct temperaments—the sanguine, choleric, phlegmatic, and melancholy—which are characteristic of mankind.

Other Volumes to follow soon.

The Teaching of Jesus

By the Rev. R. F. HORTON, author of "The Inspiration of the Bible," "Verbum Dei," etc. $1.50.

"The reading of Dr. Horton's book by those in sympathy with Jesus and his mission cannot but enhance their appreciation of the preciousness and profundity of his teaching."

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY
149-151 Fifth Avenue, New York

CUDAHY'S REX BRAND FOR FLAVOR
For Soups Gravies Sauces, etc. can always be depended upon to be the best when cooks use pure, rich Extract of Beef like Cudahy's Rex Brand
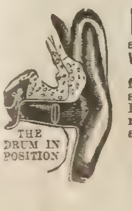
Write to The CUDAHY PHARMACEUTICAL CO., South Omaha, Neb., for free copy of "Ranch Book" and enclose 4 cents in stamps for sample.



DEAFNESS
and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums. New scientific invention; different from all other devices. The only safe, simple, comfortable and invisible Ear Drum in the world. Helps where medical skill fails. No wire or string attachment. Write for pamphlet.
WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Offices: 155 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
1122 Broadway, New York.

The Business World

The Official Crop Report Last week the Weather Bureau issued its first weekly telegraphic crop report of the season. It states that cotton-planting is now quite general in the northern portion of the Cotton Belt, is well advanced in the southern portion, and the early planted is coming up; in Florida planting is nearly finished. Winter wheat is reported as in excellent condition in Nebraska and eastern Kansas, and is much improved and looking well in Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee, and northern Illinois. Less favorable reports are received from Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and portions of New York, in some of which States it has been badly winter-killed, and is generally in poor to fair condition. No corn has yet been planted north of the Ohio River. In the Southern States corn-planting is practically completed.

Trade Conditions The reports of last week show a natural spring increase in general trade and a distinct gain in sales over the previous week. Imports are smaller and exports much larger than a year ago at this time. In the West the volume of business done is encouraging. The bank clearings are 6 per cent. larger than last week. The expected activity in iron and steel to follow the recent combination of manufactures has not yet come. There has been a slight general rise in the price of staples. Dun's Report quotes the Silk Association as stating that 40 per cent. of the machinery and hands in the country are idle, partly because of increasing Japanese competition. It adds that several more woolen-mills have shut down and some have reduced wages 10 per cent., while many are working only half-time, but recent advances by appraisers not only disclose heavy undervaluations in the past, but tend to check future imports. There is a slight decrease in the number of business failures as compared with the corresponding week of a year ago.

The Stock Market The week saw a considerable activity in the New York Stock Exchange dealings, with a general upward tendency varied by fluctuations. In part this was doubtless due to evidence of a better feeling about American securities in the London market and increased orders from English investors. The money market was decidedly easier, and the shipment of some gold to Europe had little or no disturbing effect. The sensational feature of the week was the rapid advance of sugar stock from 119 to 125⅞. This was all speculative, based on rumors of increased dividends and advances in price. There was a marked decline in General Electric stock. In the railway stocks, the St. Paul, Louisville, Manhattan, and Missouri Pacific shares all rose noticeably.

The Pennsylvania Railroad's Centennial A noteworthy event in the history of railroading in this country was the celebration last week of the fiftieth anniversary of the incorporation of the Pennsylvania Railroad. At the commemorative exercises held in the Philadelphia Academy of Music, on April 13, addresses were made by President Roberts, Governor Hastings, Mayor Warwick, Mr. Joseph H. Choate, and others. The growth of this railway system has been extraordinary even as compared with the enormous general expansion of railways throughout the country. It now operates or controls about 9,000 miles of road, and the many different companies it controls have in the aggregate 834 million dollars of capital and a revenue of about 133 million dollars. These roads employ about 97,000 men, have a pay-roll of $36,000,000, and possess 3,400 locomotives and 141,000 cars—enough, as an exchange points out, to make a solid train of cars extending from New York to beyond Chicago. The wonderful material prosperity of the Pennsylvania road has followed sound business management and a high standard of service to the public. Its bonds have always been eagerly sought by investors; and stockholders and bondholders alike have received fair and liberal treatment from the directors. The management of the road is entitled to praise for the high standard maintained in equipment and service, for the care shown as to the safety and comfort of patrons, and for the financial conduct of the immense interests involved.

The Elevated Railroads and the Brooklyn Bridge The "Engineering News," of New York, makes the following shrewd and pertinent comment on the proposed lease of the Brooklyn Bridge railway to the elevated roads:

> So much public approval has been expressed of the proposition made by the Brooklyn elevated railways to lease the Brooklyn Bridge railway and run their cars over it that the promoters of the scheme have been encouraged to propose terms for the lease, which ought by no means to be granted, and will not be, if ordinary business principles are followed by those responsible for protecting the cities' interests. The bill to enable the lease of the Bridge to be made, as introduced in the Legislature, provides that the lease shall be for the term of fifty years, and may be renewed for the same length of time. The annual rental is to be a sum equal to the average net earnings of the Bridge railway for a period of three years preceding the date of the lease.
>
> That is to say, the cities owning the Bridge are asked to turn it over to these companies to operate for what it is now earning, regardless of the fact that the growth in the cities of New York and Brooklyn is absolutely certain to increase the traffic over the Bridge railway; so that the average traffic during the life of a fifty-year lease would probably be at least double that on which the rental is based. Moreover, doubling the traffic, as every railway manager knows, will far more than double the net receipts. It is an axiom of railway operation that it is additional traffic that pays profits. The expense of operating the Bridge railway will not be very much greater when it is used by 90,000,000 passengers per annum than at its present rate of about 45,000,000 passengers per annum. The gross receipts, however, will be practically doubled.
>
> The fact is that not one valid reason can be assigned for leasing the Bridge for any such long term. Who is competent to say to-day what New York and Brooklyn will be fifty years hence? Were the New Yorkers of 1846 as good judges of the needs of the New York of to-day as are the present residents of the city? As a matter of fact, it is not a score of years ago since New Yorkers were giving away for a song valuable public franchises which, if their term had been limited, as it should have been, would to-day be returning the city millions of dollars of revenue.

Platinum The development of precious minerals in Alaska during the past few years has directed the attention of many pioneers of commerce and industry to that region. Just now the interest centers in gold, but it may be remembered that another source of wealth also exists there which will probably be an important factor in the development of our great Territory. It has long been known that platinum exists in Alaska, but it is only recently that any serious attention has been given to the matter. Platinum is generally found associated with free gold. At present the best known sources of platinum are in the mines of the Ural Mountains. Four-fifths of the world's production comes from this source. Three-quarters of the remainder comes from the gold-washings of the Pinto River in Colombia. The very great advance in the manufacture of chemical apparatus and of incandescent electric lights gives an increased use and value to platinum.

Cocoa, Tea, and Coffee For the past five fiscal years the average imports of crude cocoa have been about 20,000,000 pounds; of imported prepared cocoa, 2,250,000; and of chocolate, more than 500,000 pounds. It has been estimated that the present consumption of cocoa, taking one pound as producing one gallon, is about 22,000,000 gallons; as against 540,000,000 of tea, supposing one pound to produce six gallons, and a consumption of 930,000,000 gallons of coffee, supposing one pound produced two gallons. The rate of increase, however, is wholly in favor of cocoa, its consumption having been doubled during the past decade. The use of cocoa is constantly increasing, and as a result its cultivation has been much extended, Central and South America feeling the benefit. The tree blooms almost continuously, and yields two crops annually. The beans are removed from the pulp and are then fermented by being piled under sheds or buried in trenches before they are dried in the sun. This fermentation is supposed to remove the natural bitterness of the bean. The greatest use of the cocoa-bean of the finer sort is in the manufacture of chocolate.

Competition Between China and Ceylon Tea The "London Grocer" says that the tea trade at Canton is steadily declining. The export has been lowered from 10,000,000 pounds in 1891 to 6,500,000 pounds in 1893–4. This falling off is attributed, not to any deterioration in the teas themselves, but to the competition of Indian and Ceylon teas in the English market. So far there is not much competition in our own. The exports of Indian tea to the United States in 1893 are placed at 1,100,000 pounds; Ceylon tea, 900,000 pounds—not a very large proportion of the 93,000,000 pounds imported into the United States, of which China furnished 50,000,000 pounds, and Japan 8,000,000 pounds. Thus the American consumer prefers the tea of China, with less tannin to that of India and Ceylon. In these latter countries it is estimated that $130,000,000 of British capital is invested in the tea industry—$75,000,000 in India, $55,000,000 in Ceylon. The question now is, Will English enterprise be as successful in displacing China and Japan tea in the United States as it has in the United Kingdom? In this connection it is interesting to note that we consume annually only about one and a half pounds per head, while Great Britain takes five and one-half.

The Utilization of Aluminum Aluminum launches are to be tried in the French navy. An order has just been given by the Government to the Aluminum Company of Neuhausen, Switzerland, at present the largest manufacturer of the metal in the world. The utilization of this lightest of metals in the construction of small craft is steadily expanding. The two great drawbacks are, first, its cost, and, second, its liability to corrosion. The production of the metal has increased at a remarkable rate during the past decade—namely, from 150 to 340,000 pounds. The price in this time has fallen no less remarkably—namely, from $9 to 75 cents per pound.

Old Prices and New There has been a great change in the steel business from the time when, thirty years ago, Sheffield steel made from Swedish iron cost $250 a ton. Now, owing to the Bessemer process, it costs $25 a ton. In 1868 the price paid for paper in New York City was from twelve to fourteen cents per pound. To-day it is two and a half cents—a reduction due almost entirely to the introduction of wood in paper manufacture.

Electric Power on French Canals In the application of electric power to canals France leads the world. The latest successful trial has been on the boats of the Havre, Paris-Lyons Company. In these boats a transferable electric motor and rudder is used, while the motor is driven by current from storage batteries. The result has been an increase of two-fifths over the speed formerly attained with two horses.

Ship-Building The Cleveland "World" is authority for the statement that the year 1896 promises to be one of the greatest in the history of ship-building on the great lakes. The lake ship-yards will, in 1896, turn out over $9,000,000 worth of new tonnage of all sorts. These crafts vary in size from a seventy-five-foot tug to a 438-foot freighter. The greatest number will be of the largest sort.

FINANCIAL

AMERICAN FIRE
INSURANCE COMPANY
A.D. 1810.
Office, Company's Building,
308 & 310
Walnut St.,
Philadelphia

THEIR relation to the city's growth, and to neighboring improvements: the resultant rapid appreciation in values: and our selling terms: make our easily-bought lots desirable purchases for home-builders or for investors.

More money's made, less money's lost, in New York real estate than in any other form of investment.

Mutual Realty
& Loan Corporation,
American Surety Building, Room 17. New York.

What....
We've done for others...
We can do for you—Invest your money in Chicago Real Estate, so you will get a profit.

Send for our free book.

CAMPBELL INVESTMENT CO.,
624 New Stock Exchange, Chicago, Ills.

WESTERN MORTGAGES
DEFAULTED AND OTHERWISE, Bought for Cash.
CHAS. E. GIBSON, 45 Milk St. Boston, Mass.

SAFE INVESTMENTS
GOOD AS GOVERNMENT BONDS—DOUBLE THE RATE

5% 6% 7% Made in strictly first-class Real Estate Mortgages State, County, City, and School Warrants and Bonds, with a view to absolute security and prompt interest payments. Best references Correspondence solicited.

JOHN P. DORR & CO., Investment Brokers
Seattle, Washington

£ CHEQUES of the Cheque Bank, London, are the best for Travelers Abroad. Send for circular which tells why. Cashed all over the world by Agents, Hotels, Shops, Bankers, etc. Each holder has His Own Bank Account, draws his own checques and saves time and money. Frederick W. Perry, General Agt., 2 Wall Street, New York.

YOU SELL | WE BUY

Do you want to sell a WESTERN MORTGAGE or Western Land—avoid foreclosure costs—stop sending good money after bad—get a good 5 per cent. investment instead?

State exact location, condition of title, and your lowest price. Over $2,000,000 in Western securities successfully handled by the present management of this corporation. THE BOSTON REALTY, INDEMNITY AND TRUST CO., 33 Equitable Building, Boston. Send for our Bond List.

Broker for the Assured

If your application for Life Insurance has been declined, confer with me, giving date of rejection and full particulars.

JAS. A. STEELE, 45 Broadway, New York

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,
102 Fulton St., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 52-page illus. cat. free.

GOVERNMENT,
RAILROAD, and MUNICIPAL BONDS
BANK STOCKS and other SELECTED SECURITIES paying a fair rate of interest.

Harvey Fisk & Sons
24 Nassau St., New York

White Shirts
—unlaundered, for men and boys, at
63 Cents
Our justly celebrated "Great Wonder" White Shirt, at this price, is one of the greatest offerings ever made. It is made of excellent white muslin and has an all-linen bosom, fits accurately and launders perfectly. Send size of collar worn. The price—63 cents—includes cost of mailing. Money refunded, if desired.

Strawbridge & Clothier,
DRY GOODS. PHILADELPHIA.

House Furnishing
COOKING UTENSILS, CUTLERY
CROCKERY, FINE CHINA AND GLASS
EDDY REFRIGERATORS.
WATER FILTERS AND COOLERS
CEDAR AND CAMPHORWOOD CHESTS

LEWIS & CONGER
130 and 132 West 42d St., N. Y.

Arnold Constable & Co.

Cotton Dress Fabrics

"FRÈRES KOECHLIN'S"
Printed Organdies,
Printed Linen Lawns,
Galatea Cloths,
Toile du Nord.

ECRU LINONS
Grass Cloths,
Striped and Glacé Batiste,
Plain and Fancy Piqués,
White and Printed Dimities.
White Emb'd Mulls and Nainsooks

"D. & J. Anderson's"
ZEPHYRS

Broadway & 19th st.
NEW YORK

Correspondence

"Ought All to be Paid Alike?"

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Your correspondent "T.," in The Outlook for March 21, has been "delivered from a very subtle and dangerous fallacy" only to fall into a greater one. He says, "Each man is entitled to receive the product of his labor, or its equivalent."

All life consists of a balanced receipt and expenditure of energy, physical or psychic. If the two be not balanced, the life is imperfect. The expenditure is as essential as the receipt. The rejection of carbonic acid gas from the lungs is as necessary as the supply of fresh air to the nostrils. Excretion is as wholesome as accretion; congestion as dangerous as starvation. Life cannot but breathe out activity; otherwise it chokes.

Labor is a vital necessity, to free the system of accumulated energy. Too little activity is as bad as too little food. The nation's danger lies in its unemployed more than in its overworked or its underfed. The tramp and the idle rich, instead of lying at the extremes of social difference, constitute a single class; occupation would be a boon to either alike.

Next: for a man to attempt to retain the results of his own labor, of the activity which he has just rejected, is as a dog returning to his vomit. Christianity and biology agree in proclaiming it unwholesome. All schools of morality teach that labor can bring the laborer happiness only when he is indifferent as to who may derive the benefit from it. Consider the lilies of the field, how they must continually reject what is food and breath for us, and how they thrive on that which, if insanely retained in our own organisms, must lead to convulsions and death.

This is the law of Life and Love, of beauty and strength, individual and national—that we must labor or suffocate; that when our activities are freely distributed to those about us, they bring happiness and repose, that when they are selfishly hoarded their nectar turns to gall upon the lips.

We all agree to this as abstract truth. Socialism dares to adopt it as a concrete policy of social law; for it is plainly true to-day that the choice between idleness and industry, or between wholesome and pernicious activity, is not free to the individual.

So, as long as we attempt to have a wage system at all, on whatever scale, we shall have pecuniary temptation to unconscious suicide by economic constipation; just so long we shall have wide questioning as to the goodness of life, convulsions individual and national, and final death. Wholesome national life we shall have only when its katabolism is unimpeded, when the Nation spreads before its members its store of riches in the same way that a university offers to its students, without fear of loss, its great treasure of knowledge, or as Nature arrays before her children her bounty of foods and poisons—for each to take free choice therefrom, to absorb what he may, and to live or die in consequence. And we shall then find, as nature and the universities have already found, that every abstraction increases the store, and that there is no temptation or possibility of the substitution of individual abuse of the privilege for the present incalculable waste of wealth and opportunity through strife, ambition, and the worst passions engendered by the tension between gluttony and starvation side by side.

This is scientific socialism. S. A. R.

To the Editors of The Outlook:

If the suggestion given by your correspondent "T." in your issue of March 21 delivered him from the "subtle and dangerous fallacy" of the doctrine of equal wages, I must say that his mental processes are beyond my comprehension. In the highly specialized labor of modern society it is manifestly inconvenient that each should have the product of his own labor. The products of the labor of President Cleveland, Dr. Storrs, or Dr. Calomel, undoubtedly would not prove nourishing for a daily diet. And it is in the settlement of the equivalents of labor product that the whole question rests. Society settles this, the Socialist believes, unjustly. What honest work is superior to other honest work? The object of all honest work is the good of society. The good of society rests upon physical well-being, and without this there can be no other good, intellectual, moral, or spiritual. It is therefore evident that the laborer who repairs a sewer, the surgeon who sets a broken bone, the college professor who imparts knowledge, and the clergyman who converts souls, are equally working for the good of society, and the labor of one is equivalent to that of another. There is no superior or inferior work, and if education were more widely diffused than it is this would be readily seen.

M. B.

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Your correspondent "T." says, in issue of March 21, regarding the question whether all honest endeavor should receive the same wage, "Each man is entitled to receive the product of his labor or its equivalent. To give him more is charity; to give him less, robbery."

Let me ask: Under a Socialism based on the brotherhood of man, would not those incapacitated for work, the invalids and injured, receive their share of the total product as a right, not as charity? If so—and the thought of the true relation of members of a family shows the reasonableness of such provision—would not the mentally unsound be similarly treated? Then why not the man who does his best, even though he be not so gifted as his neighbor? Again, the farmer whose efforts have been brought to naught by a hail-storm, for example, according to "T." should receive nothing but charity. Certainly this is unfair.

It should be remembered that the accompaniments of superior ability under Socialism would not be material in their nature. The incentive to improvement and the best work would be such as secure the best work now—viz., promotion in accordance with proven ability. There would be an increase in responsibility and scope of work required of those able to take higher rank. C. H. L.

Pomona, Cal.

An Appeal

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Many, if not all, of your readers doubtless know of the Jerry McAuley Cremorne Mission, which for over fourteen years has been located at 104 West Thirty-second Street, New York. For the past four years the Rev. and Mrs. Charles E. Ballou have been the superintendents in charge, and a nobler work was never undertaken or more faithfully prosecuted than by these two consecrated people. For many years I have been deeply interested in this Mission, and for a year have been one of its trustees, and am now its treasurer. Prevailing "hard times" have seriously affected its finances, and the necessary income to maintain the work is most difficult to obtain. I write you in the earnest hope that you will give the letter a place in your valuable paper, and that it will be read by those whose sympathy will be stirred, and generous donations made.

Time or space will not permit me to give a detailed account of the results of the work. Suffice it to say that great numbers of men and women have been helped, uplifted, and saved. Characters wrecked by dissipation have been purified, and untold blessings received. Who dare affirm that this is not God's work? Unless Christian men and women aid in its support, the work will be seriously crippled, and may have to be given up, so I make this appeal through The Outlook, knowing the interest it takes in all practical work, and believing that help will be given.

Donations may be sent to the following address:

CHARLES M. JESUP, Treasurer,
37 Wall Street, New York.

The Single Tax

To the Editors of The Outlook:

I protest against The Outlook's allowing a contributor to inform its readers about the single-tax campaign in Delaware, who is capable of saying that the "main proposition" of "the single-tax doctrine," "as expressed in its own newspaper, 'Justice,'" is this: "In round numbers, about $1,300,000 is raised in Delaware by the present system of taxation. The United States census gives the total valuation of Delaware real estate as $129,182,087. As a rule, it has been found that land values are about equal to the value of the improvements, and therefore Delaware land values amount to about $65,000,000. A tax of 2 per cent. on the land values of Delaware would, therefore, raise $1,300,000, which is almost exactly the amount raised under the present system." This is not the main proposition of the single-tax doctrine, and every one who reads "Justice" knows that it is not the main proposition of the single-tax doctrine as expressed in "Justice."

A true statement of the main propositions of the single-tax doctrine, as expressed in "Justice" and elsewhere, might run somewhat as follows: Taxes on personal property discourage industry and saving, besides encouraging dishonesty and perjury. Taxes on buildings and other improvements on real estate discourage building and improvement. A tax on the value of land discourages nothing but speculation. It tends to prevent the holding of valuable land idle, and to induce every landholder to put his land to its best use. Taxes on personal property and improvements diminish the demand for labor and make wages lower. The tax on land values tends to increase the demand for labor and to make wages higher. Moreover, all things which are produced by labor belong of right to the producer, and no part of them ought to be taken from him by force or by the power of the State. But the land, which the Creator provided, and which no man has made, belongs of right to no man, but to all in common; and out of the value of it justice requires that the common expenses be paid. C. E. E.

MAJESTIC
BICYCLES

On installments. $20 down and $10 month, or $15 down and $2.50 week.

$$$ less than anything of equal price upon the market, and why? Perhaps it's because others have not the manufacturing facilities we have, or perhaps it's simply that they "won't."

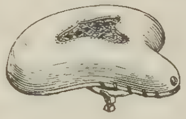
Hulbert Safety Cycle Suit

SARAH BERNHARDT says hers is "pretty as a city costume, gives such complete freedom of movement, and leaves to the woman all her natural grace."

The general appearance of the skirt is that of a stylish walking costume. It looks as well off the wheel as on, and although the possibility of its adjustment makes it a perfect dress for walking, or for use on a woman's model wheel or a man's model bicycle, and for golf, skating, mountaineering, etc., yet its appearance throughout all its various changes is in every instance strictly en rapport, though never conspicuous.

Skirt, $10

Mesinger Rattan Saddle



Built by men who have spent their lives making saddles. The saddles overcome all injurious pressure.

$3.50

Hulbert Air Brake

Fast riding safe when controlled by our air brake. Does not injure tire.

$3.50

HULBERT BROS. & CO.

Men and Women's Sporting Outfits and Costumes

26 WEST 23d STREET
NEW YORK

Ball=Bearing
Bicycle Shoes.

They are made in many styles—high or low-cut—Corrugated Soles—Pratt Fasteners secure laces without tying.

Price, Black, $3.00, Tan, $3.50. Ladies' Covert Cloth Knee Boot, $6.00.

Sold by dealers everywhere.
If yours does not keep them shoes will be sent prepaid on receipt of price.
Be sure this Trade-Mark is stamped on heel.
Handsome Booklet Free.
C. H. Fargo & Co.,
CHICAGO.

Kiamensi Home for Epileptics

A quiet rural retreat under the constant personal care and professional supervision of experienced specialists.
A home—not an Asylum.
For particulars address
HORACE BRADLEY, M.D., Box 262, Wilmington, Del.

The Unscrupulous Merchant who tries to make you believe some other skirt binding is as good as

S·H·& M·
REGISTERED TRADE MARK.

Bias Velveteen Skirt Binding should be taught a lesson—buy it elsewhere.

Look for " S. H. & M.," on the Label, and take no other.

If your dealer will not supply you we will.

Send for samples showing labels and materials, to the S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, New York City.

EVERY INCH OF IT FITS

At your dealers or sent post-paid on receipt of price, $1.25, in white, drab, or black.

Aurora Corset Co. 465 La Salle St., AURORA, ILL.

—A—

Delicate, Delicious Dish

For Breakfast.

Superior to Oatmeal as Wheat does not overheat the blood; Economical, costing less than 1 cent each person when cooked as mush,

WHEATLET

Is absolutely the Best Cereal Food in the world. Uncooked by steam it retains the Rich Nut-like Flavor of wheat in its natural condition.

Sold in 2 lb packages by All Leading Grocers.

FRANKLIN MILLS CO., LOCKPORT, N. Y.

The Manassas Industrial School

Mrs. Burton Harrison, who has for the past two winters been serving as treasurer in New York for the Manassas Industrial Schools, is to be succeeded in that capacity by Mrs. Henry E. Howland, 14 West Ninth Street, New York City, who has consented to take Mrs. Harrison's place during her coming absence in Europe. Mrs. Harrison reports for the work of 1896 in New York a total of $723.62 subscribed by friends of the schools, and passing through her hands to the treasurer in Washington. To bring this sum to one thousand dollars now would be to lift from the schools a burden of debt from which it is most desirable that they should be relieved in order to enable them to go on to their goal of independence, and any contributions sent to Mrs. Howland will be forwarded, as before, to the treasurer in Washington.

Books Received

AMERICAN BOOK CO., NEW YORK

Mairet, Jeanne (Madame Charles Bigot). La Tâche du Petit Pierre. Arranged by Edith Healy. 35 cts.
Nodier. Le Chien de Brisquet, and Other Stories. Edited by L. C. Syms. 35 cts.

CHICAGO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY PRESS, CHICAGO

Gilbert, George H., D.D. The Student's Life of Jesus.

CIVIC CLUB, PHILADELPHIA

Civic Club Digest of the Educational and Charitable Institutions and Societies in Philadelphia. Introduction by S. McCune Lindsay.

HENRY T. COATES & CO., PHILADELPHIA

Lillie, Lucy C. Ruth Endicott's Way. $1.25.

COPELAND & DAY, BOSTON

Cawein, Madison. Undertones. 75 cts.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO., NEW YORK

Rod, Édouard. The White Rocks. Translated from the French. $1.25.

J. H. DEWEY PUBLISHING CO., NEW YORK

Dewey, J. H., M.D. The Open Door; or, the Secret of Jesus. 50 cts.

DODD, MEAD & CO., NEW YORK

Rutherford, Mark. Clara Hopgood. Edited by Reuben Shapcott. $1.25.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., BOSTON

Stimson, F. J. (J. S. of Dale). Pirate Gold. $1.25.
Miller, Olive Thorne. Four-Handed Folk. $1.25.
Torrey, Bradford. Spring Notes from Tennessee. $1.25.
Smith, F. Hopkinson. Tom Grogan. $1.50.
Wiggin, Kate Douglas. and Nora A. Smith. Froebel's Occupations. $1.

HUNT & EATON, NEW YORK

Ritter, Eli F. Moral Law and Civil Law. 90 cts.
McAllister, Agnes. A Lone Woman in Africa. $1.

GEORGE W. JACOBS & CO., PHILADELPHIA

Lewis, Rev. W. P., D.D. The Life to Come. 75 cts.

CHARLES H. KERR & CO., CHICAGO

Lewis, Eugene C. A History of the American Tariff, 1789–1860. 25 cts.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., NEW YORK

Hamlin, A. D. F. A Text-Book of the History of Architecture. $2.
Sewell, Elizabeth M. Conversations Between Youth and Age. 75 cts.

MACMILLAN & CO., NEW YORK

A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles. Edited by Dr. James A. H. Murray. Vol. IV. (Field—Fish). 60 cts.
Carleton, William. Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry. Edited by D. J. O'Donoghue. $1.50.
Channing, Edward. The United States of America. 1765–1865. $1.50.
Bishop of Ripon, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Dean of Canterbury, and Others. On Sermon Preparation. $1.
Tennyson, Alfred, Lord. Idylls of the King. I. (People's Edition.) 45 cts.
Tennyson, Alfred, Lord. The Brook and Other Poems. (People's Edition.) 45 cts.
Hume, Martin A. S. The Courtships of Queen Elizabeth. $3.50.

MAYNARD, MERRILL & CO., NEW YORK

Kotzebue, August von. Die Deutschen Kleinstädter. Edited by Rev. J. H. O. Matthews and W. H. Witherby. 40 cts.
Souvestre, Emile. Le Chirurgien de Marine. Edited by Arthur H. Solial.

PRESTON & ROUNDS, PROVIDENCE

Rogers, Horatio. Mary Dyer, the Quaker Martyr.

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, LTD., NEW YORK

King, Rev. James. Dr. Jameson's Raid. 50 cts.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, NEW YORK

Fisher, George Park, D.D. History of Christian Doctrine. $2.50.
Hoffmann, E. T. W. Weird Tales. Translation from the German. Biographical Memoir by J. T. Bealby. 2 Vols. $2.50.
Johnson, Samuel. Lives of the Poets. With Notes by Arthur Waugh. Vol. I. $2.50.
Locker-Lampson, Frederick. My Confidences. $5.
Goodwin, Maud Wilder. Dolly Madison. $1.25.
Hefele, Rt. Rev. Charles J., D.D. A History of the Councils of the Church. Vol. V. Translated and Edited by William R. Clark. (Imported.) $4.50.
Field, Eugene. A Little Book of Western Verse; A Little Book of Profitable Tales; Second Book of Verse; Poems of Childhood; The Holy Cross, and Other Tales.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., NEW YORK

Setoun, Gabriel. Robert Urquhart. $1.50.

THOMAS WHITTAKER, NEW YORK

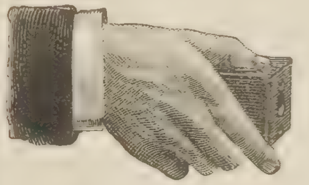
Fowler, A. Popular Telescopic Astronomy. 60 cts.

What Rudyard Kipling Thinks of the Pocket Kodak

"I can only say that I am amazed at the excellence of the little Kodak's work."

Rudyard Kipling

Booklet free, tells all about it.



Pocket Kodak loaded for 12 pictures, 1½ x 2 in. $5.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.
Rochester, N. Y.

CABOT'S CREOSOTE SHINGLE STAINS

Are 50% cheaper than paint,
Cost 50% less to apply,
Look 100% better than paint.

The colors are softer and richer—nearer to nature—and the Creosote makes the wood impervious to decay.

23 Samples of Stained Wood, with colored sketches, sent on application.

SAMUEL CABOT, Sole Mfr., 81 KILBY ST., BOSTON, MASS.

Agents at all Central Points

It's easy to feed

some people, but proper nourishment for the invalid, convalescent and dyspeptic is hard to obtain.

Somatose

is a perfect Food and Tonic for the pale, thin anæmic, dyspeptic and overworked.

Somatose strengthens and nourishes; restores the appetite and increases the weight.

Somatose is for sale by all druggists in 2-oz., ¼, ½ and 1-lb. tins.

Somatose - Biscuit, palatable and strengthening.

Runkel Bros.' Somatose - Cocoa, for nursing mothers, invalids and convalescents. A pleasant and strengthening beverage for table use Runkel Bros.' Somatose - Chocolate for eating and drinking

All druggists. Descriptive pamphlets free of Schieffelin & Co., New York, Sole Agents.

About People

—It is stated in Royalist circles at Paris that the Pope will present the golden rose this year to the wife of Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria.

—According to the latest official statistics, Herr Krupp, the gunmaker, of Essen, is the wealthiest Prussian subject. He pays taxes on a declared income of nearly $1,800,000.

—It is stated that King George of Greece said to one of the American athletes at the recent Olympic games that he lived in hope of visiting this country at a date not far distant.

—The last survivor of those who rode on Stephenson's first locomotive died recently in New Zealand. His name was Crawford Marley, and he was eighty-three years old. He was a small boy when the trial trip of the locomotive was made, and secured permission to ride as a reward for helping to carry water to fill the tank.

—Mr. Gladstone recently made a long speech at the opening of the North Wales and Liverpool Railway, which, though only fifteen miles long, for the first time connects Wales directly with Liverpool, running over the Dee and under the Mersey. He explained that though his doctors had strictly forbidden his speaking at public meetings, he did not consider the opening of a railway to be a public celebration. Hawarden is on the line of the road.

—Dr. Samuel Wilks, the new President of the Royal College of Physicians, is a clinical physician and pathologist of great repute. He entered Guy's in 1843, qualified in surgery in 1848, and was graduated M.D. in the London University in 1850. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society and a member of the Senate of the University of London. His lectures on diseases of the nervous system and his articles in the reports of Guy's Hospital are of world-wide celebrity.

—Manuel Garcia, the once famous singer, lately celebrated the ninety-first anniversary of his birth. Garcia was born in Madrid in 1805. With his father he went to Naples, where he became a pupil of the tenor Anzani. In 1825 he came to New York, where he sang, among others, the part of Figaro in "The Barber of Seville." Later he became professor at the Paris Conservatory, and also at the Royal Academy of Music in London. Jenny Lind was one of his pupils.

—As Queen Victoria was in France recently when the French census returns were taken, her name will be included among the residents of France. So, at least, it is asserted by a London paper, which points out that many other royal persons will also be registered in the schedules. Among them are the Prince of Wales, Princess Beatrice, the King of the Belgians, Princess Clementine, the Dowager Empress of Russia, the Czarowitz, the Grand Duke Michael, the Grand Duke Alexis, the Grand Duchess Olga, the Duke of Leuchtenberg, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenberg-Schwerin, and several others.

—"Our readers will remember," says the "Westminster Gazette," "accounts that have appeared in this paper of 'Another Father Damien,' Don Unia, the lepers' chaplain at the lazzaretto of Agua de Dios. After partial recovery from apparently hopeless illness, he resumed his work among the lepers, again fell sick, and was sent to Italy, but only to die. He passed away peacefully a little while ago at the mother house of his order (the Salesians), at Turin, having lived, indeed, few years, but a superabundantly full life. He did not die of leprosy. He succumbed to a complication of maladies contracted in the arid and sorching mountains of Colombia."

—A writer in the "Youth's Companion" recalls a story that illustrates Bismarck's magnanimity in his earlier days. Count Rechberg called on him once to show him a dispatch from his Government instructing the Count to vote with Prussia at the next meeting of the Diet. Bismarck read the document and returned it to the Count, saying: "This is evidently a mistake." Rechberg, in his turn, looked at the sheet and changed color. Instead of the official letter, he had, by mistake, handed to Bismarck the secret instructions he had received concurrently, calling upon him, while openly countenancing Prussia, to use his utmost endeavors to cause the other German States to vote against the measure. For a moment both statesmen looked at each other in silence. Then Bismarck said: "Don't be upset! You never intended giving me the letter. Ergo, you never gave it to me; ergo, I know nothing about the whole matter."

—A recent unfounded statement that Jean Ingelow was at the point of death has brought out the following talk about her quiet life: She lives with her bachelor brother in a quaint little house in Kensington, where she indulges in her special passion and pastime—the cultivation of flowers. Although her home is minute in size, the conservatories attached to it are worthy a mansion, and the roses which bloom all the year round in the glass-covered summerland are unrivaled in splendor of color and beauty of growth. Another hobby of Miss Ingelow's is birds. She has an aviary built out of the conservatory, which in its turn opens into the drawing-room, and nothing delights the old lady more than to set the birds free among the flowers, and to watch them as she sits writing at her desk. Perhaps this taste for two of the loveliest things in nature has something to do with the freshness and youth that are characteristic of her most successful poems.

All Souls' Free Historical Lectures

The fifth annual series of Free Historical Lectures under the auspices of All Souls' Church (Brooklyn, N. Y.) are being given on Friday afternoons in April and May in All Souls' Church, South Ninth Street, near Bedford Avenue. The marked success of these lectures in previous years hardly need be recited. Large audiences of the children of the public schools have filled the church, and the admirable essays presented in competition for the prizes each year have testified to the impression made upon the young people. The subjects for the present year are as follows:

Four Early American Statesmen: Samuel Adams, by the Rev. S. A. Eliot; Benjamin Franklin, by the Rev. E. C. Bolles, D.D.; Thomas Jefferson, by Thomas G. Shearman; Patrick Henry, by the Hon. F. W. Hinrichs.

Scholars in classes averaging fifteen years and upwards are invited. Tickets are given to all who desire them. The acceptance of a ticket is a virtual pledge to attend faithfully all the lectures. A limited number of tickets to seats in the gallery will be furnished to adults at fifty cents for the course. At least three prizes will be offered this year to the scholars preparing the best essays on the subject to be announced. One of the prizes is offered by the Mayor of Brooklyn.

After a Day's Hard Work
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate
It makes a delicious drink and relieves fatigue and depression. A grateful tonic.

Don't Rub Your Clothes to tatters in a vain attempt to clean them with poor soap. Save your time and health by using Sunlight Soap
It makes home brighter.
Lever Bros., Ltd., Hudson and Harrison Sts., New York.

CRYSTAL FOUNTAIN GERM-PROOF FILTER
An absolutely perfect sanitary filter. Filtering cylinder of porous rock, cleaned instantly by revolving against automatic rock cleaner—without opening filter. No other filter has or can have this device. Full description and prices of filters in a book that will be mailed free to you. Send postal for it. Also Gravity Filters—in which we use the Crystal Fountain Rock Tube.
The Geo. L. Squier Mfg. Co.,
Filter Dept. "F." Buffalo, N. Y., U. S. A

THE NEWTON REST CURE
WEST NEWTON, MASS.
A private house in a fine situation has been arranged by a physician to receive a limited number of ladies temporarily disabled through nervous diseases.

THOSE answering advertisements appearing in The Outlook will confer a favor upon the advertiser as well as the publisher by mentioning this publication.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN }
ATLANTIC }
BRADLEY }
BROOKLYN } New York.
JEWETT }
ULSTER }
UNION }
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN }
COLLIER }
MISSOURI } St. Louis.
RED SEAL }
SOUTHERN }
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS.CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

THE MISTRESS OF THE HOUSE is always interested in having painting done, and the great variety of shades or combinations which can be produced by the use of and the Tinting Colors will afford her an opportunity to exercise her judgment and taste and secure the best and most durable paint. The brands shown in list are genuine. For colors use the NATIONAL LEAD Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. No trouble to make or match a shade.

Pure White Lead

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

Dr. Rainsford on Mission Work

A correspondent of The Outlook having sent us the following newspaper extract asking whether it correctly reported the views of Dr. Rainsford, we referred it to Dr. Rainsford himself, who has kindly made a statement concerning it which we gladly print herewith. We do not need to say that Dr. Rainsford and his parish are doing as much for the unchurched masses as any Protestant religious organization in New York. His opinion, with which we heartily agree, is that systematic work among the children and families with children is more important and more productive of good results for the same amount of effort than attention devoted exclusively to the lowest outcasts. In other words, it is better that the crowding into missions of the young and growing should exclude the most dissolute than that the attracting of the dissolute should crowd out those who have greater possibilities in them, and therefore greater needs. The extract is as follows:

> Unless strangely misquoted by the New York daily press, the Rev. Dr. Rainsford stands committed to a remarkable statement of facts. He is credited with declaring, at a recent meeting of philanthropic workers, that, after eight years of untiring mission work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars, he has not seen as the reward of his labor three men saved from the lowest strata of the slums. The immense machinery of the great and active parish of St. George's, the devotion of all its workers, lay and clerical, the money poured by rich men into its coffers for this especial end of saving and uplifting, not merely the poor and destitute, but the outcast and criminal as well—all these, he tells us, have been thrown away, and the only hope for the mission priest and worker in this deepest slough of all lies in snatching the children from its foulness while their minds are open and impressionable, and the habits of their environment not yet hardened into fixity.
>
> Surely this is a very terrible truth, if truth it be—a matter which moralists will do well to ponder seriously. But is it true that a hardened sinner cannot be saved from his evil life through the instrumentality of any machinery of church ordinances, or the prayers and self-sacrifice and passionate zeal of good men and women who love their neighbors as themselves?—Leslie's Weekly, February 13, 1896.

The following is Dr. Rainsford's letter:

The Editor of The Outlook has called my attention to the above quotation from "Leslie's Weekly" of February 13, 1896, which paper, no doubt without intention, does not state correctly what I said on the occasion it refers to.

For many years a part of the activity of my parish went to the maintenance and development of a Rescue Mission on Avenue A. At first the work carried on there was purely rescue work. We tried to reach the lowest class of "bums" and outcasts. Gradually the work of the mission underwent a change. The people in the immediate neighborhood began to come to the mission and their children to come to the Sunday-school, and as they came the waifs ceased coming, unless on those evenings when food was provided. I do not, of course, mean that all ceased to come, but that this class had very slight representation. We did not, however, at all cease our efforts to reach them. The methods we used I did not always approve of. They were largely the emotional methods still too much in vogue in rescue missions.

In the early years of my ministry in New York I felt the inadequacy of these methods. I feel it much more strongly to-day. I think the common plan of wringing testimony from supposedly saved drunken men is a terribly wrong and false plan.

However, I pass on to speak of results. This phase of our mission, as I said, grew less and less important. It is, therefore, quite inaccurate for any one to say that any considerable part even "of the immense machinery of a great and active parish was devoted to this special class of our poor neighbors." Still, we did devote to them a great deal of time and work, and money too. The details of working among them I had to leave to those who carried on that work. If you cannot do a work yourself, I always think the best thing you can do is to let those whom you employ to do it work their own way.

Year by year, I gathered together as well as I could such results as were obtainable among this class of destitute loafer, and grew increasingly dissatisfied with the whole business. I felt that, for me at least, duty lay in another direction. I must ask myself the question, Where could such work, such energy, such money as were at my disposal be used so as to produce the best results for Christ and his Church in our neighborhood? And I soon came to the conclusion that far more could be accomplished by working among those families who had passed away from church influence and whose very often neglected children—children forced to leave school too early, forced to work for their own bread—were all the time in danger of going to recruit the abandoned and outcast class.

Looking back on all our work in Avenue A Mission now, and summing it up, I would say that by far the greatest results obtained are among the young people who join the Sunday-school; next after this, among the fathers and mothers of the neighborhood. In this case several have been saved, I believe, from drink and from descending into the lower class of outcasts; and among the outcasts themselves and tramps and "bums" little or nothing of permanent good, so far as I can learn, has been done. Of course, when I say this, I do not for a moment mean that good has not been done; I merely mean that we are not in a position to judge of it. Once a man becomes a wanderer, it is terribly hard to stop the wandering propensity. Once he has let go of work, and the family tie exists for him no longer, he is a hard man to save.

Where the Rescue Mission is surrounded by carefully prepared machinery and by well-trained workers, whose whole attention is devoted to this class, of course better results may be hoped for. But my work in St. George's has been to reach a neighborhood in which very few of the working class—scarcely any, indeed—went to a Protestant place of worship.

W. S. Rainsford.

St. George's Rectory, New York City.

A Metal $10 Bill

Something quite remarkable came into the redemption division of the Treasury at Washington a short time ago. It was a thin plate of silver, about two feet long, into the surface of which a $10 silver certificate had been pressed in such a manner as to incorporate its substance actually with that of the metal. It was a brand-new bill, and in the process had been squeezed out to about twice its original size. Nevertheless, it was perfectly recognizable. A statement accompanied it to the effect that a workman in a silverware-factory had dropped the bill accidentally upon a plate of silver as the latter was passing through a rolling-machine. This explanation being satisfactory, a fresh $10 certificate was returned to the loser.—Exchange.

For Coughs, Asthma, and Throat Disorders, use "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold only in boxes. Avoid imitations.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Insomnia

shows trouble with the brain, indicating the need of a Brain Tonic, especially one containing phosphorus.

Freligh's Tonic

A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant

acts differently from opiates and bromides; gives food to the brain; tones up the nervous system to the normal pitch. Nature intended man to sleep.

Prescribed and endorsed by forty thousand physicians. Sample by mail, 25 cts.; regular bottle, $1.00, 100 doses. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 Fulton Street, New York City.

Formula on Every Bottle.

THE

HANDY BINDER

for The Outlook, made to hold compactly and conveniently twenty-six numbers, will be sent by mail on receipt of sixty cents.

THE OUTLOOK CO. - NEW YORK

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

For the Babies! Its value in the preparation of Artificial Food for Infants and Disorders of Teething Infants

HUNTER McGUIRE, M.D., LL.D., President and Professor of Clinical Surgery, University College of Medicine, Richmond, Va., referring to Spring No. 2, says:

"For some time I have been using Buffalo Lithia Water in the preparation of artificial food for infants. Cow's milk is the substitute usually resorted to when the mother is not able to suckle her child and it is impossible to get a wet-nurse. One serious objection, along with many others, to cow's milk, is its acidity. Human milk is always alkaline, but cow's milk, except when the animal is fed entirely upon grass, is almost always acid. This is the principal reason why the milk of cows disagrees with many babies, and lime water is often added to the milk to correct the acidity. I believe the long-continued use of lime water is hurtful to digestion, and last summer, when I was feeding two of my own children on cow's milk, and found the nurse adding lime water to prevent colic and intestinal derangement, which the food otherwise produced, I directed her to use Buffalo Lithia Water, Spring No. 2, in preparing the food, with immediate and continued good results. The water was added until the milk lost its acidity and was neutral or alkaline."

Dr. JOHN H. TUCKER, of Henderson, N. C., President of the Medical Society of North Carolina, etc., writes: "I have observed marked beneficial results from its use (Spring No. 1) in the disorders of teething infants. I have sent many patients of this class to the Springs for the use of this water, and without exception they have returned to me cured or greatly benefited."

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00, f. o. b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent FREE to any address.

SPRINGS OPEN FOR GUESTS FROM JUNE 15th TO OCTOBER 1st

PROPRIETOR, BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS, Virginia (on the Atlantic and Danville R. R.).

$1 LINCOLN FOUNTAIN PEN $1

Solid Gold Pen—Hard Rubber Engraved Holder—Simple Construction—Always Ready—Never Blots—No better working pen at any price.

Mailed complete, boxed, with filler, for $1.00. Your money back—if you want it. Agents Wanted.

LINCOLN FOUNTAIN PEN CO., Room 5, 108 Fulton St., New York

"Where Dirt Gathers, Waste Rules."
Use

SAPOLIO

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

New Series of The Christian Union

Copyright, 1896, by The Outlook Company

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post-Office.

The Outlook is a weekly Family Paper, containing this week sixty-eight pages. The subscription price is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance.

Postage is Prepaid by the publishers for all subscriptions in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. For all other countries in the Postal Union add $1.56 for postage.

Changes of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given. The notice should be sent one week before the change is to take effect.

Discontinuances.—If a subscriber wishes his copy of the paper discontinued at the expiration of his subscription, notice to that effect should be sent. Otherwise it is assumed that a continuance of the subscription is desired.

How to Remit.—Remittances should be sent by Check, Draft, Express-Order, or Money-Order, payable to order of THE OUTLOOK COMPANY. Cash should be sent in Registered Letter.

Letters should be addressed:

THE OUTLOOK,
Clinton Hall, Astor Place,
New York.

Contents for 25 April, 1896

EDITORIAL:

Political Conventions 733
Arizona as a State 733
The Civil Service Law and the Raines Bill 733
Free Circulating Libraries 734
Barnard College 734
Austin Abbott 734
The English Budget 735
Spanish Elections 735
Russia and the Far East 735
South Africa 736
Distinctness of Individuality 736
The Passion for Publicity 737
The Increase of Homicide 739
The Hem of the Garment 739

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES:

The Cincinnati Musical Festival 740
By H. E. Krehbiel
William H. Prescott 745
By Kenyon West
Bicycling for Women: Costumes 751
By R. L. Dickinson, M.D.
A New Philanthropy 752
By Frank A. Hutchins
The Higher Life of New Orleans 754
By Grace King
John Wesley 761
By the Very Rev. F. W. Farrar, D.D.
Kate Carnegie. Chapters IX., X. 765
By Ian Maclaren

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:

A Noteworthy Conference 774
Union Work 774
Professor Smith and the Presbytery 774
A Silver Jubilee 774
Missionary Policy 774
Forward Movement in Australia, etc., etc. 775

BOOKS AND AUTHORS:

The Soul of a Philosopher (Coleridge) 770
Harnack's History of Dogma 771
Novels and Tales 771
Books Received 785

CORRESPONDENCE

NOTES AND QUERIES

In Aid of Armenia

Miss Clara Barton, President of the Red Cross, cables to the National Armenian Relief Committee as follows:

> Constantinople, April 17.
>
> Trask, New York. Hubbell in charge of the Red Cross Relief Expedition at Marash reports April 13: "Three thousand sick of typhus, including the English Consul." On the 15th he reports: "Sickness at Zeitoun increasing, with forty to fifty deaths daily. Great and immediate need for funds." General condition for relief work favorable. Barton.

The National Armenian Relief Committee in giving out this appeal from Miss Barton adds that it cannot refrain from reminding the American people, of all classes and sections, that Miss Barton undertook this sacred work of relief only in response to the urgent request of the public, and the assurance that the work would be generously maintained to the end. "Not one-fifth of the $500,000 needed to carry on the relief work, on the smallest calculation made, has yet been given, and yet the need and facilities for carrying on the relief are greater now than ever. In fact, unless the people are aided until the next crop is secured, all the money thus far spent through the various agencies will be practically thrown away, and thousands will inevitably perish of pestilence and starvation. The Christianity and honor of the American people are at stake, as well as the lives of the survivors of the massacres, most of whom are helpless and innocent women and children."

THE ARMENIAN FUND

Previously acknowledged	$5,688 66
E. M. N	500 00
W. L. A., Ninety-six, S. C	5 00
H. E. D., University, N. Dak	5 00
K. B. G	5 00
G. G. W., Lincoln, Neb	5 00
G. A., London, England	5 07
"Savin Hill"	5 00
A Subscriber	1 00
M. B., Brunswick, Me	10 00
S. H., Brunswick, Me	10 00
D. H. C., Middletown, Conn	3 00
A Friend, Englewood, N. J	5 00
M. F. B., Johnson, Vt	2 00
Senior Y. P. S. C. E., Durand, Wis	2 50
Junior Y. P. S. C. E., Durand, Wis	1 50
Miss C. N. T., Charles City, Iowa	10 00
Anonymous, Milwaukee, Wis	1 00
C. A. B., North Lansing, N. Y	1 00
Total to April 20	$6,265 73

Correction.—In our issue for April 4 we credited $5.00 to A. S. L., Brooklyn, N. Y.; it should have been A. S. L., Brookton, N. Y.

A Good Child

is usually healthy, and both conditions are developed by use of proper food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant's food; so easily prepared that improper feeding is inexcusable and unnecessary.

Art Academy of Cincinnati adjoining the Art Museum in Eden Park. An endowed institution whose income enables it to offer unusual opportunities for art education at almost nominal cost. Complete courses in Drawing, Painting, Modeling, Wood Carving, etc., etc. Home and Foreign Scholarships. Summer Term from June 22d to August 29th, and Regular Term from September 14th to June 1st. For circular and other information address DIRECTOR, Art Academy, Eden Park, Cincinnati.

STAMPED STEEL CEILINGS

DECORATIVE, DURABLE, AND BEST

for Dwellings, Churches, or Business Houses. Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue.

H. S. NORTHROP, 29 Cherry St., N.Y.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR 25 CTS.

CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

CONSUMPTION

Macbeth lamp-chimneys are perfect, besides being made of tough glass.

But you want the one that is made for your lamp. Let us send you the Index; free.

Geo A Macbeth Co

Pittsburgh Pa

The Improved Perfection Cake Tin

enables you to remove without breaking the most delicate cake or pie. Keeps batter from leaking. We mail 3 round or 2 square layer tins for 50c. Catalogue showing 11 styles with prices, free. Agents wanted.

GEO. C. VINING, Mgr.,
Household Specialties,
23 to 25 Randolph St.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Want advertisements of thirty words or less will be published under this heading at one dollar a week. Four cents a week is charged for each word in excess of thirty.

MOTHER'S ASSISTANT, governess, useful companion, take charge of an invalid or elderly people—or any position in which an experienced, trustworthy woman would be appreciated. City or country. Would travel. Address RELIABLE, 63 Court St. Brooklyn, N.Y.

A MIDDLE-AGED SCOTCH PROTESTANT NURSE, with much experience in hospital and private nursing, desires a re-engagement. Highest reference from physicians and patients. Salary $25–$40 per month. Address No. 740, care of Outlook.

TO RENT from June 15 for the summer (family going to Europe), a large country villa, all improvements, completely furnished, Steinway grand, library, shady lawn, Alderney cows, stable, comfort, ½ hour from New York. Address L. E. S., 138 W. 4th St., Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

AN EXPERIENCED HOUSEKEEPER, with excellent reference, desires a position in school or private family. Has had a wide experience in the care of children and all matters pertaining to the comfort of a household. Address No. 687, Outlook Office.

A MIDDLE-AGED AMERICAN WOMAN desires position as housekeeper or nurse to an invalid or elderly lady, or as mother's helper; willing to go in the country. Good reference. Address L. A., Box 13, care Selleck, Rowayton, Conn.

WANTED—By lady of refinement and culture, a good reader, position as companion, secretary, to teach English and music, or take charge of a home and children. References given and requested. Address Miss B., No. 739, care of Outlook.

SUMMER COTTAGES TO LET, delightfully situated in beautiful "Casco Bay," looking upon the lovely harbor and city of Portland, Maine. Rents from $100 to $400; all furnished. A. M. SMITH, Portland, Me.

AT EAST ORANGE, N. J.—An attractive furnished room, closets, bath, gas, large shaded grounds, with board if preferred. Three minutes from Brick Church Station. References. Address No. 691, care Outlook.

COMPETENT LADY, speaking French, German, English fluently, accustomed to travel, wishes to go abroad as companion or chaperon in June. Satisfactory references. Miss BABST, 73 Auburn St., Paterson, N. J.

BUSINESS COLLEGE PRINCIPAL, who has $2,000 to invest in a one-half interest in flourishing business college—real estate worth more than investment—address J. E. DODDS, Fayette, O.

WANTED—For the summer, position as tutor by a successful college preparatory teacher (lady) of French and German. Highest references. Address "GERMAN," No. 640, The Outlook.

AMERICAN PROTESTANT GENTLEWOMAN would like position as housekeeper, companion, or attendant. No objection to country or travel. Highest reference. Address ABILITY, 21 Bible House, N. Y.

CHARMING HOME for young ladies on Massachusetts coast with lady of wide experience in chaperoning. Delightful climate: fine bathing; social advantages. For particulars address No. 738, care The Outlook.

A WIDOW LADY of intelligence, experience, and refinement desires a position as housekeeper or matron. Address L. B. H., No. 737, Outlook Office.

FOR RENT—A furnished apartment in Hotel Sevillia—parlor, two bedrooms, and bath—for the summer. Address M. C. M., 117 West 58th St., N. Y.

WANTED—A position as housekeeper or companion in the country. Address J., No. 700, care of The Outlook.

LOUNGING ROBE.

Dainty Comforts For My Lady

The Arnold Lounging Robe

made of teazle-down cloth. Only takes a minute to get in it and it's luxuriously comfortable when you do. Every woman who has seen it says it's "just the thing." Price, $2.75 or $3.50, according to finish.

The Arnold Nightingale made of French or outing flannel. Comfortable and pretty. The most convenient wrap ever made. A comfort evenings on the piazza. For invalids it seems almost a necessity. Price, $2 to $5.

NIGHTINGALE.

For sale by leading dry goods houses generally.
If your dealer does not keep them, write to

THE NOVELTY KNITTING COMPANY, 312 Broadway, Albany, N. Y.

EDUCATIONAL

New York City

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established 1855. 3 East 14th St., N. Y.

Teachers College NEW YORK (MORNINGSIDE HEIGHTS, 120TH STREET, WEST).—Department of the Kindergarten. Three distinctive features: (2) Completeness. In addition to what is usually found in such courses, regular instruction in instrumental music for the kindergarten, with piano practice, is offered. (See adv. in Outlook for April 18 and May 2.)
WALTER L. HERVEY, President.

The Misses Ely's School for Girls
RIVERSIDE DRIVE
85th and 86th Streets, New York

Miss Peebles and Miss Thompson's Boarding and Day School for Girls
30, 32, and 34 East 57th St., New York
Special students admitted.

WEST SIDE GIRLS' SCHOOL FOR SALE
Immediate possession and income. Address WEST SIDE, No. 654, Outlook Office.

Boys Summer Abroad A Columbia College graduate desires to take two or three boys abroad for the summer. Five years' experience. Address COMMANDANT, No. 645, Outlook Office.

California

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont, Cal.—Full College courses leading to degrees of B A., B.L., B.S. Degrees recognized by University of California and other similar graduate schools. Thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. An Academic course. Preparatory school preparing for all institutions connected with the College. Address C. G. BALDWIN, President

Connecticut

FAIRFIELD ACADEMY.—HOME SCHOOL FOR BOYS. Fits for business or college. Genuine home; individual teaching; healthful; 50 miles from New York. FRANCIS H. BREWER, A.M., Prin., Fairfield, Ct.

WOODSIDE SEMINARY
Terms, $500 to $700. City advantages for culture and study. Rural surroundings.
Miss SARA J. SMITH, Principal, Hartford, Conn.

OLD LYME, Conn. Boxwood School for Girls
Elective and college preparatory. Special advantages in Art and Music. Separate department for girls under twelve. Mrs. RICHARD SILL GRISWOLD.

Massachusetts

Eastern Teachers' Agency
Miss E. F. FOSTER, Manager
50 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.
TELEPHONE, BOSTON, 775-2
Teachers furnished for all grades of public and private schools, Specialists in any desired branches, Tutors and Governesses.

Massachusetts

SOUTH HADLEY, MASS.
MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE offers three Collegiate courses. Music and Art. Library, Laboratories, Cabinets, and Observatory. The sixtieth year opens Sept. 17th, 1896. Board and tuition, $250. Mrs. E. S. MEAD, President.

Michigan

University of Michigan SUMMER SCHOOL
June 29 till August 7
Nineteen departments (including Law). Seventy courses offered. For full information apply to the Secretary of the University, JAMES H. WADE, Ann Arbor, Mich.

New Hampshire

COLBY ACADEMY, New London, N. H.
$200 to $250 a Year. Co-educational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, PRESIDENT.

New York

ADIRONDACKS. Lake Placid
FRENCH RECREATION CLASS Also College Preparation.
Limited Party of Girls. Camp very comfortable and beautifully situated. Mademoiselle DEBRAY-LONGCHAMP, 105 W. 74th St., New York, N. Y.

Wells College for the higher education of young women.
The catalogue gives full information about entrance requirements, courses of study, scholarships, expenses, etc., and will be mailed upon application to WILLIAM E. WATERS, Ph.D., President, Aurora, N. Y.

ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL
MANLIUS, N. Y.
Next term begins September 16th, 1896.
Apply to WM. VERBECK.

NEW YORK, Newburgh.
The Misses Mackie's School for Girls
Academic and College-Preparatory. Special advantages in Art and Music. Certificate admits to Vassar and Wellesley.
One and a half hours from New York.

RIVERVIEW ACADEMY
60th year. Prepares thoroughly for College, the Government Academies, and Business. U. S. Army officer detailed at Riverview by Secretary of War.
JOSEPH B. BISBEE, A.M., Principal, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Sing-Sing-on-the-Hudson, N. Y.
OSSINING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Prepares for college. Advance courses in Art and Music. Albert Ross Parsons, Musical Director. One hour from New York. European party sails June [illegible] 29th year begins Sept. 23d. Miss C. C. FULLER, Principal.

New York

TROY, N. Y.
EMMA WILLARD SCHOOL
Preparation for all colleges open to women: four years' academic course; graduate courses, departments of music and art. 83d year opens Sept. 23, 1896.
MARY ALICE KNOX, Principal

Ohio

1020 Prospect Street, Cleveland, Ohio
Miss Mittleberger's School for Girls
Prepares for all Colleges open to women
Fall term begins September [illegible]

Pennsylvania

PENNSYLVANIA, Bryn Mawr.
Miss Baldwin's School for Girls
Preparatory to Bryn Mawr College. Within five years more than fifty pupils have entered Bryn Mawr College from this school. Certificate admits to Smith, Vassar Wellesley. Diploma given in both General and College-Preparatory Courses. School Building especially constructed for school purposes. Tennis Courts and Gymnasium. For circulars address
Miss FLORENCE BALDWIN, Principal.

BRYN MAWR COLLEGE BRYN MAWR, Pa.
A college for women. Offers undergraduate and graduate instruction. Awards annually two European Fellowships (value $500) seven Graduate Scholarships (value $200 to $300), and nine Resident Graduate Fellowships (value $525), in Greek, Latin, English, German, and Teutonic Philology, Romance Languages, History or Political Science, Mathematics, Chemistry, and Biology. Competition open till April 15th. Full undergraduate and graduate courses in these departments and in Philosophy and Physics. Courses in [illegible] and graduate courses in Semitic Languages. For general program or graduate pamphlet address as above.

Cincinnati Conservatory of Music
MISS CLARA BAUR, Directress
Established 1867
A thorough Musical education after the methods of foremost European Conservatories.

Students are prepared for positions in Schools and Colleges, in Church Choirs, and for the Stage, in Concert or Oratorio.

Students from the city and vicinity, as well as those from abroad, can enter at any time during the School Year and Summer Term.

Young ladies from a distance find a home in the Conservatory Building, where they can pursue their studies under the supervision of the Directress. For Catalogue address
MISS CLARA BAUR.
Fourth & Lawrence Sts. Cincinnati, O.

Your plans for the summer can be much easier arranged (if you are looking for a summer resort) if you write the Recreation Department, The Outlook, 13 Astor Pl., N.Y.

Summer Resorts

Deer Park, on the Crest of the Alleghanies

To those contemplating a trip to the mountains in search of health or pleasure, Deer Park, on the crest of the Alleghany Mountains, 3,000 feet above the sea-level, offers such varied attractions as a delightful atmosphere during both day and night, pure water, smooth, winding roads through the mountains and valleys, and the most picturesque scenery in the Alleghany range. The hotel is equipped with all adjuncts conducive to the entertainment, pleasure, and comfort of its guests.

There are also a number of furnished cottages with facilities for housekeeping.

The houses and grounds are supplied with absolutely pure water, piped from the celebrated "Boiling Springs," and are lighted with electricity. Deer Park is on the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and has the advantages of its splendid Vestibuled Limited Express trains between the East and West. Season excursion tickets, good for return passage until October 31, will be placed on sale at greatly reduced rates at all principal ticket offices throughout the country.

The season at Deer Park commences June 22, 1896.

For full information as to rates, rooms, etc., address George D. DeShields, Manager, Deer Park, Garrett County, Maryland.

Removal

Southern Pacific Co.'s "Sunset Route" have removed from 343 to 349 Broadway, northwest corner of Leonard Street, where they will be glad to receive their friends and will be in position to furnish the fullest information as to freight and ticket rates to all points in Texas, New and Old Mexico, Arizona, California, Oregon, Hawaiian Islands, Japan, China, India, Australia, and Around the World. Southern Pacific Company ("Sunset," "Ogden," and "Shasta" Routes), New Orleans to San Francisco, Portland, and Ogden; Houston and Texas Central R. R., San Antonio and Arkansas Pass Railway, to fishing and hunting grounds and all other points in Texas; Mexican International R. R., to all points in Mexico City and Old Mexico; Pacific Mail S. S. Company, Occidental and Oriental S. S. Company, to Hawaiian Islands, Japan, China, India, Australia, and Around the World; Morgan Steamship Lines, to New Orleans, New Orleans to Texas, to Florida, Havana, and Central America. Edwin Hawley, A. G. T. Mgr., L. H. Nutting, E. P. Agt., 349 Broadway, and No. 1 Battery Place (Washington Building), New York; S. F. B. Morse, G. P. & T. A., New Orleans, La.; T. H. Goodman, G. P. & T. A., San Francisco, Cal.

TO HOTEL PROPRIETORS

If You Want to Know | HOW TO ADVERTISE A SUMMER HOTEL

send for a copy of Hicks' Advertisers' Guide

SEASON OF 1896

containing lists of suitable newspapers and the rates for advertising.

WILLIAM HICKS

Advertising Agent, 132 Nassau Street, New York.

TO HOTEL PROPRIETORS

Proprietors of first-class city or summer hotels desiring a manager, or one to take charge of steward's department, are requested to address the advertiser, who has indorsements of the highest character for either position. Address G., No. 592, care Recreation Department, The Outlook.

TRAVELERS' R. R. GUIDE Formerly Appletons'.

R. R. Maps and Time-Tables. Conveniently Indexed. Monthly—25 cents. 24 Park Place, N. Y.

TOURS AND TRAVEL

Raymond & Whitcomb Tours

ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED

EUROPE

Parties will leave New York May 16, on the steamship "La Touraine," of the French Line; May 23 and June 20 on the steamship "Campania," of the Cunard Line; and July 7 on the steamship "Lahn," of the North German Lloyd Line. Great Britain, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Russia, Austria-Hungary, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, France, Holland, and Belgium will be visited in a leisurely manner. Sojourns in the great capitals and art centers.

JAPAN

Parties will leave New York in July and August for comprehensive tours through the Hawaiian Islands, Japan, and China, the first-named date including the Hawaiian Trip. Both this and the Oriental round will be very full and attractive.

Other tours during the spring, summer, and autumn to California, Colorado, Alaska, the Yellowstone National Park, etc.

RAILROAD AND STEAMSHIP TICKETS TO ALL POINTS

Send for circulars, mentioning information desired.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB

31 East Fourteenth St., Cor. Union Sq., West, New York.

Tours and Travel

International Navigation Company's Lines

SAILING EVERY WEDNESDAY

From Piers 14 and 15, North River, New York (foot of Fulton St.)

AMERICAN LINE

NEW YORK—SOUTHAMPTON (London—Paris)

St Paul	April 29, 10 A.M.
New York	May 6, 10 A.M.
Paris	May 13, 10 A.M.
St Paul	May 20, 10 A.M.
New York	May 27, 10 A.M.
St Louis	June 3, 10 A.M.
Berlin (Sat.)	June 6, 10 A.M.
St Paul	June 10, 10 A.M.
Paris (Sat.)	June 13, 10 A.M.
New York	June 17, 10 A.M.
St Louis	June 24, 10 A.M.
St Paul	July 1, 10 A.M.
Paris (Sat.)	July 4, 10 A.M.
New York	July 8, 10 A.M.
St Louis	July 15, 10 A.M.
St Paul	July 22, 10 A.M

RED STAR LINE

NEW YORK—ANTWERP

Westernland	Apr. 29, 12 noon
Southwark	May 6, 12 noon
Noordland	May 13, 12 noon
Friesland	May 20, 12 noon
Kensingt'n	May 27, 10:30 A.M.
Westernland	Jne. 3, 12 noon
Berlin (Sat.)	June 6, 10 A.M.
Southwark	June 10, 9:30 A.M.
Noordland	June 17, 12 noon
Friesland	June 24, 12 noon

INTERNATIONAL NAVIGATION COMPANY

6 Bowling Green, New York

305-307 Walnut St., Philadelphia.
32 So. Clark St., Chicago.
609 Market St. (Grand Hotel Bldg.), San Francisco.

High Class Escorted Private Party to Europe

By popular Mediterranean route, sailing from New York Saturday, July 11th, by the elegant North German Lloyd express SS. "Ems," accompanied throughout by the Rev. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D., 11 Hanson Place, Brooklyn, N. Y., assisted by thoroughly efficient European conductors, visiting the principal cities of Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Holland, Belgium, France, England, Scotland, and Ireland; sixty days' tour; all included: three meals daily, transportation, carriage drives, sight-seeing. $465.00. Membership limited. Correspondence invited. Apply to Dr. Banks, or HENRY GAZE & SONS, Ltd., 113 Broadway, New York; 201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.; 220 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.; 135 South Fifth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Early application desirable owing to the popularity of the steamer.

IDEAL PILGRIMAGE to EUROPEAN CATHEDRALS

STRICTLY SELECT PARTY

Organized and accompanied by Very Rev. CHAS. D. WILLIAMS, Dean of Trinity Cathedral, of Cleveland, with thoroughly experienced European Conductors. For Itinerary and Descriptive Programmes apply to WORLD TOURIST OFFICE OF HENRY LEWIS, 325 Superior Street, Cleveland. Correspondence may also be addressed to the Very Rev. Chas. D. Williams, Dean of Trinity Cathedral, No. 564 Euclid Ave., or to HENRY LEWIS, 325 Superior Street, Cleveland, O.

COMPREHENSIVE SUMMER TOURS TO EUROPE

leaving New York July 4, 7, and 11, via the grand Cunarders Lucania and Etruria, visiting England and the Continent of Europe, all arrangements first-class, from $185 upwards, covering all expenses. Pamphlets and detailed itineraries of THOMAS H. HENDRICKSON, the well-known tourist agent, 339 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Clark's Excursions to Europe

ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED

North Cape party sails July 4, per "Campania."

Fall Palestine party sails Sept. 5, per steamer "New York."

Parties for Europe at frequent intervals.

Ocean Tickets by all lines. Choice berths.

Tickets for individual travelers to all parts of the world at lowest rates.

Send for Clark's Tourist Gazette, containing full particulars, with maps.

FRANK C. CLARK, Tourist Agt., 111 Broadway, N.Y.

(Bridge of Sighs)

THE FRAZAR TOURS TO EUROPE

Tenth Season

Eight Comprehensive Tours, sailing May 9, June 6, 20, 24, and 27, July 4. Including British Isles, Holland, Belgium, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, and France. Send for itineraries and references to Mrs. M. D. FRAZAR & CO.

Managers of Foreign Tours,
72 Globe Building, - Boston

SUMMER IN FRANCE

Two ladies will take a small party through Normandy and Brittany and the country along the Loire, visiting the cathedral cities of northern France, ending with a three weeks' stay in Paris. Tour of ninety days, leaving N. Y. June 20. Price moderate. Address

CARLTON PARTY, P. O. Brookline, Massachusetts.

Tours and Travel

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES

Delightful Ocean Trips to the Ports of Texas, Georgia, Florida.

Tourists' Tickets to all Winter Resorts in Texas, Colorado, California, Mexico, Georgia, Florida, &c. Our 64-page "Satchel Handbook" mailed free. C. H. MALLORY & CO., Pier 20, E. R., N. Y.

EUROPE, 1896 — 11th SEASON

38 Days, all expenses	$175
66 " " "	$400

Circulars upon application.

ELIAS BROOKINGS, 54 Madison Ave., Springfield, Mass.

85 Days in Europe

Few vacancies in limited party to visit England, France, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, Gibraltar. Address Prof. CAMILLE THURWANGER, 31 Pierce Building, Boston.

SELECT VACATION TRIP TO EUROPE

Conducted by Prof. H. B. Richardson, Amherst College, Amherst, Mass. Very attractive programme. Terms most reasonable. Full particulars sent on application.

EUROPEAN TOURS

Limited party, personally conducted by Dr. and Mrs. Paine, now forming. Unequaled arrangements. Terms reasonable. Address H. S. PAINE, M.D., Glens Falls, N. Y.

DR. CHENEY'S PARTY

TO EUROPE. (9th season.) Personally conducted by O. D. Cheney, M.D., and wife, of Haverhill, Mass. Limited to 25. 78 days. Cunard steamer, June 27.

KIMBALL'S TOURS

in Europe (8th season). Limited party sails June 24, on "St. Louis." Moderate price, comprehensive route. EDWIN C. KIMBALL 56 Summer St. Boston, Mass.

EUROPE Ideal Tour. 250 miles of Coaching. Limited Party, by Cunard Steamers. Compare with others as to Quality and Cost. "Get the best." Address Rev. H. A. TODD, A.M., Corona (L. I.), N. Y.

EUROPEAN TRAVEL

including North Cape. Limited to ten ladies. Experienced traveler. References. Mrs. A. C., No. 653, Outlook Office.

Select party of ten young ladies for Three Months' EUROPEAN TRAVEL Terms reasonable. Address PROFESSOR, No. 596, care The Outlook.

EUROPEAN TRAVEL

for the summer of 1896. For particulars apply to Miss JOSEPHINE H. SHORT, 71 Hancock St., Boston.

A lady forming a party for a EUROPEAN TRIP for the summer of 1896 wishes a few more to join her. Number limited to ten. Itinerary and terms on application. Mrs. S., No. 363, Outlook Office.

SAILS JUNE 24. $575. Comprehensive European Tour of 64 days; very finest appointments; every expense included. Compare and decide. Itinerary, &c., of Rev. F. A. GRAY, Nashua, N.H.

FOREIGN HOTELS

England

CHESTER, ENGLAND QUEEN HOTEL

First-Class Hotel, connected with the General Railway by covered Way. Lift. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

Stratford-on-Avon, England, Golden Lion Hotel

This favorite Inn was known in Shakespeare's time as "Ye Peacocke Inn," 1613. JOHN FRY, Prop.

Germany

HANOVER, GERMANY First-class pension with a private family. Good opportunity to learn German. Address Mrs. MARIE ROELFS, Grasway 11, Hanover, Germany.

Holland

HOLLAND AMSTERDAM

AMSTEL HOTEL The largest hotel in Amsterdam. Strongly recommended to families. Every moderate comfort. Moderate prices.

WALTER'S SANITARIUM

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,"
Let us to the country hie away.

God made the country for man—its birds and brooks and fields and flowers. Shall we not enjoy them?

WALTER'S PARK (Wernersville), Pa.

Walter's Park is a grand mountain park of 500 acres, with its own Money-Order Post-Office, Long-Distance Telephone, with the most superb mountain air, absolutely free from malaria, mosquitoes, and rarely dew; with magnificent mountain springs from granite rock, 1,000 feet above tide-water; with scenery declared by travelers "equal to anything in Europe or America;" with pine and cedar groves and chestnut forests; with splendid drives, excellent livery; our own Jersey dairy; butter, eggs, fruits, and vegetables fresh and sweet. WALTER'S SANITARIUM is its central thought, the product of 20 years of earnest work. It offers, in addition to the most comprehensive system of treatment, the largest range of appliances, with the largest experience in applying them (25 years). Country Life with City Comforts. Electric light, Hydraulic Elevator, steam heat and open grates, Library, Post-Office, Telephone. BATHS, MASSAGE, SWEDISH MOVEMENTS (both mechanical and manual), Electricity (Static, Galvanic, Faradic), Oxygen, Vacuum. Terms moderate. New illustrated catalogue free. Be careful to address correctly, always WALTER'S SANITARIUM, or ROBT. WALTER, M.D., Walter's Park, Pa.

Italy

Lake of Como, Italy

GRAND HOTEL BELLAGIO

AND DEPENDANCE

HOTEL VILLA SERBELLONI

One of the finest Hotels in Europe. The most beautiful site on the Italian Lakes. Perfect sanitary arrangements Electric light. Telegraph in the hotel. L. BREITSCHMID, P.

Switzerland

Hotel Mont-Fleuri

TERRITET MONTREUX
LAKE OF GENEVA

600 Meters Above the Sea

First-class Hotel; most delightful and healthy situation; splendid view over the lake and the Alps; highly recommended to American families; summer and winter residence; lift, electric lights; moderate terms; omnibus at station Territet.

Circulars of The Outlook.

LUCERNE, SWITZERLAND

Hotel d'Angleterre First class; lift; finest situation in Lucerne; arrangement de pension; prices moderate; opens April 1st. F. HEFFEN, Prop.

INTERLAKEN, SWITZERLAND

Hotel AND Pension St. George

Situated directly on the main promenade, opposite the park and the mountains. Cable-cars connect with steamboats and railroads. Highly recommended. C. LICHTENBERGER.

SUMMER COTTAGES

FOR RENT For summer months, a furnished cottage of eleven rooms, delightfully situated on high ground. For particulars address Box 407, Litchfield, Conn.

Summer Cottages

Furnished Houses for Rent IN Bridgeport and Fairfield, Conn.

For the season of 1896. The finest beach on the Sound. Rates, $300 to $2,500. 80 minutes from Grand Central Station on 42d Street. Address T. C. WORDIN, 13 Franklin Block. Bridgeport, Conn.

LAKE GEORGE Three Cottages to Let for the Summer at SILVER BAY

Finely finished and completely furnished for housekeeping. Near hotel where meals can be furnished. For particulars address SILAS H. PAINE, The Dakota, 72d St., New York

THE CATSKILL COTTAGE OF MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD (the "Eagle's Nest"), at Twilight Park, Haines Falls, New York, is offered for rent for the coming season. It is two thousand feet above the sea, and commands a fine view of the Hudson River Valley and the Berkshire Hills. It is near the Squirrel Inn. Six rooms, furnished. A photograph may be seen at the office of The Outlook. Also, at Twilight, a new twelve-room cottage; artistic; fully furnished; finely located, near Club-House; to private family only; photographs. For particulars apply to MARY A. LATHBURY, 17 Webster Place, East Orange, New Jersey.

TO RENT—On the ocean, at Wainscott, East Hampton, L.I., summer cottage, fully furnished; 14 rooms; bath-houses on ocean; pier on lake; surf-bathing, rowing, sailing, golf and tennis on place. Address
Mrs. W. D. WHITNEY, New Haven, Conn.

For Sale or Rent

Gentleman's Country Residence

This property is beautifully located, overlooking the Hudson River and surrounding country. Large brick mansion, all modern improvements, good barn and hennery, 11 acres of land; 4 miles from Poughkeepsie and about 2 miles from New Hamburg Station on the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad. Splendid drives, good water, etc. For price and particulars call or address F. R. BAIN, 42 Market St., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

FOR SALE, $1,200—Furnished Cottage in Catskill Mts., with two and a half acres. Good apple-trees. Trout stream in front; mountain spring water at rear. Daily stage. Address Sister GEORGETTE, Shandaken, Ulster Co., N. Y.

FOR RENT—A country house at New Windsor, N.Y., five minutes' walk from Newburg trolley cars. Completely furnished, sanitary plumbing, stables, greenhouse, garden, abundance of fruit. Rental, $1,200 for season. Apply to W. J. ROE, 70 Ludlow St., New York.

Summer Cottages

"A New England Hillside"

and a comfortable stone cottage furnish a good material basis for a happy summer. The hillside is the one that inspired the "Notes from Underledge," by William Potts; the cottage is thoroughly constructed, has all conveniences, and will be let furnished or unfurnished. A rare chance for nature-lovers. For description and terms address "UNDERLEDGE," No. 720, The Outlook, 13 Astor Place, New York.

RENT—Beacon Hill, Boston, during summer, furnished apartment, four rooms, upper floor; cool, quiet, near Common and Gardens. Rent, $50 monthly. References. Address A. F. W., 53 Mt. Vernon St., Boston, Mass.

TO RENT.—Pittsfield, Mass., "Berkshire Hills." New cottage; pleasantly located; fourteen rooms; furnished; steam heated; open fireplaces; modern improvements. Address Mrs. M. Y. READ, 69 Appleton Ave., Pittsfield, Mass.

MT. DESERT—Seal Harbor.—Furnished houses for $175, $250, $350. Hot-water bath in second story. W. M. GRISWOLD, Cambridge, Mass

YORK HARBOR, ME.

COTTAGES TO LET

One large new cottage, also smaller cottages and table board, at Norwood House. C. P. DUSTIN.

Rutland, Vt.

For Rent, Five Months, Furnished, or For Sale. Fern Cottage

Well-built, modern 14-room house, small stable, 2-acre grove, commanding finest mountain range and valley view in Vermont; water and bath-room, telephone if desired; fine drives, beautiful country surroundings; twenty minutes' walk from station. WM. H. STEELE, Rutland, Vt.

HOTELS AND RESORTS

California

HOTEL GREEN PASADENA, CAL. Accommodation for 400 guests. Occupies an entire block. Souvenir mailed.
G. G. GREEN, Owner. J. H. HOLMES, Mgr.

(For other advertisements in this department see following pages.)

Summer in the Country

Are you looking for some place which combines Health, Pleasure, Economy?

If so, send 6 cents for postage, or call and get free at offices below the illustrated book, "Summer Homes." It gives list of hotels, farm and boarding houses, with and upward, in Sullivan, Ulster, and Delaware Counties, on the main line and branches of the New York, Ontario, and Western Railway; 2,000 feet above the sea; location, prices, fares, &c., all in it. In New York, at No. 2 Battery Place; 165, 171, 371, 944, and 1323 Broadway; 737 6th Ave.; 134 East 125th St.; 273 West 125th St.; 251 Columbus Ave.; 92 East 14th St.; and 13 Astor Place. Ticket Offices foot of Franklin and West 42d Sts.; in Brooklyn, 4 Court St.; 860 Fulton St.; 98 Broadway; "Eagle" office, 249 Manhattan Av., Greenpoint. ILLUSTRATED HOMES. containing half-tone reproductions from photographs of 535 of the hotels, farm and boarding houses advertised in "Summer Homes," can be purchased of any ticket agent, price 25c. J. C. Anderson, General Passenger Agent, 56 Beaver St., N. Y.

BOARD AT $5 PER WEEK

On May 29 and 30 excursion tickets for one fare will be sold at 371 Broadway and ferry offices, giving an opportunity of personally selecting a summer home, and also enjoying a day's fishing in this delightful region; tickets good returning June 1st.

Colorado

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.: The Antlers

Illustrated book, describing Colorado Springs, sent on request by E. BARNETT, Proprietor.

Connecticut

CREST VIEW SANITARIUM GREENWICH, CT.

Enlarged, improved, first-class in all respects; home comforts. H. M. HITCHCOCK, M.D.

CHELSEA INN

AND COTTAGE

Hampton Hill, Conn., Windham Co.

High elevation, pure water, invigorating atmosphere, beautiful scenery, delightful drives, fresh vegetables, and all kinds of berries. For circular address F. E. Whittaker.

Maine

KITTERY POINT, MAINE

PEPPERRELL HOUSE

Four miles from Portsmouth, N. H. A pleasant and healthy summer resort. Seashore and country combined. Safe boating. Good fishing. For descriptive circular, terms, etc., address E. F. SAFFORD, Prop.

Bay Point Hotel

ROCKLAND BREAKWATER
ROCKLAND, ME.

THIS LARGE, WELL-EQUIPPED HOTEL will open June 15, under the control of Mr. N. P. Sewell, six years at the head of the Islesboro Inn.

The Bay Point has the most magnificent location on the Maine coast, with elevators, electric lights, hot and cold salt-water baths, and the most perfect water, absolutely pure. The cuisine and attendance will be of the best, rivaling any hotel in the State. Fine boating, fishing, lawn tennis, splendid drives, and beautiful scenery; an ideal home, with exquisite surroundings and complete table. N. P. SEWELL.

CLIFF COTTAGE WILLARD, ME.

High and sightly elevation; pleasant rooms; near electrics. For particulars apply to C. B. SAUNDERS, Willard, Me.

Massachusetts

Powder Point Hall

and Cottages, DUXBURY, MASS.

Good boating, bathing, and shade-trees. Illustrated circular. "The Pilgrim Town of Duxbury."

DR. RING'S SANATORIUM

8 miles from Boston. Arlington Heights, Mass.
For Change, Rest, Care, and Treatment

THE SURFSIDE

GLOUCESTER, MASS.

F. H. SAWYER, Proprietor

Situated on a beautiful beach; grand harbor and ocean view; picturesque scenery; good bathing, boating, fishing, and delightful drives; excellent cuisine; luxurious beds; perfect drainage; will reopen about June 1st. Everything new and clean. Send for circular.

FIFTEEN MILES FROM LAND
Minot's Light can be seen from the piazzas of

THE PRESCOTT

on King's Beach. A charming ocean view. Hotel Prescott is now open and ready for guests. Circulars of Mrs. F. H. GOULD, Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts

The Magnolia

MAGNOLIA, MASS.

Opens June 20th. Send for pamphlet.
H. W. PRIEST, Proprietor.

EAST BAY LODGE

Osterville, Mass. Cape Cod.

Write for descriptive pamphlet. N. H. BEARSE, Propr.

New Hampshire

THE UPLANDS

AND COTTAGES, BETHLEHEM, N. H.

Located on the highest point in town; wide lawns; thorough heating for late guests; accommodates 150. Send for guide to Bethlehem. F. H. ABBOTT, Prop.

SENTER HOUSE

Centre Harbor, N. H.

On beautiful Lake Winnipesaukee. A modern hotel, well equipped. Excellent cuisine. Location offers all advantages of both mountain and lake. Fine bass fishing. Pure water supply from Belknap Spring; temperature of water, 44°. Write for illustrated booklet.
A. W. EAGER, Manager.

EAST ANDOVER, N. H.

Hillside Farm Healthful location; terms reasonable; send for circulars. F. H. FLANDERS.

New Jersey

THE IRVINGTON

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A cheerful, homelike hotel on the Beach; excellent table; reasonable terms. CHAMBERS & HOOPES.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

THE SHELBURNE

On the Ocean Beach

Open throughout the year. Every convenience, including hot and cold sea-water baths, passenger elevator, etc. J. D. SOUTHWICK, Manager.

Galen Hall—A Sanatorium

With all the conveniences of a first-class, quiet hotel. Elevator, steam heat, open-grate fires. Massage, electricity, baths, etc. Table unexcelled. Open all the year. Address Dr. WM. H. H. BULL, Atlantic City, N. J.

THE CHALFONTE

OCEAN FRONT, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. Sea-water baths in house. Elevator and every modern convenience. Send for illustrated booklet. E. ROBERTS' SONS.

New York City

ST. DENIS

Broadway and 11th St., NEW YORK

Opposite Grace Church EUROPEAN PLAN

Rooms $1.00 per Day and Upward

In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the metropolis than the St. Denis.

The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere, the peculiar excellence of its cuisine and service, and its very moderate prices.
WILLIAM TAYLOR & SON.

New York

Avery's Hotel Cottages Arverne-by-the-Sea, L. I.

30 minutes from Brooklyn and Long Island City, N. Y. Reopen May 1st. Address FRED'K W. AVERY, 90 Pierrepont St., Brooklyn.

CLEAR LAKE COTTAGES

Now open. Famous trout region. Address Mrs. M. W. STONE TOBEY, Beaverkill, N. Y.

LAKE GEORGE—Hulett's

The most picturesque part of the Lake. Good table; boating, bathing, fishing; country attractions. Rates are moderate and there is plenty to do. For illustrated book address H. W. BUCKELL, Hulett's Landing, N. Y.

A few good rooms for June, July, and Sept. only.

WHITEFACE INN

Lake Placid, Adirondacks

will open June 1st. Information and rates can be obtained of Mrs. J. M. CHILD, Lakewood, N. J.

New York

ADIRONDACKS

SCHROON LAKE Pine Grove

A Physician's home for the care and treatment of those suffering from Pulmonary or Nervous affections. Full particulars on application. Best of reference furnished. Open June 1st, 1896. H. W. LINCOLN, M.D., 113 Hancock St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Don't Make Summer Plans
. . . without considering . . .

Chautauqua

1,400 feet above the sea. Pure water. Perfect Sanitation. Charming social life. Twelve summer schools. Seventy-two instructors. Public lectures, concerts, readings and entertainments. Something to interest everybody, young or old. Beautiful country. Fine Boating, bathing, wheeling, tennis, base-ball, golf, etc. Excellent board and lodging from $5 per week. Send for schedule

W. A. DUNCAN, Sec., Syracuse, N.Y.

MT. MEENAHGA

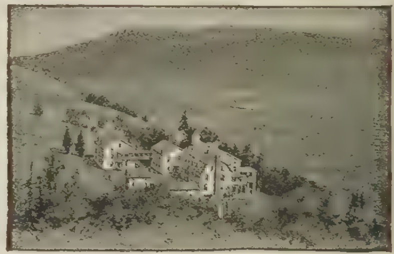
OPENS JUNE 2d

A Summer Home, with SIX COTTAGES CONNECTING. 100 miles from New York. 1,500 ft. above sea-level. In the midst of great natural beauty. Pure water; dry, exhilarating air; electric bells; gas; steam heat and wood fires. Peculiarly attractive in June. For circulars and rates address U. E. TERWILLIGER, Ellenville, N. Y.

Gleason Sanitarium

ELMIRA, N. Y.

1852 (Formerly Elmira Water Cure) 1896



A comfortable winter home for invalids of both sexes. All modern improvements. All forms of aths, massage, electricity, etc.; pure spring-water; under care of regular medical graduates of long experience. Send for illustrated booklet.

ORIENT POINT HOUSE, L. I.

Fine fishing, boating, and bathing. The New York boat lands at the dock. Address G. C. GIBBS, Proprietor.

SABBATH DAY POINT HOUSE

ON Lake George N. Y. Write for circular to F. E. CARNEY, Sabbath Day Point, N. Y

SUN PARLOR AND ROOF PROMENADE

DR. STRONG'S SANITARIUM

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED CIRCULAR

LAKE GEORGE

HOTEL UNCAS

Is a new hotel. Opens June 15th. Steamers land at hotel pier. For circulars, references, and terms address SMITH SEXTON, Silver Bay, N. Y

New York

NEPTUNE BRINE BATHS
For Rheumatism, Gout, and Nervous Diseases

The Glen Springs

A Sanatorium for those Seeking Health and Rest

A medical staff experienced in the use of the Waters. All approved therapeutic appliances and modern improvements. ALL FORMS OF BATHS.

VALUABLE MINERAL SPRINGS

NEPTUNE SPRING is a 67 per cent. Brine, containing the largest amount of Chloride of Calcium of any Spring in the world. Location overlooks thirty miles of Seneca Lake. Send for illustrated pamphlet.

WM. E. LEFFINGWELL, Manager, Watkins, N.Y

Pennsylvania

Preston's Sunnyside

On the South Mountains

Wernersville, Pa.

Magnificent scenery, extensive park, delightful air, pure water, table and appointments excellent. For pamphlet address JAMES H. PRESTON.

Vermont

Fairview Farm North Hartland, Vt.—Mrs. E. B. Gates would like to accommodate from ten to twelve boarders during May and June. Terms reasonable.

THE MONVERT Middletown Springs, Vermont

Celebrated for its magnificent scenery, bracing air, fine drives, and Mineral Springs, which possess medicinal and healing properties which have made their fame worldwide.

3,000 feet above the sea, its elevated position ensures a dry atmosphere in which malaria is unknown, and where sufferers from hay fever obtain immediate relief.

Accommodations for 350. Appointments, cuisine, and service of the highest order. Send for pamphlet, terms, etc.

E. W. EAGER, Manager

THE HANOVER, 2 E. 15th St., New York City

FREE Outing Clothing Book, beautifully illustrated. Shows 1896 Styles. Only book on fashionable Outing clothing issued. Send 2c. stamp for Book F. WHITE DUCK TROUSERS by mail, post prepaid, $1.50. Send leg and waist measure; allow for 2-inch roll at bottom. DESCRIPTION.—Our trousers are made of extra quality Duck in the best manner; side, watch, and hip pockets; taped seams; wide hem on bottom and straps on waistband for belt. All hand-finished. Buy direct and save retailers' big profits. H. S. LOMBARD, Outfitter, 22, 24, 26 Merchants Row, Boston, Mass.

HARTMAN STOCKADE WIRE FENCE

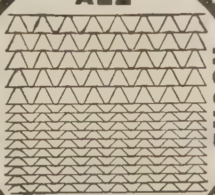
A cheap, durable lasting fence for all kinds of uses. Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Hogs, and Poultry. Fits all cases. No breaking in winter, nor sag in summer.

ALL ROUND GOOD FENCE

Made of the best Galvanized Steel Wire. 24 to 60 in. high. Is Easily put up 3 and 6 in. mesh 20 rods in a roll. Send for prices & circulars. It saves money.

Hartman Mfg. Co.
Ellwood City, Pa.

Manhattan Bldg., Chicago.
277 Broadway, N. Y.



Quick as a Flash!

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

HOW TO USE IT. } Take three dessert spoonfuls to a cup of boiling water or milk. Stir briskly a moment, and your Chocolate is ready to serve. Put up in 1 lb. and ½ lb. tins.

Stephen F. Whitman & Son,
Sole Mfrs., Philadelphia.

Grand View Sanatorium

WERNERSVILLE, PA.

As seen from Lebanon Valley R. R.

OPEN THE ENTIRE YEAR

THIS Sanatorium has been in successful operation for over thirty-five years. It is situate on a slope of the South Mountain, one and a half miles from Lebanon Valley R.R. Station at Wernersville, and nine miles from the city of Reading. Heated by steam and open grates. The halls are wide, and rooms commodious and airy. Drainage unsurpassed. Piazzas whole length and breadth of the building. Fine Gymnasium. The panoramic view and scenery are most beautiful, stretching out as far as the eye can reach, over varied landscape of valley, hill, and mountain. The air the year round is dry and bracing; dew is unknown here. The air in winter is delightfully tonic and bracing, as well as mild and warmer than in the valley below us. The Pavilion Spring Water is soft and pure, and wonderfully curative in kidney, liver, and stomach diseases.

We have the various appliances and methods of treatment found in first-class institutions of this kind in the country.

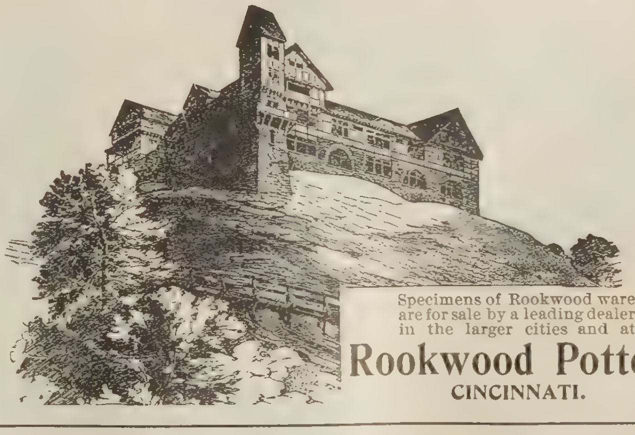
Unequaled as a four-season Sanatorium. Send for new illustrated pamphlet to Drs. WENRICH & DEPPEN, Wernersville, Pa.

The New Mathewson

Narragansett Pier, R. I.

OPENS JUNE 20th

SEND FOR CIRCULARS AND TERMS TO
260 FOURTH AVE., N. Y.



Specimens of Rookwood ware are for sale by a leading dealer in the larger cities and at

Rookwood Pottery
CINCINNATI.

Handsome * * Wall Paper

Embossed Golds 7c. up. Good Gilt 5c. and up. 8 yard white backs, 3 cents.

Describe rooms you wish to paper and colors desired and we will send post-paid 100 samples of choice styles with our booklet "Points on Papering," Free

AGENTS WANTED.

We want one energetic person in each town, who can furnish good references, to solicit orders from our large sample books on commission.

Full agents' outfit, $1.00.

United States Wall Paper Co. 430 Race Street, Cincinnati, O.

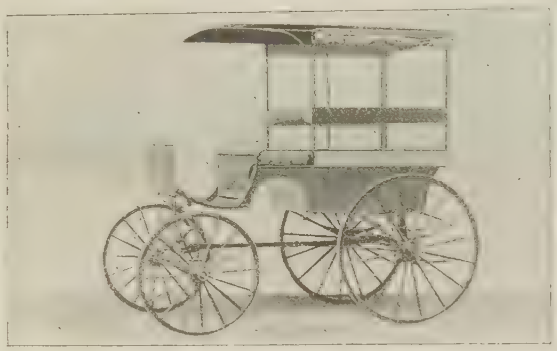
"The World is Our Field"

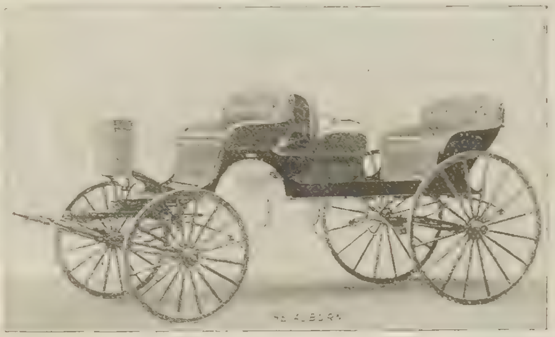
Ideal Comfort While Riding

is found in our vehicles. A few special styles are illustrated below, particularly adapted for summer-resort driving. We desire to correspond with any one interested in carriages and send them a few facts concerning our business, showing how we can sell this class of work at a lower price than other manufacturers. Read below.



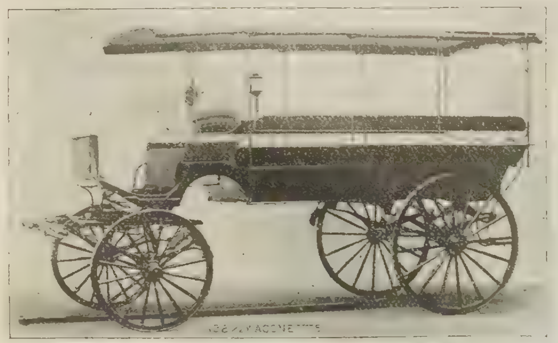
FAMILY WAGONETTE

Intended for private or semi-public use, accommodating 3 (including driver) on front seat, 4 inside. Low door in back. Storm curtains sides and rear. It is a light vehicle, and can be driven with one or two horses.



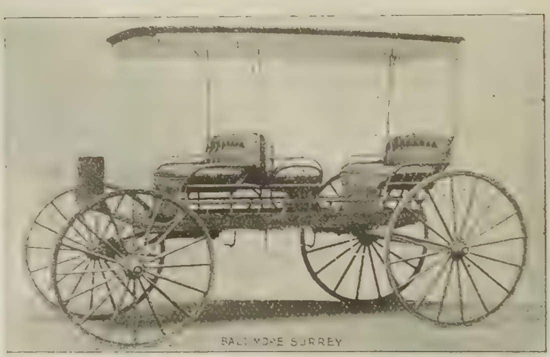
THE AUBURN

This is of a richer and more expensive nature. Accommodates 3 or 2 on a seat, as may be preferred.



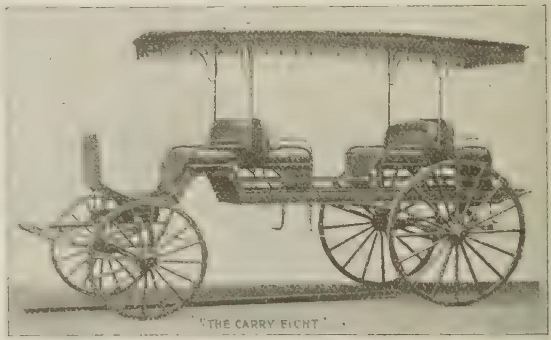
WAGONETTE

Built in three styles to carry 9, 13, 15 persons. Especially recommended for lightness and style.



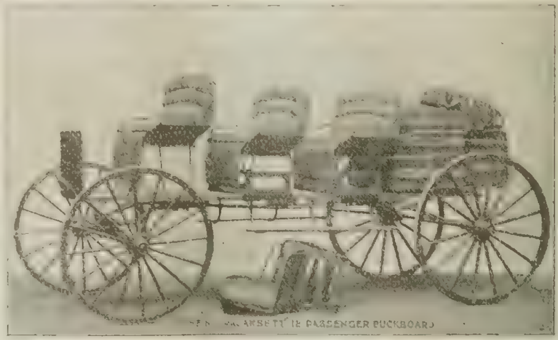
BALTIMORE SURREY

The lightest 6-passenger vehicle built by any carriage company, and is the most comfortable. The middle seat is reversible, facing either way. This feature is similar to that in our "Carry-Eight" and "Auburn."



CARRY-EIGHT

Principal feature is that the second and fourth seats are easily reversible, facing either way.



THE NARRAGANSETT

Accommodates 12 persons. Is very substantial, with rear seat movable, leaving space for baggage.

WE HAVE A BEAUTIFUL ART CATALOGUE WHICH WE DESIRE TO PUT IN YOUR HANDS.
JUST A POSTAL-CARD REQUEST WILL BRING YOU OUR

"ALBUM OF STYLES"

SPECIALTY CARRIAGE COMPANY CINCINNATI, OHIO

Niagara Falls
Muskoka Lakes
Georgian Bay
Thousand Islands
Rapids of St. Lawrence
Montreal
Quebec
Saguenay River
White Mountains
Rangeley Lakes
Sea Coast of Maine and other Popular Resorts all reached directly by

Grand Trunk Railway System

For Illustrated Guides, Maps, Time-tables, Fares, etc., apply to any Agent of the Company or to the following Passenger and Traveling Agents:

Boston, Mass........	T. Wynne, Traveling Passenger Agent.
Buffalo, N. Y........	J. D. McDonald, City P. & T. A., 177 Washington St.
Chicago, Ill..........	F. S. Capron, Trav. Passenger Agt., 103 So. Clark St.
"	E. B. Rowland, Trav. Passenger Agt.
"	L. R. Morrow, City Pas. & Tkt. Agt.
Cincinnati, O........	D. S. Wagstaff, Southern Pas. Agt., 417 Walnut St.
Cortland, N. Y......	R. Bushby, Traveling Passenger Agent.
Detroit, Mich.......	Ben. Fletcher, Trav. Pas. Agt., 84 Woodward Ave.
"	C. C. Craigie, Trav. Pas. Agt.
"	C. H. Hunter, City Pas. & Tkt. Agt.
Hamilton, Ont......	C. E. Morgan, City Ticket Agt., 11 James St., North.
Kingston, Ont.......	T. Hanley, City Ticket Agent.
London, Ont.........	C. W. Graves, Traveling Passenger Agent.
"	E. Delahooke, City Tkt. Agt., cor. Richmond and Dundas Sts.
Los Angeles, Cal....	W. F. Botsford, Pacific Coast Agt., 207 So. Broadway.
Milwaukee, Wis....	B. C. Meddaugh, City Pas. & Tkt. Agt., 357 Broadway.
Montreal, Que......	D. O. Pease, District Pas. Agt., Bonaventure Station.
"	J. Quinlan, Traveling Pas. Agt., " "
"	W. D. O'Brien, City Ticket Agent, 143 St. James St.
New York, N. Y.....	F. P. Dwyer, Eastern Passenger Agt., 273 Broadway.
Niagara Falls, N. Y.	D. Isaacs, Ticket Agent, Prospect House.
Niagara Falls, Ont..	G. M. Colburn, Ticket Agent, Clifton House
Ogdensburg, N. Y...	J. H. Phillips, Ticket Agent, 6 ½ Ford Street.
Ottawa, Ont.........	A. H. Taylor, City Pas. Agt., Russell House Block.
Portland, Me........	N. J. Grace, Trav. Pas. Agt., G. T. Ry. Station.
Quebec, Que.........	J. Malone, Act. City Tkt. Agt., 5 Du Fort St. & 17 Sous-le-Fort St.
St. Albans, Vt.......	Geo. B. Oswell, Trav. Pas. Agt., Cent. Vt. R.R. Stat'n.
St. Paul, Minn......	W. R. Jaffray, Traveling Passenger Agent.
Toronto, Ont........	M. C. Dickson, District Pas'ger Agent, Union Station.
"	W. Keating, City Tkt. Agt., cor. King & Yonge Sts.

"The Tourist Route of America"

W. E. DAVIS
Gen. Pass. Agt.

G. T. BELL
Asst. General Passenger Agent.

GEO. B. REEVE
General Traffic Manager.

CHAS. M. HAYES
General Manager.

Head Offices, MONTREAL, P. Que.

Kennebec Steamboat Co.

SCENERY IN MAINE ON ROUTE OF KENNEBEC STEAMERS NEAR GARDINER

Where will you spend your vacation?

TRY PICTURESQUE MAINE

THE KENNEBEC STEAMBOAT COMPANY and its connections reach Ideal Summer Resorts in Picturesque Maine

IT is the most popular as well as the cheapest route to all places on the Kennebec River, and to the many seaside resorts in the vicinity of Boothbay Harbor. Passengers obtain a night's rest, arrive at destination early the following morning, avoid the heat, dust, and noise attendant upon railway travel, and enjoy the scenery on the North Shore and the Kennebec River, which is second to none in the country.

Our new Summer Time-table and Folder, which will describe more fully than ever the delightful summer resorts reached by this line, will be ready for distribution about June 1st.

PERSONS WHO DESIRE TO LEARN WHERE TO GO FOR AN IDEAL SUMMER OUTING CAN DO SO BY SENDING NAME AND ADDRESS TO FREDERICK A. JONES, Agent, Lincoln Wharf, BOSTON, MASS.

AS A SUMMER RESORT

New England Stands at the head for Variety of Health and Pleasure Haunts

THE

Boston & Maine Railroad

THE GREAT RAILROAD SYSTEM OF NEW ENGLAND

Covers the Vast Territory of the Four Northern States and reaches the Canadian and Provincial Districts

The Seashore (From Massachusetts Bay to Newfoundland)

The White and Green Mountains

The Beautiful Lake Regions

An Unlimited Rural District

All of which are supplied with the best of Hotel and Boarding-House accommodations

SUMMER LITERATURE

This Company has just issued four new and attractive pamphlets descriptive of the different sections of New England, under the following titles: "All Along Shore," "Among the Mountains," "The Connecticut River Valley," and "Northern Vermont," which will be mailed to any address upon receipt of 2c. stamp for each pamphlet. SUMMER EXCURSION BOOK, giving complete list of hotels and boarding-houses, their rates, routes, rates, maps, and other valuable information, will be mailed free. Address Genl. Passr. Dept., B. & M. R.R., Boston.

D. J. FLANDERS, Genl. Passr. and Tkt. Agt.

McKinley Writes

to the General Manager of the Northern S.S. Co.

My Dear Sir:

I write to congratulate you on the launching of a sister ship to the "North West." Last summer I took a trip from Cleveland to Duluth on the "North West," and never did I have a more enjoyable vacation. The scenery is superb and the vessel a veritable floating palace.

Wishing you every success, I am,

Very truly yours,

W McKinley

The Most Delightful Vacation Trips

on this continent are offered by the Northern Steamship Company's exclusively passenger steamships "North West" and "North Land," plying between Buffalo and Duluth through Lake Erie, the Detroit River into Lake Huron, and thus to Sault Ste. Marie, where the steamers are lifted through the world-famous ship canal lock into Lake Superior. After a delightful sail through this great inland sea, Duluth is reached, where direct connection is made with the Great Northern Ry. for St. Paul and the Great West.

The steamers touch at the following places: Cleveland, Detroit, Mackinac Island, and Sault Ste. Marie.

Full particulars and printed matter can be obtained by writing to A. A. HEARD, Gen. Pass. Agt., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Ideal American Trip

Season 1896 opens June 9th

STEAMSHIP "NORTH WEST"
Companion of "North Land"

Sails from Buffalo Tuesdays and Fridays, 9:30 P.M.

THE SHORT LINE TO PORTLAND, VIA O. R. & N.

"The Columbia River Route"

From Midland Lakes To Western Ocean

THE MAGNIFICENT STEAMSHIPS

NORTH WEST NORTH LAND

IN CONNECTION WITH

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY

"THE LIBRARY-OBSERVATION CAR ROUTE"

Palace Sleeping-Cars Family Tourist Cars
Through Dining-Cars

EA SÀ LA CARTE. PAY FOR WHAT YOU ORDER

Great Falls,
Helena,
Butte,
Spokane,
Seattle,
Vancouver,
Portland,
San Francisco,
Red River Valley,
Flathead Valley,
Kootenai Country
The Big Bend,
Lake Chelan,
Puget Sound,
Alaska,
Japan and China.

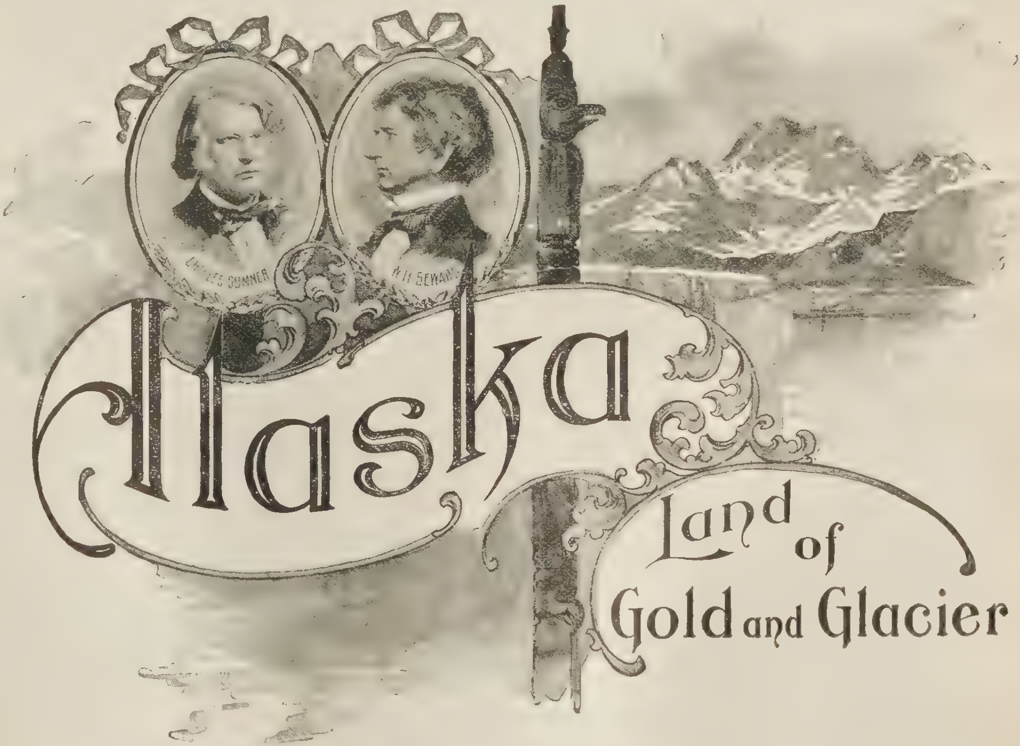
WRITE for pamphlets, maps, itineraries, brochures, routes, rates, and any information to

F. I. WHITNEY
G.P.T.A.
St. Paul, Minn., or

A. A. HEARD
G.P.A.
Northern SS. Co.
Buffalo, N. Y.



This is a reproduction in one color of the illuminated cover of our beautiful Alaska brochure. Sent on receipt of six cents postage.

HOTEL LAFAYETTE, LAKE MINNETONKA

Beautifully situated OPENS JUNE 20TH Rates reasonable

NO BETTER PLACE
CAN BE FOUND FOR A VACATION THAN

THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS which can be reached by

The Rock Island Route

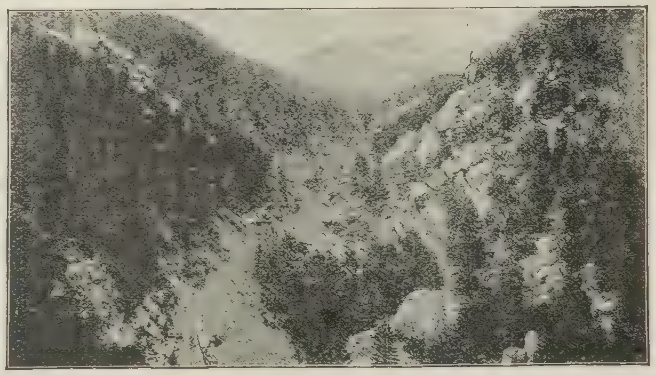
with SPEED, COMFORT, SAFETY and the added charm of Magnificent Scenery



Ruxton Cañon—Pike's Peak in Distance

Every factor of desirable travel is furnished in superlative degree by this line

ONLY DIRECT ROUTE TO

Colorado Springs, Manitou, and Pike's Peak

❧

CRIPPLE CREEK

reached four hours quicker by this route than by any other

❧

Send for Tourists' Dictionary
—all about outings in
THE ROCKIES

Seven Falls

Address JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Passenger Agt.
CHICAGO, ILL.

SEAMAN

THE ART OF TRAVELING

Raymond & Whitcomb's Tours to all Parts of the World

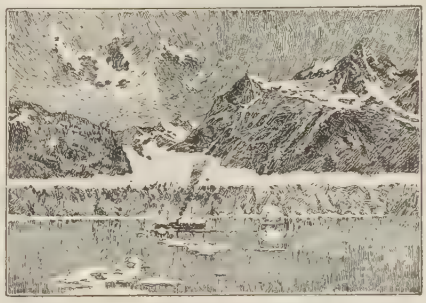
Estimates have frequently been made of the amount of money invested in the transportation lines of America and their equipment. The figures are startling and appalling. They eclipse the public debt by millions, and, so far as the average man or woman is concerned, are incomprehensible, because of their very magnitude. This great investment has been made to meet public requirements, because we are a nation of travelers. Not only are our own resorts filled every summer to overflowing, but every nook and corner of Europe is invaded, and the uttermost parts of the earth are explored. Railroads and steamship lines have vied with each other in the race for public approval and popularity. Millions of dollars have been expended in the effort to make travel in itself agreeable, and to rob it of its unpleasant features.

Lake Placid, Adirondacks

But while railroad companies can provide luxurious cars, can run their trains upon record-breaking schedules, they are precluded, from the very necessities of the case, from assuming charge of the arrangements and details of the entire trip, thus making it possible for the traveler to devote the whole time to pleasure. The company provides the means, but it is left to the passenger himself to attend to the methods of making the journey an agreeable one.

The Entrance to the Kiel Canal

It is just this point which has been so admirably solved by Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb that their names have become indissolubly associated with the luxury of travel. They have, by their perfect system of personal attention, so robbed travel of all its unpleasant features and cares as to leave the tourist nothing to do but seek pleasure unhampered by details and unannoyed by perplexities.



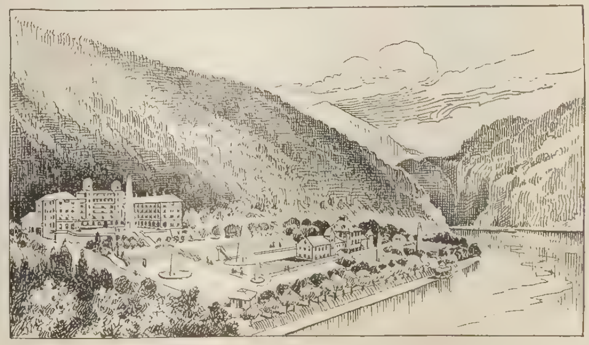
In Muir Glacier Bay, Alaska

And yet there is nothing of the "personally conducted" features so obnoxious to the majority of persons, about their tours. The traveler with one of their parties does practically as he pleases, goes and comes as he wishes, and is not hampered by objectionable requirements. It is true that he has fellow-travelers; so he does if he goes by himself, for there will surely be others on the train or boat. But in one case he is sure to find all his companions agreeable, in the other it is not so certain. In one instance, too, he has to look out for his own baggage and rooms upon arrival at his destination. In the other these things are arranged for him, and before he has reached his hotel he knows just the number of his room and is shown to it at once, his baggage following immediately without any attention from him.

In Picturesque Japan

And so it is about every little detail of the trip. The traveler need concern himself about none of the petty arrangements such as connections, which consume so much time and are a vexation to the soul. Raymond & Whitcomb parties travel in luxurious special trains, made up of the finest sleepers and dining cars, the schedules being arranged so as to pass through the most interesting sections of the journey by daylight. Competent officials and trained servants and porters accompany each party, from the start to the finish of the journey, and every wish and want of the members is anticipated and provided for. The single ticket which Raymond & Whitcomb issue covers all expenses of the trip, including railroad fare, hotel bills, and meals en route, even if it is across the continent and on to Alaska, China, and Japan. The various tours of the Company embrace practically all parts of the United States where excursions are seasonable, as well as Europe and the Orient.

In winter there are a dozen or more tours to Southern California, Mexico, and Florida, and in summer an almost limitless number to Europe, the Yellowstone Park, Colorado, the Pacific Coast, Alaska and the Trans-Pacific countries, as well as to the principal tourist resorts of the United States. Individual tickets are sold, and unprejudiced information regarding all routes and localities will be given to any one who is unable to adjust his special needs and times to the fixed dates of their tours. Pamphlets regarding these tours, to any locality, giving full information as to route, cost, etc., will be mailed to any one requesting it from Raymond & Whitcomb's New York office, 31 East 14th Street, or 296 Washington Street, Boston, Mass., or 1005 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.



Glenwood Springs and Hotel Colorado

THE ONLY

Naphtha Launch

An Ideal Pleasure Craft

☙ OVER 2,000 IN USE ☙

THEIR SUPERIORITY FOR ABSOLUTE SAFETY, SIMPLICITY, AND ECONOMY IS FULLY DEMONSTRATED. ☙ ☙ ☙ ELECTRIC LAUNCHES—STEAM YACHTS. ☙ ☙ A HANDSOME ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE SENT on RECEIPT of 10 CENTS in STAMPS.

GAS ENGINE & POWER CO.
MORRIS HEIGHTS
NEW YORK CITY

A . . Recreation Outfit . .

IS INCOMPLETE
WITHOUT A

POCKET KODAK, BULLET OR
BULLS-EYE CAMERA.

MADE WITH POCKET KODAK.

Being built on our "Cartridge System" they can be loaded or unloaded in broad daylight—no fumbling around a dark room for missing keys or pins. Everything but the developing is done in daylight, and we do that if you wish, or you can do it yourself. They embody the refinement of photographic luxury.

From the fine leather covering to the inmost soul—the lens—they are perfect, and, being perfect they make perfect pictures. All 1896 models have our improved rotary shutter and a set of three stops for the lens. The Bullets and Pocket Kodaks use either plates or films.

MADE WITH THE $8.00 BULLS-EYE.

LIGHTEST, SIMPLEST.

$5.00, $8.00, $10.00,
$12.00, $15.00.

Booklet Free.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.
Rochester, N. Y.

Composition, Presswork, Binding, and Mailing
Under One Management

WILLIAMS PRINTING CO. NEW YORK

Printers of The Outlook and many other leading weekly and monthly Publications

Specially organized for promptly turning out periodical and other large and exacting work with rapidity and unfailing regularity.

Every Department ❧❧❧ equipped with the latest and best machinery and appliances for typesetting, printing, binding, and mailing.

REMOVED TO

the newest, strongest, and best arranged fire-proof building in New York

232-238 WILLIAM STREET

RUNNING DAY AND NIGHT

RE-ENGRAVED HALF-TONE (WOODCUT FINISH)

FOR COLOR PRINTING, USE OUR METHOD

THE COLORITYPE PROCESS

"FOR PROMOTING INDUSTRY IN AGRICULTURE, COMMERCE, MANUFACTURE, AND FINE ARTS"

Paintings or color sketches, or, better yet, in many cases, the object itself, is photographed in its true primary color values. These photographs faithfully transmit the most delicate gradations and tones of color to the printing plate or lithographic stone, so that the ensuing prints, whether a hundred or a million, reproduce the form and detail of the original with an absolute sun-truth, adding at the same time all the varied hues of nature in marvelous resemblance.

OUR HALF-TONE PROCESS

"FIRST INTRODUCED IN AMERICA BY OUR W. KURTZ"

We now supply the most critical users in America with a large volume of perfectly made and finished engravings ready for the press. These engravings, deeply etched on selected hard copper or zinc, will endure long editions, or may be readily duplicated by electrotyping, so that practically an indefinite number may be printed.

Publishers, manufacturers, advertisers, and others desiring the very best engravings, made with intelligent thought for good results, at a moderate and equitable charge.

Those interested may obtain specimens and estimates on application.

COLORITYPE COMPANY, 32-34 Lafayette Place, New York

OUR LATEST BOOKLET

Contains eight testimonial letters. These sum up the experience of thousands who use the Caligraph

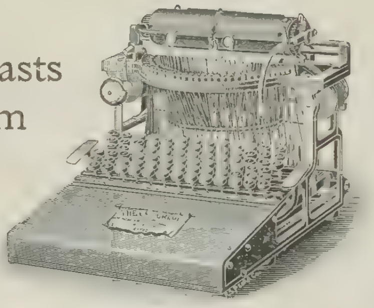
"It Outlasts Them All"



Typewriter

A copy will be sent on request. It should be read by every one interested in Typewriters.

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO.
237 Broadway, New York

An Exhibit

OF

New Dress Goods

FRENCH CANVAS,
ENGLISH TWEEDS,
SCOTCH CHEVIOTS,

On Sale this week

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway and 11th St.,
Twenty-third Street,
New York

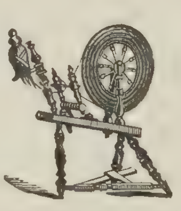
A Perfect Waist

is essential to the perfect fit of a dress. A waist superb in form, possessing every requisite of health, beauty and style is the

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE

CORSET WAIST

Combines every requirement of the laws of hygiene with those of modern dress. Made with short or extra long waist, high or low bust. Children's, 25c. to 50c. Misses', 50c. to $1. Ladies', $1 to $2. For sale by all retailers.



Registered Trade-Mark

TABLE LINEN
for Summer Homes
At "The Linen Store"

NAPKINS

Breakfast size, $1.50, $2.00, $2.25 per dozen.
Dinner size, $2.50, $3.00, $4.00 per dozen.

DAMASK BY THE YARD

A large assortment in good designs at 75c., 85c., $1.00, $1.25, and $1.50 a yard.

TABLE CLOTHS

2x2½ yds., $2.75, $3.50, $4.50 each.
2x3 yds., $3.25, $4.25, $5.50 each.
2½x3 yds., $3.50, $4.25, $5 each.
2½x3½ yds., $3, $5, $6 each.

All other sizes at correspondingly low prices. Equally good values in Bed Linen, Towels, and Quilts, and a full line of Summer Blankets.

James McCutcheon & Co.
"THE LINEN STORE"
14 West Twenty-third Street, N. Y.

The Outlook
A·Family·Paper
Volume 53 Saturday, 30 May, 1896 Number 22

DEMOCRATIC Conventions have now been held in eighteen States. In ten of these—Alabama, Colorado, Iowa, Mississippi, Missouri, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington, and Wyoming—platforms have been adopted demanding the free coinage of silver at the present ratio. In seven—Michigan, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and South Dakota—platforms have been adopted opposing this measure. In the remaining State—Nebraska—two Conventions have been held, the Bryan faction demanding the free coinage of silver, and the Administration faction demanding the maintenance of the gold standard. As regards States, therefore, the free-coinage element is decidedly in the majority; but as regards delegates the contest is as close as ever occurs. The Washington Convention, which declared for free coinage, failed to instruct its delegates, and five out of the eight are now counted upon by the Administration forces to vote with them. If these delegates are to be placed in the gold column, and the gold delegation from Nebraska is seated by the National Committee, there is, thus far, it is generally estimated, an exact tie between the two factions. Each has secured 167 votes. Of last week's Conventions, that in New Hampshire declared for the gold standard, and a tariff affording "incidental protection" to manufacturers; that in South Carolina declared for the free coinage of silver, an income tax, and a constitutional amendment to make the United States judiciary elective, and lessen its power to overthrow legislation; those in Iowa and Wyoming declared for the free coinage of silver and an income tax; and that in South Dakota for the use of silver, but against its free coinage at the old ratio. In South Dakota a free-silver declaration was confidently expected, but nearly every uninstructed delegate voted against silver, and several silver counties were represented in the Convention by Federal officeholders armed with "proxies" from the delegates chosen. In Iowa the recollection of last year's Convention led nearly every silver county to instruct its delegates and forbid representation by "proxy." The majority for free coinage was nearly three to one. The question as to which faction will control at Chicago now seems to turn upon the vote of Illinois, and the present prospects are that two opposing delegations will be elected from that State. Altogether, Senator Blackburn's prophecy that two Democratic National Conventions will be held seems not unlikely of fulfillment.

⁂

If the reports in the daily press are to be trusted, the Administration, in its eagerness to commit the Democratic party to a gold standard, is violating not only fundamental civil service reform principles, but the repeated pledges of the President. In the Michigan Convention, though nearly every county had adopted resolutions in favor of the free coinage of silver, the Federal office-holders were present in such force that they were able to elect an anti-silver delegation to Chicago. In the South Dakota Convention the same result was secured by the same means. It is reported that a number of delegates who had been instructed by their counties to vote for free silver, and had been elected on an implied pledge that they would so vote, repudiated both instruction and pledge in adopting the platform, which explicitly declared itself "not in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of sixteen to one." The Outlook is not in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of sixteen to one. So far as it is possible for us to foresee the future, such free coinage of silver, it seems probable, would result in silver monometallism for this country, and the immediate perils, if not the ultimate disaster, involved in such a financial revolution would be very great. But the evils inflicted upon a country by financial blunders are not comparable with the evils inflicted by political immorality. The danger to American institutions involved in the use of the political patronage of the Federal Administration to determine the action of primary and nominating conventions is far greater than the peril involved in any financial legislation whatever. It would be better for the country to be commercially bankrupted than for it to surrender the right of local self-government and substitute therefor government dictated by a central authority at Washington, however disguised in democratic forms. Imperialism frankly acknowledged is better than a false pretense of democracy concealing real political dictation.

⁂

The Western newspapers are devoting more and more attention to the silver question. The interest seems to be least in the cities, but even there some of the great dailies are now reporting in full speeches on both sides of the controversy. Last week, for example, the Chicago "Times-Herald" (anti-silver) published a verbatim report of a speech an hour and a half long by Governor Altgeld in favor of free coinage. The same paper, in reporting the Iowa Democratic Convention, devoted fully three columns to the anti-silver speech of the temporary chairman, and about two columns to the free-coinage speech of the permanent chairman. In a similar way the Omaha "World-Herald" (free coinage) published in full a joint debate between ex-Congressman Bryan and Mr. Rosewater, of the Omaha "Bee." The report runs as follows: "Mr. Bryan's Opening" (two columns); "Mr. Rosewater's Opening" (two columns); "Mr. Bryan's Second" (two columns); "Mr. Rosewater's Second" (two columns); "Mr. Bryan's First Ten Minutes" (one column); "Mr. Rosewater's First Ten Minutes" (one column); "Mr. Bryan's Second" (one column); "Mr. Rosewater's Second" (one column); "Mr. Bryan's Third" (one column); "Mr. Rosewater's Fifteen Minutes" (one column); "Mr. Bryan's First Five Minutes" (a half-column); "Mr. Rosewater's First Five Minutes" (a half-column); "Mr. Bryan's Second" (a half-column); "Mr. Rosewater's Second" (a half-column); "Mr. Bryan's Third" (a half-column); "Mr. Rosewater's Closing" (a half-column); "Mr. Bryan's Closing" (a half-column). An immense audience listened to this succession of speeches with the most zealous attention, and the "World-Herald" seems to believe that a much larger audience of readers will follow it from beginning to end. Not since the days of joint debates on the slavery question has the West been so stirred as it is at this time.

❀

The bill prohibiting the further immigration of illiterates passed the House of Representatives last week by a vote of 195 to 26. The bill applies only to men, but the immigration of illiterate women whose husbands can both read and write or who are still unmarried is comparatively small. Children under sixteen and parents of persons already residing in the United States are properly exempted from the operation of the law. Before passage the bill was amended so as to prevent persons residing in Canada from engaging in manual labor in this country while retaining their Canadian residence. This amendment was conceived purely in a protective spirit, and may provoke retaliation from the Canadian Government. The original measure was chiefly urged in the interests of a higher grade of citizenship, although the interests of American labor were also kept in the foreground. Men who reject absolutely the idea that labor can be protected by the shutting out of imported goods almost uniformly took the position that it can be protected by the shutting out of imported labor. Imported goods, they held, are simply the payment for the goods we export; to shut them out, therefore, is simply to prevent our laborers from making beneficial exchanges with laborers abroad. The importation of labor, on the other hand, involves no exchange with other countries. It simply adds to the American supply of labor and intensifies the competition for employment. So long as there were vacant lands to furnish employment to the immigrants this tendency was not felt, but since the immigrants have more and more largely settled in the cities the effect of their competition has been more and more keenly realized. The support of the measure that has just passed the House came for a long time chiefly from the trades-unions. These bodies urged the educational test, because it is the uneducated immigrants who are the hardest to organize and the last to insist upon the American standard of living. This test appealed naturally to those who believe that the quality of American citizenship is threatened by the recent invasion from the east of Europe, and the two forces united secured the passage of the measure. The weakness of the opposition seems little less than amazing when we remember how few persons favored this legislation when presented less than ten years ago.

❀

The United States Supreme Court has decided that the sugar bounty appropriation must be paid. It will be remembered that Comptroller of the Treasury Bowler refused to pay the appropriation on the ground that Congress, according to a previous decision of the Supreme Court (Loan Association vs. Topeka) had no constitutional power to tax the mass of citizens for the enrichment of a particular class. The Court, in overruling him, refuses to decide whether the original bounty legislation was valid or not, but declares that the Government was under a certain moral obligation to pay the bounty to those who had proceeded with the manufacture of sugar in reliance upon an act "recognized by the officers of the Government as valid." "It is true," says the Court, "that in general an unconstitutional act of Congress is the same as if there were no act. That is a very different principle, however, from that which we think governs this case. The persons for whose benefit the appropriation was made are not asserting the existence of a legal and valid debt against the United States, which is at the same time based upon an unconstitutional act of Congress." On the contrary, they merely assert that "their claims, while they were not of a legal character, were nevertheless of so meritorious and equitable a nature as to authorize the Nation, through its Congress, to appropriate money to pay them."

❀

Municipal rapid transit in this city has received a severe blow in the decision of the Appellate branch of the Supreme Court that the Commissioners are not authorized to proceed with the construction of a road upon the plans agreed to by them and approved by the body of experts to whom the Court had referred it. The Court unanimously takes the position that the proposed road, instead of costing $50,000,000 or less, as estimated by the Rapid Transit Commission after a prolonged investigation, would be likely to cost more nearly $100,000,000, and force the city to exceed its constitutional debt-limit, or suspend all other public improvements. The fact that the engineers to whom the Court submitted the plans declared that they could give no opinion regarding the road's cost is held by the Court to be a conclusive reason why the Commissioners should not be permitted to proceed. Of course this decision is a disappointment to the great body of the people in New York. When the Chamber of Commerce Bill, placing the proposed work in the hands of an exceptionally strong body of business men, passed the Legislature, and the principle of municipal ownership was indorsed by the voters by such an overwhelming majority, a rapid-transit system owned by the public and operated for the public was deemed assured. When the present plans were agreed upon by the Commissioners, the work was regarded as well under way. The halt suddenly called by the Court seems at first to involve the waste of all the effort of the past, and to make almost hopeless further effort in the future. When, however, the exact position of the Court, and the possibility of a change of plan or a change of legislation, are considered, those who care for municipal ownership of municipal franchises feel that the contest must not be abandoned. This feeling is naturally strongest among the trades-unions, whose central body on Sunday passed resolutions calling upon the Commissioners to remain at their posts until a way should be found to carry out the will of the people. The same sentiment is also strong among all those who look upon cheap rapid transit as furnishing the only practicable solution to the overcrowding in the tenement-houses, and the evils attendant thereon. When the Rapid Transit Commission met on Monday of this week, there was a general disposition to give up entirely. Fortunately, however, in view of the importance of the work and the possibility of changed legislation, the Commissioners decided not to resign at present. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Commissioners will keep on with their work. If they find that the present plans cannot be modified so as to meet the objections of the Court, and that the cheaper deep-tunnel system of London and Glasgow cannot be advantageously adopted, we hope they will press for the legislative changes necessary to secure for the public the ownership of its rapid-transit system.

❀

The newspaper appreciations of the work of the late Henry C. Bunner have revealed an intelligence which would have given satisfaction to so thorough an artist as the author of "The Story of a New York House" and "Our Aromatic Uncle." Mr. Bunner had literary gifts of the most genuine kind, and he used them with the most artistic conscience. His humor, which was pervasive, light, and true; his sympathy with life, which was quick, generous, and real; his imagination, which was delicate and constructive; and his common sense, which was never confused by his feeling for beauty nor his enjoyment of humor, give his work, in connection with its artistic quality, not only charm but staying power. In prose and in verse his touch was light, graceful, and true. Even the trifles which came from his pen were finished. "The Way to Arcady," which opened his first collection of verse, admirably represents his delicate quality and his fine poetic feeling. His contribution to our literature was slight in bulk but admirable in quality. He was a workman reverential of his art and respectful to his readers in a time when a good many writers, by their slovenliness, show reverence neither for their art nor for their readers. As a man he was direct, honest, and frank. He hated shams, he admired competency, and he had a fine ideal of patriotism—a kind of patriotism which makes a man the irreconcilable enemy of all that is mean, base, and cheap in the public life of his country.

⁂

We heartily commend the suggestion of Dr. Robert R. Booth, the retiring Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly. "I venture," he says, "to submit the inquiry, irregular though it be at this point in our proceedings, whether it would not be possible to secure during the present meeting of the Assembly some kind of brotherly conference which might avail to throw light upon our present perplexities, and afford some clear indications as to what is desired in the way of an extension of Presbyterian liberty. It may be a dream, it may be a delusion; but, speaking as it were for the last time in such a place of public authority, I appeal to the sound Christian sense of this venerable Assembly to take some proper measures to ascertain what it is that divides us, and what is required for the abatement of strife and the reconciliation of parties at variance." It does seem a little extraordinary that the Moderator of a Christian Assembly, in this year of grace 1896, should think that a brotherly conference to settle controversies in a Christian Church could be regarded by anybody as a dream or a delusion. For eighteen centuries Christ's instructions have been before his disciples, and they are perfectly explicit. If a controversy arises in the church, he says in substance, let the contestants meet together and endeavor to settle the controversy amicably. If they fail, then let them submit the question to some third party in whom both have confidence, and abide by his decision. If this fails, then, and only then, does an appeal lie to the church. The attempt to settle a church controversy by a majority vote in a church meeting is always an un-Christian attempt, unless it follows an earnest and serious endeavor to settle the controversy by mutual agreement, or by the judgment of some disinterested tribunal. It is rather interesting and somewhat curious that a proposition for arbitration—for in another part of this address Dr. Booth suggests "that arbitration of differences which we have so highly approved as a method in international controversies"—should have first been urged upon the world by industrial organizations, then seriously taken up by laymen as a means of settling international controversies, and at last, in a hesitating and questioning spirit, suggested to the Christian Church from whose Master this method emanated.

⁂

A National interest attaches to the celebration last week by the town of Andover of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its settlement. This pleasant New England town has had an immensely wide educational influence through its Theological Seminary, its Phillips Academy, and its Abbot Academy. It is, moreover, essentially typical of New England life and New England institutions. Historically the town played an important part in the colonial and revolutionary days. Yet, as the orator of the day, Mr. Albert Poor, remarked, her true distinction lies in her educational renown. Andover has been a center of learning and scholarship, and for generations has exercised a dignifying influence on the culture of the country at large. We congratulate the town and its people on the honorable record of the past, and wish for it an increasing usefulness in the future. The anniversary exercises last week were enthusiastic and patriotic; they included, besides the oration referred to above, addresses by Governor Wolcott, Dr. Donald, Congressman Knox, and others, the reading of a poem written by Annie Sawyer Downs, the singing of patriotic songs by the school-children, and the presentation of historical tableaux.

⁂

The long-continued costly and brilliant ceremonies which had been going on in Moscow for the past two weeks culminated on Tuesday of this in the actual coronation of the Czar and his Empress. The coronation, which is in progress as we write, will no doubt be remembered as the most elaborate and spectacular public ceremony of our times. The cost of the week's festivities has been estimated at from ten to fifteen million dollars. The crown to be used is valued at over a million roubles, and the scepter (containing the famous Orloff diamond) is still more valuable. The religious ceremonies are elaborate and impressive, the decorations and illuminations extraordinary, the fêtes and festivals for the common people lavish. There seems to be no serious fear of Nihilistic plots interfering with the general rejoicing, as it is believed that the Nihilists are still inclined to watch, for the present, the policy of the new Czar for signs of liberal political tendencies. Nevertheless, most extensive precautions have been taken to prevent possible attempts at assassination on the part of single fanatics or men of unbalanced mind who are always excited by such occasions of display. Generally speaking, the common people of Russia are intensely loyal, and have enough of childlike simplicity to be immensely pleased by the mediæval and almost semi-barbaric magnificence of the coronation week. Meanwhile the nations of the world are watching Russia's every move to learn her future policy in the great game of diplomacy in which she is surely to play a leading part.

⁂

The reorganization of the English Liberal party is aided by the practical disappearance of the Irish Home Rule question. It is the melancholy fate of the Irish, whenever they are within measurable distance of the things for which they have been working, to defeat their own purposes by a sudden outburst of irresponsibility. Those who are most friendly to the race can easily understand the doubt which the Englishmen entertain of their ability to govern themselves. It is not many months since Home Rule was almost within reach of Ireland, but when the agitation had arrived at its most critical stage the Irish leader suffered a calamitous moral collapse in the face of the whole world. There was a fierce and fatal division in the Irish ranks, Mr. Gladstone, the first English statesman who had attempted to do for Ireland what Ireland needed according to her own interpretation of her needs, was fiercely assailed, and the cause of Home Rule disappeared in an undignified and disgraceful squabble. Home Rule for Ireland has, by the action of the Irish themselves, been indefinitely postponed. The Liberals are naturally incensed by the support which the Irish members of the House of Commons are giving to the Education Bill, but even before this support was given Home Rule had ceased to be anything more than a ghost hanging about the outskirts of the Liberal programme. The golden moment which saw Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Parnell working hand in hand for a common object, one of the first of English statesmen and the greatest of Irish leaders combining their forces, has passed, and such a happy conjunction of fortunate conditions is not likely to occur again in the life of the present generation.

⁂

The sentence to fifteen years' imprisonment to which the condemnation to death of the leaders of the South African Reform Committee has been commuted is generally regarded as unduly severe. The present action was taken, it is reported, against the advice of President Kruger by a vote of a majority of the Transvaal Council. The prisoners of minor importance will either be released at once or compelled to serve out prison sentences of from three months to a year in duration. It is said that the prisons are wretchedly managed and that some of the leaders sentenced for fifteen years would be most unlikely to survive to the end of that time; on the other hand, the British Colonial Office has received a telegram from President Kruger saying that the jail regulations would be immediately modified so as to increase the comfort of the Reform Committee prisoners. A further reduction of the punishment is thought possible. Mr. Chamberlain, in an address at the annual banquet of the South African Company, confessed that he was disappointed by the decision of the Transvaal Government regarding the sentence of the leaders of the Reform Committee, especially because he had always trusted in President Kruger's magnanimity, believing that he was never animated by vindictive feeling against men who, whatever their errors, had by their energy and enterprise created the Transvaal's prosperity. Of the Government's policy, Mr. Chamberlain only said, rather enigmatically, that it would not be changed.

⁂

The campaign of the Canadian general elections is now in progress. Parliament has been dissolved, and polling takes place on June 23. The main issues are tariff reform and the Manitoba school question. The former involves either the retention or the overthrow of the present protective system; the latter, remedial legislation compelling Manitoba to restore the system of separate schools abolished by the Legislature of that Province in 1890. In regard to the latter issue, a recent restatement of opposing attitudes and intentions by the leaders on both sides has deepened the interest of the contest. The policy of the Conservative party, which favors remedial legislation, is now directed by the new Premier, Sir Charles Tupper, whose speeches on opening the campaign give no uncertain sound, and are without the faintest tinge of compromise. The Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, the Liberal leader, advocates the appointment of a commission whose impartial investigation of facts may be expected to point a way out of the difficulty and facilitate the removal of the vexatious question from politics. Sir Charles Tupper insists vigorously that the question is really not one of separate schools so much as the carrying into effect of the provisions of the constitution under which the educational rights of Roman Catholic minorities were guaranteed protection. Mr. Laurier's position is that, according to the judgment of the Imperial Privy Council in 1892, no educational right or privilege was taken away by the Manitoba Public Schools Act of 1890, and that the subsequent judgment by the same tribunal in 1895 did not touch that point, but gave the Dominion Government the right of interfering, if it should choose to do so, upon an appeal to it by the Catholic minority—the judgment not indicating any particular line of action, in fact not recommending any action at all. There was no necessity of bringing the question into Dominion politics, and it might have been referred back to Manitoba for settlement with quite as well founded a hope of peace and satisfaction as may be based on any threat of coercion.

⁂

A significant feature of the contest is the direct intervention of the Roman Church. Archbishop Langevin has been making vigorous efforts to influence the voters, and, presumptively under his influence, a "Bishops' Mandate," signed by all the Roman Catholic Bishops in the Province of Quebec, has been issued instructing Roman Catholics that it is their duty to vote for the Conservative Government which is pledged to restore to the hierarchy their separate schools. It remains to be seen whether clerical interference like this will be effective. Not long ago, in the county of Charlevoix, in the same Province, a similar episcopal interference was rebuked by the return of the Liberal candidate. In Ontario the Roman Catholic clergy have thus far given no sign of meddling with the civic rights and duties of their parishioners. There is greater probability of such interference in Nova Scotia, where a notable instance of some time ago caused much excited comment. It should not be forgotten that, even should the verdict of the elections be in favor of remedial legislation (though this may be looked upon as improbable), new embarrassments would quickly succeed the old. For, independently of the question whether Manitoba ought to be coerced, there is another far more perplexing, namely, how can she be coerced? The Province controls the machinery of educational administration within her own limits. Can the Dominion, against the wish of the Province, effectually put that machinery in operation? Or can the Dominion set up its own administration of educational affairs in the Province and collect the funds for the support of separate schools? Greater than all legal or technical difficulties of interpretation or compromise is the paramount one of enforcing upon this strongly opposed Province a system of public education which has been found antiquated and unsatisfactory by a very large majority of the people.

⁂

The Italian campaign in Abyssinia has been ended by the surrender, on the part of the Abyssinians, of the Italian prisoners in their hands, and by the abandonment, on the part of the Italians, of Adigrat and the return of the troops to the Eritrean Colony, the territory on the Red Sea occupied since 1885, and from which the recent advance into Abyssinia was made. This territory extends from the sea to the base of the mountains of Abyssinia. In an evil hour, and under the temptation of the evil spirit of Jingoism, the Italians attempted to climb those mountains and invade the territory of a brave and warlike people. They have spent millions of money, sacrificed thousands of lives, and they have now retreated to the point whence they set out, with a very considerable national loss of prestige. A handful of savages have beaten a member of the Triple Alliance, have added greatly to the burdens of her people, have inflicted a serious blow to her military prestige, and have caused the overthrow of the Ministry of the most powerful statesman in Italy. Abyssinia has demonstrated her fighting ability; as for her cause, it was just and righteous from the start. Italy withdraws to the little green strip on the coast of the Red Sea, having paid well for her experience, and perhaps learned a lesson from it. Meanwhile, Abyssinia will have a breathing-space, but probably only a breathing-space, for sooner or later Africa will be divided between the Great Powers. The amended Budget recently submitted by the Italian Minister of Finance shows a better condition than was anticipated. A new loan at 4½ per cent. of 140,000,000 francs was subscribed for twenty-two times over, which is the best possible evidence that Italy still has faith in her Government. The Budget shows no anticipation of a deficit, and it is possible that the stoppage of the expenditures in Abyssinia may help the Ministers out in their attempt to deal with the financial situation.

⁂

There is no question but that the late French Ministry owed its downfall in no small degree to the opposition to the income tax, and yet the income tax, as The Outlook reminded its readers at the time, is by no means a revolutionary measure. On the contrary, it has been adopted by such conservative countries as England and Germany, and is not considered in either country any more oppressive than other forms of taxation. It has seemed singular, therefore, to many observers that the income tax should have been regarded in France by Moderate Republicans and Conservatives of all types as a kind of badge of communism—a thing to be feared and opposed as revolutionary in its character. The Paris correspondent of the London "Times" throws some light on the situation. In his judgment, the income tax would not have excited the opposition which has arrayed so many influential groups against it, if it had not been felt by the classes upon whom it would have fallen most heavily that it was being pushed, not as a measure of financial relief or of financial justice, but as a political bait for the multitude. Small incomes were exempted under the proposed measure, and the burden of the tax was laid, with obvious intention, exclusively upon the few rich men. According to this observer, if it had been introduced as a part of a financial reform, and had rested upon all classes, the rich people would have cheerfully borne their share; but the attempt to saddle, without discrimination, the burden exclusively upon the rich and to lift it entirely off the poor gave the measure a demagogic character, and naturally excited the most intense opposition. The new Ministry has so far given an impression of quiet courage which augurs well for the future, but no one anticipates for it a long lease of life. Under the present conditions no French Ministry is likely to be able to keep in office long enough to impose a fixed policy upon the country.

⁂

The new Shah of Persia has succeeded to the throne of his father without any revolution as yet, very much to the relief of the European diplomats. In fact, the acquiescence of the new Shah's brothers indicates the decline of vitality of which Persia has given so many evidences in late years. The eldest of these brothers is regarded by those who know him as one of the ablest and most energetic men in Persia. He is a man who would naturally be the center of any kind of revolt against the new Shah. Another brother is Minister of War. Probably one fact which gives steadiness to the situation in Persia is the fear of foreign interference. The Persians understand perfectly that Russia regards herself as a sort of residuary legatee, and they are not disposed to inaugurate a family quarrel at the risk of losing the family property. Whenever the opportunity comes, and Russia takes that step, she will stand face to face with England in the Far East. The "Spectator" points out in a recent number the fact that Russia and England are fronting each other at all points. Russia wants Constantinople, and England defends Turkey. She wants large concessions in China, and she has secured them, but England is protesting at every step. She wants Persia, but when she attempts to enforce her claim she will be met by English antagonism of the most pronounced kind. Under these circumstances, Russian watchfulness of English policy and Russian sensitiveness to English advance movements can hardly be wondered at. Sooner or later the two great Powers which have practically divided the East between them will have to settle the question of the primacy.

⁂

Madame Clara Wieck Schumann, the widow of Robert Schumann, died at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, on Thursday of last week, in her seventy-seventh year. She was a remarkable musician herself, but her chief celebrity is due to the fact that she kept the present generation in living touch with one of the greatest musical spirits the world has yet known—Robert Schumann. She was born in Leipsic, and at a very early age displayed a genius which her father very wisely determined to train rather than to exhibit. She became while still very young a professional pianist of high standing and achievement, and leaves behind her the generally acknowledged reputation of being the greatest female pianist that has ever lived. She married Schumann when she was only about twenty-one, and was a support and stay to her husband in the struggles he endured while winning recognition as a musical master, and later she was his devoted nurse and attendant in the mental disease from which he finally died in 1856. Madame Schumann was not only a pianist but a student and composer. Her interpretation of her husband's compositions was her chief musical aim during her long widowhood, and although her own accomplishments and abilities were of the highest order, her name will always be inseparably associated with his.

⁂

"Au Large"

These words, which Dr. van Dyke has so finely interpreted in that out-of-door classic "Little Rivers," have a magical music on the lips of the French Canadian guides and voyageurs. They signify the parting from the old, familiar, every-day surroundings, and the setting out with wind and tide for quest, adventure, and discovery. There is a world of poetry in the very sound of the words, so subtly suggestive—to the ear as well as to the mind—of escape from the bondage of custom, tradition, and commonplace, and of the fresh fields beyond the horizon, and the new experiences which await the adventurer. From the beginning of time healthy men have had the passion for wandering, for experience, for knowledge of life; a passion which has meant, not restlessness and incapacity to deal strongly and continuously with fixed conditions, but energy of will, vitality of nature, a deep-seated desire for growth, enlargement, and power. In the earliest myths the wanderer is a familiar and striking figure. He is no idler among busy men; no loiterer along the roads where others fail; he is, rather, an incarnation of the soul of man, with its divine thirst for fullness of life. He fares far and wide, seeing many countries, undergoing many hardships, meeting many men, drinking the cup of experience from many hands. He represents the greatness and range of human desire, the illimitable capacity of the human soul.

In this noble sense all men of mind and heart are adventurers; they stand loyally to their tasks, they are heroic workers; but the song of the sea is always in their ears, with its suggestion of space and danger and freedom; and the great world beyond the hills, with its mighty energies, its passionate aspirations, its magnificent opportunities, is always in their thoughts. A strong man steadies himself by steadfast devotion to the work of the day and to the relations in which he finds himself; but he gives his soul the freedom of the world, and his imagination the range of art and nature and experience; and so he keeps himself fresh in feeling, in spite of the routine of daily tasks, and original and creative in spirit in spite of conventionalities and the dead level of opinion about him. Every man must do his work and keep his freedom also; every man must care for his body, but he must keep his soul alive also. There is, for those who have learned the secret, no real schism in the order of life; a man may live wisely and well, at the same moment, in the little community where his home is and in the great world which lies about all communities. Over the toughest bit of stubborn soil heaven spreads its infinite blue, and over the most solitary worker in the loneliness of the night-watches the stars shine. Infinity is about us on all sides.

The release of the soul is peculiarly the service which nature offers us in this season of fresh and fragrant beauty. The morning whispers its "au large" at every window as it lies on a renewed and blossoming world. "Come out of yourself," it seems to say; "drop your books, your hobbies, your anxieties, and become once more a free man; wander in the fields, loiter in the woods, consult the stars." He is wise who accepts this invitation and drops his burden and becomes a child once more in open-eyed wonder and open-hearted delight. For no man is so great as when he forgets himself, nor so useful as when he brings to his tasks and his duties a fresh mind and a joyful heart.

A Great Opportunity

It has been intimated that New York City may perhaps be able to secure the services of Dr. D. C. Gilman, of Johns Hopkins University, as Superintendent of Public Instruction in the city of New York. This constitutes a possible great opportunity for New York.

New York is the commercial metropolis of the United States, and is likely to remain so for many years to come. No city can ever be to the United States what Paris is to France, or London is to Great Britain; but no other city can be so much an object-lesson for good or for evil to America as New York. But while it has been the commercial metropolis, it has not been an intellectual or moral leader. Its press is no model for other cities; its government has been a warning, not an inspiration; its public schools have been far inferior to those of other cities possessing smaller population and less wealth. New York has been a great money-making center—that and little more. During the last decade there have not been wanting signs of a moral and intellectual awakening. It has made a vigorous and, on the whole, successful attempt at municipal reform. It is becoming, if it has not already become, a literary center. No city in the world issues from its presses a periodical literature which rivals in various excellence the monthly magazines edited and published in New York. The enlargement of the New York University and its removal to University Heights, the still greater enlargement of Columbia College and its natural development into a true university, and the corresponding though less rapid and notable development of the Polytechnic and the Packer Institutes in Brooklyn, give promise of a true educational life in the higher realm worthy of a great city. It will be long before New York has a public library to compare with the libraries of Chicago or the Public Library of Boston, but the Tilden bequest and the recent amalgamation of the Lenox, Astor, and Tilden endowments gives assurance of a provision in the next century generous beyond anything dreamed of in the past. The Pavey School Bill makes possible a reorganized school system, and the election of Daniel C. Gilman as the executive head of that system, provided he were given an untrammeled liberty and a cordial support, would insure a wise reorganization and a capable and efficient personnel. Without such a system thus officered and equipped, neither great universities nor a great public library can adequately serve the civic life ot the city.

The public-school system of America has grown up in a series of independent local experiments. There has been thus far a distinct advantage in this fact. To this system has been contributed the best intellectual life of many minds. If it is somewhat heterogeneous, it is not narrow; if it is somewhat crude, it is not so bound by its own traditions as to be incapable of further growth. But the time has fully come for an endeavor, on a large scale and under an able leader, to take up the results of experiments throughout the country, and, in the light of them and making full use of them, to organize a public system of education which shall be to the country in its primary and secondary grade the object-lesson which such universities as Harvard and Yale, Princeton and Cornell, Oberlin and Ann Arbor, have been and are in the collegiate grade. New York City is the city in which to undertake this work. It is the most cosmopolitan city on the continent. Boston is Yankee, Baltimore is Southern, Chicago is Western, New York is of no section. It is the most heterogeneous in its population, the most complex in the variety of its problems. It is at once American and foreign, Eastern, Western, and Southern, Roman Catholic and Protestant, Jewish and Gentile. It embraces the homes of wealth and poverty, culture and ignorance, and all the combinations which they afford, including wealth without culture and culture without wealth. It is the only city on the continent which has no local character of its own, because it is a collection of cities, each with its own distinctive character. This is its intellectual and social disadvantage, but is also its opportunity; this makes it a microcosm within which all educational problems are presented; permits it, by solving them, to proffer a solution valuable as an object-lesson to any American community from ocean to ocean.

And Dr. Gilman is, of all men on the continent, the man to undertake this work. He is not only an eminent educator, he is even more eminent as an organizer of educational life. He has proved his executive genius in the public schools of New Haven, in the University of California, and in Johns Hopkins University. He is a creator of educational institutions. It is not improbable that the question—if there can be a question—of his election will be decided before this editorial reaches the eyes of most of our readers. He ought to be elected unanimously, and by acclamation. That election ought to be urged if necessary, and, if prior urging is not necessary, indorsed, by such a spontaneous public meeting as will leave him in no doubt as to the support which will be given him if he accepts. And he should be given a free field, a large liberty, and a cordial support in the difficult task laid upon him—difficult under the best conditions—of organizing in the metropolis a metropolitan system of education worthy of the city, and worthy to be a model for all other American cities.

Flitting

Isaac Watts to the contrary notwithstanding, the busy bee is a dangerous exemplar for the Christian to follow. Flitting from flower to flower is not the exercise most conducive to growth. If the flitter were as eager to get the sweets from the flowers among which he flits, and as patient to digest them into honey, the bee might possibly serve as a suggestion, if not as a model. But, unfortunately, this the flitters are not wont to do. They are more curious than industrious, and more eager to get than assiduous to utilize.

There are not a few in our day who flit from church to church; who go wherever they can hear the last new preacher or the last new soprano; who crowd the aisles of one church on one Sunday, of another church on the next Sunday, and are possibly on their bicycles or reading the last sensational Sunday newspaper at home on the third Sunday. If they are not given the best seats in the sanctuary, they grumble at the inhospitality of the churches; if a contribution-box is passed, they drop a penny in, and wonder that the churches are always begging; and they go away from the church flattering themselves that they have rendered a distinguished service to the church and its preacher by honoring the one with their presence and the other with their attention. Such Christians grow as little as a plant that should be transplanted into a new pot every week. The soul is not like the aerial moss which thrives on the moisture in the air, and grows as it travels on the wings of the wind. It must be rooted if it is to be built up.

Of a similar fashion are men and women who flit from creed to creed. The Athenians survive in America, and they spend their time in nothing else but either to tell or to hear some new thing. That a conviction is old and tried, that it has passed through the fire of controversy unscathed, that it has come out assayed and proved, is to dub it uninteresting; and it is not truth but interest that the flitters seek after. Whatever is traditional they count as false; whatever is new—or they imagine to be new—has an irresistible attraction for them. Such men are like Pilate, of whom Bacon says, "He asked, What is truth? and went out without waiting for an answer."

In the olden time men were educated in creeds and believed them, not because they were true, but because they were traditional. The danger in our time is exactly the reverse: the danger of being educated in questioning and so to believe nothing which is traditional. The world wants not doubts and indecisions in business or politics; as little are they wanted in religion. The mind should have two compartments: an open one to receive the truth, a closed one to retain it. It is quite as important to hold fast that which is good as it is to prove all things. Men should question, not for the intellectual fascination of questioning, but for the solid satisfaction of securing a definite answer. The skepticism which leads only to an interrogation-mark leads nowhere. A positive conviction should be the object of all inquiry. It is far better to be a whole-hearted Roman Catholic than a half-hearted Protestant, or to be a Unitarian with intelligent convictions than a Trinitarian and not know what Trinitarianism is. It is better to believe in anything which has spiritual truth in it, than it is to question everything. Put a tree in poor soil and it will grow a little. Transplant a tree every morning from one good soil to another good soil, and it will not grow at all. We are to build our faith as men build a house. Settle one foundation truth; when that is settled, refuse to question it; build the next faith on that; thus lay a course of convictions, each on its predecessor, and lay them in cement. Refuse to let others' questionings or your own unsettle them.

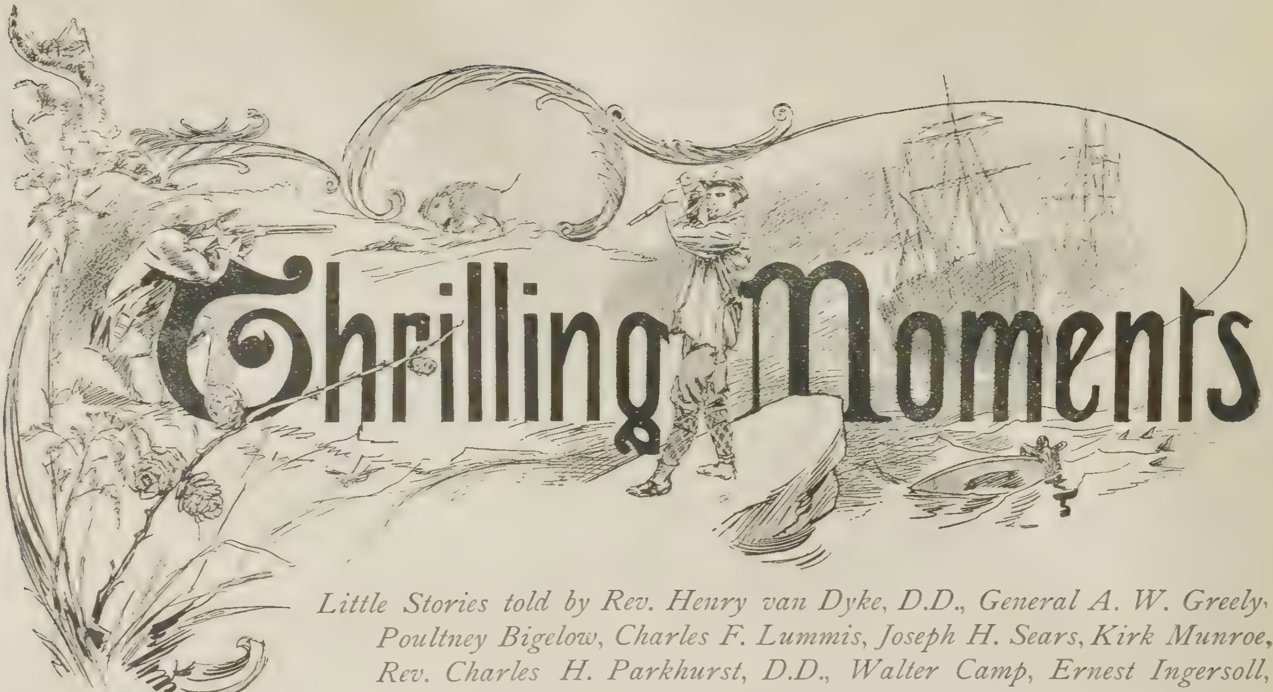
For instance:

The Gospel of Mark tells the story of a wonderful life, paints the portrait of a wonderful character. The life is a noble one, worthy of imitation; the character is a noble one, inspiring to every noble soul who reads it. This is what manhood ought to be, may be. This is an indisputable fact; a granite foundation.

This life and character presents an object for reverence and love. History furnishes no higher object. It is a revelation of an ideal, a disclosure in history of what humanity worships whenever and wherever it is perceived. This is a second indisputable fact; another granite foundation. And these are facts whether the story is fact or fiction, history or myth. In either case the life and character is an ideal humanity and a manifestation of divinity. These facts settled, on these further building is possible. To build on these is to begin a building on Christ. And any building is better than perpetual locomotion from tent to tent, put up to-day and taken down to-morrow.

From the Center

"Men give me credit for genius," said Alexander Hamilton. "All the genius I have lies just in this: when I have a subject in hand, I study it profoundly, day and night. It is part of me; I explore it in all its bearings; my mind becomes pervaded with it. Then the effort which I make people are pleased to call the fruit of genius; it is the fruit of labor and thought." These words disclose one of the secrets of the impression which a mind dealing with a subject with which it has filled itself always makes. Hamilton was a man of genius in spite of his disavowal; but genius cannot supply the place of information nor render unnecessary the thorough work which must precede mastery of any subject. A trained eye can always detect in print the difference between a treatment of a subject based on a thorough and profound study, and a treatment based on a rapid consultation of the encyclopædias. Many men have the power of picking up information rapidly, but the difficulty with this method is that the information so collected does not, to use Hamilton's phrase, "pervade the mind." It is only when a subject is mastered by exploration in every direction and by long meditation that the mind becomes imbued with its peculiar quality, is able to divine what it does not see at a glance, and in the end presents it from a fresh and individual point of view. The intellectual difference between men is much more important along the line of quality than along the line of mere information. There are a great many fairly well informed people who have practically nothing to say on any important subject; they know a good deal, but they have not mastered the subject, nor have they really entered into it. On the other hand, there are those whose information is comparatively limited, and yet who make positive contributions to a subject whenever they discuss it. There are those who touch everything on the rim, and there are those who see everything from the center. The first are always superficial, no matter how large their information; the second are always fundamental, no matter how limited their definite knowledge.



Thrilling Moments

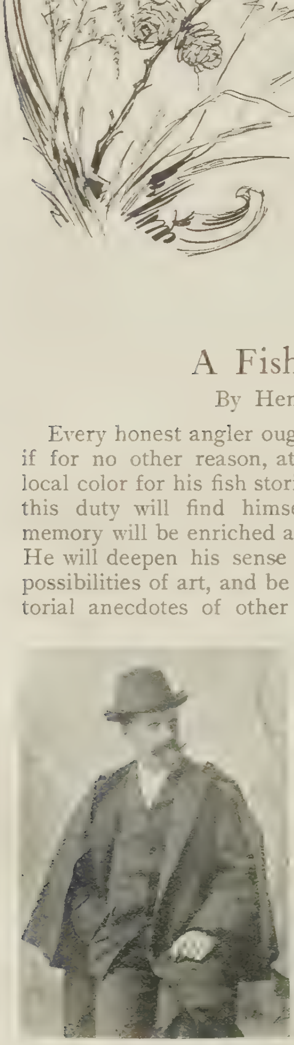
Little Stories told by Rev. Henry van Dyke, D.D., General A. W. Greely, Poultney Bigelow, Charles F. Lummis, Joseph H. Sears, Kirk Munroe, Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D., Walter Camp, Ernest Ingersoll, Thomas W. Knox, Charles Ledyard Norton

With Illustrations by Dan Beard

A Fisher's Crisis

By Henry van Dyke

Every honest angler ought to go a-fishing now and then, if for no other reason, at least in order that he may get local color for his fish stories. The man who is faithful to this duty will find himself abundantly rewarded. His memory will be enriched and his imagination invigorated. He will deepen his sense of the realities of life and the possibilities of art, and be in a position to gauge the piscatorial anecdotes of other men. It was on one of these profitable expeditions that I fell in with the moment which, upon the whole, I consider the most thrilling of my life as an angler—that is to say, up to this point; for you know a true angler always hopes for something better than he has yet caught.



Rev. Dr. Henry van Dyke

It was the last day of the ouananiche fishing in the season of 189–; a crystal morning in September, and all the little bushes which God created for no other purpose than to beautify burned lands were blazing crimson over the hills. Paul and Ferdinand and I had walked four tangled miles through the brush, and scrambled down a fierce gorge to a famous pool—la Place de Péche à Beivin on the Unpronounceable River—with large expectations and our fishing-rods unbroken. But the river was wild and high; the water was out over the rocks; and casting a fly was almost impossible. Paul climbed painfully and despondently down the stream a little way; Ferdinand solaced himself as usual with blueberries; and I was about to sit down and read a chapter of the "Amateur Angler in Dove Dale," when my mournful eye caught the transient gleam of a broad fish's tail just below the foam at the head of the pool. I said nothing to the others, for fear they might be disappointed, but silently resolved that, if it seemed good to an all-wise Providence, that fish should be the last of the year's catch.

The place was some distance away, and almost inaccessible. Cluttering over the slippery rocks, I found myself face to face with a perpendicular cliff rising from deep water. A crevice ran along it for some distance, and by this I edged along, hoping that the little shrubs to which I clung might be well rooted, until I came within leaping distance of a long log, balanced like a seesaw on a ledge of rock in the river. I made the jump; struck the log fairly; felt it settle down and turn; and ran along it just in time to reach the ledge before the log rolled into the current. If I had stayed on it the hundredth part of a second longer, this story would never have been told.

It was easy enough to get from the ledge to the place where the fish had risen. He was evidently lying in a swift narrow channel between two sunken rocks. I sent the flies over him as daintily as possible, again and again. But he would not stir. I tried a change of flies; a Professor, a Brown Hen, an Abbey, a Coachman, a Fairy—and, last of all, the lure which the guides believe no well-bred ouananiche can resist, "un Jocque Scotte, qui coutait cinquante sous à Quebec." Everything in my book was despised by that supercilious salmon. It was abominable—the last day of the season, and the biggest fish, too!

From grave to gay, from lively to severe;

At that instant I heard behind me a voice of hope: the kri-kri-kri-kree of a belated grasshopper. He was fugacious, that sole survivor of his insect race, and agile beyond belief. I slapped at him on the rocks with my hat; but he was not there. I grabbed after him in huckleberry bushes; and found my hand filled with nothing but leaves. At last, just as he was poised on the edge of the stream, gathering his legs for a long flight to the other shore, I crept up behind him, trembling with emotion, and made one final, desperate clutch—successful!

When the fish saw that grasshopper, delicately attached to a slender leader, floating down stream towards him, he was surprised. He had thought that the grasshopper season was closed. The temptation was too much for him. He rose with alacrity; and in a moment I knew that I was fast to the best ouananiche of the year, a six-pounder, in a furious current, with a four-and-a-quarter-ounce rod, only ninety feet of line, and no net.

"Ferdinand! Hola, Ferdinand! Apporte la nette—une belle des belles! Dépêche-toi! Vite!"

The rocky gorge rang with the shouts. Ferdinand came plunging and crashing through the thicket. How long that quarter of an hour seemed while he was making his way around back of the precipice! The fish was darting and leaping all over the pool. The line was almost run out. Ten more whirls of the reel and he would be gone. It was the last chance; and a very little one. But just then he turned, and began to yield to the pressure of the rod. By the time he was reeled in, there was the panting, eager little Frenchman with the net close beside me.

"Carefully, now, very carefully! Take him head first. No slips!"

Ferdinand was on his mettle and ready to do his prettiest. There is no better master of the netsman's difficult art in all the woods of Canada. A gentle approach, a swift scoop, a sudden lift—and the handle of the net broke short off, just above the head. The ring went drifting down the stream with the exhausted fish inside of it. Lost!

But Ferdinand had a lightning stroke of inspiration. He seized a long, crooked stick from a pile of driftwood, leaped into the water up to his middle, reached the net with one last stretch, and hauled it in, fish and all. There he lay in a safe corner among the rocks, smooth and beautiful as old silver, the ultimate ouananiche. It was a thrilling moment.

"But which was the most thrilling moment?" says my Lady Greygown, as she looks over my shoulder. "You have told about several moments; and what I want to know is just where the deepest thrill came in."

She is right. She always is. Thinking the whole affair over, philosophically, I see that it all hangs together. The crude and hasty observer might suppose that the crisis of excitement was at the tilting of the log, or the rising of the fish, or the breaking of the net. But reason tells me that the real crisis, the turning-point of the whole adventure, was when the grasshopper stood poised on the edge of the stream, with his legs tucked under him for flight. Everything depended on the comparative speed of the reflex action of his neural ganglia and mine, at that particular instant. I was not conscious of it at the time. But looking back upon it now, I realize that this was certainly my most thrilling moment.

A man does not understand the real zest of fishing (nor of living) unless he feels the excitement and the importance of getting bait.

On the Matterhorn

By the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D.

Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst

High work among the Alps is so full of crises and thrilling situations that it is difficult to make a single selection from among them all and christen it the supreme moment. As my mind, however, retraces its Swiss experiences, I find that it is exceedingly apt to gravitate toward the Matterhorn, and to a brief season of inimitable magnificence experienced on its upper slope on the morning of August 12, 1890.

My two guides and I had spent the night at a rude stone hut 5,000 feet above Zermatt and twice that altitude above the sea. We turned in early, and the hours dragged along cold and heavily. There grew up around us a quiet that was almost tangible, save as it was interrupted from time to time by a swift and cruel gust that blew across the cold face of the mountain, or by a crack of the ice, or a rolling stone dislodged by a moving glacier.

At one o'clock we were stirred from our cold nests of hay, and, peering out into the weird and solemn world around us, beheld the sky literally afire with glowing constellations. There is no such place on earth to scan the stars as from the tops and slopes of the high mountains. They glisten like diamonds through the thin, crisp air. The ordinary effect was at this time also vastly heightened by the fact that the sky was scored by the burning track of the August meteors. The enjoyment and memory of such scenes is worth more than all the picture-galleries of Europe. Art cannot touch them. Words of description sound hollow and sacrilegious.

We toiled out through the night and up over the rocks, closely tippeted, and with our steps directed by the light of a flickering candle carried by the forward guide. In the course of a couple of hours the stars began to fade a little. The eastern horizon away out in the direction of Austria was touched with a tinge of dawn. A new quality began to steal into the air. Even our bodies participated in the exhilaration of coming day. The valleys were still asleep. We three seemed alone in all the great and wonderful world. Even as I write this I can see again around me the yawning chasms, the paling stars, the wide fields of white, the somber shoulders of the massive Matterhorn, and the great amphitheater of mountains whose higher slopes were beginning to be tipped with purple and crimson. Imagination must supply the touches impossible to words. As the dawn crept slowly on, it seemed as though the world were being inundated by rolling billows of light, that silently chased one another across the landscape, pouring in between the mountains and slipping down their slopes and creating among all the hills little inland seas of brightness and transparency. And then ensued the supreme moment out toward which my heart had been going in almost aching expectancy, when a rim of gold flashed athwart the scintillant slope of Allalinhorn; and as the growing sun kindled into flame the few still clouds that hovered about the day's eastern gate, you would have supposed the Almighty was acting over again the old Creation Day when he said, "Let there be light; and there was light."

A CRITICAL MOMENT

A War Experience

By General A. W. Greely

Youth is the age of thrilling emotions, and my thoughts turn at once to an episode of December 13, 1862, when the Army of the Potomac under Burnside crossed the Rappahannock at Fredericksburg. A boy of eighteen, scarcely recovered from wounds at Antietam, I had marched with the advance, serving as orderly sergeant, Company B, Nineteenth Massachusetts Infantry, in Howard's division. The construction of pontoon bridges being prevented by Confederate sharpshooters, as a "forlorn hope" the Seventh Michigan and Nineteenth Massachusetts crossed the river in pontoons, and I reached the south shore in the fifth boat. About forty men, under Captain Mahoney, rushed into the city as far as was possible, and were told to hold the enemy in check at any cost until the bridge was built. More than a third of our small command were killed or wounded before the order to withdraw to cover was given. It was hard to leave our disabled, before whom a Southern prison surely opened, but as our army had a foothold and our position was clearly untenable, the order was imperative. A brave soldier and stanch friend, George Dew, and myself were the last two to go, tarrying a moment to say good-by to our wounded comrades and fire a last shot, knowing full well that a gauntlet of fire lay between us and safety. Dew started some ten yards ahead, and we followed the main thoroughfare in order to turn down the next cross street to the river. Noting the retreat, the Confederates pushed forward, and, appearing at points that commanded the street, commenced firing rapidly at the squad in front of us. Dew and I now realized the extreme danger our delay had placed us in, and that escape under constant fire was barely possible. Suddenly a Confederate soldier emerged from a yard some fifty feet in front, and, not seeing us, fired and killed a man of our regiment at the very corner of the street ahead. Our rifles were unloaded, the cross street unattainable, and capture at least in prospect. Just then Dew espied a chance for escape down a yard, where the unsheltered path ended at a brick wall that promised safety. As we turned from the street we passed the body of Chaplain Fuller, formerly Sixteenth Massachusetts, who crossed as a volunteer in the same boat with us. Meanwhile our Confederate foeman, with his eye fixed on us, was reloading his gun—fortunately a muzzle-loader. We felt that the race down the path was one against death. Could we pass the wall before the gun was reloaded, and if not, who would fall? With a burst of speed born of desperation, I drew ahead of Dew, and, tossing my rifle over the wall, gave a leap and rolled head-first to the ground beyond. While I was in the air I heard the crack of a gun, the buzzing of a bullet, and a cry from Dew, "I am hit." Gathering myself up, half stunned, and clambering to the top, I helped my seriously wounded comrade over the wall, just in time to avoid another bullet from the gun of our persistent enemy.

General A. W. Greely

A Close Shave at Sea

By Joseph H. Sears

Joseph H. Sears

We were running across the end of the Irish Channel, making our way through the fog and rain into the British Channel. It must have been ten o'clock at night, and the thickness of the fog was something frightful. The Hooper was five hundred feet long, and carried five hundred live oxen, two thousand sheep, and several thousand tons of cargo. Her crew consisted of one hundred and twenty-five men, and there was one passenger—myself. Another fifty seconds had passed, and, standing on the bridge, I was in the act of pulling a whistle-cord to blow the other ten seconds, as I had been doing every minute for two hours, when the chief officer grasped my arm and held it.

Away off to starboard came a thin, squeaky whistle. It sounded like a feeble child not ten feet away. Then it came again, only louder. The captain sprang to the engine-room telegraph, and in a moment the thud of our engines ceased. Every sailor on board stood still, too. So did the oxen and sheep. So did everything; and we blew again. After our blast had finished echoing around in the fog, we heard the toot of our friends off abreast of us, and then a little later far astern. After that we went on sounding, whistling, listening, and giving opinions only when asked, and then in whispers. So for another hour.

Fifty seconds had just passed, and I was for the four thousandth time about to blow, when away off abreast on the port side came another high squeak. The time, the direction, the kind of whistle, were noted, and we kept on. One minute passed, and we whistled. Another, and we blew again. A third, and then— But at the fourth a loud, long blast blew off abreast of us in about the same direction, so near that it seemed we must see something. A moment later high above us three ghostly masts appeared nearly in a line.

Captain Murrell sprang to the telegraph, and almost instantly I could feel the quiver run through the ship telling that the engines were being reversed at full speed. Half a dozen sharp commands, calling all hands except the watch aft to clear away the boats, was all that was said. Then a long hull loomed up out of the fog.

"She'll strike us right amidships," said Mr. Costello, close at my ear.

Then the Captain cried out to her, "Port your helm! You go full speed ahead! We're full speed astern!"

Not a sound in reply.

"No, she'll catch us right abaft the cathead," whispered Mr. Costello.

I grasped the rail of the bridge with both hands, from an inane idea that the shock might throw me down. Then I distinctly remember laughing, Heaven knows why! I did not pass over all the events of my life. I did not think at all. I simply gurgled and watched her crawl upon us.

"We'll catch her on the starboard bow," murmured Mr. Costello, as the long craft pulled across our bows. No, right amidships! God help her—"

"All-l-l-l's clear by fiv-v-v-ve feet!" came a voice out of the fog from for'ard.

The chief officer turned to the Captain, who was wiping his forehead. "A close shave, sir!"

"It was the mercy of God, Costello!" said the Captain.

Instantly the crews of both vessels began to shriek curses at each other, and I turned round at a sound to see the Captain's wife on her knees on the bridge in the fog and rain, with her hands stretched high above her head, while the quartermaster, who had turned away from his wheel, stood facing her with his head bare.

"A CLOSE SHAVE, SIR!"

To save my life I could not help that same queer, gurgling laugh again.

Winning a Football Goal

By Walter Camp

Walter Camp

Rain! How it rained! As we looked out of the hotel windows it seemed like one steady, unceasing downpour that would never end. We were all cooped up in a large room, supposed to be resting, preparatory to our football game with Harvard to be played that afternoon at the Boston ball-grounds.

"Let it rain," said L——, one of our big forwards. "What do we care! We've had practice enough in the mud, goodness knows!" evidently reverting in his mind to the November rains when the coaches sent us out daily, much to the disgust of the players, and especially to that of big L——. "It makes the game too much anybody's," growled our full-back. "Takes all the science out of it—one muff of a slippery ball and they're over your line for a touch-down."

But the rain kept on, and at two o'clock we were driving out to the grounds, and in a half-hour were lined up for the kick-off on a gridiron that looked like a lake surrounded by a thousand umbrellas. How we splashed and plowed through that mud and water for forty-five minutes, and then went into the dressing-room without either side having scored! As I looked the men over I could scarcely recognize them through the layers of mud. A few moments of exhortation from the coaches on the disgrace of not winning, and declaring that a tie was a defeat, and we all trooped out for the second three-quarters.

Our team had been generally accounted the stronger of the two, and we had certainly not expected to encounter any such desperate resistance. The more we called upon our men the more the Harvard team seemed to respond. The second half was more than two-thirds over, and we were as far from victory as ever. We had the echoes of the coaches' words regarding the disgrace of a tie still ringing in our ears. Watson and I were the half-backs, and we had been "sent" until we were ready to drop. Each had gone past the point where a bruise or even fatigue could be felt, but we were also far beyond anything like dash in our play.

During a moment's pause for one of the players to recover from a hard knock the referee came over and called out to the captains, "Five minutes to play!" Think of it! only five minutes, and the game we had so confidently counted upon winning would be ended in a tie! We were at their thirty-yard line, but we had been there several times before and had failed to get the ball over. I looked at Watson, and I saw that the run was all out of him, as I knew it was out of me. Then I determined to try a last resort, and I called Watson and our quarter together. There was a little mound a few feet to the right and four or five yards behind where the ball was resting, that stood up comparatively dry in the lake of mud. "Give us each a try at running, and we'll carry it as far as we can," said I. "Then, if we don't make it, I'll try a drop off that little spot," continued I to myself. We gained three yards in the two tries, and I gave the signal for the ball to come back to me for a drop. I was all but hopeless, and yet as I fell back behind the little mound the goal looked big. In another instant the ball was snapped, and our quarter turned and sent it heavily back at me. I remember to this day how like lead it felt as it came into my outstretched hands, and I had just time to think that I must let it get up off the ground on the top, or I should send it low, as it was so wet and heavy. I remember wondering, too, in the same second, if my forwards would hold long enough to give me the time; and before that thought had had time to really form I had let the ball go and my leg was swinging to the kick. I felt my toe fairly sink into the wet ball, but it rose nicely, clearing the heads and hands of the opposing rushers. Then, as it traveled on, it seemed to be going straight for the middle of the goal, but it would never get there! There was too much sag to the heavy ball! And just as I was giving up hope it reached the bar and cleared it by so narrow a margin that I couldn't see the daylight between! But it was enough: it was a goal, and the game was won. So jubilant were we, and so much did the change of spirits affect both us and our opponents, that we actually got the ball to their line again in the remaining few minutes; but, although the touch-down was allowed, we had no time to kick the goal, as in those days time was called at the exact minute, and no allowance made for kicking goals. I believe that was the most thrilling moment I have ever experienced in a game—that moment when I watched the ball just slip over the bar.

An Adventure in New Mexico

By Charles F. Lummis

Charles F. Lummis

"My most thrilling moment?" That is a difficult distinction to be made. So much depends upon the sort of thrill which is to be taken as the unit of measure. A sudden scuffle with our Gray Friend is not necessarily thrilling—then. Often there is no time for your mind to talk with you at all—if I may so put it. There needs all its suppleness and executive ability to be setting the muscles about their business; and only after the crisis is past can you sit down with your soul and find out what it all meant. Even in the slow, tense chess-game with danger, one often falls into the humor of it quite as a matter of course—pondering little except the next move, until the subsequent reaction.

Foolhardiness is the last thing I would sanction; but these curious studies in the soul's temper and sinew seem to me the most extraordinary pleasures within reach of the physical man, and therefore worthy of prudent pursuit. It has nowise dulled my respect for Death that I have come to count him, not an enemy, but a rival; not a mystery, but merely the difference between the turn of my wrist as I bid it turn and as it may turn if I have, after all, been somewhere at fault in its "bringing up." To me he is no more a fiend, but the pale last landlord—whose face and humor I would know better before we draw the irrevocable lease.

Perhaps the most insight of him has been through the meetings that were by appointment. Perhaps not. It is hard to judge. But generally it is easier to say what most thrilled me than what was most thrilling. Certainly no crisis ever so electrified my own consciousness (at the time) as some things dangerless have done. The thrill of death is not half so great as the thrill of life. Doubtless the most exciting moments I have known were those in which I witnessed my partial resurrection from the dead—the sudden return of speech after long dumbness, and the stupendous sight of a moving hand—the hand which in forty-three months had never known the quaver of a muscle nor the twinge of a nerve. But these were episodes interesting chiefly to myself.

Hunting takes more brains than any other outdoor sport, and pays larger dividends of thrill. Manfully and decently followed, it is also one of the most beneficial. It is good for self-control in patience (for it has a tedious side), and for self-control in the crisis. Not always; but I have found the last reckoning with a bull moose or a bull elk or a cinnamon bear or a cornered mountain lion about as exigent of the man in one as the thrill-seeker could reasonably ask.

"TWO LOADS OF BUCKSHOT AT TWENTY YARDS"

Nevertheless, we go at it wrong-end-to. We hunt, not for discipline, but for excitement; and for genuine excitement hunting isn't a circumstance to being hunted. Aside from chance turning of the tables by wild game, I have known by more than a year something of what the game feels.

There was an honest District Attorney in the Second Judicial District of New Mexico, and he said one day:

"Very likely you know better than I how many murders there have been in Valencia County? Over a hundred, they tell me, and never a murderer legally punished. Now, there is the Barrett case, the most infamous and cowardly crime I ever heard of. Everybody seems to know who committed it—but what can I do? No one will stand by me. Everybody knows, and nobody will testify."

That pricked me, for I knew he knew what an Albuquerque life-insurance agent would say to his application for a policy if he were to introduce such innovations to his office: and I said:

"My dear fellow, if you really wish to follow Barrett, it shall never be said that you could find no one to help you. Go and premeditate a 'white' jury. I'll round up all the evidence you want."

Which was done. Enough to have hanged two assassins—somewhere else. Of course it did no good, except perhaps to teach Jackson the value of resignation. By a queer sarcasm of fate, I have the letter in which the murderer's father announces to his hijo idolatrado that "there is no more care. I have this jury composed."

All this supplemented Barrett. Gentle old Dumas Provencher was the penultimate of the murdered; and several of us learned what it felt like to have a secret price on our heads. We can understand the other side of still-hunting.

Several ambushes were set for me on lonely trails that year. Some I foresaw, and in some they were sorry marksmen, or had the "buck-fever." At best, a rifle is unfit for assassination.

At midnight of St. Valentine's Day, seven years ago, I stepped outside my bachelor adobe in the pueblo of Isleta to breathe the frosty moonlight a moment before bed. Just as my one live arm stretched overhead to supplement a yawn, the most beautifully perfect silhouette I have ever seen upreared from behind a wall sixty feet away, and hunched a shoulder along something that shimmered. Even as I saw two pink spurts, and heard a double roar, and felt a swarm of bumblebees, I was down in a wallow of blood. It was two loads of buckshot at twenty yards. I do not believe in miracles, but I never knew God to permit a scoundrel as steady nerves as a man's.

Now here is one of the curious things about thrills—consistent all through my own experience at least. That first moment was not particularly exciting. Before that sudden figure was half-way erect I knew its meaning as well as I do now. One thinks swiftly enough; but the sole fact that I could do nothing acted as a sedative. What use to butt one's head against the wall? It had come. So, even as the shotgun jumped to a level, a dry laugh was trying to quench my yawn—not in time, luckily, or I should have lost a jaw. It was too good a joke on me. More than a year of alertness—and now the gentleman had picked my one unready minute. It was good enough for me! This, you understand, was when I knew I was to be killed before I could lift a finger.

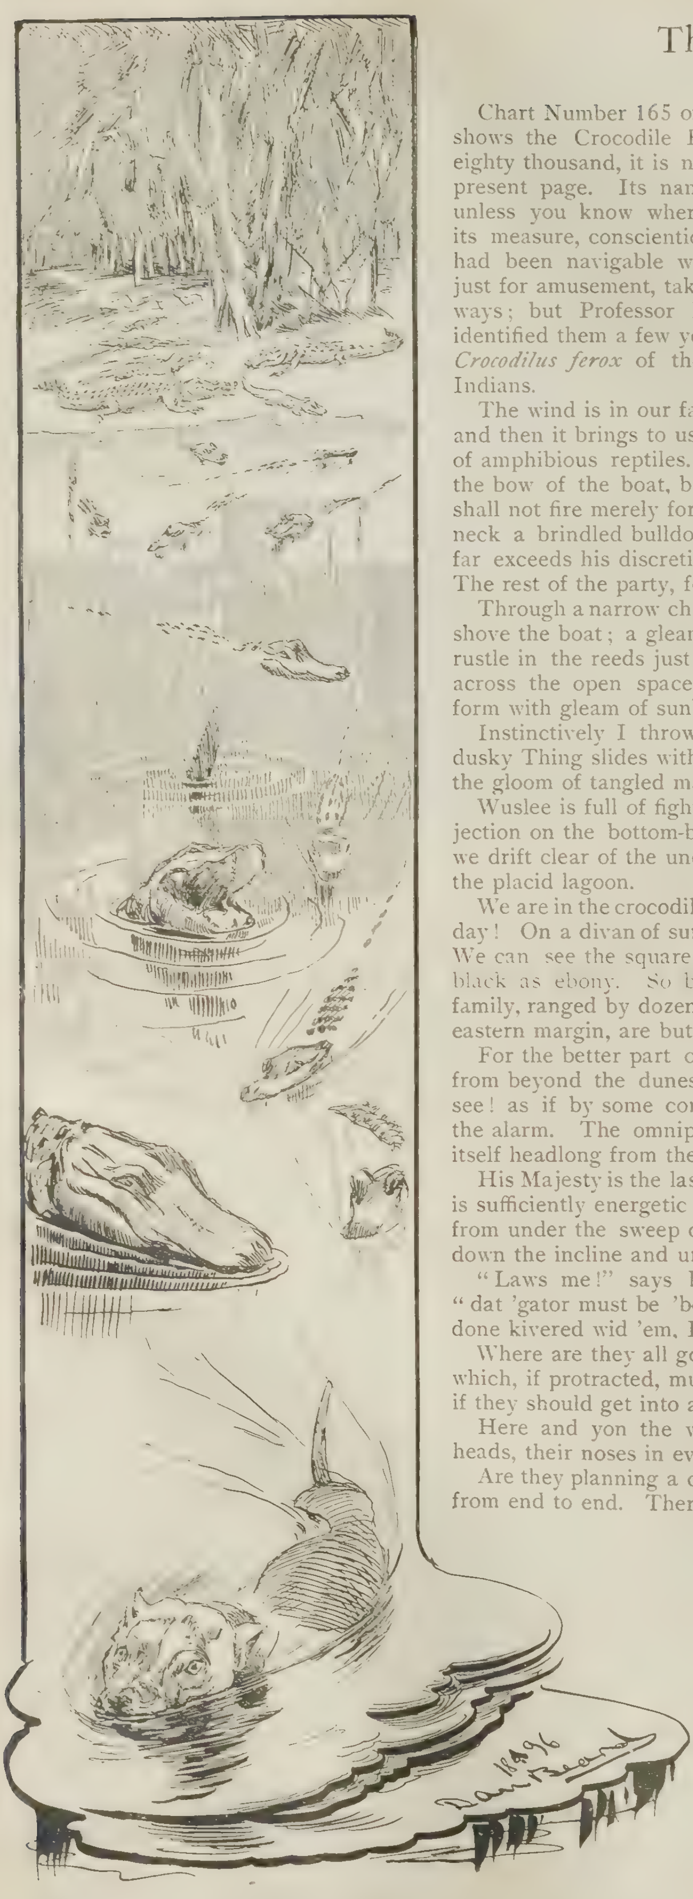
But upon the ground the surprise of feeling stung me. I could not be dead, or I should not know that the blood in my throat choked me and that other warm stickiness spread in my shirt. I rolled to an elbow and looked—and marveled that things are so slow beside the mind. The silhouette was just turning to run.

Then there was a thrill, of the wildest and deepest. But it may not be one to confess in cold blood—and bottled blood. So enough is said with saying that if I ran after my murderer till my eyes began to glaze, he ran with better legs, and was never caught; that friends stanched my leaks with ice-water; and that she who has seen me through other straits as narrow—and finally concluded that one so reluctant to be killed was worth marrying—nursed me back to life. Mr. Jackson came down post-haste to see me, and incidentally dug a dozen buckshot out of my door as keepsakes. We could not see that the hint diminished his zeal; but he had already been found too dangerous, and his office was officially gagged and handcuffed. So he presently removed to Oklahoma, where I sincerely hope he has been able to hang some one.

Los Angeles, Cal.

The Crocodile at Home

By Charles Ledyard Norton



IN THE CROCODILE'S LAIR

Chart Number 165 of the Coast Survey is the only map that I know which shows the Crocodile Pond. Drawn on the Government scale of one to eighty thousand, it is not more than half as large as a lower-case o on this present page. Its name is not printed on the chart, and you cannot find it unless you know where to look. But Uncle Sam's careful surveyors took its measure, conscientiously, years ago, and plotted it as accurately as if it had been navigable water. Probably they shot a few of the big saurians just for amusement, taking them for the common alligators of Florida waterways; but Professor Hornaday, now director-elect of the Zoölogical Park, identified them a few years later as a distinct species, quite a superior race—Crocodilus ferox of the scientists; the "mad alligator" of the Everglade Indians.

The wind is in our faces as we near the outlet of this secluded pond. Now and then it brings to us a faintly sickening odor of musk, the favorite perfume of amphibious reptiles. I am seated forward with a rifle across my knees in the bow of the boat, but this is merely a friendly call, and it is agreed that I shall not fire merely for fun. The Chief sits just behind me, holding by the neck a brindled bulldog whose bite is worse than his bark, and whose valor far exceeds his discretion. "Wuslee" is his name—Seminole for "big dog." The rest of the party, four in all, are astern.

Through a narrow channel among the distorted mangrove roots we stealthily shove the boat; a gleam of open water appears, and at the instant there is a rustle in the reeds just ahead and to one side; a swift, powerful rush, and across the open space directly in my line of vision there dashes a lithe gray form with gleam of sunken eye and savage flash of white teeth.

Instinctively I throw up the rifle, but remember the truce in time, and the dusky Thing slides with a swish of muddy water into the gloom of tangled mangroves.

Wuslee is full of fight, but he is choked into subjection on the bottom-boards, and with a final push we drift clear of the undergrowth and float out upon the placid lagoon.

We are in the crocodile's lair, and it is his reception-day! On a divan of sunny sand his Majesty reposes. We can see the square scales upon his broad back, black as ebony. So big is he that his numerous family, ranged by dozens and scores along the sandy eastern margin, are but pygmies beside him.

Colonel C. L. Norton

For the better part of a minute we drift unheeded. The thunder of surf from beyond the dunes is the only sound that disturbs the solitude. But see! as if by some common telepathic instinct, the hideous legion catches the alarm. The omnipotent fear of man has fallen upon it, and it launches itself headlong from the shore, as if by order of a commandant.

His Majesty is the last to awaken; royalty sleeps sound; but his awakening is sufficiently energetic to make up for the delay. The sand flies in sheets from under the sweep of his mighty tail as he straightens himself and drives down the incline and under the protecting shield of his watery fastness.

"Laws me!" says black Billy, turning ash-color, and shipping his oars, "dat 'gator must be 'bout fifty foot long! De whole bottom o' dis yer pond done kivered wid 'em, I reckon."

Where are they all going? They take to the water on converging lines which, if protracted, must bring them together under our very keel. What if they should get into a family quarrel there?

Here and yon the water boils suggestively. Here and yon are grizzly heads, their noses in every case pointed in our direction.

Are they planning a combined attack? What is that? The frail boat quivers from end to end. There is a rubbing and bumping underneath, but the water is thick with mud. I can make out nothing to shoot at, so reserve my fire.

This is nervous business. The crocodiles are in no hospitable mood. They are ferox, and resent our intrusion. We stamp and pound on the boat to frighten them.

"Don't shout!" says the Chief; "that draws them."

Billy is tugging heavily at his oars, and the clumsy boat surges forward at her best speed.

And now Wuslee makes the mistake of his life. Elevating his muzzle, he emits a defiant roar that rings across the water. Like the whistle of Roderick Dhu, it acts as a summons.

The lagoon is instantly alive with grim heads sweeping in curves toward a common center.

That center is Wuslee, for the Chief has slung him overboard with might and main, and he strikes the water ten feet away. We do not look to see what becomes of him. We have still twenty yards to go—ten yards, five! Hurrah! and I leap ashore with the painter, and, digging my heels into the sand, hold the boat fast while the others scramble out and tumble over me without waiting for any order of social precedence.

And Wuslee?—poor Wuslee!

Oh, he swam ashore, too, in a leisurely way, shook himself, sniffed suspiciously at the freshly disturbed sand, and then, turning about, freely offered in a loud voice to fight any crocodile that dared come ashore. The rest of us were guiltily glad that he did not suspect why he was thrown overboard.

And Crocodilus ferox? Well, for some inscrutable reason he had been seized with a panic and was no longer in evidence.

Between Sharks and Breakers

By Poultney Bigelow

Poultney Bigelow

We were camped in a snug little bay on the north side of St. Thomas, which, as every one knows, is a rocky little island of the West Indies belonging to Denmark. The sea was blue as blue could be; the savage mountains rose straight up behind us as though jammed up out of the bottom of the sea. I was sound asleep in my sailing canoe Caribee when Uncle Ned rapped upon her sides and called out:

"'Spec' we'd better get started, sah; de wedder looks squally!"

Now Uncle Ned was a negro well known in St. Thomas for his courage and skill in small boats; and when he heard that I intended a canoe cruise around the island, he begged me to take him along. So I gave him two dollars, with which he bought provisions for a whole week, and within an hour from the time we met our boats were under weigh. My canoe was fifteen feet long, thirty inches wide, twelve inches from deck to bottom-board; had folding centerboard and drop rudder, two masts, and leg-o'-mutton sails. I slept aboard, and carried abundant stores and clothing for a whole season's cruising.

Uncle Ned had a fishing-boat of his own, and took a friend along for the sake of company.

"If I drown," I sang out to him, "I'll wait for you to come fish me out!"

"Better not drown," he sang back; "de sharks am too hungry dese yere days!"

The first part of the voyage went well enough. Caribee sailed over the big Atlantic rollers as gracefully as an antelope bounds in and out of the high prairie grass, and Uncle Ned was soon left far behind, for though he did well enough in beating, he could not come near my canoe when the wind was aft.

But the last day was squally, as I soon discovered; and the squalls dead aft. It was lively work jumping from one side to the other as the little boom flew from side to side in the heavy seas. The bursts of wind came screeching down through the gullies of the mountain, and gave scant notice of their approach. I held on to my mainsheet until I thought the little sail would crack into shreds; and the tight little boat yawed about in the broken water as though trying to shake me out of her. Canoes have souls and think a great deal, but they cannot always make themselves understood. Caribee on this occasion meant to say:

"Do shorten sail, or I shall have to upset!"

But I could not do as she wished. I was experimenting with a new kind of boom attachment very strongly recommended to me by a canoe friend whom I will not here mention. It worked beautifully in a smooth sea and gentle breeze. Off St. Thomas, in a gale of wind, it was worse than useless—I cursed the day when I was beguiled into this novelty.

Suddenly bang came a puff which I dodged, but bang came a second which I missed, and before I could see how it happened Caribee was bottom side up, I was swimming with my double paddle in one hand, and the Atlantic Ocean seemed alive with every variety of article known to canoeists. Never before did I realize how many small things one canoe could conceal—hats, shoes, stockings, bread, bottles, shirts, spool of cotton, many pieces of clothing, bits of paper and several books and maps, and many more things that I cannot remember.

All my life spread itself before me like the figures in one of Edison's kinetoscopes: each year galloped past in the fraction of a second; and through it all I saw an imaginary shark with jaws like a cellar door ready to eat me up. Uncle Ned's parting words seemed to have been wise ones, and I could see no escape from either the sharks or the equally savage surf which smashed itself upon the rocks close to me. The sails of Uncle Ned's boat were far down on the horizon; he could not possibly know of my plight, and the sea was flouncing up and down so furiously that I could not manage to get into my canoe. For I had not merely to contend with the swell rolling in from the Atlantic: Caribee had drifted so close to the rocks that there was a reflection of broken waves much akin to the water at Hell Gate when wind and tide meet.

BETWEEN SHARKS AND BREAKERS

So I sprang upon the bottom of Caribee and made up my mind to make what I could of the one chance left me—namely, to keep away the sharks until Uncle Ned should reach me, and that seemed to be a matter of many, many hours.

I trailed my long double paddle out between my legs, and kept wriggling it in the hope of frightening the monsters away. Every now and then I fancied I saw a spiteful black eye leering up through the angry waters—or something that looked like the horrid teeth of this heartless beast. But each time that I thrashed the waters furiously, these hideous sights disappeared, and I commenced to feel as though, after all, sharks were great cowards.

I had caught a big shark once in the Indian Ocean, when it required twelve able-bodied seamen to haul him aboard, and from that day on I had preserved a profound respect for this devilish fish.

But as fast as I recovered from my shark-feelings I lost heart at the way the wind and waves were forcing me closer to the black rocks, whose sides went hundreds of feet straight up out of the sea, and offered no chance of escape to the mariner who might be hurled ashore.

It was growing dark, and I commenced to wonder what would happen when I should lose the power to thrash about on my upturned Caribee, when suddenly out of the gloom rose up the sails of Uncle Ned, and a voice full of fear—"'Fore de Lawd—wha is you?" I shouted, and by my voice he bore down straight upon me, and caught my painter as he swept onward. He dared not jibe or come about, but kept straight on, dragging me and Caribee so violently that I feared another calamity.

Uncle Ned pulled me in over the side; Caribee was quickly righted; then I stowed her sails, baled her out, and when we arrived at the extreme western point of St. Thomas, which was close to us, I jumped once more into my precious canoe and paddled away for the harbor lights, none the worse for my bath amongst sharks and breakers.

Next day I was off on board the Brazil Mail, and left Uncle Ned with a reputation for gallantry at sea unequaled in the annals of West Indian chivalry.

In the Utes' Country

By Ernest Ingersoll

Thrilling moments are as various as human nerves and emotions. I heard a philosopher discourse for two hours once to demonstrate that all life was nothing but divers quivers. The phrase commonly applies to physical peril, but then the sensation is more likely to attack the spectator than the principal of the scene. Sometimes you may be both observed and observer, as once when I sat in a railroad train on a high bridge in the midst of a sudden hurricane. The bridge trembled, the cars tottered under the push of the gale, and few thought any of us would ever get ashore. I was one day riding on the pilot of a locomotive going fifty miles an hour when we rounded a curve, to find a car on the track a few rods in front of us; the future looked unpleasant to the man under the headlight! Pleasure and pain play on the same keyboard of nerves. One can experience much the same sensations as overtook me on that pilot from the sight of the mellow mingling and shifting of sunset lights flushing and paling upon a mountain peak when they usher in the night with a chorus of color. One day, twenty or more years ago, when the Colorado Rockies were still "Indian country," a party of us in Government work started to explore their southern fastnesses. In Middle Park we were halted by the Utes, who were assembled in considerable numbers. They were determined that we should not proceed, and "had a good mind" to annihilate us on the spot. We were equally resolved to overcome their objections and go ahead. The greatest circumspection was needed lest some spark should ignite the powder of war scattered thickly about us. I, for one, ran at top speed away from a malignant old squaw who chased me with a knife while the red mob applauded. On the second afternoon the crucial pow-wow was in progress in old Peah's teepee. The muffled dum-dum-dum of war-drums resounded here and there from other lodges, where eager young braves were making public opinion. One of the geologists and myself, to while away the time, began to measure the flow of Grand River, by sounding its depth and estimating its velocity. Marvin had gone up-stream a short distance and started a piece of wood which I was to time as it passed a certain point. I had squatted down, the better to observe this small float, when something caused me to glance up. Squarely opposite me, fifty yards away, knelt a powerful Indian, in paint and feathers, glancing along the barrel of a rifle pointed straight into my eyes. "Had the negotiations failed?" was my first thought, followed by I know not what others. But I kept them to myself, and, rising slowly to my feet, drew my revolver from my belt, and steadily brought it down to an aim as good as his. A moment later the redskin lowered his rifle and stalked away. We had to throw in a new chip; and it was some time before the ants ceased to travel up and down our spines, as the Poles say.

"Something caused me to stand up"

Ernest Ingersoll

Between the Pony and the Buffalo

By Thomas W. Knox[1]

Thomas W. Knox

My most thrilling moment was a good while ago, in the year 1860, when I was crossing the great plains between the Missouri River and the Rocky Mountains, before the days of the railway. The wagon train was then the favorite mode of travel, and I was one of a party that had adopted that style of locomotion. Near Fort Kearney several of us embraced the opportunity to buy Indian ponies, being stimulated to do so by the report that buffalo were abundant a hundred miles or so further on. The ponies were said to have been trained in buffalo-hunting, and this circumstance gave them an additional value in our eyes. My finances did not justify my owning an entire horse, and I had to content myself with a half-interest in a pony, a friend of mine owning the other half.

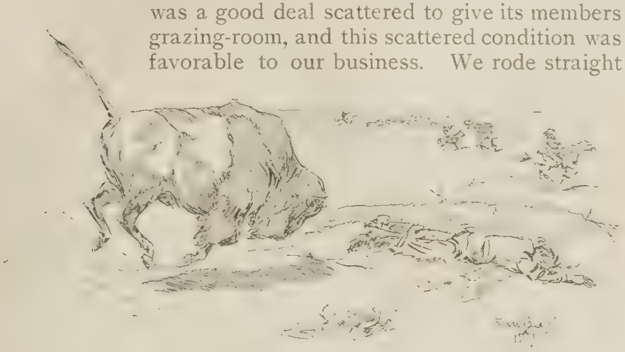
As we neared the buffalo country the excitement grew, and when at last we actually saw a herd in the broad valley of the Platte River all our party were in a condition of feverish heat. It was late in the afternoon when we sighted the buffalo four or five miles away, and we went into camp shortly afterwards. Some of us wanted to go in pursuit of the animals at that hour, and would have done so had not the train-master issued orders to the contrary. We consoled ourselves by laying plans and making preparations for the morrow, so as to get an early start. My friend who shared the ownership of the pony with me proposed that we “toss” for the first buffalo hunt; I assented, and won the toss, to his evident chagrin and my great delight.

---

[1] This sketch was written for The Outlook by Mr. Knox a short time before his death, which took place on January 6 last.

Well, the hunting-party got off soon after breakfast, and went in the direction of the herd, which, disturbed by our proximity, had moved three or four miles further up the valley. We took an easy pace, so as to have our horses fresh, and when within a mile of the game we halted to take breath, tighten girths, get our weapons ready, and, in fact, make all preparations to “go in.” I was armed with a navy revolver—an excellent weapon for buffalo-hunting—and had in addition a cavalry revolver for use when the navy one was exhausted. Fixed ammunition was not much in vogue on the plains at that time, and nearly all firearms were loaded with loose powder and ball—an operation not at all easy to perform while on the back of a horse in pursuit of a herd of buffalo.

When all was ready, we mounted again and were off. The herd, which was composed of thousands of animals, was a good deal scattered to give its members grazing-room, and this scattered condition was favorable to our business. We rode straight among the buffalo, and each man singled out the object of his attack. I selected a young bull, turned my pony in his direction, and then dropped the reins on his neck, as I had been told to do by an experienced hunter.



“I came to the ground”

The pony took me alongside the buffalo, and not more than two yards away. I raised my revolver and fired, as nearly as I could guess, at the creature's heart.

The pony jumped sideways to avoid the charge which the buffalo generally makes when he has been hit by a bullet. I ought to have been clinging firmly to his sides with my knees, but I wasn't. I lost my seat, and as the pony made his sideway jump I fell from the saddle and came to the ground between my steed and the young buffalo bull!

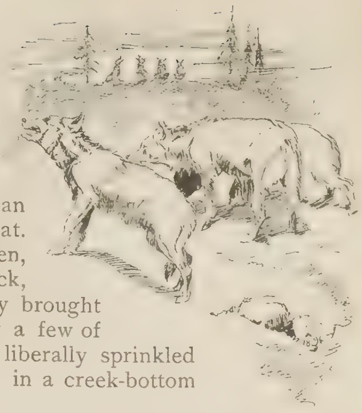
That was a thrilling moment, and in less than a second I lived my entire life over again. Everything I had ever done seemed to pass in review, especially those events on which I did not look with pride. I expected to be pierced by the horns and trampled by the hoofs of that infuriated beast, and could already feel his hot breath in my face. I closed my eyes to receive the shock and literally prepare for death.

The shock did not come, and I opened my eyes again. Looking around, I saw that the buffalo had regarded the pony as his assailant, and not the rider. He was pursuing the riderless animal, which was running in the direction of the herd, probably with the intention of gaining the other horses. I stood up and fired my revolver in the air, but nobody gave it the least attention till the hunt was over. Then somebody caught my horse and picked me up on the return to camp.

An Arizona Thrill

By Kirk Munroe

It was midwinter in the park-like pine forests of northeastern Arizona, and the nights were bitterly cold. Blankets were scarce and thin, but the prowling wolves that disturbed our shivering slumbers with their howlings were provided with thick fur robes that would keep us very warm if we only had them. We were a small party making a preliminary survey for the Atlantic and Pacific Railway, and our mission was so urgent that we found little time for hunting. Earnestly did my “bunky” Sam Wells and I discuss plans for securing one or more wolf robes; and finally, on discovering a small quantity of strychnine among our medical stores, we decided to adopt the one suggested by Serédro, our Mexican guide, and try poisoned meat. Our opportunity came when, by a bit of phenomenal luck, an elk was unexpectedly brought to bag, and that evening a few of the larger bits of offal, liberally sprinkled with poison, were strewn in a creek-bottom half a mile from camp.



The howling wolves had on thick coats of fur

In the early morning Wells and I, impatient to learn the result of our experiment, started off ahead of the slower-moving Serédro, who was pottering with numbed fingers over his gun. To our intense disappointment there were no dead wolves in the creek-bottom, though every bit of our poisoned meat had disappeared, and we decided to make a long circuit in opposite directions in hopes of finding either our game or our bait. As I completed my portion of this circuit and again approached the creek, much lower down, I discovered a thin column of smoke directly ahead. A minute later I was peering from a willow thicket at a score of Indians gathered near a small fire over which a couple of squaws were cooking some meat, and I knew at once who they were.

The powerful tribe of Navajos had recently been subdued, driven from their country (which was the one we were then traversing), crowded on a wretchedly small and inadequate reservation in eastern New Mexico, and there, according to the usual brutal policy of our Government, left to starve as speedily as might be. Rendered desperate by their condition, several small bands had broken away and returned to their former haunts. We had been warned at Wingate to avoid these bands, as any collision with them in their present reckless mood would certainly precipitate another Indian war.

Kirk Munroe

Remembering this, I was about to withdraw from so dangerous a vicinity as quietly as possible, when, to my dismay, I recognized in a little pile of meat near the fire several pieces on which I had rubbed strychnine only the evening before. At that moment one of the hungry squaws seized a bit of the half-cooked meat and raised it to her mouth. With a loud cry I rushed foward, snatched the deadly morsel from her, and flung it far to one side, where it was instantly seized and gulped down by a famished dog.

At my appearance the Indian men sprang to their feet and advanced toward me with angry faces, drawn knives, and leveled lances. They had no guns, for all firearms had been taken from them on the reservation, but they were sufficiently well armed for the purpose in hand. That moment was certainly one of the most thrilling of my life, and would doubtless have proved my last on earth had I attempted either to fight or run. Fortunately, I was spared the alternative; for, ere a decision was forced, there came a ringing shout, and in another instant Sam Wells, closely followed by Serédro, appeared on the scene. A few words explained the situation to them, and a few more from Serédro in the Navajo tongue explained it to the angry Indians. At the same time the Mexican's remarks were forcibly illustrated by the death-struggles of the unfortunate dog which had swallowed the poisoned meat; and an hour later a treaty of peace was concluded over a hearty breakfast furnished to the starving savages at our camp. Here they were found to possess a number of wolf-skins which they would gladly exchange for provisions, and one of these, which I still retain, serves as a reminder to this day of my first and last attempt at poisoning wolves.

Photography on the Heights

Switzerland—Greenland—The Far Northwest

Photographing in the High Alps

By Marie Gozzaldi

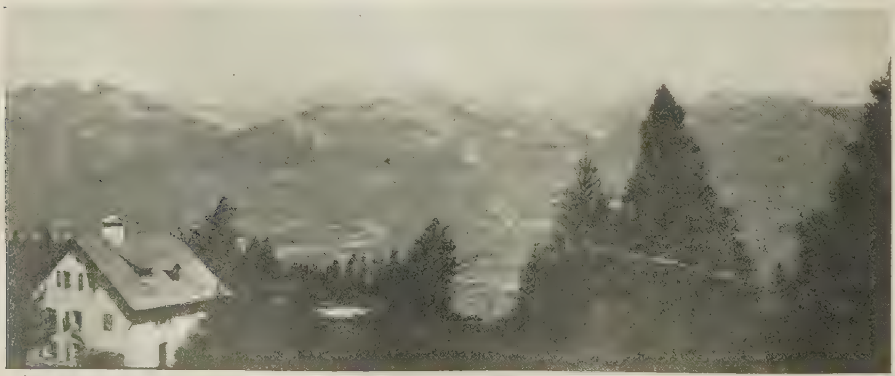
Delightful work, isn't it? Yes, and often disappointing too, and that is the reason that I turn to-day from camera and printing-frame to pen and ink. What is the use of piles of spoiled plates and three years' experience if one does not make some "footprints in the sands of time," that a brother seeing may avoid? As I look out on the mountain peaks that surround my chalet, I hear in imagination the click of innumerable kodaks, and see the black cloth of more ambitious cameras, and my heart grows sick as I think of the bitter disappointments lying in wait for the novice when all these plates and films are developed; and the worst of it is, the lovely views are gone never to come again.

The first great mistake that all make up here is over-exposure. It is incredible till one has proved it, the difference in the clearness of the light on the mountains as compared with the valleys. At three thousand feet a very slight exposure is sufficient; it is impossible to say how much, as it depends on the lens. But with my lens I find that one-half the usual time is enough.

Let us suppose that the mischief has been done, the plate has been over-exposed. Don't despair! There is still hope of saving it. You must develop with hydrokinone. I know professionals laugh at this developer, just as Turner used to at oil-painting—call it a plaything "fit for ladies." Still I must say I have had wonderful results from it. If you are doubtful of having the right exposure, make your bath weak: if the picture comes too fast, pour in a few drops of bromide of potassium, ten per cent.; if it does not come, pour off this bath and try a stronger solution of hydrokinone.

Beware of distant mountains; they are sure to come out low and disappointing. Don't try them unless you have a wide-angle lens, and then use a disk of yellow glass that can be screwed on. Put in your smallest stop (diaphragm) and use your most rapid plates. With the yellow glass you must expose longer than without, and the sky is never quite so bright, but it subdues the foreground and brings out the distance.

If a distant mountain must be taken, I find it helps to have a tall tree in the foreground or middle distance that comes against the peak; this serves as a kind of measuring-stick, and keeps the mountain its proper height. A glimpse between trees is often more satisfactory, besides being more picturesque, than a panoramic view.



MOUNTAINS OF CANTON BERNE, FROM THE RHONE VALLEY

After the plate is finished come the difficulties of printing, and here patience is necessary. Perhaps when the print comes from the frame it looks well, but the snow mountains fade out in the fixing-bath. Here I find a brush dipped in vermilion, ground with a little gum arabic, useful. With it just touch the tips of the snow mountains on the gelatine side, using it very dry, and keeping the outlines sharp and square, or before you know it your mountains will turn into clouds. The foreground may be masked by covering with paper or varnish on the glass side. Such negatives must never be printed in the sun.

My first photographic summer was spent at Faido, a little town on the St. Gothard, made familiar to many readers by Butler's charming book "High Alps and Sanctuaries." There I confined myself to genre pictures, religious processions, groups, etc. Here I first made the acquaintance of iconogen as a developer. Besides our party, there were two other amateur photographers there; one, a delicate little Milanese chemist, since gone to a better country. His chief fad was a fear of light. He always developed in the dark-room with the pan covered. Once he actually shut himself into a wardrobe to develop; at other times he got under the bedclothes; and on his wedding journey he borrowed his wife's white chuddah to cover the pan with; the result can be better imagined than described!

THE LITTLE CHAPEL IN THE WOODS, ABOVE SION, VALAIS

Built 1797

(This photograph "took itself," the cap having fallen off)

The other photographer was a Roman, a large, heavy-featured man with a tremendous voice, who had his camera for an inseparable companion. He it was who introduced me to iconogen. He had no patience in developing, and when in town always took his plates to a photographer, thus losing what to my thinking is the greatest pleasure of all, the gradual appearing of the picture. As there was no professional near, he soon pressed me into service to mix his chemicals and develop for him. I laugh when I think of that time; it was the blind leading the blind; and if any photographs came out it was a wonder. We used to mix a gallon of iconogen at once, and when the picture would not come he would get angry and bellow "Io lo butta!" which was his way of saying, "I shall throw it out the window!" When he came back there another summer the landlady wouldn't let him have a room at any price, so many had been our spills.

There was a wedding there that summer, and the Roman offered to "take" the wedding party. A room was secured for him in the priest's house opposite the church door, and there he set up his camera pointing out the window. The priest was in the chancel, the little boys who formed the choir were seated decorously outside, the guests were waiting in the front pews, a crowd of villagers in the back. The hotel omnibus and the one carriage of the place, that served to bring the wedding party, stopped at the door. All was expectancy. Suddenly a word of command rang out sharp and clear; dismay filled the guests; the priest rose to his feet; the small boys stampeded with a great clatter, as did also the villagers. What had happened? Could it be that the bridegroom had been arrested on the very threshold of the church? (Politics ran high, and we were on the verge of an émeute.) Nothing of the sort; it was only that Roman! He had obliged the happy pair to turn and face him at the door to be photographed, instead of waiting until they came out after the ceremony, as every one expected he would. I must confess he generally got good photographs when some one else developed.

The next summer I took to photographing the peasants, and from the amusing experiences it is hard to choose the funniest. The news soon spread like wildfire that we were at home one afternoon in the week, and that cabinet pictures, groups or single figures, would be taken for ten cents a copy, smaller portraits for five cents. Peasants came from far and near, the weak and the aged on mules; the space in front of our chalet looked like the outskirts of a country fair. The lads and lassies carried on mild flirtations while awaiting their turns. Sometimes they came in the morning, brought their dinners, and ate in the woods near, so as to be on hand early.

One old man told me he had brought all his family to be telegraphed. The girls brought their best Sunday costumes with them, and made a dressing-room of the woodshed, where they trimmed their hats. One old peasant woman begged the loan of a lace collar, and when she found I had none, she prayed for a string of beads! Even had I had them they would have ill accorded with her homespun gown and coarse chemise.

THE ARCTIC SAHARA OF THE "GREAT ICE"
(Before a blizzard)

They thought that "the painter" could do everything; several asked to be made beautiful; some wanted to be young; one thought that she would look much better if she had not held her head so high, and begged me, almost with tears, to paint her looking down, and she would take two copies, and pay me in fresh raspberries. "You will now, dear, won't you? Just looking down a little bit!" I was paid in all kinds of wares, eggs and butter being the favorites.

One copy of nearly every group was destined for the Americas; son or brother, uncle or aunt, had written for a photograph, and this was a chance not to be missed of getting a bargain. The work, besides being interesting in itself, brought us into touch with the people, and gave us a chance to study human nature as yet unspoiled by civilization; so that I count the summer I spent as a photographer among my profitable seasons, though the gains in filthy lucre were not large.

Photography on the Greenland Ice-Cap

By R. E. Peary, U.S.N.

There is probably no place on the surface of the earth where it is more difficult to pursue the art of photography than on the Sermiksoak, the "Great Ice" of interior Greenland.

A description of the photographer's environments is necessary for a clear understanding of his difficulties. Imagine a large, irregular island of continental size, with a range of ragged mountains from two to ten thousand feet in height rising along the shores throughout its entire circumference. Then imagine the entire area inclosed by this bounding mountain chain to be buried beneath the accumulated snow-precipitation of centuries, in a latitude where it does not rain and where there is practically no melting of the fallen snow, all of the valleys being filled completely by this accumulation, which, still increasing, has risen high above the summits of the highest mountains, till every indication of the underlying topography has disappeared, and the interior of Greenland has become simply a great plain of snow elevated from one to two miles above the surface of the sea, and at the edges rounding down like a flat dome to the inner sides of the coast mountains.

It is, in fact, a huge white glistening shield, some twelve or fourteen hundred miles in length and five hundred miles in width, resting on the supporting coast mountains.

Questions as to the characteristics of this unique terrestrial feature—among others, whether this enormous deposit of snow and ice is increasing or decreasing, or remaining practically stationary—are of special interest to geologists and glacialists.

It might seem, at first thought, from a statement made above, that the "Great Ice" was constantly increasing in depth; but there are causes at work inimical to such increase, and only investigations carried on through a period of years can determine whether the resultant of these causes is greater or less than, or just balances, the annual precipitation.

Principal among these causes are the glaciers and the winds. The former, which protrude through every deep valley in the coast mountains, discharge into the sea during the year an enormous bulk of ice from the lower strata of the "Great Ice" of the interior, in the shape of numerous fleets of icebergs.

The latter cause, however, is the only one affecting the subject under consideration. The wind is never quiescent on the "Great Ice." Day and night, summer and winter, year in and year out, this wind is sweeping down from the frozen heart of the "Great Ice" to the coast mountains, bearing with it the fine drift of snow. During gentle breezes this drift is of almost impalpable fineness, and extends but a foot or two above the surface. As the wind increases in force the particles of snow become coarser and the drift rises above a man's head; while in the savage blizzards of this frozen Sahara, this drift is a roaring, blinding, suffocating Niagara of snow, rising a hundred feet or more into the air—a drift which almost instantly buries any quiescent object, and in which it is almost impossible for the traveler to breathe.

This wind and its accompanying drift can be likened to a torrent of water rushing down the slopes of the "Great Ice" and following the most direct slope to the land, which, once reached, it goes rushing over the mountain summits, some of it sinking in whirlpools and eddies into the valleys, but much of it being carried on to the coast cliffs, over which it goes swirling into the sea or on to the sea ice. So constant and pronounced is this tendency of the wind to follow the most direct line to the land, that I could always determine the direction of the nearest land by the direction of the wind. This drifting snow is as penetrating as water.

There is no doubt in my mind that in the middle of the great Arctic night, in the center of this "Great Ice," a mile and a half or two miles into the frozen air that sweeps around the pole, separated from any possible effect from the earth's radiated heat by a blanket of ice and snow a mile or more in thickness, and distant fully two hundred and fifty miles from the possible ameliorating effect of the Arctic Sea, there is to be found the fiercest degree of cold of any spot upon the surface of the globe.

Four times has the writer crossed the northern part of this frozen dome of Greenland, the distance being nearly six hundred miles from the coast mountains. While making these journeys it is necessary to use the mariner's compass constantly and navigate the sledges by solar observations, as a ship is navigated at sea.

A second and very important peculiarity of the ice-cap as bearing upon photography is the intensity of the light. My journeys across the "Great Ice" have been made during the Arctic summer—that is, during the time that the sun is constantly above the horizon throughout the twenty-four hours, for a period of four months or more. The Arctic sun, in pleasant weather, is as brilliant as the sun of any southern latitude, and when this brilliancy is increased by reflection from an interminable and absolutely unrelieved glistening white surface of snow, lifted into the highly rarefied and perfectly pure upper strata of the Arctic atmosphere, the intensity of light is something that can be realized only by one who has actually seen it.

ON THE RETURN MARCH ACROSS THE "GREAT ICE"
7,000 to 8,000 feet above the level of the sea

The pungent quality of this blinding glare is such that the strongest eye can endure it unaided for only a few hours. A man placed in the center of the "Great Ice" in midsummer would be as completely helpless at the end of a day as a blind kitten.

The traveler upon the "Great Ice" must keep his eyes constantly protected by goggles of heavy smoked glass, and even with this we frequently, when in camp and trying to sleep, were obliged to protect our eyes still further by a strip of fur tied across them to exclude the light which would otherwise penetrate the closed lids.

When, as frequently occurs, the traveler is shrouded in the clouds which sweep across this elevated plateau, the light, though less intense and of a different character, is even more trying to the eyes; the presence of the cloud results in such an equable distribution of the light, and so completely destroys all shadows and shade effects, that there results, in addition to the direct strain upon the eyes, a peculiar reflex mental strain.

One seems to be suspended and traveling in infinite gray space; the eyes are open and one feels the ability to see, and yet the range of vision does not seem to penetrate more than a few feet; the light in the zenith is precisely the same as that between one's feet, and the peculiar effect is noticed of being able to see one's feet and to feel the surface upon which one is treading and yet be unable to see it, the snow absorbing the perfectly diffused light which filters through the cloud, and, in the absence of all shadow, becoming indistinguishable from the cloud itself.

At such times one has only to advance a hundred feet or so from the rest of the party to experience the peculiar paradox of being in the broadest of broad daylight and in the full possession of all the senses and yet unable to see anything.

The third condition seriously affecting the work of photography on the "Great Ice" is that of the low temperatures. The low temperatures experienced on the inland ice would to most minds seem naturally to come at the head of the disagreeable features connected with photography, but I have intentionally placed them third on the list; for while temperatures of —40 and —60 degrees are fraught with terror to the ordinary mind, and, indeed, would be serious under ordinary conditions and with ordinary clothing, to the well man, properly fed and properly clothed in the impervious furs which alone are suitable for Arctic work, the effect of these temperatures is by no means pronounced, and does not seriously interfere with ordinary movements or occupations. The effect, however, of temperatures of —50 degrees and lower upon materials is very striking. The toughest of wood subjected to these temperatures becomes almost as brittle as glass, and the harder woods at these low temperatures begin (as the expression goes) to "burn" the skin in the way that is familiar in the case of metal. All mechanism in metal is affected by the excessive contraction, and the effect is seen at once in the sluggish action of such mechanism, and sometimes by its utter refusal to work.

Finally, the exigencies of inland ice-travel are such that not an extra ounce in weight or an extra cubic inch of space can be permitted in those things which go to make up what are known as the "constants" of sledge-weights—i.e., things like the camera, the sextant, the sledge itself, etc., which must be carried from start to finish of the journey, and which do not diminish in weight from day to day, as do the provisions.

From what has already been said, it will be seen that the photographic equipment for work upon the "Great Ice" must combine the minima of weight and bulk and the maxima of simplicity of mechanism and effectiveness. The constant sweep of the wind, the ever-present possibility of a sudden rush of a half-starved dog, combined with the yielding character of the surface, render a tripod and time-exposures impracticable; while the rough usage to which the sledge and its load are subjected puts glass plates out of the question. The equipment, then, figures down to that camera which shall be lightest and most compact, which shall be effective and instantaneous in its action, and which shall use film negatives only.

In my trip of 1891 I carried two ordinary No. 4 kodaks, each charged with a roll of one hundred film negatives. These negatives were developed with the utmost care by Rau, of Philadelphia, while I stood beside him with my notes, giving him verbal information as to the precise conditions under which each exposure was made.

As a result of this careful treatment very satisfactory results were obtained, and an encouraging percentage of good pictures turned out, in spite of the fact that this was my first experience in photography.

In my 1895 journey I carried again the No. 4 kodak, which in respect to size, weight, and convenience for this particular work I did not think could be improved upon; but on this trip I had a special camera with modifications suggested by my previous experience—namely, metal parts constructed of aluminum, and a roll-holder carrying two hundred and fifty instead of one hundred negatives. In place of the second camera of the previous journey I carried simply an auxiliary roll-holder ready loaded with two hundred and fifty negatives; thus, with a trifle more than half the weight of my first photographic equipment, I had a capacity of two and one-half times the number of negatives.

Mechanically this camera was all that could be desired; but, unfortunately, either as a result of the low temperatures to which they were subjected, the quality of the films, or the length of time elapsing between their manufacture and their development, the negatives did not turn out as satisfactorily as on the previous journey, and the percentage of good pictures was considerably smaller.

The subjects available for the camera during the traverse of the "Great Ice" are necessarily limited: they comprise the members of the party, the dogs, the sledges, and the infinite expanse of wind-swept snow. The drifting snow and the intense light render a satisfactory result with the last-named subject almost an impossibility, though on one or two rare occasions a good representation of the surface of the Arctic Sahara was obtained.

There is a certain sameness about the members of the party which makes any considerable number of photographs of them not particularly desirable, and the interesting subjects for the camera figure down practically to the dogs—the faithful, noble, powerful brutes upon whom the brunt of the work falls. In my pictures I have them in all positions and under all conditions; now straining at the drag-ropes as they pull the sledges across the white frozen waste; now eager and alert at meal-times; now with drooping heads and tails as fierce head-winds drove the drifting snow in their faces; now almost completely buried in the drift, as they usually were at every camp; and now (but only on rare occasions this) sleeping comfortably in the brilliant sunlight, undisturbed by the rushing winds or drifting snow.

The care of the camera when not in use is of the utmost importance. The drifting snow, as I have already stated, is as penetrating as water, so during the march the camera must be inclosed in a water-tight bag, or at the end of the march it will be useless until after long and vexatious labor. No box will suffice, for the snow will find its way through the finest cracks; nothing but a bag tied tightly at the mouth will give satisfactory results. Then it must be carefully stowed upon the sled to prevent injury by the jolting or even capsizing of the sledge among the marble-like waves or sastrugi.

Arrived at camp, the camera must be taken into the tent and placed under one's head, in order to avoid any chance of rough inspection by a loose and predatory dog.

When the moment comes to take a picture, the opening of the camera must be shielded with the fur mitten from the drifting snow, else in an instant the lens and finder will be thickly coated. Then, when a momentary lull in the wind and snow occurs, the shot must be taken as best it can, and, if time permits, a second and a third, for in numbers only is there safety.

MOUNT ADAMS FROM SHADOW LAKE

During all this time care must be taken not to touch with bare hands any metal part of the camera, unless, as is quite likely to be the case, fingers and thumbs have already, by repeated thoughtlessness, been burned and calloused into insensibility by repeated contact with the freezing metal.

With the Mazama Club on Mount Adams

By W. D. Lyman

What? Where? First, the Mazama Club—Wild Goat Club (Spanish for wild goat); headquarters, Portland, Oregon; purposes, exploration of snow-peaks, especially those of the Pacific Northwest; the collection of scientific knowledge concerning the same, and the encouragement of annual expeditions to them. Organized on Mount Hood, Oregon, in July, 1894.

MOUNT ADAMS FROM TROUT LAKE

Second, Where? Mount Adams is in the State of Washington, forty miles north of the Columbia Gorge, where that "Achilles of Rivers" has cleft the Cascade Mountains in sunder to make himself a way to the sea. Mount Adams is about one hundred and twenty miles northeast of Portland. It is the second in height of those fire-hearted, ice-robed volcanoes which sentinel the stupendous margin of uplift with which our continent fronts the greatest ocean.

Mount Adams was selected in 1895 for the general "meet and climb" of the Club. Arrangements were made for smaller parties to climb nearly all the snow-peaks of Oregon and Washington, and these parties were all to be provided with heliographing instruments in the hope that regular signals might be carried from peak to peak across the six hundred miles betwixt the northern boundary and Shasta, the great peak of northern California. Indeed, the plan at first embraced the magnificent conception of continuous flashes southward along the high Sierras until they lost themselves amid the deserts of Lower California—a zigzag chain of sun-lightning along wires of air, at an average elevation of twelve thousand feet, from British to Mexican border!

MOUNT ADAMS FROM THE SOUTHWEST, WITH THE KLICKITAT GLACIER ON THE LEFT

The mountain trips of the Mazama Club, and especially the heliographing project, excited a greater popular interest in our physical geography than has ever before been felt. In fact, it may be set down as the greatest claim to credit of our musically named club that it has awakened the people of these coasts to the wondrous possibilities of these mountains for scientist, sportsman, artist, and tourist. We have not hitherto half appreciated our heritage.

If, now, the amiable reader, before he sets forth with the "Wild Goats" to tread the snow kingdoms, will kindly glance at a map, he will get a clearer conception than is otherwise possible of the journey that is to be taken. He will see the great Cascade range running parallel with the coast-line across the entire breadth of the States of Oregon and Washington. This range is practically a section of the Saint Elias Alps of Alaska and of the Sierras of California, though the continuity is more or less broken. Along the range are lifted at intervals gigantic peaks of basalt, monuments of a volcanic age, all even now in various degrees of volcanic activity. These peaks range in elevation from about ten thousand feet to fourteen thousand four hundred and forty-four—the last being the height of Rainier or Tacoma. The other peaks of Washington are Baker, Shuksan, Index, Stuart, Saint Helen's, and Adams; while in the sister State across the Columbia are Hood, Jefferson, Three Sisters, Diamond, Scott, and Pitt. Among these mountains are numerous lakes, and the head-waters of many rivers cluster about them. The map does not show the innumerable springs, glades, falls, cañons, caves, lava-beds, and glaciers distributed throughout that vast strip of elevation, five hundred miles long and sixty miles wide.

The tenth of July was set for the ascent of these peaks. Parties went to the various ones from the towns nearest, while the general gathering on Adams was composed of representatives from a dozen or more places, the great majority being from Portland. A steamboat ride of ninety miles up the Columbia to White Salmon, Washington (itself one of the grandest scenic routes in America), brought the Portlanders to the beginning of a thirty-mile stage-ride to Trout Lake, a pond rather in size, but beautiful in surroundings, and full of trout, gamy and toothsome. There the party or parties rested rendezvoused, ate, gazed, and greeted new arrivals.

Trout Lake is not disfigured with hotels, guides, railway stations. It rejoices in a magnificent view of the great mountain, cloud-like and etherealized in the pure upper air and in the rich pine-grass, with long sweeps of verdure amid the park-like vistas of giant evergreens. Besides the piscatorial and scenic charms of Trout Lake and Creek, the whole region is rendered interesting by the caves for miles about. The entire region is a perfect honeycomb of lava. Most of these caves are small, the largest thus far discovered being about a mile long, but it seems to have extensions connected by narrow shafts, and, with fuller examination, may sometime be found to rival the great cave of Kentucky. The lava formations in this cave, moss-like, grape-like, wreath-like, delicate tracery left by the hot fingers of volcano-sculptors, are numberless and beautiful. Some of the smaller caves are called "ice-caves," for in them may be found great pavements of ice and glittering stalactites and stalagmites, which, with a torch on the farther side, seem like illuminated organ-pipes. In July wild strawberries grow in profusion about the mouths of these caves, while multitudes of gorgeous wild flowers hang over, as if to catch the cold air which issues in gusts from the frosty receptacle. By the time we have visited the lake and caves, eaten fish from the former and made ice-cream with ice from the latter, the time has arrived for transferring baggage from wagons to pack-trains, and travelers from seats to feet, or, in some cases, to saddles. Trout Lake is practically at the foot of the mountain, though the lower benches are very gradual in ascent, and the distance, up, up, up, is about sixteen miles to the snow-line, and thence to the summit six or seven more.

Camp had already been selected on a sightly knoll, and there for three days the hungry pedestrians gathered after their walks through the enchanted glades and lawns with which nature has wrapped around the majesty of the mountain. It was beautiful and pleasant to look down the long descent and see the weary plodders slowly toiling up to the goal, or to hear the tinkling bell of the cayuse pack-train and then see it winding laboriously up through the shining balsams.

By the evening of July 9, eighty-three persons were gathered in the various flower-bordered and grassy glades that surround the camp. Preachers, lawyers, teachers, photographers, and business men were in the company. Nearly half the number were women—clad, of course, like sensible people, in bloomers or abbreviated skirts.

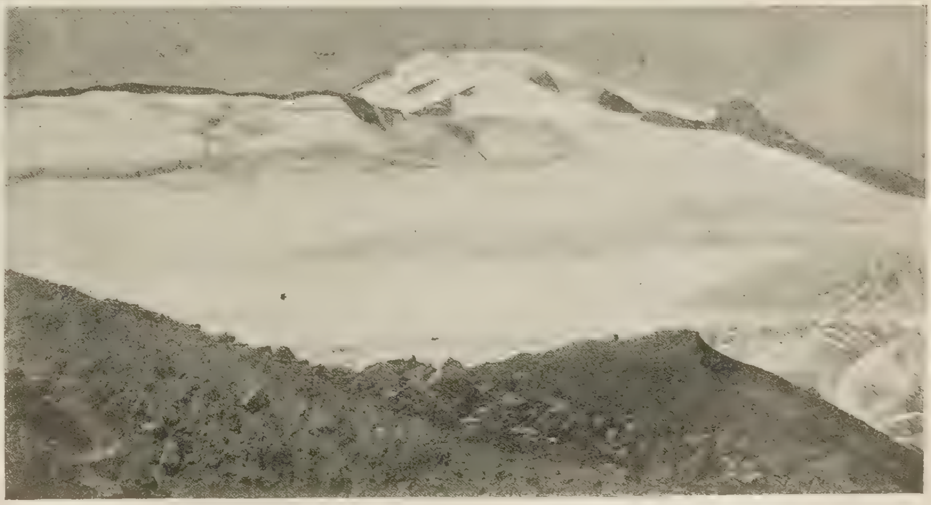
In this "meet" were some of the most noted of the "high climbers" of the Northwest. The "meet" promised to be felicitous and interesting beyond precedent, and so it was but for one untoward circumstance. On the 8th, the experienced ones, looking out over the vast plains of the Columbia Basin, as they palpitated in the summer heat, detected signs of an approaching "northeaster," and, sure enough, that night it came, raging and howling as if to punish the audacious climbers for daring to invade the solemn recesses of the "thunder-birds" which the Indians say inhabit this mountain, and which they think swoop down on invaders of their domain and create storms and thunder. On the 8th, 9th, and the morning of the 10th, this simoom swept from Montana to the sea, withering the grain-fields below and bearing all the loose dust and smoke across five hundred miles to the summits of the highest peaks. To the dismay of the climbers, the whole vast landscape, which just before had lain clear and luminous below their eyrie, vanished in haze. One great object of the trip, the grand and varied view, was lost.

Nevertheless, at three o'clock on the morning of the appointed day the bugle sounded, lights began to twinkle, hurried breakfasts were swallowed, Alpine "toggery" donned, and by six o'clock over forty persons were away for the beetling snow-fields above, and about half of them reached the summit. But we will just here detach ourselves from this party and join a smaller one which, under the guidance of the writer, decided to defer the ascent a day in the hope of clearer skies, and to visit instead the two great glaciers on the southern flank of the mountain. With boots spiked and eyes goggled and alpenstocks in hand, we set forth through the groves of sub-alpine fir and mountain pine which are perpetually contending with the ice-king for supremacy, through the "Avalanche Valley," where the desolated forest and eroded hill-points tell of tons of snow in furious descent in some recent winter; across foaming streams, which gush from beneath fantastically sculptured ramparts of snow; up shining snow-fields, around dizzy promontories of basalt, where the stunted trees writhe in the bitter wind, yet, with claw-like roots worming into the crevices, defy frost and blast; then across an icy shoulder of rock, where toes and fingers, as well as staff, are needed to prevent a slide far below—and then we find ourselves, six miles and four hours from camp, just above the green crevasses and the rainbow-ringed ice-wells of the Mazama Glacier, thus now christened in honor of the Club.

But now, to the dismay of some of the company and the delight of others, we find that we have a snow-bank at an angle of about fifty degrees to descend. Either that or a weary climb of half an hour. For pure exhilaration, commend me to coasting on a snow-peak. The guide braces himself against his alpenstock, leans back till his head almost touches, spreads his feet apart, commits himself to Providence and gravitation, and lets go. Whiz! At the bottom, just short of the rocks! Encouraged by the successful example, the rest follow one by one, some standing (which is the only scientific way), some sitting, some feet first, and some head first, without casualty, though one young lady loses control of herself and is coasting head first with dangerous rapidity toward a pile of rocks when a strong hand is interposed in time to stop her. And now we find ourselves upon the lateral moraine of the Mazama Glacier.

As we pick our way across its loose and uncertain footing we discuss glaciers. A glacier represents more of the forces which carve and distribute the crust of the earth than any other natural agency. The elemental fires have prepared the lava-bed in which it moves. The clouds have given their treasures of snow. The winds have drifted those tons on tons of whirling congelation into the sheltered cañons, and there the monstrous weight of the thousands of acres of drifted snow has gradually transformed the flakes of frozen cloud into the river, or, as it rather seems, the mountain, of solid ice. For it seems an immovable thing, a very type of fixedness. But the ice-river is at rest no more than the clouds from which it came. Bending and twisting, it slowly descends the narrow cañon. And as it moves it dips deep down and scoops up tons of shattered rock, enough to build city after city, its lateral moraines becoming huge ridges over which we toil for hours, while its terminal moraine, descending far into the valley, sends forth avalanches of snow and rock to plow the slopes and crush the trees. Fire, cloud, wind, frost, pressure, grind, avalanche—but by no means are these all the forces bound up in the river of ice. From the melting corridors and galleries of the ice-city the gathered waters descend here and there into "glacial wells," across whose slippery rims myriads of rainbows seem to have been broken. In the monstrous mortar and pestle at the bottom of these wells the rocks are ground to pulp, and those streams which descended from above as clear as crystal issue from the terminal moraine as thick as soup, white or red with sediment, to astonish the dwellers far away with the sudden turbid color, or to spread a fertilizing film on some irrigated garden, or, more remotely yet, to leave glittering particles of gold on the margin of the great river or even in the black sand of the ocean beaches. The glaciers of Mount Adams have never yet been all explored and mapped. No one, so far as we know, has yet circumnavigated the mountain. Three great glaciers, from one of which issues the White Salmon River, and from the others of which come the sources of the Klickitat, lie on the southern side, and these have been more or less examined. But in the great circuit of fifty miles which the huge bulk occupies there are five or six more whose wonders are yet to be revealed.

Across the vast irregular mass of the Mazama Glacier we pick our way cautiously for three miles, several of the party giving out on the way and finding a warm cranny on the moraine to rest in, and at last, stepping off the northern moraine, climb painfully over a ragged ridge of rock, one of the former favorite haunts of the wild goats and "bighorns." We see that we are nearing the grandest scene which any one has yet discovered on this mountain, and which the tourist might well cross the continent to see. This is the great glacier of the Klickitat. Imagine a cañon a thousand feet deep, with perpendicular walls of red, black, purple, and saffron rock, in which lies a gashed, contorted mass of ice a mile wide, with rents and crevasses into which whole cities might be poured and lost.



MAZAMA GLACIER

Formerly "Hell-roaring" Glacier, Mount Adams

Tired but exultant after our tramp of fifteen miles, we enter camp just at sunset, there to meet the climbing party from the summit, and to learn that, though the gale had subsided and the ascent had proved reasonably easy, the smoke had obscured the entire country, and that, with the exception of an interchange of signals from Mount Hood, the long-cherished heliographing scheme had failed. The fact, however, that there was even one success under such unfavorable circumstances shows the entire feasibility of long-distance signaling by sunlight, and may lead to valuable practical results.

On the next day the party of which we were members climbed to the summit; and the day after that still another party succeeded. In all, about forty of the eighty-three there succeeded in this great test of strength and pluck. But the pall of smoke still hung over all, and, therefore, to give any clear description of the scene from the peak we shall have to draw upon previous climbs under fairer skies. And, first, let us hang in the air a moment before we start, and outline for you the zones which compose the long ascent of one of our great Western mountains.

Mount Adams may be said to begin at the crossing of the White Salmon, half a mile beyond Trout Lake, at an elevation above sea-level of eighteen hundred feet. The entire distance from here to the summit is about twenty-two miles. The first ten miles has a very gradual grade of about two hundred and fifty feet to the mile—the natural slope of the slowly stiffening lava, whose outflow originally created the mountain. This first zone has a north temperate climate; for prevailing vegetation, the giant pine, the pine-grass, the wild strawberry, the tiger-lily, and the wild cherry; while for travel it is the ideal region for the saddle-horse, and even in most parts a carriage could be driven right through the fragrant pine-woods. It takes us to a little over four thousand feet above sea-level. Then comes the zone of the larch and balsam fir and quaking aspen, the huckleberry and fragrant laurel and scarlet mimulus, phloxes of many colors, and "squaw-grass," with its snowy tufts. Here, too, is the rhododendron with its masses of rich red, lately adopted as the State flower of Washington. In this zone the snow falls in October and lies till May. It is the zone also of the summer sheep-range, and, as a natural consequence, of the prowling cougar or more dreaded puma. Here formerly ranged the deer and elk, in spite of their predatory foes, but they are no longer able to withstand the competition of the sheep. This is the zone of alpine glades and natural lawns and crystal streams and foaming cataracts and lakelets, all forming a combination so entrancing that one thinks it to have been made as a pleasure-ground of the gods. It rises just into the edge of the frigid climate, at a grade of four or five hundred feet to the mile, to an elevation of about six thousand feet. At the upper margin are the favorite summer camping-places. The horse can still be used here, though one's feet are often more speedy and convenient.

The slope of the mountain is growing continually steeper, in true volcanic type, and we enter more quickly upon the third zone, one of a different character—the zone of the avalanche and the glacial moraine. All softer vegetation has vanished. The beautiful sub-alpine fir and the twisted mountain pine are the only trees left to defy the eternal frost above. But in the sheltered nooks the blue bunch-grass grows rank, and alpine flowers of many hues warm the dark crags. In this zone the snowbanks linger all summer in the cañons, and the furious gusts which even in July sweep down from the perpetual winter above powder its exposed points with snow. On the polished ledges of rock are innumerable glacial grooves and scratches, telling of the epoch when glaciers completely enswathed the peak and descended far into the valleys. Hands and feet are the only means of transportation in this zone. The only denizens are wild goats and mountain sheep and the beautiful white-and-black ptarmigans, with an occasional eagle or hawk.

The climber through the ever-steepening ascent of this belt goes four or five miles further to the dizzy height of nine thousand feet. But he is yet a long way and many a hard gasp and leg-strain from the solemn white dome. For now begins a last zone, one of perpetual snow, the climate of the North Pole. Vegetation has ceased entirely. Animal life has vanished, except, strange to say, grasshoppers and butterflies, which hop and fly, higher and higher, till they die. They can be seen by hundreds lying dead almost on the summit. Up this two miles of arctic zone the traveler climbs, hands and feet, pike and rope, at a grade of two thousand feet to the mile, panting with the thin air, sickened by the sulphurous smell, almost blown from his footing by the fierce wind which usually blows, with face and neck slowly scorching in the glaring sun which can burn but not heat.

But now for our climb. Somebody is stirring at three o'clock—in fact, has been awake most of the night. Shouts echo through the pine grove, lights twinkle, camp-fires blaze, coffee and ham are hastily swallowed, we shiver a moment in the cold air, and then are off, just as the streaks of sunrise strike the cold white dome into life. Distances are very deceptive here. We say, "Oh, it looks easy! Just reach the little bluff yonder and we are on the first summit, and it is only a little way further." But somehow that little bluff keeps getting further and further. Long ridges and unseen "saddles" and slippery snow-fields intervene.

Hour succeeds hour, morning grows into noon, and still that imperturbable bluff looks down upon us. We stop to rest and lunch. The chunk of ham and camp-bread, washed down with ice-water from a snow-well, are wondrously refreshing; but it will not do to stop long. We would grow stiff and cold as icicles. Momentum is everything in mountain-climbing. Frequent resting blunts the ambition and the moral purpose. Up the gigantic rock-stairway which ends in the first summit, and at last, seven hours from camp, we draw ourselves up a huge wedge of phonolite and stand panting on that "little bluff" which had looked so near—the first peak!

But now, vast and steep, muffled in white silence, rises the great central dome, majestic to the eye but discouraging to tired legs and lungs. A few straining steps at a time, with frequent pauses, the stronger helping the weaker with ropes, and the crusted and hummocky snow of the last and hardest tug is traversed, and at about two o'clock we see nothing above us but the sky.

The next step is not a step at all, but a lying flat on the snow, with eyes skyward, breathing only. Ten minutes' rest suffices, and then look! First down. We crawl cautiously to the very verge of the great eastern wall above the Klickitat Glacier, held by ropes behind, and peep over. But how convey to one never having experienced it any conception of the sensation of looking down almost a mile of nearly perpendicular distance! Imagine that you are looking down a dozen Trinity Church spires, set each to each, or seven or eight Washington Monuments, or four or five Eiffel Towers. A pavement of ice lies at the bottom. Juts of dusky crag stand out and eye us darkly. A faint murmur rises from a white thread moving off amid the rocky desolation. It is the Klickitat River. That is almost the only noise. Sound seems lost. Even the rocks which we start from a wind-swept point give only one reluctant clank as they grind the edge of the precipice, and then they vanish, soundless, into the abyss.

Having looked down, let us look around. North, east, south, west—everything is below our level, except the triple-crowned majesty of Mount Tacoma, eighty miles northward. A domain for an empire, a circle whose diameter is five hundred miles! Shuksan and Baker on the northern rim, Diamond and the Three Sisters on the southern, Puget Sound and the Lower Columbia with the blue forests of the Coast Range on the western, and the limned purple of the Cœur d'Alênes and Blue Mountains on the east; a maze of mountains and yellow plains and threading streams and sunken lakes! Human habitations are too remote and inconspicuous to be seen, unless that little whitish blur 'way to the southwesterly be Portland.

But now the westering sun and the chill north wind, suddenly rising to whirl the dry snow in our faces, warn us that it is time to descend. Mount Adams is a magnificent coasting-ground. Long snow-fields, mainly ending in easy grades where we can stop without danger, entice even the timid to lean back on their pikestaffs and let go. How we whiz down the steep roof of snow, with alpenstock for rudder and brake, and how the thin wind cuts past us! Only one serious accident has ever happened on this mountain. For pure exhilaration coasting has no equal. In an hour and a half we descend what took eight hours to ascend. And, to crown all, the rest and feast after the toil and triumph!

The Olympic Games

By Miss Maynard Butler

STATUE OF AVÉROFF, THE GREEK BANKER OF ALEXANDRIA, WHO GAVE THE MONEY FOR THE RESTORATION OF THE STADION

Unveiled April 5, 1896, by the Crown Prince Konstantine of Greece

"O King!" said the Crown Prince Konstantine, in his address the opening day of the Festival in Athens, "the International Convention, held in Paris, decided that the Olympic Games should first be celebrated in the land in which they originated and in which they reached such excellence"—therein is contained the history of the Premiers Jeux Olympiques Internationaux. To bring together the strong, the active, the skilled men of all nations, upon the common ground of physical perfection, and to have the first of the friendly contests take place in the chief city of the country from which the ideal of that perfection was derived, was the aim of Coubertin and Bikélas. Through labor and discouragement, led by their President, the Crown Prince Konstantine, the Committee has reached its goal, and may congratulate itself upon a great success.

Well might the London "Times," in a leader some time before the Olympic Festival, say: "We are sorry that in this revival England, and especially Oxford and Cambridge, will not be well represented. For most of the contests we could send competitors whom we could trust, and in some of them, as in cricket and boating, we might fairly expect to hold our own against the world. Possibly on the next occasion, in 1900, when the Games are held at Paris, we shall make a better show, but it will poorly compensate us for having missed the first chance. Olympic games at Paris will have a local color of their own, but it will not be that of Olympic games in Greece, and, as Bacon says, the first precedent, if good, is seldom attained by imitation."

The quiet of Holy Week, preceding the seventy-fifth anniversary of the expulsion of the Turk from Greece, intensified the joy natural to the national celebration. The streets of the city on Good Friday night were densely crowded with the processions of the different parishes, and, unless one had come within doors before nine o'clock, it was impossible to walk from square to square. Squads of boys and men preceded the four, sometimes six and eight, priests who held extended above their heads a rectangular V-shaped cloth of silk, upon which the figure of the Saviour, done in embossed work, lay. Each priest carried a large altar-taper, and the men, women, and little children who followed, candles. The figure thus carried, typifying the bier of the Lord, and the funeral marches played by the bands, with the hymns and cries of "Kyrie eleison! Kyrie eleison!" in a weird, half-chanting tone, presented an extraordinary scene. As every such bier passed, the people on the pavements crossed themselves in the waving manner evidently customary here, unlike the fashion of the Roman Catholics, and rather grand than otherwise. Portions of regiments with reversed arms (as for funerals), schools, and choirs passed in endless numbers, and not until two o'clock was Athens quiet. As one looked over the balcony of the Hotel Angleterre, a diplomat pointed out her Majesty Queen Olga, clad in black, walking incognito and in the very closest crush of the untidy but quietly devout throng, leaning upon the arm of her relative, the Grand Duke Georgius of Russia, betrothed of the Princess Marie. The perfect simplicity and evident unconsciousness of the act quite won one's heart.

Saturday the church bells were tolling, at intervals, all day, and the shops were closed. But the streets seemed to grow fuller and fuller. Easter is, in the Greek Church, rather more than in the Roman, a time of especial demonstrations of joy, and the week ushered in by it this year, having the gayeties of the Independence Day and the opening of the Stadion added to it, was exceptionally full of excitement. At twelve o'clock Saturday night the fast of the forty days—no mere form in this country—was over, and in every true Athenian house a meal was prepared upon the return from the services. Sunday morning dawned bright and clear, but, with a rapidity not equaled even by the changes of the New England coast, clouds had gathered by ten o'clock, and it became evident that the ceremony of the unveiling of the statue of Avéroff would have to take place in the rain. But it was nevertheless an interesting event, the effect of which was singularly heightened by the fact that the man whom the Athenian sculptor Brutos had molded is still living, at the age of eighty-two, and had intended to be present. His great age, and the strain of emotion unavoidable upon such an occasion, however, induced him to follow the advice of his physicians and remain in Alexandria. The address of Mons. Philemon, General Secretary of the Olympian Games and a former Mayor of Athens, reviewed the benefactions of the patriotic banker, and formally presented the statue to Athens. It was received by the Crown Prince in a few dignified words, in which he laid stress upon the latest gift of Avéroff—the restoration of the Stadion. Monday morning was beautiful, and the Te Deum in the metropolis, in commemoration of the deliverance from the Turkish invaders, drew great masses of people about the doors and the streets leading to the church. The fine voices of ten men and boys rang out from the choir, without accompaniment, as the royal family entered, the body of the church being filled with a mass of officers, guards, ladies, and servants, men and small children of every class, all standing—Greek churches affording no seats. The chanting of the Chief Priest in this, as in the three other Greek services I have heard, was not pleasant, the tone adopted being thick and rasping in quality, and the pitch, though well maintained, being too high for musical effect. The responses of the choir were in every case absolutely pure in quality, and the shading of the voices well managed.

QUEEN OLGA OF GREECE

And now excitement in the town reached an intense point: in two hours and a half the long-talked-of moment would arrive, the magnificent Stadion be opened and the Games begin. In the chief hotels and cafés people scrambled for places, and in a large number of private houses breakfasts were being given and parties arranged to go to the great horseshoe-shaped inclosure.

Only the carriages of the Ministers, Committee, and the officers of state are admitted over the line drawn by the police, and the occupants even of these are obliged to alight before the gate is reached. M. Mataxas, the architect chosen by Avéroff to make the restoration, is, as is fitting, also a Greek by birth. He has spent infinite care and thought and research upon his work, and the result is superb. The sweep of the semicircle, the tiers upon tiers of seats, the double-faced statues, found while the work was going on, the marble chairs for the King and Queen, in the ancient shape, the hills rising up either side, and now covered with people—make a picture beyond the fancy of the foreigner. Seats are found with little difficulty, those provided for foreign correspondents and the honorary members of the Committee being generously chosen from among the best. The Royal Family enter, the "Olympiode Ymnoe" begins, the composer Samaras directing; the Crown Prince formally presents the Stadion to the King, and requests him to declare it opened. The King replies: "I proclaim the opening of the First International Olympic Games in Athens. Long live the nation! Long live the Greek people!"—and the Games begin. Across the field, in answer to the Herald's trumpet, come two Hungarians, a Chilian, a Frenchman, a German, an Englishman, and an American, to run the 100-meters race. Lane, of the United States, must have felt a sense of responsibility as he took his place, and, if silent sympathy is conveyed in the air, he must also have been impelled by the hopes of his countrymen, who believed in him—and not in vain, for it is the American who arrives first! Cheer upon cheer resounds, in which the Greeks join heartily, for our nation is popular here, thanks to its genial representative at the Court. The starter's shot is fired for the second heat; again it is an American, Curtis, of the Boston Athletic Association, who outdistances a Greek, an Englishman, two Frenchmen, a Dane, and a Hungarian. The third heat, and Burke, of the same Association, wins over a Swede, two Greeks, and three Germans. His time is 11¼ seconds; Lane's, 12⅕; Curtis's, 12⅕. The first event is over, and the victory in each heat belongs to the United States. The time is posted and the flag unfurled, and American's examine their list of the day's sports eagerly. The hop, skip, and jump, contested by two Frenchmen, four Germans, one Greek, and by Connolly, of the Boston Athletic Association, is won by Connolly, who makes a distance of 13 meters and 71 centimeters, leaving behind all his fellow-competitors, in amazement, and filling the hearts of his compatriots with joy. He leaves the field amidst a storm of applause, and a little son of an American professor residing in Athens is unable to repress his delight, and hurrahs in his young voice again and again. In the 800-meter run, next announced, a most beautiful stride is exhibited by the Australian Flack, who wins in 2 minutes 10 seconds in the first heat, and Lermusiaux, of the Paris Racing Club, called a famous runner in France, takes the second, in 2 minutes 16⅗ seconds. No Americans appear in this event. Then comes the throwing of the disk, in which Grisel, of France; Paraskeropulos and Verses, of Greece; Robertson, of England, the well-known thrower of the hammer; Jensen, of Denmark, Sjoeberg, of Sweden, and Garrett, of the United States, are entered. As Garrett arrived in Athens only the night before, and the two Greeks are popular heroes in this national sport, Americans tremble for their country. But unnecessarily. The accustomed cunning of the skillful shot-putter does not forsake him. His second throw rectifies the swerve of his first, and with his last he leaps past the marks of the Greeks and is the winner. Frantic though the enthusiasm of the Princeton and Boston athletes is, proud as are the old and young Harvard men who rush down to the "cave" to greet Garrett, every foreigner feels with the Greeks, who cannot but be keenly disappointed. There is, for a moment, an uncomfortable silence, and then, with their accustomed politeness and never-failing kindliness, they join in the cheers. Let every nation represented at this first international contest in 1896 remember this lesson in courtesy taught them by the Greeks.

SPYROS LOUIIS
Winner of the Marathon Race

"I couldn't have congratulated my opponent if he had beaten me on my own ground, as a Greek fellow down in the cave did me," said an American athlete a few days afterward—"and it was a mighty fine thing to do." It was indeed.

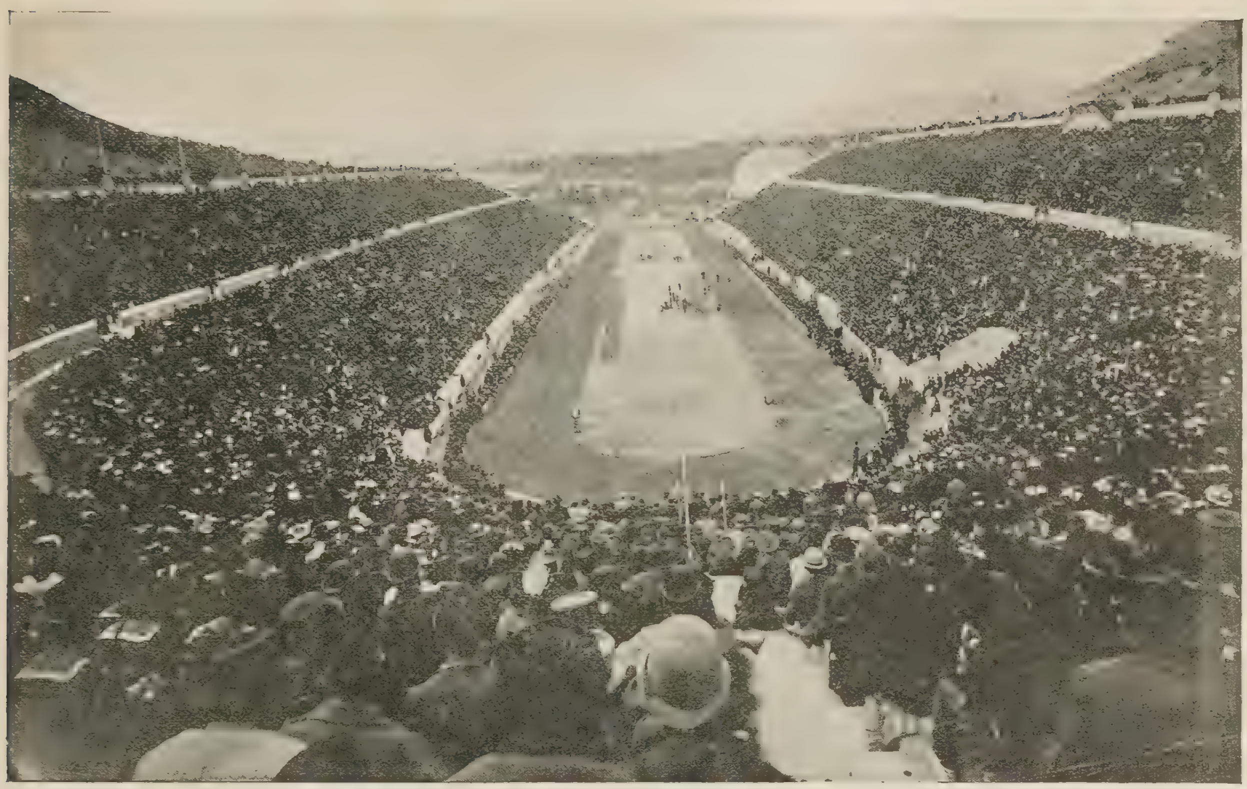
PRINCESS MARIE OF GREECE
Her betrothal to the Grand Duke Georgius of Russia was announced to the Army by the King on the opening day of the Olympian Games

Jamison, of Princeton, and Burke again, add to the list of victories and complete the events of the day. Great excitement prevails in the streets all the evening, and timid attempts at an imitation of the college rah-rah-rah are made by the Athenian youths. Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday morning are occupied by shooting and fencing contests, the former being opened by the Queen, who fired the first shot. Tuesday afternoon at the Stadion included a hurdle race, run in two heats, won respectively by Grantley Goulding, of England, and Curtis, of the United States, the deciding heat for the prize to be run on Friday. Clark, of the Boston Athletic Association, won the long jump in a distance of 6 meters 35 centimeters, his Greek fellow-competitors showing great possibilities, which all athletes agree will make them formidable in 1900. Putting the shot was Garrett's second victory, his distance being 11 meters 22 centimeters; Gouskos, a superb Greek thrower, being second. The double-hand dumbbell lifting

R. GARRETT, OF PRINCETON
Winner, Throwing of the Disk

W. W. HOYT, BOSTON ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION
One of the Hurdle Race Winners

A. C. TYLER, OF PRINCETON
Winner of High Jump



THE STADION ON FRIDAY, THE DAY OF THE MARATHON RACE

was won by Jensen, the Dane, who put up 111½ kilograms; and the single-hand by Elliot, of London, who put up 71 kilograms.

Then came the first and only American loss, their man Blake, the well-known long-distance runner, being second to Flack, the Australian, who did the 1,500-meter race in 4 minutes 33 seconds. Flack's rhythmic swing of arms and feet was a pleasant sight, and his stride, the American athletes say, is like Kilpatrick's, the New York winner.

The day closed with America the victor in four out of seven events. On Wednesday morning the contest with foils was won by Gravelotte, a Frenchman, and in the afternoon, at the Velodrome, at Phaleron, a Frenchman also came first in the bicycle race. The ride, a distance of 100 kilogrammes, was done in 3 hours 8 minutes 19 seconds, by Flameng, who was pluckily followed by two Greeks, one of whom, Kolettes, persisted to the end, though his bicycle broke twice during the course.

Thursday was occupied with swimming matches, in which many fine exhibitions were made, especially by the Greek sailors and the Hungarians; by exhibitions on parallel bars, with rings, etc., at the Stadion, and by a concert in the evening. On Friday, the day of the Marathon race, the crowds from all the provinces increased, and the struggle for food in the hotels and cafés became so uncomfortable that for an hour the doors of the most popular ones near the palace were locked, that those already within might be served. The final course in the hurdle-jumping, the first of the events of the afternoon, was won by Curtis, of Boston, over Goulding, of England; leaping with a pole, by Tyler, of Princeton, over Hoyt, of Boston—the other competitors, Greeks and Germans, retiring before them; the wrestling by Schumann, of Germany. The runners from Marathon were to leave that place, twenty-four and three-quarter miles away, at exactly two o'clock, and by half-past four the strain of curiosity as to the man first on the road was raised to an unbearable pitch by the rushing of an orderly along the path to tell the King who was first. "Is it a Greek?" the crowd began to shout, and a representative of the chief Athens morning paper left his seat, determined to find out. He returned in about five minutes, his brown eyes dancing, and said, "A Greek, a Greek!" and then arose a tremendous sound. Not even the runner of old who fell dead at the feet of the King was awaited with keener interest; and as he came up to the gates, a brown-faced, white and blue clad figure, making the countryman's sign of greeting to his Princes, the whole sixty thousand people within and the forty thousand without the gates joined in a loud cry. Either side of him, as he approached the seat of the King, ran the handsome Princes, and as he made his obeisance each flung an arm about him. Greece had indeed won, and every stranger rejoiced with her. There will not soon be a scene like that again. An officer of the war-ship San Francisco, familiar with many lands and who has seen many strange sights, was heard to say that he knew nothing comparable with it. Long may the spontaneous, courteous country live, and long the noble, generous, manly family at its head! May its political life be unified, its resources be developed, its incomparable art treasures be preserved! May it come more closely into touch with the nations of western Europe and America, yet retain untouched its own peculiar character!

And now, what have American athletes learned from this first International Olympic contest? Much. They return undoubtedly the first among the twelve nations represented. They have done their work well and have received the unaffected admiration of their fellow-competitors. They have been charmingly entertained by the Athenians, and more than graciously received by the heads of the Committee, the Crown Prince Konstantine, and Prince George, whose unflagging attention to their duties might serve as a model of faithfulness. And from this success, attention, and graciousness they will, as observing Americans, learn two things: one, that as athletes they must look to their laurels in long-distance running; and the other, as men, that they must remember in 1900 and 1904 the pattern of generosity in defeat set them by the Athenians in 1896.

The prizes, diplomas, olive branches, and special vases, cups, etc., were distributed to-day by the King. An ode, in ancient Greek, upon the Olympic Revival was read by Robertson, of Oxford, and several wreaths of laurel were presented by Germans, Hungarians, and Danes to the Crown Prince as President of the International Committee. This evening a soirée is held in the Hotel Grand Bretagne, in honor of the athletes and foreign correspondents—and the great festival of joy will be over.

Athens, April 15.

The Real Broadway

By Henrietta S. Lathrop

HIGH STREET

If you would know Broadway as it really is, and as it has been for hundreds of summers and winters, rid yourself at once of every association connected with the name, forget utterly every sort of noisy car and truck, sky-scraping building and hurrying crowd, and instead of all these let your mind's eye rest upon the green slopes of the Cotswold Hills, and stretching over them from the westward "the broad and high way for the shepherd's cottes on the mounted wolds, down to the most fruitful vale of Evesham."

The name of this old "bradweia" is now attached to that particular part of it, dipping from the heights upon a wide table-land, whereon clusters the quaintest and most charming of tiny English villages—a genuine bit of Shakespeare's England that has survived precisely as the eyes of the poet may have looked upon it, just by virtue of its own sweet unobtrusiveness. Some of our own artists and great folks have found it out, to be sure, but they share it only with their own elect. The Tourist positively knows it not.

The railway is six good miles behind you when you enter Broadway at the village green, and the wide, smooth trackway stretches up and across the hills before you, whose connection with the life of the people is more vital than the evident one of forming the prettiest possible background for the gray old houses. The limestone for the buildings came from their own quarries, and enters as well into some of the finest abbeys and cathedrals for miles around; and the water of their clear eternal springs is led into hydrants on the village streets, so numerous as to be within the reach of every inhabitant.

Little remains to tell of the days when it all belonged to the demesne of the Mercian kings, but up on those heights you may find the ruins of more than one British camp, and, climbing to the feudal-looking tower which marks the highest point of the Broadway Beacon, it is easy to picture the scene when bonfires flashed from every peak, one military post taking up the signal from another, and passing it on to the next till

Twelve fair counties saw the blaze
From Malvern's lonely height.

A rich gift was this for the old monks of Pershore Abbey, to whom Edgar granted the lands by Royal Charter as long ago as 967, and whose abbots from that time ruled as Lords of the Manor until the monasteries were dissolved. Fragments of their buildings still remain—here a corner of the prior's house, next to Mr. Burge the saddler's shop, and down at the foot of the hill, near the green, the priory itself, built, they say, by Randulph de Evesham not far from the year 1200, and now saved from destruction by Mr. Frank Millet, who has annexed it to his garden and taken a part of the building for a studio. It is an odd trick of time to have turned the little oak-paneled oratory, with its traceried window still holding bits of the original painted glass, into this modern workshop, where a scroll of music, a lute, and a broidered gown flung over an ancient carved chair are materials which it would seem an easy thing for any of us to turn into a pretty picture, if, as Gail Hamilton observes, we had only been brought up to it, and had the proper tools! Next to this is the Abbot's private room, the wall of which still retains his "squint," a slit in the stone widening towards the room, through which one may completely overlook the great refectory below. Little by little Mr. Millet is restoring the whole building to its original condition, tearing down false partitions erected in these latter days, scraping whitewash from the oaken timbers, renewing weakened points, and thereby doing good and real service.

More charming than all is the garden outside, in which the priory forms a pretty incident. In that day when my wishes all come true I shall have a garden just like Mrs. Millet's, where every pretty, old-fashioned flower runs riot, tall poppies nod along the paths by hundreds as you pass them by, roses bloom sixty dozen at a time, and, poet or not, you could not but be glad in such a jocund company. One creamy rose has climbed up to peep in at the Abbot's window, but the great company of them are in the more private and secluded precincts of the high-walled garden that surrounds Russell House—the artist's home. Here came Mr. Abbey to end his quest for the Holy Grail; and here Sir Edward Burne-Jones, Sir Henry Irving, and men and women whose names are conjured by, gather together for what looks to be a charmed existence. The cricket-field is a few paces distant; the tennis-court a little further away, near the kennels of the Broadway hounds; the golf links are easily reached; the lower roads invite to bicycling, and lead to various points of interest, from the ancient tomb of the Washingtons, six miles away, to the healing waters of the Hermit's Spring, and every rod of ground teems with subjects for the painter.

THE PRIORY

There are perhaps half a score of old Tudor mansions in the village, in the style of Russell House, built of gray limestone, with broad, mullioned windows, pointed gables topped with great balls or carved ornaments of stone, and label moldings and door-heads of true Elizabethan fashion. One of these is the Lygon Arms, an inn since the time of Edward VI., and well imbued with the true spirit of hospitality. Let us be glad that a few such are still standing in these days of brewery ownership and rule of the wayside hostelries. The Lygon is not too far from Worcester to make it credible that in its Cromwell room in the east wing that great soldier really slept, and that in another Charles I. met one of the Royalist supporters, Sheldon of Broadway Court, on March 10, 1645.

But I find the cottages even more interesting than the fine houses. Their tiny lattices, with the ancient panes of greenish glass infinitesimally small, their curious bulging bow windows, their roofs of thatch or mossy stones, their floors of clean flag, the fires blazing on their hearths, and the bright blossoming plants that fill every casement, however small, though never to the exclusion of a fresh white muslin curtain, are at once so picture-like and so cozy that they win my heart. One sees at once where Mr. Abbey has drawn his illustrations for the old English comedies. You almost seem to be turning his pages as you walk through the streets.

By some convenient arrangement every house and cot has a sunny wall, whereon pears and apricots are trained to the very chimneys and hang full of fruit, the leaves being cut away as the season advances, to let in more and more sunshine. As for the great Gloire de Dijon roses, they apparently flourish wherever you please to plant them, climbing rampantly over the house-fronts, and sending out great fragrant clusters of roses to lay their soft pink-tinted yellow petals against the deeper tones of the limestone, or to mix with the royal purple of the clematis.

THE ROAD TO SAINTSBURY

Here they follow the good old tradition of the Bradweia, and charming footpaths criss-cross the fields in all directions, making thoroughfares far more popular than the dusty roads. The bristling hawthorn hedges are pierced with frequent stiles, whose architecture might form a pleasing study in itself. Now it is a thick flat stone, deeply embedded on its edge, the top worn to a smooth hollow by the travel of generations; then it may be a picturesque arrangement of lichened logs, or even a smart bit of carpenter's work, with rails and step, but always the stile is planned for a people of mighty limb.

Looking down from the hillside of a Sunday afternoon, you shall see the tidy farmers' families wending through these fields from all directions toward old St. Eadburgha's Church, while the merry clanging jangle of her bells comes up from the hollow a mile away.

Walk "through the coppice," by a grassy path that will lead you over four moss-grown stiles, up a steep hill that rewards you with a far-stretching outlook over the vale to the Malvern Hills, through beech woods and blackberry-bushes and down a hill stiffer than the first, and you shall come upon a village in comparison with which Broadway appears a commercial center. Buckland has absolutely no thoroughfare. One road, it is true, leads into it from nowhere in particular, but this thread-like path is its only connecting link with its nearest neighbor, yet intercourse is considered neither infrequent nor difficult.

I can think of nothing more absolutely restful, of no spot where the hurry and unease of the big world so dwindle to proportions of such utter foolishness, as in the churchyard of Buckland on an August afternoon. How the warmth of the sunshine sinks into the old gray stones, where the memory of just and unjust is kept green by the softly creeping moss that spells out the rude lettering of their names; and the rooks circle sleepily about the square stone tower with its ancient dial, and only the sweet, subdued sounds of the voices of children and other happy young creatures mingle in the still, hazy air!

What keeps these dear old parish churches firmly planted through the changing centuries? Do their congregations ne'er break up, their centers of population never shift?

Almost as quaint is Child's Wickham, another of Broadway's outlying dependencies, which until I saw Buckland seemed to me the least able to account for its own perpetuity of all the fascinating little hamlets I had known. But one little rhyme, wrongly scheduled as nonsense, accounts for many things in Our Old Home. "'Tis because they choose to do just what they used to do" that many places, many things, and many customs are maintained there which would be quickly lost among a people less conservative—which means preservative as well.

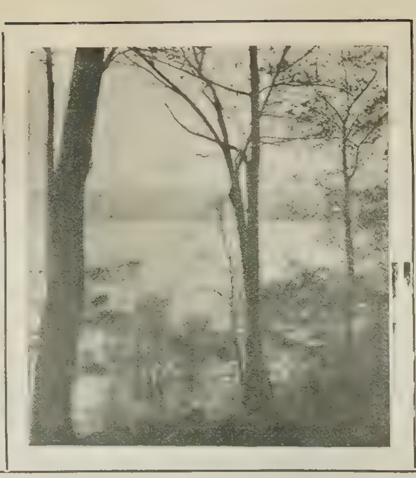
Any one who has been so fortunate as to be present at the annual School Treat in Broadway will be in no fear of its speedy depopulation. Two hundred school-children marched in line, with banners flying, as sturdy little specimens as one could ask to see, and, after a service in the church, scrambled under the trees for sweets, scattered by the rector's liberal hand. And these were only the Church children, the Roman Catholics turning out in good number on the following day.

"Oh, there be the lady that painted we!" cries one delighted youngster, in the favorite grammatical idiom of the locality.

For "inside" information as to the history and manners of the place, in default of any local guide-book, or any but a passing allusion by Baedeker, the most interesting source is the Old Curiosity Shop, outside of which stand inviting rows of beds and tables, stools and candlesticks, gathered from every auction sale within a radius of twenty miles. To its proprietor (I assert it on no less authority than his own word) is due the success of most of the artistic work accomplished in his village. He shows you, with natural pride, photographs of certain well-known pictures, and produces forthwith the very tables, chairs, and sideboards that appear in them.

"Oh, it's the setting that does it," he observes, with the air of experience; adding, "I furnish the settings!"

Grant's Tomb



Through the Trees

The New Tomb

ON RIVERSIDE DRIVE

The Spectator Awheel

A Bit of Good Road

One of the great features of wheeling is that it enables a person to get well acquainted with his own environment. The Spectator knew very little about upper New York before his wheeling days began, and nothing of New Jersey and Long Island except what he saw from an occasional car window. Now the suburbs of New York are becoming as familiar as Madison Square. There is as much delight in discovering a new macadamized road as Hendrik Hudson found when he first sailed up the river which bears his name. To be sure, other people may have known that macadamized road intimately for many years; but red Indians had been paddling over the Hudson River for centuries before Hendrik was born, and doubtless visiting cave-dwellers were familiar with its waters æons before the days of the red Indian. Discovery is a personal matter: when you discover a thing, it begins to exist. The Spectator has never had an ambition to be "the first white man" to do anything. Let other white men go on ahead and cut their way through the forest, and still other white men follow them and construct comfortable hostelries—then the Spectator is ready to appear on the scene.

The Hudson County Boulevard, running for fourteen smooth, delightful miles from Fort Lee to Bergen Point, N. J., is one of the Spectator's discoveries which he advises every New York wheelman to make his own as soon as possible. The builders of that road have made themselves a monument as enduring as brass and about as hard. It was a pleasant Saturday afternoon in early spring when the Spectator took the 3:15 boat at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, with the intention of discovering this new boulevard, opened only a few months before. As the boat neared the landing he asked a nice-looking young wheelman if he could direct him to the nearest way to reach his Mecca, and the young wheelman said he was going there too, and if the Spectator would follow he would guide. The Spectator has never yet found anything but courtesy among wheelmen. We turned to the left at the ferry landing and skirted the river for a mile, then climbed the hill (not a long climb at this point), went on for another mile, making several turns where the Spectator was very glad to be guided, and soon the broad, winding Hudson County Boulevard was under our tires and we were speeding on at a twelve-knot rate. The young man was on his way to Forty-second Street in New York; he was to cross the ferry at that point (think of it, you who are not yet numbered with the wheelmen: a person who wishes to go from One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street to Forty-second will cross the river, just for fun and a good road, and go down on the other side! Do you do that with your horses?) He seemed to like company, however, and when the Spectator said he proposed to see the other end of that boulevard before the sun went down, the young man agreed to go along, and we rolled on and on till Bergen Point appeared, and we alighted for Apollinaris lemonade where the road ended, and Staten Island was close at hand across the bay. A half-hour's rest and we were on the way back, going down the hill to the Weehawken ferry with the Western sun transfiguring New York as if it were really a reformed city. "And so, home," as Mr. Pepys would say; but Mr Pepys never had a cyclometer which could click off thirty-five miles between three o'clock and seven.

The Bicycle-Stand at Claremont

The New St. Luke's Hospital—from a Corner of Central Park

One of the most delightful short trips around New York is the run to Throgg's Neck and Fort Schuyler. The only difficulty is in getting comfortably out of the city; but the Spectator is fond of doing a part of his day's wheeling with his bicycle in a baggage-car, and he elected to take a train to Mount Vernon. From there to Throgg's Neck, through Wakefield, Olinville, and Westchester, is a run of about fourteen miles, and the road is perfectly macadamized most of the way. The main road ends at the entrance to C. P. Huntington's place, but a branch takes one to the Fort and its picturesque fortifications. Round wooden bull's-eyes, painted to represent the ends of cannon, frown from its nice little walls, and one can imagine how a British man-of-war would tremble as it passed. Across the Sound there is another fortification—a much deadlier one, bearing in large letters the "scare-head," "Torpedoes—Don't Anchor." One is not allowed to take pictures in Fort Schuyler. The Spectator apologizes for showing a few which he took, but one group of soldiers within the fort consented to be photographed without a murmur, and it was only as he was taking his last picture that he was told it was against the rules. A reporter had been there recently, and he had taken pictures and written up a story which contained things that were not so—he must have made it out as a strong fortress with lots of big guns—and this was not to happen again. We leaned our wheels against the trees on the lawn outside the fort, and watched the schooners and the sloops sail by with all their canvas set and a spanking breeze blowing them out into the Sound. Far off at the left a hundred sail dotted the blue waters; and the grass was green and the sun shone—and it was good to be a wheelman.

It was only a very few summers ago that the Spectator gazed with mingled feelings of curiosity and scorn upon the pioneer wheelwoman of New York as she rode in Central Park with yellow leggins—the subject of a column "story" in the "Sun," and the object of as much attention as a circus parade. To-day there are about as many women as men on wheels, and the term "wheelman" is becoming more generic every month. Certainly there was never devised, in the history of the world, such a splendid out-of-door sport for women. The sunlight and the suburbs are theirs, and they can be as independent as they please—or they can make it a point to travel without a tool-bag of their own. Not every woman has learned to ride gracefully—nor has every man, for that matter. They are prone to sit too far back, and at a wrong angle from the pedals, and to work their machines with a knee motion that suggests the walking-beam. The skirtless bloomer-girl is going—if indeed she ever came. New dresses have been devised with mysterious straps in their insides, and graceful folds to hang over the rear wheel, with enough room for the knees in front. But The Outlook has already given space to this subject.

From the Lawn at Fort Schuyler

The Spectator has yet to find the first railroad man who bewails the passage of the Armstrong Bill, compelling the companies to carry bicycles as checked baggage. Perhaps it is because his acquaintance is more with the "hands" than with the managers. Mr. Depew may not like the bill, but the ticket agent who has had to write out a paper check in triplicate for every bicycle, and stamp each one of the pieces, is not tearing his hair over the new law in sight of the passengers. The Spectator asked a baggageman how the change affected him. "I didn't use to get any of the money, did I?" was the reply. The fact is that while it is quite true that bicycles are something of a nuisance in a baggage-car (they might be much less of a nuisance if the companies would bestir themselves enough to have hooks or racks for them), it should be remembered that the wheelman usually takes his wheel to the car and stands ready to take it off when the train reaches its destination. Through traffic is not seriously affected by carrying wheels. The picture which Mr. Depew drew of the Empire State Express having some day to refuse sixty passengers because there would have to be an extra car for wheels, is probably one of the genial railroad president's pleasantries. If there is any law which compels a railroad to carry baggage on the same train with the passenger, it is certainly broken often as to trunks, and the bicycler going from New York to Buffalo is not liable to be in costume and to demand his wheel immediately on arrival. The Spectator is very fond of doing half a wheeling trip on the cars. He has wheeled, many a morning, to Yonkers, Tarrytown, or Sing Sing, and returned by train. The railroad company may object to carrying his bicycle, but it certainly would not have carried him if it had not been for the wheel. He would hardly have gone up to Sing Sing by train just for the pleasure of coming back the same way.

A Riverside Drive Policeman

Part of the wheeling between Yonkers and Hastings may be made on the Croton Aqueduct, and if one does not mind dismounting about once in a thousand feet to go through a narrow stile, it is a very pleasant experience. The Spectator tried it once last autumn in a mellow November morning, with hazy sunshine in the air, and the Hudson sparkling through the half-bared trees. It is a lonely piece of road, and one not to be attempted on a dark night. It is great fun, by the way, to wheel at night if one is sure of the road; and the Boulevard, Riverside Drive, and Central Park are full of twinkling lights these spring evenings. Of course many wheel at night because they have no time for it in the day, but to the Spectator there is a special fascination about riding in semi-darkness. One goes faster, unconsciously, and really seems to pick one's way with less care than in the light of day. The mystery about it and the possible danger lurking just ahead seem to add to the fascination. The average country road, with ruts and stones, on a moonless night, would have few charms, for there is as yet no bicycle lamp that really illumines the way; but a smooth asphalt is a distinct pleasure. The novices are lurking in sheltered nooks, usually with a friend to support them, but the still more dangerous ice-wagons and coal-carts are hushed in sleep, and Colonel Waring's white angels have left a clean road for the wheelmen. And what a debt of gratitude we owe to that same Colonel Waring! By eleven o'clock the Park and the Drive are almost deserted, but the lights still glimmer on the Boulevard, speeding southward till midnight.

One of Colonel Waring's "White Angels"

A Boulevard Policeman

One February morning the Spectator had wheeled up to Washington Bridge, and as he leaned his bicycle against the parapet the sight that met his eyes made him glad he was a Spectator and that the fates had directed him to that spot. There was almost no fog in the air above, and the sun was half shining through the clouds; but under the bridge, and stretching away as far as one could see to the north and south, was a white and billowy mass of vapor, so thick that only the tops of the trees could be seen coming through like rushes along either edge. It was banked up against the hills on the sides, and flowed just under the arches of High Bridge, and the Harlem River was blotted out and the "Speedway" was gone (would that it would stay so!). It seemed as if one could throw one's self over the parapet and be borne up by the soft mass just below. Then a whistle was heard and a train rushed along, out of sight; and the white smoke, whiter than the fog, broke through and settled above it in a line that grew longer and broader as the train sped on.

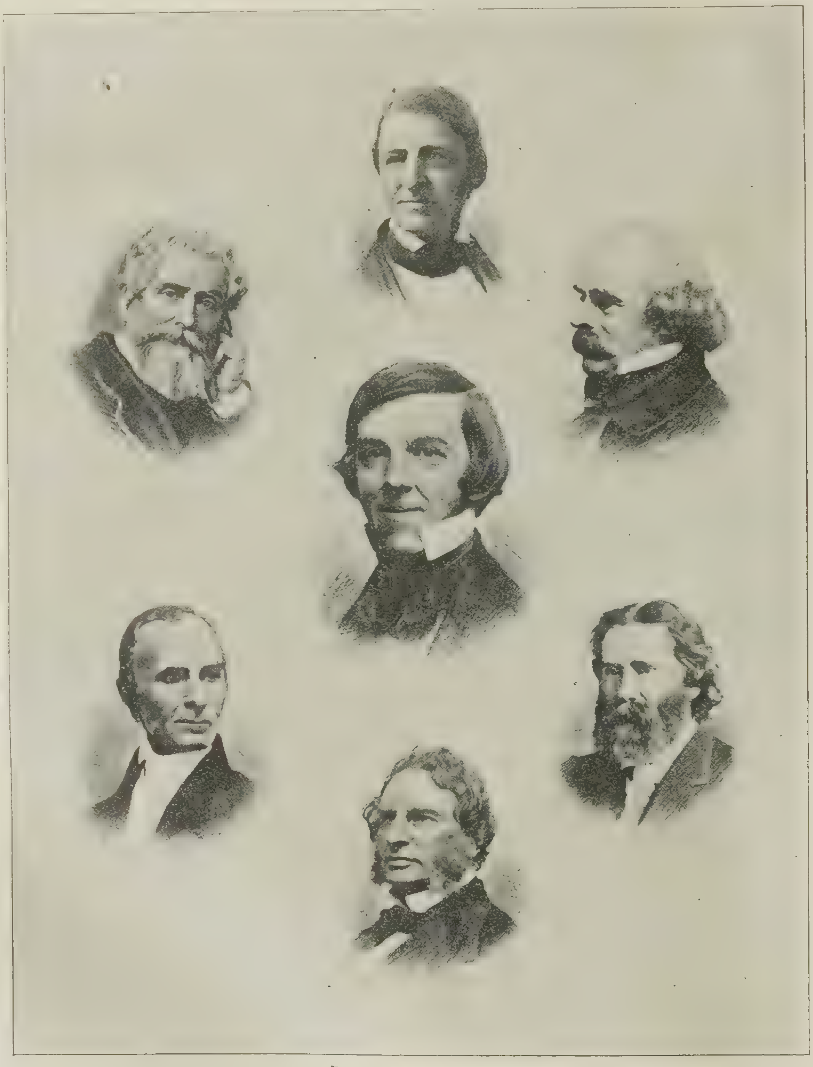
A Group of Colonel Waring's Men

AT FORT SCHUYLER

Books and Authors

A Model Biography[1]

A slight, fragile figure; alert, agile, light of foot and quick in speech—at eighty-four Dr. Holmes was still the gayest of companions and the most charming of talkers. The power of sustained work had, of course, sensibly diminished; the creative current had visibly ebbed; but the vivacity of temperament and of mind escaped the touch of time. Of the bluest New England blood and in the direct line of the strictest New England traditions, Dr. Holmes was the blithest spirit that ever came out of Puritanism. He was the child of his section, but he was utterly unlike the brilliant contemporaries who, with him, illustrated so conspicuously and in so many ways the temper, the spirit, and the ideals of New England. He had the cleanness of taste and life which have so long been typical of New England men of the best type; he had the keenness and agility of the New England mind, its swift observation, its rapid movement, its versatility; he had also the thrift of time and strength, the habit of industry which belong to his section. He was essentially a serious man, living a laborious life: but the ethical quality was not urgent and dominant in him. He did not struggle with the problem of sin like Hawthorne; he was not stirred by the National sin of slavery like Lowell and Whittier: he was not drawn to the higher vision of things like Emerson. The moral impulse, which energized the New England nature to such a degree that it went far to overcome the thinness and coldness of the New England temperament, and to give it artistic quality and power in spite of these limitations, was not the motive power in Dr. Holmes. He was of lighter build, of easier mood, of gayer temper. A New Englander to the heart, he interpreted New England as a section rather than Puritanism as a moral force. He cared everything for old Boston, with its well-defined social and intellectual conditions; he cared very little for the movements of the day. He was neither an abolitionist, a suffragist, nor a temperance reformer; but he was, in his way, the finest interpreter New England has ever had. His very narrowness made his typical quality more definite and effective. He was clean, pure, intellectual New Englandism incarnate. So far as his work reveals his interests and sympathies, the South and West had no existence for him. He was a great provincial, who has given us a charming and enduring picture of his province—a picture which will go into our National gallery as the work of a true artist.



MOTLEY
WHITTIER

EMERSON
HOLMES
LONGFELLOW

HAWTHORNE
LOWELL

Because his individuality was so marked and his world so near at hand and so sharply outlined, Dr. Holmes is by far the most thoroughly known of all our men of letters. He always talked about himself, but he did it without giving offense; he was vain, but his vanity was of that innocent kind which gives the impression of taking you into intimate relationship. He wrote about himself in a perfectly natural way, and his work is mainly a record of his observation, thought, and experience. He drew upon himself for literary material, and the supply was unfailing. He was the most friendly, genial, and informal of writers; to read the Autocrat is to sit at table with him, or to meditate "four feet on the fender." He loved scholars and scholarship, and his own knowledge was accurate and extensive; there is a flavor of learning in him which is always agreeable and never oppressive; but in his best vein he is simply and unaffectedly himself—a keen, wise, witty human spirit, vivacious, humane, and sincere. He takes us into his confidence with a frankness which is the most delicate compliment to our discretion and discrimination; he treats us as equals in wit and knowledge; and in those rare moments when he talks ex cathedra we are rather relieved than otherwise by the discovery that at heart he knows perfectly well that he is more clever than we. The reformers among Dr. Holmes's neighbors often did him injustice because he did not cast in his fortunes with this or that particular movement; forgetting that every man has his own work to do, and that, above all, he has a right to do it in his own way. In like manner, comparing Dr. Holmes's work with that of his more serious contemporaries, we are likely to mistake its lightness of method for thinness of substance, and to underestimate its enduring quality. As a matter of fact, the Autocrat was not only one of the most delightful of men, but he was also one of the most gifted. His work has both distinctness and distinction, individuality and charm. It is original in the sense that it does not grow out of other literary work, but is the expression of a typical man of genius; of genius not of the highest order, but of genius of a genuine quality.

A good biography was very essential in the case of Dr. Holmes, because the charm and power of the man were wholly personal; and such a biography Mr. Morse has given us: a record at once frank and full, and yet reticent at points where modern biographies have so often been garrulous; an estimate at once sympathetic, appreciative, and discriminating. Indeed, this biography is a model of loyal admiration and of sound judgment. The central figure is thrown on to the canvas with great distinctness, but the sense of proportion is never violated. A piece of work so intelligent, judicious, and interesting is an addition to our literature for which we ought to be grateful. It must be added that the publishers have given this admirable Life a form which is both beautiful and convenient.

The illustrations add greatly to the interest of the book by recalling faces and places inseparably associated with the history of American literature. We are enabled to print on this and the following page two of these illustrations, through the courtesy of the publishers, Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., by whom they are copyrighted.

---

[1] Life and Letters of Oliver Wendell Holmes. By John T. Morse, Jr. 2 Vols. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. $4.

New Books

The Book of Job (Macmillan & Co., New York) is the latest in Professor Moulton's admirable series, "The Modern Reader's Bible." This book, which he fitly calls a dramatic poem framed in an epic story, is presented in its dramatic form with brief literary notes. We shall speak at an early date and at length of this series. It must suffice to say now and here that this pocket edition of "The Book of Job" will be to most English readers like the discovery of a new and great work.——Eucharistic Conferences is the title of the collected papers presented at the First American Eucharistic Congress, Washington, D. C., October, 1895. (The Catholic Book Exchange, New York.) The object of these Conferences is to promote greater devotion and a larger use of the Eucharist, as by a daily celebration of the mass, special preparations for it, explanation of its meaning, and the like. The Protestant reader will find this a valuable treatise, if he desires to obtain the Roman Catholic point of view of the Holy Sacrament.

THE HOLMES HOMESTEAD, CAMBRIDGE

The Ideal of Universities, by Adolf Brodbeck, Ph.D., translated from the German and reprinted from the "Metaphysical Magazine" (The Metaphysical Publishing Company, New York), is a series of essays on the function of the university, the main value of which will be their suggestiveness to professional teachers and those who have some part in the framing of educational systems.——American Orations (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York) is a new and revised edition of this valuable work—valuable not only for the specimens of eloquence which it contains, but also for the current, vital, personal interpretation of historical events by the men who had so great a part in making those events.

Mrs. Cotes (Sara Jeannette Duncan) again makes good use of her intimate knowledge of Anglo-Indian life in His Honour, and a Lady. There is more than local color, humor, reproduction of official, social, and native manners and life; there is also a subtle study of character and motive. The novel is well worth reading. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)——Miss F. F. Montrésor has a singular gift for telling a pathetic story tenderly and without excess in expression. Worth While is such a tale. A second story in the volume is fairly good. The author will be remembered as having written "The One Who Looked On." (E. Arnold, New York.)——In Mark Herron Alice W. Bailey takes her characters through summer schools, theosophy, mind-cure, the glories of the Chicago Fair, Christian Science, Indian philosophy, and much else that is mysterious. The book is immensely interesting, not as a story (there is not much plot, and the reader cares little how the love affair terminates), but as a well-informed study of the waves of mental excitement which have followed one another in the last few years. The author does not argue, and the talk of her characters is not wearisome. There is an extraordinary amount of observation in the book, and it is acutely suggestive. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)——A third volume has been added to the reprint of William Carleton's racy Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry. (Macmillan & Co., New York.)——A Mountain Woman, by Elia W. Peattie (Way & Williams, Chicago), is a very tastefully made book which contains eight short stories, some of which have appeared in various magazines and journals. The stories are interesting chiefly because of a certain freshness of feeling in them and a certain note of promise. They are very uneven, and in one or two cases they are crude in construction, but the writer is dealing with real things in a genuine spirit, and her work is therefore worthy of careful attention. It contains the promise of better things. ——Mr. S. R. Keightley, the author of "The Crimson Sign," has selected the period of the English Revolution as furnishing material for his new story, The Cavaliers, a spirited novel of adventure. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)——New editions of standard authors constitute a very large part of the current publication, and, it hardly need be added, a very valuable part. Messrs. Macmillan & Co. (New York) send us a new volume, The Unknown Masterpiece, in their series of Balzac's translations, the work of translation being done in this case by Ellen Marriage, and Mr. Saintsbury, the general editor of the series, furnishing a preface. The further this series progresses, the more satisfactory become its qualities as a piece of tasteful and beautiful book-making.——The same publishers issue also Daudet's Tartarin on the Alps in the series commented upon in these columns last week.——Across an Ulster Bog, by M. Hamilton (Edward Arnold, New York), is a story of Irish life. With the memory of Jane Barlow's simple Irish stories in the reader's mind, "Across an Ulster Bog" is tame and colorless

A new and enlarged edition of Mr. Julius H. Ward's The White Mountains: A Guide to their Interpretation, has been issued; the new chapters are on The Gateway at North Woodstock, The Mountain Colors, Snow-Shoeing on Osceola, and The Winnipesaukee Region. We commented fully on this book when it first appeared, and need only say now that no lover of the White Mountains can afford not to read it. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.)——Another delightful outdoor book from the same publishers is Miss Alice Brown's By Oak and Thorn, which is a record of "English days," largely in Devon and Cornwall. It is very much more than a book of travel; it touches literature and history at many points; it is written with keen appreciation of the charm and association of the places visited; in style it is admirable.

An important book of the week, one eagerly expected by many readers, is W. Fraser Rae's biography of Sheridan. It is printed in two large volumes, has a portrait, and is accompanied with an introduction by Sheridan's great-grandson, the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava. A great deal of material not before published is included. We shall, of course, give a review of the work at a later date. (Henry Holt & Co., New York.)

Mr. Charles G. Leland has followed his first series of Legends of Florence Collected from the People (Macmillan & Co., New York) with a second series. Mr. Leland had very rich material to draw upon in these two volumes, and it hardly need be said that he is an expert collector and sifter of popular tradition. No American of our time has been a greater adept in the lore of the common folk, and especially of wandering folk like the Gypsies.——Mr. Richard Lodge's Richelieu, which bears the imprint of the same publishers, and which takes its place in the Foreign Statesmen Series, furnishes a compact account of one of the most adroit statesmen and one of the most picturesque characters in modern French history.

Mr. William Root Bliss, who has shown so much knowledge of things colonial and provincial in connection with Buzzard's Bay and the Old Colony, has prepared another book in the same vein on Quaint Nantucket (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston), a study of the town as it existed for two hundred years before the invasion of the summer boarder, the material being taken from the town and port records, sea-journals, personal letters, and private manuscripts of various kinds.

Professor Arthur T. Hadley's Economics (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York) is a survey of the entire field from the standpoint of a moderate individualist, who is generally but not invariably opposed to measures urged on behalf of the poorer classes. Professor Hadley's individualism is not that of Herbert Spencer, nor, indeed, that of his senior colleague, Professor Sumner. The labor measure he most heartily indorses is the legislation restricting the hours of women and children in factories, to which the older individualists were so strenuously opposed. It is in regard to monopolies that his individualism is most marked. He seems to cling to the belief that enlightened self-interest will persuade natural monopolies and trusts to reduce rates to the level demanded by the public interest, and secured in other branches of industry by the presence of competition. In regard to railroads he even seems to feel that there is danger of too great competition, and recommends the permission of "pooling" contracts to prevent their competing with each other in the unrestricted way necessary for merchants and farmers. On the question of taxation Professor Hadley is thoroughly in sympathy with the principles of free trade, and somewhat in sympathy with the principle of progressive taxation. On the question of currency he is entirely out of sympathy with the bimetallist movement. He even maintains that the success of France in maintaining silver and gold at the legal ratio was limited to "the first half of the present century," when "the production of both gold and silver was slow and equable." As a matter of fact, the relative production of gold was trebled during this period, and the greatest triumph of the French law was during the decade following 1850, when the production of gold was again and suddenly trebled without a sensible change in the relative value of the two metals. Still more unjustifiable is Professor Hadley's argument that an increase in the currency injures labor. He bases this upon the

[Continued on page 1008]

KATE CARNEGIE[1]

By Ian Maclaren

Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush," "The Days of Auld Lang Syne," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XI.—IN THE GLOAMING

August is our summer-time in the north, and Carmichael found it pleasant walking from Lynedoch bridge to Kilbogie. The softness of the gloaming, and the freshness of the falling dew, and the scent of the honeysuckle in the hedge, and the smell of the cut corn in the fields—for harvest is earlier down there than with us—and the cattle chewing the cud, and the sheltering shadow of old beech-trees, shed peace upon him and touched the young minister's imagination. Fancies he may have had in early youth, but he had never loved any woman except his mother and his aunt. There had been times when he and his set declared they would never marry, and one, whose heart was understood to be blighted, had drawn up the constitution of a celibate Union. It was never completed—and therefore never signed—because the brotherhood could not agree about the duration of the vows—the draftsman, who has been twice married since then, standing stiffly for their perpetuity, while the others considered that a dispensing power might be lodged in the Moderator of Assembly.

This railing against marriage on the part of his friends was pure boyishness, and they were all engaged on the mere prospect of a kirk; but Carmichael had more of a mind on the matter. There was in him an ascetic bent, inherited from some Catholic ancestor, and he was almost convinced that a minister would serve God with more abandonment in the celibate state. As an only child, and brought up by a mother given to noble thoughts, he had learned to set women in a place by themselves, and considered marriage for ordinary men to flavor of sacrilege. His mother had bound it as a law upon him that he was never to exercise his tongue on a woman's failings, never to argue with a woman unto her embarrassment, never to regard her otherwise than as his superior. Women noticed that Carmichael bore himself to them as if each were a Madonna, and treated him in turn according to their nature. Some were abashed, and could not understand the lad's shyness; those were saints. Some were amused, and suspected him of sarcasm; those were less than saints. Some horrified him unto confusion of face because of the shameful things they said. One middle-aged female, whose conversation oscillated between physiology and rescue work, compelled Carmichael to sue for mercy on the ground that he had not been accustomed to speak about such details of life with a woman, and ever after described him as a prude. It seemed to Carmichael that he was disliked by women because he thought more highly of them than he ought to think.

Carmichael was much tried by the baser of his fellow-students, especially a certain class of smug, self-contented, unctuous men, who neither had endured hardship to get to college, nor did any work at college. They were described in reports as the "fruits of the revival," and had been taken from behind counters and sent to the University, not because they had any love of letters, like Domsie's lads at Drumtochty, but because rich old ladies were much impressed by the young men's talk, and the young men were perfectly aware that they would be better off in the ministry than in any situation they could gain by their own merits. As Carmichael grew older, and therefore more charitable, he discovered with what faulty tools the work of the world and even of kirks is carried on, and how there is a root of good in very coarse and common souls. When he was a young judge—from whom may the Eternal deliver us all—he was bitter against the "fruits," as he called them, because they did their best to escape examinations, and spoke in a falsetto voice, and had no interest in dogs, and because they told incredible tales of their spiritual achievements. But chiefly did Carmichael's gorge rise against those unfortunates because of the mean way they spoke of marriage; and on this account, being a high-spirited young fellow, he said things which could hardly be defended, and of which afterward he honestly repented.

"Yes, religion is profitable for both worlds," one of them would exhort by the junior common-room fire, "and if you doubt it, look at me; five-and-twenty shillings a week as a draper's assistant was all I had, and no chance of rising. Now I'm a gentleman"—here Carmichael used to look at the uncleanly little man and snort—"and in two years I could ask any girl in religious society, and she would take me. A minister can marry any woman, if he be evangelical. Ah," he would conclude, with a fine strain of piety, "Gospel is its own reward."

What enraged Carmichael as he listened in the distance to these pæans of pharisaism was the disgusting fact that the "fruits" did carry off great spoil in the marriage field, so that to a minister without culture, manners, or manliness, a middle-class family would give their pet daughter, when they would have refused her to a ten times better man fighting his way up in commerce. If she died, then this enterprising buccaneer would achieve a second and a third conquest, till in old age he would rival the patriarchs in the number of his wives and possessions. As for the girl, Carmichael concluded that she was still under the glamour of an ancient superstition, and took the veil after a very commonplace and squalid fashion. This particular "fruit" against whom Carmichael in his young uncharitableness especially raged, because he was more self-complacent and more illiterate than his fellows, married the daughter of a rich self-made man, and on the father's death developed a peculiar form of throat disease, which laid him aside from the active work of the ministry—a mysterious providence, as he often explained—but allowed him to enjoy life with a guarded satisfaction. What Carmichael said to him about his ways and his Gospel was very unpleasant and quite unlike Carmichael's kindly nature, but the only revenge the victim took was to state his conviction that Scotland would have nothing to do with a man that was utterly worldly, and in after years to warn vacant churches against one who did not preach the Cross.

After one of those common-room encounters, Carmichael used to fling himself out into the east wind and grayness of Edinburgh, fuming against the simplicity of good people, against the provincialism of his college, against the pharisaism of his church, against the philistinism of Scottish life. He would go down to Holyrood and pity Queen Mary, transported from the gay court of France to Knox's Scotland, divided between theology and bloodshed. In the evening he would sweep his table clean of German books on the Pentateuch, and cover it with prints of the old masters, which he had begun to collect, and ancient books of Catholic devotion, and read two letters to his mother from her uncle, who had been a Vicar-General, and died in an old Scottish convent in Spain. There was very little in the letters beyond good wishes and an account of the Vicar-General's health, but they seemed to link a Free Kirk divinity student on to the Holy Catholic Church. Mother Church cast her spell over his imagination, and he envied the lot of her priests, who held a commission no man denied and administered a world-wide worship, whom a splendid tradition sanctioned, whom each of the arts hastened to aid; while he was to be the minister of a local sect and work with the "fruits," who knew nothing of Catholic Christianity, but supposed their little eddy, whereon they danced like rotten sticks, to be the main stream. Next day a reaction would set in, and Carmichael would have a fit of bohemianism, and resolve to be a man of letters. So the big books on theology would again be set aside, and he would write an article for "Ferrier's

---

[1] Copyright, 1896, by John Watson.

Journal," that kindliest of all journals to the young author, which he would receive back in a week "with thanks." The Sunday night came, and Carmichael sat down to write his weekly letter to his mother—she got notes between, he found them all in her drawers, not a scrap missing—and as he wrote, his prejudices and petulances and fancies and unrest passed away. Before he had told her all that happened to him during the week—touching gently on the poor revivalist—although his mother had a saving sense of humor, and was a quite wonderful mimic—and saying nothing of his evening with St. Francis de Sales—for this would have alarmed her at once—he knew perfectly well that he would be neither a Roman nor a reporter, but a Free Kirk minister, and was not utterly cast down; for, notwithstanding the yeasty commotion of youth and its censoriousness, he had a shrewd idea that a man is likely to do his life-work best in the tradition of his faith and blood. Next morning his heart warmed as he went in through the college gates, and he would have defended Knox unto the death, as the maker of Scotland. His fellow-students seemed now a very honest set of men, as indeed they were, although a trifle limited in horizon, and he hoped that one of the "fruits" was satisfied with his Sunday's work; which shows that as often as a man of twenty-one gets out of touch with reality he ought straightway to sit down and write to his mother. Carmichael indeed told me one evening at the Cottage that he never had any mystical call to the ministry, but only had entered the Divinity Hall instead of going to Oxford because his mother had this for her heart's desire, and he loved her. As a layman it perhaps did not become me to judge mysteries, but I dared to say that any man might well be guided by his mother in religion, and that the closer he kept to her memory the better he would do his work. After which both of us smoked furiously, and Carmichael, two minutes later, was moved to remark that some Turkish I had then was enough to lure a man up Glen Urtach in the month of December.

The young minister was stirred on the way to Kilbogie, and began to dream dreams in the twilight. Love had come suddenly to him, and after an unexpected fashion. Miss Carnegie was of another rank and another faith, nor was she even his ideal woman, neither conspicuously spiritual nor gentle, but frank, outspoken, fearless, self-willed. He could also see that she had been spoiled by her father and his friends, who had given her carte blanche to say and do what she pleased. Very likely—he could admit that even in the first blush of his emotion—she might be passionate and prejudiced on occasion, even a fierce hater. This he had imagined in the Tochty woods, and was not afraid, for her imperfections seemed to him a provocation and an attraction. They were the defects of her qualities—of her courage, candor, generosity, affection. Carmichael leant upon a stile, and recalled the carriage of her head, the quick flash of her eye, the tap of her foot, the fascination of her manner. She was free from the affectations, gaucheries, commonplaces, wearinesses of many good women he had known. St. Theresa had been the woman enshrined in the tabernacle of his heart, but life might have been a trifle tiresome if a man were married to a saint. The saints have no humor and do not relax. Life with a woman like Miss Carnegie would be effervescent and stimulating, full of surprises and piquancy. No, she was not a saint, but he felt by an instinct she was pure, loyal, reverent, and true at the core. She was a gallant lass, and . . . he loved her.

What an absurdity was this reverie, and Carmichael laughed aloud at himself. Twice he had met Miss Carnegie —on one occasion she had found him watering strange dogs out of his hat, and on the other he had given her to understand that women were little removed from fools. He had made the worst of himself, and this young woman who had lived with smart people must have laughed at him. Very likely she had made him into a story, for as a raconteur himself he knew the temptation to work up raw material; or perhaps Miss Carnegie had forgotten long ago that he had called. Suppose that he should call to-morrow on his way home and say, "General Carnegie, I think it right to tell you that I admire your daughter very much, and should like your permission to pay my addresses. I am Free Church minister in Drumtochty, and my stipend is £200 a year" . . . his laugh this time was rather bitter. The Carnegies would be at once admitted into the county set, and he would meet them only at a time . . . Lord Hay was a handsome and pleasant young fellow. He would be at Glen Urtach House for the shooting in a few days . . . that was a likely thing to happen . . . the families were old friends . . . there would be great festivities in the Glen . . . perhaps he would be asked to propose the bride's health . . . It really seemed a providence that Saunderson should come along the road when he was playing the fool like a puling boy, for if any man could give a douche to love-sickness it was the minister of Kilbogie.

Carmichael was standing in the shadow as Saunderson came along the road, and the faint light was a perfect atmosphere for the dear old bookman. Standing at his full height he might have been six feet, but with much poring over books and meditation he had descended some three inches. His hair was long, not because he made any conscious claim to genius, but because he forgot to get it cut, and, with his flowing, untrimmed beard, was now quite gray. Within his clothes he was the merest skeleton, being so thin that his shoulder-blades stood out in sharp outline, and his hands were almost transparent. The redeeming feature in Saunderson was his eyes, which were large and eloquent, of a trustful, wistful hazel, the beautiful eyes of a dumb animal. Whether he was expounding doctrines of an incredible disbelief in humanity, or exalting, in rare moments, the riches of a divine love in which he did not expect to share, or humbly beseeching his brethren to give him information on some point in scholarship no one knew anything about except himself, or stroking the hair of some little child sitting upon his knee, those eyes were ever simple, honest, and most pathetic. Young ministers coming to the Presbytery full of self-conceit and new views were arrested by their light shining through the glasses, and came in a year or two to have a profound regard for Saunderson, curiously compounded of amusement at his ways, which for strangeness were quite beyond imagination, admiration for his knowledge, which was amazing for its accuracy and comprehensiveness, respect for his honesty, which feared no conclusion, however repellent to flesh and blood, but chiefly of love for the unaffected and shining goodness of a man in whose virgin soul neither self nor this world had any part. For years the youngsters of the Presbytery knew not how to address the minister of Kilbogie, since any one who had dared to call him Saunderson, as they said "Carmichael" and even "MacWheep," though he was elderly, would have been deposed, without delay, from the ministry—so much reverence at least was in the lads—and "Mister" attached to this personality would be like a silk hat on the head of an Eastern sage. Jenkins of Pitrodie always considered that he was inspired when he one day called Saunderson "Rabbi," and unto the day of his death Kilbogie was so called. He made protest against the title as being forbidden in the Gospels, but the lads insisted that it must be understood in the sense of scholar, whereupon Saunderson disowned it on the ground of his slender attainments. The lads saw the force of this objection, and admitted that the honorable word belonged by rights to MacWheep, but it was their fancy to assign it to Saunderson—whereat Saunderson yielded, only exacting a pledge that he should never be so called in public, lest all concerned be condemned for foolishness. When it was announced that the University of Edinburgh had resolved to confer the degree of D.D. on him for his distinguished learning and great services to theological scholarship, Saunderson, who was delighted when Dowbiggin of Muirtown got the honor for being an ecclesiastic, would have refused it for himself had not his boys gone out in a body and compelled him to accept. They also purchased a doctor's gown and hood, and invested him with them in the name of Kilbogie two days before the capping. One of them saw that he was duly brought to the Tolbooth Kirk, where the capping ceremonial in those days took place. Another sent a list of Saunderson's articles to British and foreign theological and philological reviews, which filled half a column of the "Caledonian," and drew forth a complimentary article from that exceedingly able and caustic paper, whose editor lost all his hair through sympathetic emotion the morning of the Disruption, and ever afterward pointed out the faults of the Free Kirk with much frankness. The fame of Rabbi Saunderson was so spread abroad that a great cheer went up as he came in with the other Doctors-elect, in which he cordially joined, considering it to be intended for his neighbor, a successful West End clergyman, the author of a "Life of Dorcas" and other pleasing booklets. For some time after his boys said "Doctor" in every third sentence, and then grew weary of a too common title, and fell back on Rabbi, by which he was known unto the day of his death, and which is engraved on his tombstone.

The Rabbi was tasting some morsel of literature as he came along, and halted opposite Carmichael, whom he did not see in the shadow, that he might enjoy it aloud.

"That is French verse, Rabbi, I think, but it sounds archaic; is it from a Huguenot poet?"

"Assuredly," replied the Rabbi, not one whit astonished that a man should come out from a hedge on Kilbogie road and recognize his quotation; "and, as you suggest, a piece which I have good evidence Queen Mary used to read. It is you, John Carmichael." The Rabbi awoke from the past, and held Carmichael's hand in both of his. "This was very mindful. You were going home from Pitscourie and turned aside to visit me.

"It is unfortunate that I am hastening to a farm called the Mains, on the border of Pitscourie parish, to expound the Word; but you will go on to the Manse and straitly charge Barbara to give you food, and I will hasten to return." And the Rabbi looked forward to the night with great satisfaction.

"No, I am not coming from Pitscourie, and you are not going there, as far as one can see. Why, you are on your way to Tochty woods; you are going west instead of east: Rabbi, tell the truth, have you been snuffing?"

This was a searching question, and full of history. When the Rabbi turned his back against the wind to snuff with greater comfort, he was not careful to resume his original position, but continued cheerfully in the new direction. This weakness was so well known that the school bairns would watch till he had started, and stand in a row on the road to block his progress. Then there would be a parley, which would end in the Rabbi capitulating and rewarding the children with peppermints, whereupon they would see him fairly off again and go on their way—often looking back to see that he was safe, and somehow loving him all the more for his strange ways. So much indeed was the Rabbi beloved that a Pitscourie laddie, who described Saunderson freely as a "daftie" to Mains' grandson, did not see clearly for a week, and never recovered his lost front tooth.

"That," remarked young Mains, "'ill learn Pitscourie tae set up impidence aboot the minister."

"There is no doubt that I snuffed—it was at Claypots steading—but there was no wind that I should turn. This is very remarkable, John, and . . . disconcerting.

"These humiliations are doubtless a lesson," resumed the Rabbi as they hurried to Mains, "and a rebuke. Snuffing is in no sense a necessity, and I have long recognized that the habit requires to be restricted—very carefully restricted. For some time I have had fixed times—once in the forenoon, once in the afternoon, and again in the evening. Had I restrained myself till my work was over and I had returned home, this misadventure would not have occurred, whereby I have been hindered and the people will have been kept waiting for their spiritual food.

"It is exactly thirty years to-night since I began this meeting in Mains," the Rabbi explained to Carmichael, "and I have had great pleasure in it and some profit. My subject has been the Epistle to the Romans, and by the goodness of God we are approaching the last chapters. The salutations will take about a year or so; Rufus, chosen in the Lord, will need careful treatment; and then I thought, if I were spared, of giving another year to a brief review of the leading points of doctrine: eh?"

Carmichael indicated that the family at Mains would almost expect something of the sort, and inquired whether there might not be a few passages requiring separate treatment at fuller length than was possible in this hurried commentary.

"Quite so, John, quite so; no one is more bitterly conscious of the defects of this exposition than myself—meager and superficial to a degree, both in the patristic references and the experimental application; but we are frail creatures, John, and it is doubtful whether the exposition of any book should extend over a generation. It has always caused me regret that Mains—I mean the father of the present tenant—departed before we had come to the comfort of the eighth chapter."

The Rabbi's mind was much affected by this thought, and twice in the kitchen his eye wandered to the chair where his friend had sat, with his wife beside him. From Priscilla and Aquila he was led into the question of hospitality, on which he spoke afterward till they came to the Manse, where he stationed Carmichael on the doorstep till he secured a light.

"There is a parcel of books on the floor, partially opened, and the way of passing is narrow and somewhat dangerous in the darkness."

CHAPTER XII.—KILBOGIE MANSE

Ministers there were in the great strath so orderly that they kept their sealing-wax in one drawer and their string in another, while their sermons were arranged under the books of the Bible, and tied with green silk. Dr. Dowbiggin, though a dull man and of a heavy carriage, could find in an instant the original draft of a motion on instrumental music he made in the Presbytery of Muirtown in the year '59, and could also give the exact page in the blue-books for every word he had uttered in the famous case when he showed that the use of a harmonium to train MacWheep's choir was a return to the bondage of Old Testament worship. His collection of pamphlets was supposed to be unique, and were a terror to controversialists, no man knowing when a rash utterance on the bottomless mystery of "spiritual independence" might not be produced from the Doctor's coat-tail pocket. He retired to rest at 10:15, and rose at six, settling the subject of his next sermon on Sabbath evening, and finishing the first head before breakfast on Monday morning. He had three hats—one for funerals, one for marriages, one for ordinary occasions—and he has returned from the Presbytery door to brush his coat. Morning prayers in Dr. Dowbiggin's house were at 8:5, and the wrath of the Doctor was so dangerous that one probationer staying at the manse, and not quite independent of influence, did not venture to undress, but snatched a fearful doze sitting upright on a cane-bottomed chair, lest he should not be in at the Psalm. Young ministers of untidy habits regarded Dr. Dowbiggin's study with despair, and did not recover their spirits till they were out of Muirtown. Once only did this eminent man visit the manse of Kilbogie, and in favorable moments after dinner he would give his choicer experiences.

"It is my invariable custom to examine my bed to see that everything is in order, and any one sleeping in Kilbogie Manse will find the good of such a precaution. I trust I am not a luxurious person—it would ill become one who came out in '43—but I have certainly become accustomed to the use of sheets. When I saw there were none on the bed, I declined to sleep without them, and I indicated my mind very distinctly on the condition of the manse.

"Would you believe it?" the Doctor used to go on. "Saunderson explained, as if it were a usual occurrence, that he had given away all the spare linen in his house to a girl that had to marry in . . . urgent circumstances, and had forgotten to get more. And what do you think did he offer as a substitute for sheets?" No one could even imagine what might not occur to the mind of Saunderson.

"Towels, as I am an honorable man; a collection o towels, as he put it, ‘skillfully attached together, might make a pleasant covering.’ That is the first and last time I ever slept in the Free Church Manse of Kilbogie. As regards Saunderson’s study, I will guarantee that the like of it cannot be found within Scotland,” and at the very thought of it that exact and methodical ecclesiastic realized the limitations of language.

His boys boasted of the Rabbi’s study as something that touched genius in its magnificent disorderliness, and Carmichael was so proud of it that he took me to see it as to a shrine. One whiff of its atmosphere as you entered the door gave an appetite and raised the highest expectations. For any bookman can estimate a library by scent —if an expert, he could even write out a catalogue of the books and sketch the appearance of the owner. Heavy odor of polished mahogany, Brussels carpets, damask curtains and tablecloths: then the books are kept within glass, consist of sets of standard works in half calf, and the owner will give you their cost wholesale to a farthing. Faint fragrance of delicate flowers, and Russia leather, with a hint of cigarettes: prepare yourself for a marvelous wall-paper, etchings, bits of oak, limited editions, and a man in a velvet coat. Smell of paste and cloth binding and general newness means yesterday’s books and a man racing through novels with a paper-knife. Those are only book-rooms by courtesy, and never can satisfy any one who has breathed the sacred air. It is a rich and strong spirit, not only filling the room, but pouring out from the door and possessing the hall, redeeming an opposite dining-room from grossness, and a more distant drawing-room from frivolity, and even lending a goodly flavor to bedrooms on upper floors. It is distilled from curious old duodecimos packed on high shelves out of sight, and blows over folios, with large clasps, that once stood in monastery libraries, and gathers a subtle sweetness from parchments that were illuminated in ancient scriptoriums, that are now grass-grown, and is fortified with good old musty calf. The wind was from the right quarter on the first day I visited Kilbogie Manse, and as we went up the garden walk the Rabbi’s library already bade us welcome, and assured us of our reward for a ten miles’ walk.

Saunderson was perfectly helpless in all manner of mechanics—he could not drive a tack through anything except his own fingers, and had given up shaving at the suggestion of his elders—and yet he boasted, with truth, that he had got three times as many books into the study as his predecessor possessed in all his house. For Saunderson had shelved the walls from the floor to the ceiling, into every corner, and over the doors, and above the windows, as well as below them. The wright had wished to leave the space clear above the mantelpiece.

“Ye ’ill be hanging Dr. Chalmers there, or maybe John Knox, and a bit clock ’ill be handy for letting ye ken the ’oors on Sabbath.”

The Rabbi admitted that he had a Knox, but was full of a scheme for hanging him over his history, which he considered both appropriate and convenient. As regards time, it was the last thing of which that worthy man desired to be reminded—going to bed when he could no longer see for weariness, and rising as soon as he awoke, taking his food when it was brought to him, and being conducted to church by the beadle after the last straggler was safely seated. He even cast covetous eyes upon the two windows, which were absurdly large, as he considered, but compromised matters by removing the shutters and filling up the vacant space with slender works of devotion. It was one of his conceits that the rising sun smote first on an À Kempis, for this he had often noticed as he worked of a morning.

Book-shelves had long ago failed to accommodate Rabbi’s treasures, and the floor had been bravely utilized. Islands of books, rugged and perpendicular, rose on every side; long promontories reached out from the shores, varied by bold headlands; and so broken and varied was that floor that the Rabbi was pleased to call it the Ægean Sea, where he had his Lesbos and his Samos. It is absolutely incredible, but it is all the same a simple fact, that he knew every book and its location, having a sense of the feel as well as the shape of his favorites. This was not because he had the faintest approach to orderliness—for he would take down twenty volumes and never restore them to the same place by any chance. It was a sort of motherly instinct by which he watched over them all, even loved prodigals that wandered over all the study and then set off on adventurous journeys into distant rooms. The restoration of an emigrant to his lawful home was celebrated by a feast in which, by a confusion of circumstances, the book played the part of calf, being read afresh from beginning to end. During his earlier and more agile years the Rabbi used to reach the higher levels of his study by wonderful gymnastic feats, but after two falls—one with three Ante-Nicene fathers in close pursuit—he determined to call in assistance. This he did after an impressive fashion. When he attended the roup at Pitfoodles—a day of historical prices—and purchased, in open competition, at three times its value, a small stack-ladder, Kilbogie was convulsed, and Mains had to offer explanations.

“He’s cuttit aff seevin feet, and rins up it tae get his tapmaist bukes, but that’s no a’,” and then Mains gave it to be understood that the rest of the things the minister had done with that ladder were beyond words. For in order that the rough wood might not scar the sensitive backs of the fathers, the Rabbi had covered the upper end with cloth, and for that purpose had utilized a pair of trousers. It was not within his ability in any way to reduce or adapt his material, so that those interesting garments remained in their original shape, and as often as the ladder stood reversed, presented a very impressive and diverting spectacle. It was the inspiration of one of Carmichael’s most successful stories—how he had done his best to console a woman on the death of her husband, and had not altogether failed, till she caught sight of the deceased’s nether garments waving disconsolately on a rope in the garden, when she refused to be comforted. “Toom (empty) breeks tae me noo,” and she wept profusely, “toom breeks tae me.”

One of the great efforts of the Rabbi’s life was to seat his visitors, since, beyond the one chair, accommodation had to be provided on the table, wheresoever there happened to be no papers, and on the ledges of the bookcases. It was pretty to see the host suggesting from a long experience those coigns of vantage he counted easiest and safest, giving warnings also of unsuspected danger in the shape of restless books that might either disappear from beneath one’s feet or descend on one’s head. Carmichael, however, needed no such guidance, for he knew his way about in the marvelous place, and at once made for what the boys called the throne of the fathers. This was a lordly seat, laid as to its foundation in mediæval divines of ponderous volume, but excellently finished with the Benedictine edition of St. Augustine, softened by two cushions, one for a seat and another for a back. Here Carmichael used to sit in great content, smoking and listening while the Rabbi hunted a passage through Scripture with many authorities, or defended the wildest Calvinism with strange, learned arguments; from this place he would watch the Rabbi searching for a lost note on some passage of Holy Writ amid a pile of papers two feet deep, through which he burrowed on all fours, or climbing for a book on the sky-line, to forget his errand and to expound some point of doctrine from the top of the ladder.

“You’re comfortable, John, and you do not want to put off your boots after all that traveling to and fro; then I will search for Barbara, and secure some refreshment for our bodies,” and Carmichael watched the Rabbi depart with pity, for he was going on a troublous errand.

Housekeepers are, after beadles, the most wonderful functionaries in the ecclesiastical life of Scotland, and every species could be found within a day’s journey of Drumtochty. Jenkins, indeed, suggested that a series of papers on Church Institutions read at the clerical club should include one on housekeepers, and offered to supply the want, which was the reason why Dr. Dowbiggin refused to certify him to a vacancy, speaking of him as “frivolous and irresponsible.” The class ranged from Sarah of Drumtochty, who could cook and knew nothing about ecclesiastical affairs, to that austere damsel, Margaret Meiklewham of Pitscourie, who had never prepared an appetizing meal in her life, but might have sat as an elder in the Presbytery.

Among all her class, Barbara MacCluckie stood an easy worst, being the most incapable, unsightly, evil-tempered, vexatious woman into whose hands an unmarried man had ever been delivered. MacWheep had his own trials, but his ruler saw that he had sufficient food and some comfort; but Barbara laid herself out to make the Rabbi's life a misery. He obtained food only as a favor, and an extra blanket had to be won by a week's abject humiliation. Fire was at times denied him, and he secured oil for his lamp by stratagems. Latterly he was glad to send strange ministers to Mains, and only his boys forced lodgment in the manse. The settlement of Barbara was the great calamity of the Rabbi's life, and was the doing of his own good nature. He first met her when she came to the manse one evening to discuss the unlawfulness of infant baptism and the duty of holding Sunday on Saturday, being the Jewish Sabbath. His interest deepened on learning that she had been driven from twenty-nine situations through the persecution of the ungodly; and on her assuring him that she had heard a voice in a dream bidding her take charge of Kilbogie Manse, the Rabbi, who had suffered many things at the hands of young girls given to lovers, installed Barbara, and began to repent that very day. A tall, bony, forbidding woman, with a squint, and a nose turning red from chronic indigestion, let it be said for her that she did not fall into the sins of her predecessors. It was indeed a pleasant jest in Kilbogie for four Sabbaths that she allowed a local Romeo, who knew not that his Juliet was gone, to make his adventurous way to her bedroom window, and then showed such an amazing visage that he was laid up for a week through the suddenness of his fall. What the Rabbi endured no one knew, but his boys understood that the only relief he had from Barbara's tyranny was on Sabbath evening, when she stated her objections to the doctrine, and threatened to walk into Muirtown in order to escape from unsound doctrine. On such occasions the Rabbi laid himself out for her instruction with much zest; and he knew when he had produced an impression, for then he went supperless to bed. Between this militant spirit and the boys there was an undying feud, and Carmichael was not hurt to hear her frank references to himself.

"What need he come stravagin' doon frae Drumtochty for? It wud set him better tae wait on his ain fouks. A licht-headed fellow, they say as kens; an' as for his doctrine—weel, maybe it 'ill dae for Drumtochty.

"Tea? Did ye expect me tae hae b'iling water at this 'oor o' the nicht? My word, the money would flee in this hoose gin a' wesna here. Milk 'ill dae fine for yon birkie: he micht be gled tae get onything, sorning on a respectable manse every ither week."

"You will pardon our humble provision"—this is how the Rabbi prepared Carmichael; "we have taken my worthy Abigail unawares, and she cannot do for us what in other circumstances would be her desire. She has a thorn in the flesh which troubles her, and makes her do what she would not; but I am convinced that the root of the matter is in her, and that her heart is right."

That uncompromising woman took no notice of Drumtochty, but busied herself in a search for the Rabbi's bag, which he had insisted he had brought home from Muirtown that morning, and which was at last found covered with books.

"Do not open it at present, Barbara; you can identify the contents later if it be necessary, but I am sure they are all right," and the Rabbi watched Barbara's investigations with anxiety.

"Maybe ye hae brocht back what ye started wi', but gin ye hev, it's the first time a' can mind. Laist sacrament at Edinburgh ye pickit up twal books, ae clothes-brush, an' a crochet-cover for a chair, an' left a'thing that belonged tae ye."

"It was an inadvertence; but I obtained a drawer for my own use this time, and I was careful to pack its contents into the bag, leaving nothing." But the Rabbi did not seem over-confident.

"There's nae question that ye hev filled the pack," said Barbara, with much deliberation and an ominous calmness; "but whether wi' yir ain gear or some ither body's, a'll leave ye tae judge yirsel'. A'll juist empty the bag on the bukes;" and Barbara selected a bank of Puritans for the display of her master's spoil.

"Ae slipbody (bodice), well hemmed and gude stuff—ye didna tak' that wi' ye, at ony rate; twa pillow-slips—they 'ill come in handy, oor ain are wearin' thin; ae pair o' sheets—'ill juist dae for the next trimmie that ye want tae set up in her hoose; this 'ill be a bolster-slip, a'm judgin'—"

"It must be the work of Satan," cried the poor Rabbi, who constantly saw the hand of the great enemy in the disorder of his study. "I cannot believe that my hands packed such garments in place of my own."

"Ye'll be satisfied when ye read the name; it's plain eneuch; ye needna gang dodderin' aboot here and there lookin' for yir glasses; there's twa pair on your head already;" for it was an hour of triumph to Barbara's genial soul.

"It's beyond understanding," murmured the Rabbi. "I must have mistaken one drawer for another in the midst of meditation;" and then, when Barbara had swept out of the room with the varied linen on her arm, "this is very humiliating, John, and hard to bear."

"Nonsense, Rabbi; it's one of the finest things you have ever done. Half a dozen journeys of that kind would refurnish the manse; it's just a pity you can't annex a chair;" but he saw that the good man was sorely vexed.

"You are a good lad, John, and it is truly marvelous what charity I have received at the hands of young men who might have scorned and mocked me. God knows how my heart has been filled with gratitude, and I . . . have mentioned your names in my unworthy prayers that God may do to you all according to the kindness ye have shown unto me."

It was plain that this lonely, silent man was much moved, and Carmichael did not speak.

"People consider that I am ignorant of my failings and weaknesses, and I can bear witness with a clear conscience that I am not angry when they smile and nod the head; why should I be? But, John, it is known to myself only and Him before whom all hearts are open how great is my suffering in being among my neighbors as a sparrow upon the housetop.

"May you never know, John, what it is to live alone and friendless till you lose the ways of other men and retire within yourself, looking out on the multitude passing on the road as a hermit from his cell, and knowing that some day you will die alone with none to . . . give you a draught of water."

"Rabbi, Rabbi"—for Carmichael was greatly distressed at the woe in the face opposite him, and his heart was tender that night—"why should you have lived like that? Do not be angry, but . . . did God intend . . . it cannot be wrong . . . I mean . . . God did give Eve to Adam."

"Laddie, why do ye speak with fear and a faltering voice? Did I say aught against that gracious gift, or the holy mystery of love, which is surely the sign of the union betwixt God and the soul, as is set forth after a mystical shape in the Song of Songs? But it was not for me—no, not for me. I complain not, neither have I vexed my soul. He doeth all things well."

"But, dear Rabbi"—and Carmichael hesitated, not knowing where he stood.

"Ye ask me why"—the Rabbi anticipated the question—"and I will tell you plainly, for my heart has ever gone forth to you. For long years I found no favor in the eyes of the church, and it seemed likely I would be rejected from the ministry as a man useless and unprofitable. How could I attempt to win the love of any maiden, since it did not appear to be the will of God that I should ever have a place of habitation? It consisted not with honor, for I do hold firmly that no man hath any right to seek unto himself a wife till he have a home."

"But . . ."

"Afterwards, you would say. Ah, John, then had I become old and unsightly, not such a one as women could care for. It would have been cruel to tie a maid for life to one who might only be forty years in age, but was as seventy in his pilgrimage, and . . . fallen into unlovely habits."

Then the Rabbi turned on Carmichael his tender eyes, that were shining with tears.

"It will be otherwise with you, and so let it be. May I live to see you rejoicing with the wife of your youth."

So it came to pass that Carmichael first told his new-born love to this unlikely confidant, and was amazed at the understanding of the Rabbi, as well as his sympathy and toleration.

"A maid of spirit and of a firm mind—and that is an excellent thing; and any excess will be tamed by life. Only see to it that ye be agreed in that which lieth beneath all churches and maketh souls one in God. May He prosper you in your wooing as He did the patriarch Jacob, and far more abundantly."

Very early in the morning Carmichael awoke, and, being tempted by the sunrise, arose and went downstairs. As he came near the study door he heard a voice in prayer, and knew that the Rabbi had been all night in intercession.

"Thou hast denied me wife and child; deny me not Thyself. . . . A stranger Thou hast made me among men; refuse me not a place in the City. . . . Deal graciously with this lad who has been to me as a son in the Gospel. . . . He has not despised an old man; put not his heart to confusion. . . ."

Carmichael crept upstairs again, but not to sleep, and at breakfast he pledged the Rabbi to come up some day and see Kate Carnegie.

[To be continued in the June Magazine Number of The Outlook]

Noteworthy Gatherings for the Next Half-Year

THE recurrence of important meetings for intellectual, religious, and patriotic purposes during the summer and autumn of each year has become a marked feature in American social life. Most of the assemblages of the coming six months may be roughly classed as educational, scientific, religious, patriotic, or political in their distinctive aims, while some, of course, combine two or more of these characteristics. Let us note, first, some of the intellectual opportunities which the summer has to offer, beginning with the college commencement season, which is always a time of renewed stimulus to educational effort and interests. Following are the dates of most of the college and university commencements of 1896:

May 27, Leland Stanford Junior University.

May 28, Atlanta and Howard Universities, and Wake Forest College.

May 30, Hampton Institute.

June 2, University of Cincinnati.

June 3, Boston University, the Universities of Mississippi and North Carolina, and Evelyn College.

June 4, Case School of Applied Science, Bryn Mawr College, Rollins College, Teachers' College, New York University, and the Universities of Colorado and Minnesota.

June 5, Wittenberg College, United States Naval Academy.

June 9, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, University of Pennsylvania.

June 10, Barnard, Earlham, Elmira, Hanover, Iowa, Racine, Roanoke, Tabor, Vassar, Washburn, and Wells Colleges; Butler, Columbia, Columbian, De Pauw, Fisk, Lake Forest, Princeton, Purdue, and West Virginia Universities; the Universities of Denver, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Tennessee, and Utah, and Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

June 11, Carleton, Coe, Dickinson, Drury, Franklin and Marshall, Georgetown, Illinois, and Knox Colleges; Illinois Wesleyan, Kansas Wesleyan, Otterbein, and Upper Iowa Universities, and the Universities of Missouri and Wooster.

June 12, United States Military Academy, Hampden-Sidney and Monmouth Colleges, Johns Hopkins and Northwestern Universities.

June 13, Haverford College, Syracuse University.

June 15, Armour Institute of Technology, Catholic University of America.

June 16, Rutgers and Smith Colleges.

June 17, Antioch, Colorado, Delaware, Kalamazoo, Lafayette, Mount Holyoke, Norwegian Lutheran, St. John's, Tufts, Wabash, and Whitman Colleges; Brown, Lehigh, Notre Dame, Ohio State, Pacific, Vanderbilt, Washington and Lee, and Western Reserve Universities, and the Universities of Alabama, Georgia, Indiana, Rochester, and Virginia.

June 18, Cornell, Hillsdale, Kenyon, Lebanon Valley, Olivet, and Yankton Colleges; Cornell, Denison, Heidelberg, Lawrence, Washington, and Wilberforce Universities, Rose and Worcester Polytechnic Institutes.

June 19, Tulane and Colgate Universities.

June 23, Wellesley College.

June 24, Amherst, Beloit, Dartmouth, Oberlin, Ripon, South Carolina, Washington and Jefferson, and Williams Colleges; Harvard, Yale, and Wesleyan Universities.

June 25, Albion, Allegheny, Buchtel, Hamilton, Doane, Hobart, Middlebury, Park, Union, Trinity, and Wheaton Colleges; Alfred University, and the Universities of Wisconsin and Vermont.

July 1, Colby University.

August 6, University of the South.

Educational Conventions

In the last week of June will be held the annual Convocation of the University of the State of New York—an institution which cannot well hold a commencement of its own, but which succeeds admirably in promoting the timely discussion of important questions connected with secondary and higher education. The Convocation will begin this year on June 24, and continue three days. ——The great teachers' meeting of the year will be the annual Convention of the National Educational Association at Buffalo, July 7–10, under the presidency of Superintendent Dougherty, of Peoria, Ill. The names of leading educationists from all parts of the country will be found on the programme of this gathering.——At Bethlehem, N. H., July 9–13, will occur the meeting of the American Institute of Instruction, another important teachers' convention.——It is appropriate to mention in this connection a gathering of men and women whose lives are very largely devoted to education—the librarians of the country. The American Library Association will hold its eighteenth General Conference at Cleveland, September 1–4. John Cotton Dana, of the Denver Public Library, will preside, while Dr. Justin Winsor, of Harvard, Mr. Herbert Putnam, of the Boston Public Library, and other prominent librarians will participate in the discussions.

Summer Schools for Teachers and Librarians

For the systematic and technical training of teachers the opportunities are multiplying year by year. The long summer vacations are utilized by many teachers as periods of professional study. These teachers were among the first in this country to adopt the summer school idea and to make a successful application of it, as has been shown by the history of the famous schools at Martha's Vineyard, Glens Falls, and elsewhere.——The highest type of summer instruction in pedagogics will doubtless be found this year at Clark University, Worcester, Mass. (see The Outlook, page 904), from the 13th to the 25th of July.——The New York University also offers advanced courses in experimental psychology and the study of educational systems.——The New York Teachers' College will give instruction in manual training adapted to elementary schools.——The usual schools for language study will be conducted this year at Amherst, Mass., and Point o' Woods, Long Island.——The librarians have demanded summer schools for training in cataloguing and other branches of library work. Mr. W. I. Fletcher, the Amherst College Librarian, was the first to attempt to meet this want, and his school has been in successful operation for several summers. For the coming summer two similar schools are announced—one under the management of the New York State Library School at Albany, and another at Madison, Wis., to be directed by Miss Katharine Sharp, Librarian of the Armour Institute of Chicago.

Summer Schools in General

The facilities for higher education now afforded in the United States during the summer months, as compared with those of a decade ago, are quite remarkable. The best of advanced instruction in college and university branches is provided at moderate cost by the American Society for the extension of University Teaching, with headquarters at the University of Pennsylvania, in a four weeks' "summer meeting" during July.——Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Leland Stanford Junior, and most of the State Universities offer courses in various departments by members of their regular teaching staffs, while at the University of Chicago the summer quarter forms one of the four periods into which the academic year is divided, being equal in grade of work required and facilities afforded to either of the other three periods.——During July and August regular class work is carried on at the Biological Laboratory of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, at Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island. This work is conducted by experienced instructors from Wesleyan and Johns Hopkins Universities and other institutions.——Among the numerous "assembly" schools of the Chautauqua type, the original Chautauqua still holds the lead. Among the distinguished guests at that retreat this year will be the Rev. Charles Aked, of Liverpool, Professor George Adam Smith, of Glasgow, and Professor Joseph Agar Beet, of Wesleyan College, Richmond, England. In the programme of instruction special emphasis will be laid on pedagogy. President Hervey, of the Teachers' College; Professor Butler, of Columbia; Professor Dewey, of Chicago, and other well-known specialists will give lectures.——The Catholic Summer School of America will hold its fourth annual session on the shores of Lake Champlain, meeting this year, for the first time, on the new assembly grounds.——The Columbia Catholic Summer School, at Madison, Wis., announces its second session.——The Bay View, Michigan, and Colorado Summer Schools, on the Chautauqua plan, present attractive programmes of instruction and entertainment. The special features at Colorado Springs will be geology and botany. At other Western "Chautauquas," also, the lectures will be of a high order—many of them given by Eastern college and university professors.——The Plymouth School of Applied Ethics omits its session in 1896. The Greenacre Assembly will be held again at Eliot, Me. This annual conference has attracted many persons interested in the religious, social, and scientific problems of the day.

Schools for Bible Study Of the various institutes devoted exclusively to Bible study, Mr. Moody's Northfield schools are the most famous. Similar Conferences are held each year at Lake Geneva, Wis., for the benefit of workers in the Y. W. C. A. and Y. M. C. A.——The American Institute of Sacred Literature is firmly established at the parent Chautauqua and several other summer assemblies. It is under the direction of President Harper, of Chicago, Professor Sanders, of Yale, and a number of able coadjutors.——The Baptists will this summer open a training-school for Sunday-school teachers at Jackson, Tenn.——We may note in this connection that the triennial International Sunday-School Convention, the body which appoints the committee to select the International Lessons used throughout the world, is to meet in Tremont Temple, Boston, June 23–26.

Great Religious Meetings First in point of attendance among the religious meetings of the year will be the Washington Christian Endeavor rally, July 8–13, which will probably bring 50,000 visitors to the Capital City. Unusual provision has been made for the comfort of these guests. Prominent men of all professions and of all religious denominations will address the great audiences.——The Baptist Young People's Union of America will hold its sixth annual Convention at Milwaukee, July 16–19. Arrangements are being made for the seating of audiences numbering 12,000 people.——At Jersey City, during the week of the Christian Endeavor meeting in Washington, the Young People's Christian Union, composed of the young people of the Unitarian and Universalist Churches in the United States, will assemble.——The eleventh annual Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is called to meet at Pittsburg, October 10. The attendance will probably number about one thousand laymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church. It is announced that Archbishop Boyd Carpenter, of Ripon, England, will preach the anniversary sermon.——The general secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. are to hold a Conference at Cleveland, June 5–9. Over 1,300 salaried officers of the Association in the United States and Canada will be represented.——The International Missionary Union, an organization composed exclusively of foreign missionaries belonging to evangelical denominations, will meet at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 10–17.——The Quadrennial Conference of the Methodists, the General Assembly of the Presbyterians, and the anniversaries of the Baptists and Unitarians have been held during the month of May.——The General Convention of the Christian or Disciples' Church will be held at Springfield, Ill., October 18–23, and will represent nearly one million communicants.——The Congregationalists have no general denominational gathering this year; the Congregational Home Missionary Society is announced to meet at New Haven, June 2. General O. O. Howard will preside; the annual sermon will be preached by the Rev. Dr. Daniel Merriman, of Worcester, Mass. The American Board will meet at Toledo this year, October 6–9, and the American Missionary Association in Tremont Temple, Boston, October 22; Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, will speak at this latter meeting.

Political Conventions The most interesting political gatherings of the summer, of course, will be the Republican and Democratic Nominating Conventions to be held at St. Louis and Chicago, respectively, in the months of June and July. In the latter part of July, also, there will occur at St. Louis the Conventions of the Populist and Silver parties, meeting on the same date, July 22. On August 25 the Republican League of the United States will hold its Convention at Milwaukee, the League of Democratic Clubs meeting at St. Louis in the same month. These are all of the strictly political meetings of importance announced to be held during the summer. There will, however, be several occasions of a patriotic character. The memories of the Civil War will be revived by the Grand Army of the Republic in its National Encampment at St. Paul, September 3, as well as by the grand reunion of the United Confederate Veterans at Richmond, Va., on June 30. The Sons of Veterans also are to hold an encampment at Louisville, Ky., in September.——Several important anniversary celebrations will take place during the summer and autumn. On the 1st of June the State of Tennessee will celebrate its admission into the Union. The Governors of other States have been invited to participate, and everything will be done to make the occasion a dignified and memorable observance of Tennessee's natal day. The exposition planned for this year has been postponed till May, 1897.——Another important centennial celebration will be that of the city of Cleveland, the exercises of which will extend from July 19 to September 10, and will be of a highly interesting character. An oration by Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, and an ode by Colonel Piatt, the Ohio poet, will be prominent features of the programme. Historical pageants and musical festivals, together with various forms of entertainment, will serve to mark the summer of 1896 in Cleveland's municipal history.——An effort will be made to celebrate the anniversary of one of the most celebrated of the Lincoln and Douglas debates at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., on October 7 of this year. The oration of the day will be delivered by the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew Philanthropy and Social Science The twenty-third National Conference of Charities and Correction is to be held at Grand Rapids, Mich., June 4 to 10. This will be a meeting of considerable importance, and will be attended by many of the leading penologists and workers in various forms of philanthropy from foreign countries as well as from the United States. Mr. A. O. Wright, of Wisconsin, is President of the Conference of 1896.——The American Social Science Association will meet at Saratoga in September.——The annual Convention of the Commissioners of Labor Bureaus will be held at Albany, N. Y., June 23. The municipal ownership of water, gas, and electric light plants will be one of the principal topics of discussion.——The meeting of the American Bar Association this year will be at Saratoga Springs from August 19 to 21. The President of the Association is Mansfield Storey.

Scientific Societies The American Association for the Advancement of Science will hold its forty-fifth annual session in Buffalo, beginning August 24. The President of the Association for 1896 is Professor Edward D. Cope, of Philadelphia. Most of the universities and colleges of the country, as well as various scientific societies and institutes, will be represented on the programme of the meeting through their officers.——The American Institute of Architects plans to hold its thirteenth annual meeting at Nashville, Tenn., October 20. The examination of the buildings erected for the coming Tennessee Centennial Exposition will be an important part of the business of the Convention.——The Society of Civil Engineers will meet this year in San Francisco, probably on June 30.——The American Philological Association will hold its annual session at Brown University, Providence, R. I., July 7. Professor Francis A. March, of Lafayette College, will preside.——The International League of Press Clubs will meet in Buffalo, June 23, and remain in session one week. Many well-known newspaper men are members and officers of this organization, and women's press clubs are well represented on the governing boards and committees.——This year's meeting of the League of American Wheelmen will take place at Louisville, Ky., beginning on August 10 and lasting through the 15th. Reduced fares have been secured on the railroads, and a very large attendance is expected.

New Books

[Continued from page 1001]

fact that wages fell during our Civil War. War, as is well known, always reduces wages, just as it always increases interest. In Europe, where this disturbing element did not enter, the marvelous rise in wages during this general period was regarded by Cairnes as the one blessing to humanity coming from the exceptional expansion of the currency.——A History of Modern Banks of Issue, by Charles A. Conant (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York), is by no means strong on its philosophical side, but is nevertheless a valuable book. The author has investigated with great care the banking systems of every important nation, and has presented the results in an octavo volume of 573 pages, well indexed. The author rejects the theory of the English Bank Act that the volume of bank-note currency should be limited, and would, apparently, allow every bank to issue as much currency as its own interest impelled it to. The objections to such a currency he does not present in such a way as to convince his readers that he understands them. No one, at least, could learn from this volume why enlightened governments have denied banks their old liberty to inflate the currency during periods of over-confidence, and contract it during periods of panic. Similarly unsatisfactory is his treatment of the commercial crises of the present century. In describing the commercial panic in England at the close of the Napoleonic wars, he does not even note the practical doubling of the value of money consequent upon the return to specie payments. Yet this increase in the value of money was the omnipresent cause of the fall in prices and the bankruptcies. Similarly, in describing the depression in this country from 1873 to 1879, he does not mention the change in the value of money, due either to the rise in the value of gold or the rise of our paper money to par with gold. These criticisms, however, relate to the philosophical side of the book. On its historical side it is full of interesting and valuable information.

Early Long Island, a colonial study by Martha Bockée Flint, is a very valuable contribution to the history of New York State. By carefully investigating the social, religious, and political developments within a small territory, it contributes far more to a knowledge of the period covered than if a wider field had been chosen. The work is well done. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)

Extraordinary Cases, by Henry L. Clinton, is primarily a book for lawyers, but may reach a wider audience, by reason of its humor. The cases described are from among those in which the author has been engaged during his long and successful practice at the New York bar. Many of them possessed public importance, and all of them elements of popular interest, which the author has developed as only a natural story-teller can. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

A Bad Penny, by John F. Wheelwright (Lamson, Wolffe & Co., Boston). The story of a bad boy who by bravery partially redeems his life.

Cold Dishes for Hot Weather, by Ysaguerre and La Marca (Harper & Brothers, New York). A book of recipes for the summer season. Nothing remarkable or new is in the book.

Fairy Tales, by Mabel Fuller Blodgett, illustrated by Ethel Reed (Lamson, Wolffe & Co., New York), is a book of fairy tales that will charm away the deepest, darkest blues on a rainy day.

◆

The project of erecting a monument to the late German novelist, Gustav Freytag, at Wiesbaden, has been practically abandoned for lack of sympathy with the subject.

For the Little People

Hilda and the Procession

By Mary Allaire

"I do want to go; I will not get lost," muttered Hilda. There was a scowl between her eyebrows and a pout on her lips deep enough to frighten the good fairy who was sheltered beneath the white canopy—that big people call a toadstool—under the big tree by the gate. The fairy looked at Hilda earnestly, and in a soft musical voice, which Hilda could not hear, because she was so cross she did not notice the musical murmur in the grass at her feet, said, "It must be very uncomfortable to feel like that. I don't believe it pays."

"I'm seven years old, and I know how to get home," muttered Hilda, and the pout pushed her lips out further and made the scowl deeper. The flags were flying from the town hall and the buildings on the main street were decorated; there was evidence that everybody was celebrating. It was the day on which the town library was to be dedicated; everybody was very happy, it seemed, except Hilda. The procession of soldiers and firemen and citizens of the town and of the neighboring towns would pass Hilda's house, and her papa and mamma had decided that she was a fortunate little girl to be able to see the parade without getting in a crowd. Her papa was so busy that he could not stay at home to watch the parade, and her mamma was one of the ladies who were to prepare the lunch at the town hall for the visiting soldiers and firemen. Mary, Hilda's nurse, was to take care of three little friends of Hilda's, who were to take lunch with her and see the parade from Hilda's piazza. Mamma had planned such a delightful lunch, with a surprise for Hilda, but the knowledge of this did not send the pout away nor iron out the ugly scowl on Hilda's face.

"You could not go alone, dear. Mary could not go with you, for you have invited Carrie and Alice and Margaret to come here, and Mary must be with them."

"I could go alone," said Hilda, not at all politely.

"You would get lost, and what would mamma do?" said the loving mamma of a little girl who felt very naughty.

"I know every place," persisted Hilda. "Every single place."

"Hilda! you are to stay at home. You cannot go on the street to-day. You asked your little friends to come here, and you are to be the hostess. Good-by, dear, and be a loving little girl. Mamma will be very tired when she comes home, and she hopes you will meet her with a happy smile." Hilda's mamma kissed her and hurried down the steps and drove away.

There was a rustling in the branches of the climbing roses, and the morning-glories seemed to ring their bells. It was the fairies telling each other how lovely it was to have such a pretty, sweet, gentle mother. In fairyland there are kings and queens, and lords and ladies in waiting, but there are no mothers. In the land of fairies mothers are thought to be worth more than everything else. This it is that puzzles the fairies so when little children are impolite or disobedient to their mothers. To them it seems to be a terrible thing to have so great a gift as a mother and yet not be loving and tender and true always.

The fairies looked out sadly from under the buds, the leaves, and the flowers at the cross, impolite little girl in the doorway. At last they stole quietly away, for the sight was too painful, and they could not change the feelings of the little girl. All but one stole away, making a faint murmuring sound as they went through the leaves and through the grass on the lawn—all but one fairy, and she sat down beneath the big canopy (people called it a toadstool) under the tree by the gate.

Hilda heard Mary coming, and she hurried away as fast as she could down the steps and to the gate, where she hid under the lilac-bushes. "I would not get lost. I want to see the soldiers." Mary called and called, but Hilda did not stir nor answer.

A carriage was heard on the road; it stopped, in a few minutes, at the gate. Carrie, Hilda's friend, with her big doll Elizabeth, was helped down, and James, the man, took them into the house. Mary met them, and Hilda knew she was telling Carrie that she could not be found. Voices came up the street, and Alice and Margaret, each with her best doll, came through the gate. Then Hilda came out from the bushes and met them. They kissed her, but she did not seem very happy, and somehow the voices of the two little visitors grew more subdued; the glad light in their eyes was not so bright.

Mary hurried down to meet Hilda, and whispered: "Your dress is not clean, and your hair is tumbled; where have you been?"

Hilda jerked away her hand, and when she met Carrie her frowns were so forbidding that Carrie's smiles all disappeared.

Mary looked at the little girls, and felt so sorry for them that she took Hilda by the hand and into the parlor.

"You are not polite to these little girls. I know if they could they would go home. How can you be so naughty?" Hilda jerked her arm away and went out on the piazza, where the little visitors sat in a solemn row on the settee. Alice, who was only four, looked as though she wanted her mamma.

Hilda felt ashamed, and she drove away the frowns and hurried after Mary. Soon Mary came back with Hilda's tea-dishes and doll and some crackers and milk, and a chocolate-cream, one for each little girl, on a plate. Such delightful visiting, and trying on of each doll's jackets and hats; such attempts at making tissue-paper hats and dresses, as would have delighted you, were made on that piazza. The fairy who stayed, almost wished she was a little girl; would have wished so, if she had not known that she must be a fairy to weave lacework on the grass and shrubbery in the early mornings. The lunch-table was so pretty. Not a big table, but mamma's low, pretty sewing-table, with the four low chairs that mamma kept for Hilda and her friends. There were cold chicken, and baked potatoes, and rice with chicken gravy, and ice-cream and strawberries. Then Mary brought in four little boxes tied with ribbon. The little girls hurried so fast to untie the ribbons that they pulled them into hard knots. At last they were untied, and there were four china dolls in tiny tin bath-tubs. They lifted out the tubs, and under each of them was a whole suit of clothes for a tiny baby—dresses and petticoats that hung below their feet, and last of all they found tiny lace caps with strings to tie under the chin. Such laughing and trying on and measuring you never saw, and right in the midst of it came the sound of the drums and bugles, and the little girls rushed to the piazza. Mary saw that they could see the parade better from a settee under the big tree on the lawn. She carried one there, and then stood each on the bench. The dolls were turned so that they could see the men and the flags and the soldiers. The fairy who was under the canopy looked at them and murmured, "How sweet they are!"

On came the drums and the bugles. At the head of the procession rode Alice's papa, and when he passed the house he raised his hat and bowed very low to the four little girls. Then all the other gentlemen raised their hats, and the little girls blushed with pleasure; they felt as if they were part of the procession. The band broke out into a gay march, and the procession passed gayly on.

"Let us go after them," whispered Hilda. There came a frightened look into the little girls' eyes, and Alice's cheeks grew pale at the thought. The fairy under the canopy wished she was a giant, that she could hold the gate tight. Hilda jumped down, and all but Alice followed her. Just then there was a loud call at the gate, and Uncle Harry, Hilda's dear Uncle Harry, drove up in his carryall. "I thought perhaps you would like to see them once more. We will drive through to the other street. Come, Mary, bundle them in; take Alice on your lap."

Hilda blushed; she could not look at the other little girls. "Come, hurry, little woman, or we will miss it," and Uncle Harry lifted her in before she could speak. The carriage was driven rapidly to a corner where the procession would pass again, and all the gay soldiers and the music and the crowd delighted the little friends once more. Their cheeks were so like roses and their eyes so bright that Uncle Harry said they must go and call on grandma—that is, Hilda's grandma.

When the little girls left, she gave them each a large bunch of roses, Uncle Harry said to match those in their cheeks. She invited them to lunch with her the next Saturday, with all their families of dolls. Such planning and planning as to what they would do the next Saturday! The very top of the mountain of joy was reached when Uncle Harry said he did not propose to be left out of any such plan. He could invite if he were not invited. Would the young ladies go driving with him after lunch to Buttermilk Falls, and crown him King of the May? There was a shout of "Yes, thank you, Uncle Harry."

Hilda stood in the doorway watching for her mamma. Her face was happy, but as she looked down the road you could see she was anxious. When her mamma did come home, she found a thoughtful little girl with a rose in her hand waiting for her. All the history of the day was given, even the naughty whisper. Her mamma listened, and held her so close in her arms that the little girl knew how frightened she was at the thought, and her brown eyes filled with tears. When Hilda told of Uncle Harry's invitation, her mamma smiled. "King of the May! I never heard of one."

"No, mamma, dear, Uncle Harry said it was entirely new—'a nineteenth-century idea.' I'll tell you about it after I come home."

The fairy under the canopy by the gate hurried away to spread the news of the strange May party, for even in fairyland new ideas are welcomed.

The Religious World

The General Assembly The one hundred and eighth meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, North, was convened at Saratoga, May 21. A large number of the Commissioners appear to be new men, or men who have not been members of late years. Dr. J. L. Withrow, of Chicago, was chosen Moderator on the first ballot. We believe that Dr. Withrow lately voted with the majority of the Chicago Presbytery to admit Mr. Vrooman to membership, and in this column last week we reported the complaint to the Synod which ensued. Dr. Withrow was, however, nominated by Dr. Davies, of New York, in a very effective speech, full of assurances for the conservative interest, and it was understood that he had given ample pledges on that behalf. The liberals are said to have voted for him in large part, believing that he represents the great body of moderate men who are solicitous to compose the difficulties which have disturbed the Church since it met at Saratoga six years ago and initiated the ineffective movement for a revision of the standards. This note of reconciliation was also struck in the annual sermon by the retiring Moderator, Dr. Booth, of New York. His theme was "Christian Union and Denominational Loyalty," the latter being emphasized, at least, quite as strongly as the former. The feelings of the Assembly were evidently touched by the earnestness with which, while insisting on strictly orthodox positions, he urged such brotherly conferences as might remove misunderstandings and alienations that had become "inexpressibly painful." The most serious question that will have to be dealt with is the constitutional question, i.e., whether the Assembly in its action at Pittsburg last May, enjoining the New York Presbytery (and by implication other Presbyteries) not to receive students coming from seminaries not approved by the Assembly, transcended its constitutional limits. This question has caused some division among those who on theological grounds had stood together against the teachings of Drs. Briggs and Smith. The Assembly was at once plunged into a warm discussion by the report of its special committee on the relation of the Church to the local Christian Endeavor Societies. Those who were disposed to break the solidarity of the Young People's Society for Christian Endeavor for the sake of a more denominational organization were quite outnumbered. The home rule principle triumphed in this matter, the Assembly adopting the view of the committee, that it rests with the session of the local church to see to it that their young people's society conforms to the usages and standards of the denomination. Next week we shall continue our account of the proceedings. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, South, is also in session at Memphis, and fraternal greetings have been exchanged between the two bodies.

Baptist Anniversaries We are living in the midst of religious anniversaries. The Presbyterians are at Saratoga, the Methodists at Cleveland, the Congregationalists the first week in June will be in New Haven, and the Baptists for the last week or two have been celebrating at Asbury Park. Almost if not quite all their societies have been holding their anniversaries at that city by the sea. The women have vied with the men in the meetings. It is impossible for us at present to do more than mention one or two of the items which were of peculiar interest. We turn to the report of the Missionary Union, which is the Missionary Society of the Baptist Church. The Foreign Secretary is Rev. S. W. Duncan, D.D. His report shows that the debt of the society has been reduced about $26,000 during the year, but the debt still remaining is $163,828. The sum is an enormous one when considered by itself, but not when compared with the wealth of the denomination. The donations for the year were about $296,000. The legacies were about $189,000, but we are not informed by the reports whether that is in addition to the other donations. The President of the Union for the ensuing year is Dr. Henry F. Colby, of Ohio. Another meeting of much interest was that addressed by Dr. MacArthur and the Rev. F. A. Remley. Dr. MacArthur spoke on the needs of foreign mission work, and illustrated his address by his recent tour around the world. Mr. Remley spoke on the unique subject "Are Missions Needed in Germany?" He argued very strenuously that Germany is essentially a heathen country—we do not quote his words, but summarize the spirit of his address. The facts which he gave are surely significant, whatever may be thought of his conclusions. He held that the Church is losing its grip upon the people and that the "Social Democracy" is opposed to the Church and hostile to Christianity. Among the other addresses which have attracted much attention in the press were those of Dr. Faunce, of New York, and Dr. E. H. Johnson, of Crozier Theological Seminary. Altogether the meetings seem to have been a success and to have excited great enthusiasm throughout the denomination.

Congregational Churches of New York The sixty-third annual meeting of the General Association of Congregational Churches of New York was held at Canandaigua, May 19–21. The Association passed temperance resolutions recommending the clergy to use their influence for the enforcement of temperance laws, especially those restricting the liquor traffic and those providing for temperance education in the public schools; they urged Congress and the President to guarantee protection to Christian missionaries in Armenia, and they approved the report of a committee recommending an alliance between the Congregationalists and free Baptists to increase the endowment of Keuka College in the State of New York, and bring it under the joint control of the two bodies. Of the papers and addresses presented, we speak here only of those which it was the pleasure of this writer to hear. Dr. Behrends's sermon on "Sowing and Reaping" was forceful, practical, and full of hope and inspiration to preachers and Christian workers; the Rev. S. E. Eastman's address on "The Errand of Jesus," which he defined to be bringing life into the world, was, especially in the latter half of it, one of great spiritual beauty; the Rev. H. N. Kinney, of Syracuse, showed by his paper on "The Training of Children" an expert's knowledge of recent investigations into child nature; the Rev. Lyman Abbott's address on "Christianity and Social Problems" was along the line of his sermons on this subject recently published in The Outlook; the Rev. W. B. Thorpe read a paper on "The Future of Congregationalism," notable for its clear-cut distinction between evangelistic missionary work and missionary work having for its purpose church extension—some of his practical suggestions are certainly well worth careful consideration by the Home Missionary Board; Dr. Griffis, of Ithaca, made a characteristically vigorous and dramatic address, broad in its comprehension of Congregationalism as something much larger than a mere ecclesiastical phase of Puritan life; President Booth, of Auburn Theological Seminary, spoke with a very different kind of eloquence, and with great simplicity and beauty, of Christian unity as distinguished from Church unity—the first he commended, the second not. Dr. Bradford's address on "Japan and its Religious Outlook" was delivered after the present writer had left the Convention.

Theology at Yale The Theological Department of Yale University celebrated its anniversary last week. The services began with the usual address before the Seminary, which was delivered by the Rev. A. H. Bradford, D.D., on "The Unity of the Spirit: A World-Wide Necessity." One of the great attractions of the week was the presence of Professor George Adam Smith, the great Free Church scholar who is now visiting this country. A special reception was tendered to him by the Seminary. Yale numbers among its professors many of our strong men in the department of theology. The venerable Dr. George P. Fisher has no superior in the English-speaking world as a Church historian. Professor Samuel Harris has ceased his active service, but his books will long be read. His place has been taken by Professor George B. Stevens, who had already made a reputation in the field of New Testament Exegesis. His place in turn will be taken by the Rev. B. W. Bacon, D.D., of Oswego. Professors Curtis and F. H. Porter have proved their fitness for the departments respectively of Old Testament Exegesis and Biblical Theology. The department of Sociology is strongly filled by Dr. Blackman, while Dr. L. O. Brastow has the department of Sacred Rhetoric. No theological seminary in our country is better equipped or doing better service.

Open-Air Preaching There is far more open-air preaching in the Old World than in the New. It is no uncommon thing to see a group of people gathered round a preacher in Hyde Park, or in different parts of London, or in the various cities and towns of the Kingdom. Such sights are not common in this country. An attempt is now being made here to organize a movement for open-air preaching. It is largely under the leadership of the Rev. Edwin H. Byington, of Pilgrim Chapel, Brooklyn. At a conference held in the Hanson Place Baptist Church in 1892, Mr. Byington spoke on this subject with so much effect that a committee was appointed to form a National Association of Open-Air Workers. The Association was organized, and its third report will soon appear. The aim of the Association is to bring together all who believe in the efficiency of this kind of work. Among those specially interested we notice the names of Commander Ballington Booth, the Rev. J. S. Stone, D.D., of New York, the Rev. E. H. Byington, of Brooklyn, and the Rev. T. S. Hamlin, D.D., of Washington. The reports indicate that the movement has been received with much favor. The London Open-Air Mission, which was established by "Rob Roy" Macgregor in 1853, has fifteen hundred members. The London Mission has one hundred and twenty-nine special agents and preachers who visit race-courses and fairs and public parks and hold religious services. Meetings of this kind are said to have been successful in many country districts, in Philadelphia, in Syracuse, in New London, in Washington, and elsewhere, The experiment is certainly worthy of being thoroughly tested. Under certain circumstances we can see no reason why it should not result in great good. The writer has often studied those who gathered round the open-air preachers in Great Britain, and have felt that little benefit could be accomplished, because the preaching was so poor, consisting usually of the idlest exhortation. If, instead, there could be strong words from strong men, we believe that many would be reached who now care neither for churches nor for religion. Our advice to the Association, therefore, would be, Do not try to go too fast; do not think any one is good enough for open-air work. Remember that street preaching ought to be of quite as high a quality, and, of course, more popular in character, than that in the churches.

Changes in the Doshisha It is important that those who are interested in the cause of missions in Japan should have a true understanding of the changes which have recently taken place in the Doshisha. The great University was founded by the fidelity and ability of the late Joseph Neesima. As the result of the investigations of the recent Deputation of the American Board to Japan, it was judged that it would be best for all concerned if at the end of two years the appropriations should be discontinued. That judgment was reached without making any reflections on the management of the Doshisha. It was felt that the contributions of the Board were given for more distinctly evangelistic purposes. As a result of the condition in which the trustees found themselves, they have voted to declare their independence, and to receive no further aid, either in money or in men, from the American Board after the end of the year 1896. The trustees are rightly desirous of becoming independent as speedily as possible, and their efforts to do so have our hearty approval. Only one thing in their action we seriously regret. In the reorganization of their school they have placed at the head of the largest department Professor Utika; he is a man of unquestioned ability and an able instructor, but his writings, as they have been translated and circulated in this country, prove him to be anything but a clear thinker on religious subjects or a wise leader in religious affairs. We have no prejudice against Professor Utika; in many respects we admire him exceedingly, and believe that positions even higher than the one which he occupies he would greatly honor; but if the Doshisha ever expects to receive the co-operation of Christians in the United States, it must not have at its head men who feel called upon to denounce much of the faith for which Neesima lived and died, and to help to promote which the Doshisha itself was established. With the heartiest appreciation of all that Professor Utika has achieved in the field of scholarship, and with the fullest recognition of the fact that the Doshisha is an absolutely independent institution, we cannot forget that it owes its existence to evangelical Christians in the United States, and that the same class of people would be glad to assist it in the future. They will be willing to do so, however, only as they have assurance that it stands in Japan for a broad but reverent, a tolerant and yet positive type of Christian faith and life. We sincerely hope that it may yet so commend itself to the American churches that they will esteem it a privilege to aid it in the future.

A Tempest in a Teapot We mean no disrespect to the city of Louisville, and what we are informed by the "Christian Evangelist" is the largest Baptist Divinity School in the world, when we refer to the trouble over the recent "discovery" of Dr. Whitsitt as "a tempest in a teapot." Dr. Whitsitt is the President of the Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, and the successor of the late Dr. Broadus. He is described as a man of singular earnestness and candor, and on many points a High Church Baptist, but he has ventured to express the opinion that Roger Williams was sprinkled, and that the Baptists of that early day did not insist on immersion. It is said that these statements have caused great excitement in his own denomination, and that there is prospect of a trial for heresy. We doubt very much whether the trial ever occurs. We had supposed that Baptists rested their faith on what they believed to be the teachings of Christ rather than on the regularity of the action of certain of their brethren two or three hundred years ago. It looks a little as if certain people about Louisville were inclined to make the mistake of interpreting history according to preconceived theory instead of making their theories conform to facts. Like all tempests in a teapot, however, this disturbance will probably prove to be more the result of fuss than of energy.

Atlanta University Among the institutions which have been established in the South for the promotion of education among colored people none are more worthy of appreciation and support than Atlanta University, of which the Rev. Horace Bumstead, D.D., is the President. It is just closing its college year. The institution occupies a position of peculiar importance. It is situated in the midst of the old fortifications which surrounded the city; it has a noble equipment as to buildings, but, like many other educational institutions, is suffering much from the stringency of the times, and needs to be strengthened if its efficiency is to be continued. Colleges of this kind at the South are at a disadvantage. The colored people are not rich enough materially to aid them, while the majority of the white population does little if anything for their support. Institutions at the North have behind them usually a loyal and financially able constituency; not so with those for colored people at the South. And yet the work which they are doing is of surpassing importance to the country and the kingdom of God. Dr. Bumstead has not asked from The Outlook any recognition, but we are somewhat acquainted with the University and with the circumstances in which it is placed, and we believe that we are doing the cause of humanity a service by calling attention to its singular usefulness, and the great opportunity which it offers to those who are seeking for wise means of investing their money in the interests of their fellow-men.

The Methodist General Conference

From a Special Correspondent

The 530 delegates assembled in the General Conference represent every State and Territory in the United States; there are delegates from India, China, Japan, Mexico, South America, Italy, Germany, Norway, Switzerland, and Sweden. Thus the nations of the earth are assembled. All race distinctions are ignored, as white, black, and yellow are indiscriminately seated throughout the hall. The selection of General Conference officers has occupied the attention of the Conference for the past week. After the election of Bishops, the Book Concern agents for New York were chosen. Dr. Homer Eaton was re-elected by a practically unanimous vote. Dr. George P. Maines, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was elected as his associate. For the Western house at Cincinnati Dr. Lewis Curts was continued, and Dr. Henry C. Jennings, of Minnesota, was elected as second agent. A strong effort was made to put one layman in each of the New York and the Cincinnati houses. Mr. Charles R. Magee, of the Boston Methodist Book Store, polled a very large vote on the first ballot. Mr. George B. Johnson, for fifteen years the Secretary and Treasurer of the Cincinnati house, came near to being elected as agent.

Thus far the laymen have received nothing in the way of office from the Conference. These Book Concern offices being almost entirely secular, the laymen thought that only men of thorough business training should be put in charge, particularly as so large financial interests, reaching millions of dollars, are involved. The secular papers throughout the country seemed to get an erroneous impression of the purpose of Dr. Lannahan's recent book on "Frauds in the Book Concern." He refers to alleged frauds that occurred about twenty-five years ago, which were investigated and passed upon at the time. The affairs of the Book Concern are in good condition at the present time, and neither Dr. Lannahan nor any one else desires any investigation at this time.

Dr. McCabe being advanced to the Bishopric, Dr. A. B. Leonard was elected as the first Secretary of the Missionary Society. Dr. Leonard has been Secretary for eight years. Dr. A. J. Palmer, pastor of St. Paul's Church, New York, and Dr. W. T. Smith, of Des Moines, Iowa, were elected as the remaining Secretaries of the Missionary Society. The Secretaries for the Church Extension Society, Drs. Kynett and Spencer, were re-elected. The same was done with Dr. C. H. Payne, Secretary of the Board of Education, and also with Drs. J. W. Hamilton and J. C. Hartzell, Secretaries of the Freedman's Aid and Southern Education Society. Dr. Jesse L. Hurlbut was continued as editor of Sunday-School Literature. Dr. W. V. Kelly was elected editor of the "Review." Dr. J. M. Buckley was by an almost unanimous vote continued for the fifth time editor of the New York "Christian Advocate." While more than two-thirds of the members disagree with Dr. Buckley upon the woman question, his commanding ability is recognized by his opponents. There are few men who can wield influence in a large legislative body equal with Dr. Buckley. He is a genius in parliamentary affairs, and a master in debate and on the platform. He was accorded a grand ovation on the announcement of his election by the great audience of delegates and visitors.

Dr. David H. Moore, the brilliant editor of the "Western Advocate" at Cincinnati, was re-elected. Dr. Jesse Bowman Lowry was chosen editor of the "Central Advocate," of St. Louis. Dr. Arthur Edwards, who for over a quarter of a century has been the editor of the "Northwestern Advocate," of Chicago, was re-elected. Dr. J. E. C. Sawyer, editor of the "Northern Advocate," of Syracuse, N. Y., was re-elected. The editor of the Pittsburg "Advocate," Dr. C. W. Smith, was continued. Dr. W. S. Mathews was elected editor of the California "Advocate." The editor of the "Christian Apologist" (German), Dr. A. J. Nost, was re-elected without an opponent. The Rev. J. B. Scott was elected editor of the "Southern Advocate." Dr. J. F. Berry was continued editor of the "Epworth Herald." F. L. Nagler was re-elected editor of the "Haus and Herd."

Much of the time of the morning sessions of the Conference during last week has been used in electing Bishops and officers of the Boards, but the afternoons were used by the various committees in considering the many subjects before them. Most of the committees have indicated that they are nearly ready to make their final report.

E. F. D.

Notes and Queries

Some of my friends and myself are much interested in Mr. Alden's books, "God in His World" and "A Study of Death." We would like some of the facts of his life. We feel that such a position as his amounts to little so long as it remains in the form of intellectual propositions. Such propositions are valuable only as exemplified in a life. The value of these books will appear when they are accompanied by the commentary which his biography will afford. W. F. T.

The conviction here expressed is correct. It holds true not only of Mr. Alden's position, but of every creed. The valuable part of any creed is that which is operative on the life of him who holds the creed with incentives to religion in righteousness. Mr. Alden, a native of Vermont, was graduated at Williams College in 1857, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1860. While in the seminary he made a study of Greek literature, which led to his giving a course of lectures at the Lowell Institute, Boston, in 1863–4, on the "Structure of Paganism." Feeling himself unfitted to be a preacher by reason of an inadequate voice, he has devoted himself to a literary career, and has long been editor of "Harper's Magazine." Besides his recent books, "God in His World" and "A Study of Death" (the latter of which was lately reviewed by The Outlook), he is the author of a poem, "The Ancient Lady of Sorrow" (1872), and, in conjunction with Mr. A. H. Guernsey, of "Harper's Pictorial History of the Great Rebellion." Mr. Alden is a vestryman of the Episcopal church at Metuchen, N. J. One who could imagine his "Study of Death" to be the work of any but a truly Christian thinker would do well to revise his own conception of Christianity. Its dedication to his dying wife reveals, in a way unsurpassed in literature, both the idea of the book and the heart of the man.

1. Which of Professor Adolf Harnack's works would be the most helpful in (a) church history; (b) dogmatic history; (c) Biblical literature and interpretation? Are these fairly easy reading in the German? Where can I get them, and the price? 2. What do you regard the best single-volume German work on New Testament Introduction? Price, and where obtained? Is it translated into English? 3. What do you regard as the central thought and purpose of the Book of Jonah? Has it an essential place in the Scriptural canon? B. A. M.

1 and 2. Harnack's great work is his "History of Dogma," in three volumes. A translation of his "Outlines of the History of Dogma" is published in one volume, at $2.50, by Funk & Wagnalls (New York). We do not know any books of his on the other subjects, or any good single-volume German work on New Testament Introduction. Weiss's "Introduction to the New Testament" is the best, but is in two volumes; an English translation is published by Funk & Wagnalls at $4. Harnack is not very easy reading. For the price of German publications address B. Westermann, New York. 3. The wideness of God's mercy to the penitent—the essential lesson of the Gospel. Its right to be in the canon is incontestable.

What is the method of using the old style and new style in historical dates? I find in English history in the sixteenth and seventeenth century most modern authorities use the old style—e. g., Harper's "Book of Facts"—but in some instances the modernized dates are used. Would the date of the destruction of the Spanish Armada be July 26 or August 6? Which would be more accurate? A. H.

The New Style, or Gregorian Calendar, was introduced in Roman Catholic countries in 1582; in Protestant Germany and Denmark, in 1700; in English lands in 1752. To reduce Old Style to New Style, unless it has been done for you by the book, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries drop ten days; in the eighteenth drop eleven. In Russian dates for the nineteenth century (the Old Style still prevailing in the Greek Church), drop twelve days. The Spanish Armada cast anchor in Calais Roads July 27, O. S., August 6, N. S. Two days later it suffered its decisive defeat. Its destruction was wrought by storms on its homeward voyage.

Please say (1) whether the Pope at the present time has a military or quasi-military "body-guard;" and (2) whether this body-guard exercises the functions of police in Rome outside the Vatican. G. E.

The Pope has such a guard, composed of Swiss, but its duties are limited to the Vatican, since the revolution, which incorporated Rome and the Papal Dominions with Italy in 1870, deprived the Pope of all political power.

Under the ordinary settlement (or hiring) of a pastor in the Congregational denomination, is it or is it not generally understood that the ministry of the pastor, in cases of sickness and death, at funerals of supporters of worship at the particular church, is included, or may the pastor ask for compensation in such ministries as for something outside his contract? X.

In all Protestant denominations, so far as we know, such services are regarded as part of the duty which the minister contracts to perform, and for the performance of which he receives a salary. Such services, however, are never thought of by any good minister as paid for. They are also very freely performed for a multitude of people outside of the church, who contribute nothing to the minister's support.

Please inform me what is the best chronology of the life of Christ, and where to get it. Would like simply the outline of the life in chronological order. W. R. C.

We prefer the one given in Andrews's "Life of Our Lord." Get the latest edition. For a mere chronological chart, we have recommended Kephart's, published by the Revell Company, Chicago, both on rollers and folded, $1.50, $1, and 75 cents.

The "Grave of Bonaparte" was sung many years ago by the Hutchinson family at their concerts, and the music was composed by L. Heath, and was published by Oliver Ditson, of Boston, at that time his music-store being at 135 Washington Street. I have a copy of the song myself, and should think one could now be obtained. C. E. W.

R. E. S.—In a cutting in my scrap-book, "Jesus the Carpenter" is credited to "C. C. Fraser Tytler." M. F. P.

F. H. N.—We may add to the helps already named for your Bible class Henry Ward Beecher's "Bible Studies," or Readings in the Early Books of the Old Testament. Though they are not studies in the higher criticism, they abound in suggestions of great value in ethical and other points.

In Notes and Queries for May 23, in the reply to J. M. E., "sacred" character should read saved character.

C. E. L.—Beside the "good books on pastoral work" recommended to you May 16, put Beecher's "Yale Lectures on Preaching," especially the second series. The three series are now published in one volume for $2 (Fords, Howard & Hulbert, New York).

—Steps are already being taken to celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of Melancthon's birth on February 16, 1897, at his birthplace, Brettin, in Baden. The Grand Duke of Baden has consented to act as patron of the enterprise, which was started and is being actively promoted by Dr. Nicholas Müller, professor of theology in Berlin. The foundation of a Melancthon Museum on the site of the house in which he was born, which is now occupied by a building of modest pretensions, is proposed. The site belongs to the Protestant community of Brettin.

Cook Book Free

Our book of 400 selected receipts by practical housekeepers, for practical housekeepers, will be mailed to any one on receipt of stamp and address.

CLEVELAND BAKING POWDER CO.
83 Fulton Street, New York.

IT CONTAINS:

Soups,	14 receipts	Pies,	18 receipts
Oysters and Fish,	14 "	Desserts,	32 "
Meats,	21 "	Cake,	60 "
Vegetables,	22 "	Breakfast Breads and Cakes,	41 "
Welsh Rarebit, etc.,	5 "	Pickles,	9 "
Entrees,	17 "	Preserves and Jellies	6 "
Salads,	14 "	Beverages,	5 "
Fish and Meat Sauces,	7 "	Candy,	2 "
Puddings,	39 "	For Invalids,	14 "
" Sauces,	10 "	Additional Receipts	50 "

WORTH SENDING FOR.

"One of the best receipt books for everyday use in the kitchen that we have ever seen is that published by the Cleveland Baking Powder Company, New York, and mailed free to those who request it and send stamp.

"It is a pamphlet of 78 pages and contains four hundred selected receipts for soup, fish, meats of all kinds, breakfast breads, biscuit, plain and fancy cake, puddings, dessert, beverages, food for the sick, etc.

"The book also contains specially contributed receipts by Marion Harland, Miss Maria Parloa, Mrs. S. T. Rorer, Mrs. D. A. Lincoln, Mrs. Eliza R. Parker, and nearly fifty other leading teachers of cookery and writers on Domestic Science.

"We advise all our readers to send for a copy. Send address with stamp to Cleveland Baking Powder Co., New York."—Christian Intelligencer.

The Home Club

Some Home Books

For Plain Women Only, by George Fleming (The Merriam Company, New York, $1.25). This book was picked up from the desk by a gentleman who glanced at the title. A look of sorrow settled over his face—he is that rare combination, a successful and sympathetic writer of books. As he laid the book down, he said, "Too bad; it will never be bought. No man would be interested, and no woman acknowledge her need of it." There is hardly a page in the book that has not something wise and true on the subject of dress. Listen: "If I had my way, I would make it penal for a woman to live in a house unprovided by a pier-glass. . . . Can you not ascertain what your general effect may be upon the passing sensitive eye before leaving the shelter of your house? . . . Theodore, in the merciful name of nature, there are no plain women. There are women who dress badly; women who are dull-natured; women who take too much medicine; women who take too little food. But given fresh air, exercise, and the sane, contented mind which follows—given enough looking-glasses, Theodore—above all, large looking-glasses—and the most rudimentary instruction in form and color"—and so Aunt Lavinia proves conclusively there are no plain women. Is Aunt Lavinia quite right about the large mirrors? Are there not times when ignorance is bliss for one's self, though it may not be bliss for one's neighbors? May we not make a mental picture with one's self as the center? Alas! sight would make this impossible to so many thousands!

If there is such a thing as heresy in cooking, then The Spirit of Cookery, by J. L. W. Thudichum, is a heretical book. It is a most valuable book in spite of, or more truly because of, its heresies. The book is "a history of the science, practice, and ethical and medical import of culinary art." As a specimen of its practical value to the housekeeper who looks well to the ways of her household, the author tells us that to reheat meat for the table the cold meat must be heated by pouring boiling water, or gravy heated to the boiling-point, over it, the meat having been placed in a pan or vessel heated to the degree of heat that cooked the meat the first time. This experiment was tried, hot water being poured over some cooked beef that was being made into a stew. The result was much better than when the meat was allowed to simmer slowly through an afternoon. The cooking heresy in the book which will arouse the most comment is that which decries the value of bones in soup-making. We are told, in commenting on a recipe for soup in which bones were to be boiled for seven hours: "We know exactly the result of boiling bones under such circumstances; they lose nothing in weight, yield nothing to water; the result is nil; all the trouble, time, space, fire, etc., are absolutely wasted." The book deserves success, for it deals with the principles of cookery, and the few recipes are so worded as to compel a recognition of the principles on which they are based. (Frederick Warne & Co., New York. $2.) Food Products of the World, by Mary E. Green, M.D. (The Hotel World, Chicago), is a companion book for "The Spirit of Cookery." Together they give the history of the discovery of foods and the evolution of their use in sustaining and increasing the enjoyment of man.

Health in the Home, by E. Marguerite Lindley, is a series of lectures based on the theory which has given Miss Lindley prominence as a teacher of physical culture. The book is published by the author, and sold on subscription only.

The Art of Cookery, by Emma P. Ewing, needs no introduction to the attendants of the Chautauqua summer school, where Mrs. Ewing has made so great a success of the domestic science department. The directions for cooking are simple, and prepared with a view to economy. There are several pages of bills of fare. The book is carefully indexed.

The author of The Feast of Autolycus, Elizabeth Robins Pennell, wonders in her preface at the daring of woman in claiming equality with man. She may equal him in politics, science, and industry, "but in the cultivation and practice of an art which concerns life more seriously, woman has hitherto proved an inferior creature. For centuries the kitchen has been her appointed sphere of action. And yet here, as in the studio and study, she has allowed man to carry off the laurels." The author blames woman's want of discrimination in foods, her indifference to the pleasures of the palate, for her lack of highest success in this her special realm. "The Feast of Autolycus," she tells us, "is rather a guide to the Beauty, the Poetry, that exists in the perfect dish, even as in the masterpiece of a Titian or a Swinburne." The success of marriage, this writer believes, rests largely on the uniformity of taste between husband and wife. "Let man and woman look to it that at table delicious sympathy makes them one, and marriage will cease to be a failure." A delicate taste in food, delicate in selecting, not ignorant in rejecting, this author believes is a preservative of beauty. But, alas! as one turns the pages of this beautiful book, the sad truth is forced upon the reader that to follow its suggestions, alluring, attractive, artistic, one must live in a land where work is unknown, for to live by its principles one must have that priceless treasure—a treasure to-day beyond the reach of wealth—Leisure. The book is valuable, for it presents the ideal, the quality sadly lacking in much of our American housekeeping. (The Merriam Company, New York, $1.25.)

Flowers on the table, and a dish that may be called "A Dish of Sunshine," or a "Study in Green and Red," are possibilities according to the writer of "The Feast of Autolycus." But the sanitary expert would have us remember that these may be served in a house the atmosphere of which is laden with death. The first essential of all housekeeping is a knowledge of sanitary conditions and the intelligence to demand them. How to Drain a House, by George E. Waring, Jr., Street-Cleaning Commissioner of New York, should be in every household library—and in every home where intelligence governs there is a household library. "How to Drain a House" (D. Van Nostrand & Co., New York, $1.25) is a book of practical information for householders. The author places the responsibility of knowledge of sanitary conditions on women. He says: "The drainage system is, however, a trustworthy ally only so long as the woman of the house holds it under close and careful supervision." The principle of healthful living is concisely stated by the author: "Look out well for the health-rate, and the death-rate will lose its significance." The book is illustrated with practical drawings. The text is in clear and forcible English. It is a valuable contribution to a science hidden too often in technicalities that confuse the lay mind.

This century will be known in the ages to come as the century when homes dominated the world's greatest minds. Science and art are the servants of the home. Life and beauty are the products of this age. Beautiful Homes, by Louis H. Gibson (Thomas Y. Crowell, New York, $3), is a study in house-building. The author says in his preface, "There is no good reason for ugliness; it costs no more to make an artistic detail than to make an ugly one. . . . It is a question of direction by a trained artist." The book presents plans for house-building, and details for completing an artistic home. The book is beautiful in itself.

The Marvels of Our Bodily Dwelling, by Mary Wood-Allen, author of "The Man Wonderful in the House Beautiful," is designed for home reading and for schools. The last chapters of the book are devoted to pointing out the evil effects of tobacco, alcohol, opium, and condiments; these are designated as "The Foe of the Household," "The Spicy Visitor," "The Deceitful Friend," "Treacherous Companions."

There has been issued a new edition of The Woman's Club, a Practical Guide and Handbook, by Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller. The book is indispensable to those who are about to form a woman's club. Even the club long established will find this handbook useful. (The United States Book Company, New York.)

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co., New York.

Foreign Bodies in the Throat

The difficulty of removing fish-bones and similar obstructions impacted at the lower end of the œsophagus is well known, and various mechanical measures and appliances have been invented to deal with the difficulty. One of the most simple, however, and, as reported, one of the most effectual, is to administer to the patient a pint of milk, and forty minutes afterwards an emetic of sulphate of zinc. The fluid easily passes the obstruction, and is, of course, rapidly coagulated in the stomach into a more or less solid mass, which, on being ejected, forces the obstruction before it and so effects its removal.—Medical Times.

Is It in the Air?

A little girl has given a new version of the creation, according to an exchange:

"A little girl in the Fourth (Dr. Hall's) Chicago Church has made a valuable contribution to the new woman literature. She told her mamma the story of Adam and Eve. 'Dod, He made Adam, and He put him in a big garden, an' Adam he was so, so lonesome; 'n' then He putted him to sleep, He did; 'n' then He took out his brains and made a woman of the brains, 'n' then Adam he wasn't lonesome no more.'"

Flowers love the Sunlight and always turn to it. The modern housewife learns to love and always turns to it to help her out on "wash day" or any other day when she needs a pure, honest soap which cleanses everything it touches and doesn't injure anything, either fabric or hands.

Sunlight Soap

Less labor
Greater comfort

Lever Bros., Ltd.,
Hudson & Harrison Sts., N.Y.

The Outlook Vacation Fund

The interest in The Outlook Vacation Fund is world-wide. The donations to it have been from all classes of society and from every civilized country. Last fall the following letter was received:

To the Editors of The Outlook:

> It has long been my desire to contribute something to the Vacation Fund for working-girls, and reading in your paper of to-day that no one need be afraid that "the smallest contribution is too small," I feel encouraged to send my offering.
>
> The handkerchief inclosed with this letter shows one of the industries of Paraguay. It was brought from there by a friend who has recently made the journey of 1,200 miles to Asuncion, and is the work of the women of that country. I should like it to be sold for the benefit of Cherry Vale, and think it ought to bring double the price it is worth here—namely, five dollars gold—thus covering the expenses for the vacation of some working-girl.
>
> The Paraguay hammock accompanying it, besides being "a thing of beauty" and an ornament to Cherry Vale, is most restful to the tired, as we South Americans have proved by experience during our seven years' residence in a foreign land. As the missionary is herself, in every sense of the word, a working girl, she knows how an easy corner is appreciated for a few moments' rest; and certainly the joy of Cherry Vale must be its rest. H. M.
>
> 1875 Rodriguez Peña, Buenos Aires.

The handkerchief was photographed in order that our readers might get a faint idea—for it can be but faint—of its exquisite fineness. An offer of five dollars was made for it at once by one of the editors, but it was decided to offer it for sale through the columns of the paper.

The hammock is beautiful. It is made of fine cord tied in a pretty pattern, with a valance with knotted fringe ten inches deep. The hammock is beautiful enough to be hung in a large room and filled with cushions. It is altogether too dainty to be hung under trees. The hammocks at Cherry Vale must be able to withstand the usage of a lot of frolicsome girls, and the ravages of weather. It was decided that the intentions of the giver would best be carried out by selling the hammock. One of the officers of The Outlook Company at once offered fifteen dollars for the hammock. The price was accepted conditionally that no higher price was offered.

The readers of The Outlook are offered this opportunity to buy these two articles, the money received to go into the Fund. The articles will be assigned to the highest bidder on June 20. Announcement will be made of the sale. If no higher bids are received, the prices already offered will be accepted: five dollars for the handkerchief; fifteen dollars for the hammock.

The need for money is very great. This week a house that would accommodate fourteen was refused because the Working-Girls' Vacation Society did not have money enough to equip and maintain it.

The connections The Outlook has established with the Working-Girls' Vacation Society place it in a position where it could use for the benefit of working-girls ten thousand dollars a year. A house should be kept open all winter where sick girls and girls out of work would find a home. This house should be used to train girls who need it, in the arts of home-making.

The opportunities of this Fund are limitless, for it is used for those whose hearts and confidences are opened to tell the needs and point out the remedies for many of the unnecessary burdens borne by the working-girls of a great city.

WORKING-GIRLS' VACATION FUND

Previously acknowledged	$650 14
W. R. H., Minneapolis, Minn	4 00
S. A., Great Barrington, Mass	5 00
S. S. C., Minneapolis, Minn	2 00
The Asacog Club, Brooklyn, N. Y	140 00
Anonymous, Brooklyn, N. Y	5 00
Total	$806 14

For "Tribune" Fresh-Air Fund:

S. A., Great Barrington, Mass	$5 00

In Aid of Armenia

The latest reports from Miss Clara Barton show that the work of relief is being carried on with admirable efficiency. One cable dispatch to the National Armenian Relief Fund says:

> Reports received from four expeditions to-day. Harris, at Marash and Zeitoun, reports that epidemics are under control. Wood, in the Palon district, states that 1,000 cattle are needed for forty villages. Winter, at Carsonjak, has distributed 2,000 garments, 800 bushels of seed, grain, cattle, and tools. Hubbell, at Arabkir, is giving quantities of clothing, bedding, seeds, tools, cattle, and lumber. Fevers are abating, but needs are extreme.
>
> CLARA BARTON.

In a letter to Secretary of State Olney, Miss Barton absolutely denies the rumors that her work has been interfered with by the Turkish authorities. We quote at some length:

> Sir Philip Currie has done and is doing splendid work in facilitating the labors and distributions of the heroic missionaries, the Anglo-American operations through consuls and missionaries, and in a general way our own efforts. But our greatest successes are due to the untiring efforts and sound judgment of our own Legation officers, through whom we are working, and also for the reason that both Palace and Porte have confidence in the singleness of our purpose and the integrity of our personnel. As the Turkish Government is thoroughly convinced that there is no political significance attached to our visit, that we have no sectarian interests to serve, and certainly no racial prejudices, there have been no requests which they have not granted, no suggestions which they have not acted upon.
>
> We have three expeditions in the field, two for general relief work, the third medical. The first, under Dr. Hubbell, is working along a route marked and recognized by the cities of Aintab, Marash, Malatia, and to-day is at Harpoot. The second, under Mr. Wistar, took the course indicated by the cities of Aintab, Gorfa, Diarbekir, and is to-day at Harpoot also. The men of both expeditions have done most of their work outside of the cities, as the cities through which they passed were being cared for by others.
>
> Our medical relief, under Dr. Ira Harris, is now in control in Marash and Zeitoun, where four distinct epidemics are threatening the extermination of the people. A fourth expedition will start this week, ordered and equipped by us, for the interior. This will be a medical relief also, which will divide at Aintab, part of the number going to Marash to assist Dr. Harris, the other part going to the relief of Arabkir, where typhus and dysentery are killing many people.

THE ARMENIAN FUND

Previously acknowledged	$6,911 92
Armenia	100 00
E. S. S., Washington, D. C	2 00
A Friend, Vernon, N. Y	2 00
Methodist Episcopal Church, Sidney, N. Y	36 25
S. M. C. L	5 00
Mrs. J. W. D., Colton, Cal	10 00
W. H. B., Salem, Ia	1 00
Anonymous, Pomona, Cal	10 00
R. A. B., New Castle, Pa	15 00
Current Topics Club, North Greenfield, Wis	5 00
Young People's Society Christian Endeavor, First Congregational Church, Santa Barbara, Cal	4 00
Total	$7,102 17

Solid Silverware, Tea Sets, Dinner Services, Dessert Pieces, Forks, and Spoons

The best buyers of silverware are those who, not misled by novel examples of over decoration, choose good forms, suitably ornamented, that will rightly be deemed beautiful and in good taste, whether judged by the best standards of to-day, of fifty years ago, or of fifty years hence. This house endeavors always to meet the wants of buyers of this class.

THEODORE B. STARR

206 Fifth Ave., Madison Square
New York

Keeping Up with the Times in methods of Sunday-school work requires, in these days, a close reading of The Sunday School Times.

Tested methods for the superintendent and teacher are given helpful publicity in two new departments of that paper, as in no other publication.

You can have The Sunday School Times sent to your own address every week until January 1, 1897, for 50 cents—about half price. Try it!

If you will mention this paper when sending your subscription, we will mail to you a free copy of Prof. M. B. Riddle's "Outline Harmony of the Gospels" to fold within your Bible.

JOHN D. WATTLES & CO.
1031 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Ever ready, palatable hot or cold.

Choicest beans, juicy meat. Three sizes.

Send 6c for sample can.

VAN CAMP PACKING CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A KENTUCKY CARDINAL," "AFTERMATH," "JOHN GRAY," ETC.

SUMMER IN ARCADY

A Tale of Nature

BY JAMES LANE ALLEN

Author of "A Kentucky Cardinal," "Aftermath," "The Blue Grass Region of Kentucky," "John Gray," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

"The close communion and sympathy with Nature, and the noble interpretation of her wayward moods and changing phases, manifested in 'A Kentucky Cardinal' and 'Aftermath,' find nobler, sweeter, ampler expression in the luminous, sunlit, sun-flushed pages of his new story."

By Charlotte M. Yonge

The Release; or, Caroline's French Kindred

By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "Daisy Chain," "The Long Vacation," etc., etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

By the Author of "John and I"

The Dream-Charlotte

A Story of Echoes. By M. BETHAM EDWARDS, Author of "John and I" "Romance of Dijon," "Dr. Jacob," "Kitty," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

BY ÉMILE ZOLA

ROME

BY EMILE ZOLA

Author of "Lourdes," "La Débacle," "Doctor Pascal," etc. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. 2 vols., 16mo, cloth, $2.00.

With "Lourdes" M. Zola began a series of three books, dealing with the world and the supernatural. "Rome" forms the second volume of this trilogy, which will conclude with "Paris." All those who have read "Lourdes"—and they are legion—will naturally desire to peruse "Rome," in which the author carries the hero of his former work to the Eternal City, and in a series of graphic pictures portrays the Papal Court of the present day and discusses its policy and its aspirations.

John La Farge, Artist and Writer

By CECILIA WAERN. With 36 Illustrations, including 6 colored plates. Imperial 8vo, paper cover, $1.25. The Portfolio for April.

The Interpretation of Literature

A Discussion of Literary Principles and their Application

By W. H. CRAWSHAW, A.M., Professor of English Literature in Colgate University. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

BY F. MARION CRAWFORD

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON

BY F. MARION CRAWFORD

Author of "Saracinesca," "Pietro Ghisleri," "Don Orsini," "Casa Braccio," etc. With 24 full-page illustrations by A. Forestier. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"It is not only one of the most enjoyable novels that Mr. Crawford has ever written, but it is a novel that will make people think."—Boston Beacon.

The Daughter of a Stoic

By CORNELIA ATWOOD PRATT. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

The Pilgrim and Other Poems

By SOPHIE JEWETT (Ellen Burroughs). 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

THE MODERN READER'S BIBLE

A Series of Books from the Sacred Scriptures Presented in Modern Literary Form. Each number of the Series edited, with an introduction, by RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A. (Camb.), Ph.D. (Penn.), Professor of Literature in English in the University of Chicago.

THE BOOK OF JOB. A Dramatic Poem in which are embodied Varying Solutions of the Mystery of Life. Small 18mo, cloth, 50 cents.

ALREADY ISSUED

THE PROVERBS ECCLESIASTICUS ECCLESIASTES—WISDOM OF SOLOMON

Riverside Letters

A Continuation of "Letters to Marco." By GEORGE D. LESLIE, R.A., Author of "Our River." With Illustrations by the Author. 8vo, cloth, pp. xvi.+256. $2.00.

Poems by Cecil Frances Alexander (C.F.A.).

Edited, with a Preface, by WILLIAM ALEXANDER, D.D. (Oxon.), LL.D. (Dublin), D.C.L. (Oxon.), Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of all Ireland. With Portrait. 12mo, cloth, pp. xliii.+463. $2.00.

The Great Didactic of John Amos Comenius

Now for the first time Englished. With Introductions, Biographical and Historical, by M. W. KEATINGE, B.A., late Exhibitioner of Exeter College, Oxford. With Portrait. 8vo, cloth, pp. 468. $2.00, net.

An Ethical Movement

A Volume of Lectures. By W. L. SHELDON, Lecturer of the Ethical Society of St. Louis. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

Studies in Judaism

By S. SCHECHTER, Reader in Talmudic in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.75.

Doctrine of the Incarnation

By ROBERT L. OTTLEY, M.A., of S. M. Magdalen College and Principal of the Pusey House.

To the Council of Nicea. To the Present Day

2 vols. 8vo, cloth, pp. (Vol. I.) xii.+324; (Vol. II.) x.+366. $3.25, net.

Second Edition.

The Principles of Sociology

An Analysis of the Phenomena of Association and of Social Organization. By FRANKLIN HENRY GIDDINGS, M.A., Professor of Sociology in Columbia University in the City of New York. 8vo, cloth, $3.00, net. (Columbia University Press.)

The School of Plato: its Origin, Development, and Revival under the Roman Empire

By F. W. BUSSELL, B.D., B. Mus., Fellow and Tutor of B. N. C., Oxford. 8vo, cloth, pp. xvi.+346. $2.75, net.

AN IMPORTANT NEW BOOK OF TRAVEL AND EXPLORATION

THROUGH JUNGLE AND DESERT

TRAVELS IN EASTERN AFRICA

By WILLIAM ASTOR CHANLER, A.M. (Harv.), F.R.G.S., Honorary Member of the Imperial and Royal Geographical Society of Vienna. With numerous Illustrations from Photographs taken by the Author, and Maps. 8vo, cloth, $5.00.

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York

SCRIBNER'S NEW BOOKS FOR SUMMER READING

LITTLE RIVERS. By HENRY VAN DYKE. Fourth Edition. Fully Illustrated. 12mo, $2.00.

"What makes his book so dear to its reader? What makes it awaken the best we contain? Its naturalness: its truthfulness: its union of soul and body with nature and her freely offered gifts."—New York Times.

HOW TO KNOW THE WILD FLOWERS. By Mrs. WILLIAM STARR DANA. New Edition, revised and enlarged. With 152 Illustrations by Marion Satterlee. 12mo, $1.75, net. By the same Author: According to Season. Talks about the Flowers in the order of their appearance in the Woods and Fields. 16mo, 75 cents.

"The two constitute the most truly delightful studies of nature which have made their appearance in recent years."—Boston Advertiser

THE BIRD'S CALENDAR. By H. E. PARKHURST. With 24 Illustrations. 12mo, $1.50, net.

"A charming book. It contains a year's study and observation, the birds for each month being enumerated and described."—Outlook.

OUR COMMON BIRDS AND HOW TO KNOW THEM. By J. B. GRANT. Twelfth Thousand. Fully Illustrated. Oblong 16mo, $1.50, net.

"With the fine illustrations and the simple text there is no excuse for the lover of birds to remain in ignorance of all the information he needs."—Boston Sat. Eve. Gazette.

NEW NOVELS AND SHORT STORIES

Weir of Hermiston. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. 12mo, $1.50.

Cinderella, and Other Stories. By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS. 12mo, $1.00.

Sunrise Stories. A Glance at the Literature of Japan. By ROGER RIORDAN and TOZO TAKAYANAGI. 12mo, $1.50.

A Lady of Quality. By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT. 12mo, $1.50.

Comedies of Courtship. BY ANTHONY HOPE. UNIFORM with Robert Grant's "The Bachelor's Christmas." 12mo, $1.50.

Amos Judd. By J. A. MITCHELL, Editor of Life. Fourth Edition. (Ivory Series.) 16mo, 75 cents.

WOMEN OF COLONIAL AND REVOLUTIONARY TIMES

Eliza Pinckney. By HARRIOTT HARRY RAVENEL, great-great-granddaughter of Mrs. Pinckney. 12mo, $1.25. Just Issued.

Dolly Madison. By MAUD WILDER GOODWIN. 12mo, $1.25.

Margaret Winthrop. By ALICE MORSE EARLE. 12mo, $1.25.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Ave., New York

SOME SPRING BOOKS

Armenian Poems

Rendered into English Verse by ALICE STONE BLACKWELL. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"Interesting as revealing to a hitherto unequaled extent the poetic genius and character of this betrayed and suffering people."—Christian Register.

Life of Jesus

By ERNEST RENAN, author of "History of the People of Israel," "The Future of Science." Translation newly revised from the Twenty-third and final edition. 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti

His Family Letters. With a Memoir by WILLIAM MICHAEL ROSSETTI. Portraits. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $6.50.

Vol. I. Memoir. Vol. II. Family Letters.

With introductory notes by W. M. Rossetti. With ten portraits by D. G. Rossetti of himself and other members of the family.

Handbook of Arctic Discoveries

By A. W. GREELY, Brigadier-General United States Army. 16mo, cloth, gilt, $1.00.

New Volumes of the Keynotes Series

Nobody's Fault. By NETTA SYRETT.

Platonic Affections. By JOHN SMITH.

Title-pages by Aubrey Beardsley. Each, 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

Some Modern Heretics

By CORA MAYNARD. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

An unusually well-conceived and well-executed story.

Effie Hetherington

By ROBERT BUCHANAN, author of "The Shadow of the Sword." 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"Near to being masterly."—Prov. Journal.

"Vivid and living all through . . . the strength manifested is equaled only by the tenderness . . . will search all hearts."—Boston Courier.

The Religion of Hope

By PHILIP S. MOXOM, author of "The Aim of Life," "From Jerusalem to Nicæa." 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

"We cannot have too much of this preaching."—Phila. American.

Cavalry in the Waterloo Campaign

By Lieut.-General EVELYN WOOD, V.C., etc. Forming the third volume in the "Pall Mall Magazine Library." With portraits, maps, and plans. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"Spirited and vividly written little book."—London News.

Six Modern Women

Psychological Sketches. By LAURA MARHOLM HANSSON. Translated from the German by Hermione Ramsden. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"A most suggestive and thought-stimulating book, that reflects the highest credit on her as a woman and a thinker; a book to be earnestly recommended to the thoughtful study of the 'new woman,' and to earnest people generally."—Saturday Evening Gazette.

"Strong, healthy, and truly womanly. It urges to a higher individuality, and inspires toward the most worthy dignity to which modern women can attain.—N. Y. Times.

"A thoughtful, earnest writer who has looked further into woman's nature than most of her sex."—Commercial Advertiser.

"A keen, interesting study."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Modern French Literature

By BENJAMIN W. WELLS, Ph.D., author of "Modern German Literature." 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Public Opinion says of "Modern German Literature:" "An interesting and valuable contribution to our accounts of German Literature."

ROBERTS BROS., Publishers, Boston

When calling, please ask for Mr. Grant.

I Can Save You Money

on the books you buy. It is my business to find out what you want in the book line, and make your interest my interest. I have slips showing how you can buy books at from me. Send me ten cents, and I will mail them to you.

LIBERAL DISCOUNTS

F. E. GRANT
23 West 42d St., New York City

Seventieth Anniversary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society

The seventieth anniversary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society will be held in the Center Church, New Haven, Conn., (the Rev. Newman Smyth, D.D., pastor), opening Tuesday evening, June 2. Major-General O. O. Howard will preside, the Rev. Daniel Merriman, of Worcester, will preach the annual sermon Tuesday evening, and salutations will be offered by the pastor of the church and President Dwight, of Yale University, to which General Howard will respond.

Wednesday and Thursday will be devoted to papers by the Secretaries; anniversary of the Woman's Department; reports from the Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York, and Michigan Auxiliaries; anniversaries of the Church Building Society, Sunday-School and Publishing Society, Education Society; and to addresses from distinguished speakers from different parts of the country, including Doctors Fitch, of Buffalo; Beach. of Minneapolis; Fisher, of New Haven; Lyman, of Brooklyn; Patton, of Minnesota; Nutting, of Rhode Island; Cordley, of the Kansas Band; the Rev. Ephraim Adams, of the Iowa Band; President Penrose, of the Washington Band; Doctors Daniels and Board, of the American Board and the American Missionary Association; Dr. Whittlesey, of the Ministerial Relief Association: by the Superintendents of the Scandinavian Department, California, Indiana, Washington, Black Hills, Colorado, and Utah; also from Mrs. H. S. Caswell. Mrs. H. S. Heinzelman, of Indiana, Miss Caroline A. Potter, of California, the Rev. Dora-Read Barber, of Oregon, Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, of New York, and Field Secretaries Shelton and Puddefoot.

The New England Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association will pass over their railroads for one-third fare in returning all certified attendants on the meeting who paid full fare in going. N. B.—Certificates are required in all cases to secure this reduction. They are not kept at all stations. If the ticket agent at a local station is not supplied with certificates, he can inform the delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained. In such case the delegate should purchase a local ticket to such station and there take up his certificate and through ticket to place of meeting. The certificates, duly filled in on both sides, are good within three days, Sunday excepted, after the adjournment of the meeting. Delegates and others availing of the reduction in fare should present themselves at the office for certificates and tickets at least thirty minutes before departure of trains.

Hotels and Boarding-Houses.—$4 per day: New Haven House. $3 per day: Majestic Hotel. $2 per day: Elliot House, the Westmoreland, the Tremont, Gardes's Hotel. Winthrop House. $1 per day. Sea View Hotel, Savin Rock, twenty minutes' ride by electric car. $1.50 per day (one in a room); $1 per day (two in a room); will accommodate 200.

Boarding-Houses.—$2 per day: Mrs. Smith, 316 Crown St. $1.50 per day: Grove Hall, 83 Grove St.; Mrs. George Thompson. 94 York Square; Mrs. Herrick, 92 York Square; Mrs. C. K. Nichols, 90 Whalley Ave.; Mrs. Lombard, 74 Lake Place; Mrs. Forbes, 339 Orange St.; Mrs. Cameron, 253 Crown St.; Mrs. Briggs, 636 State St.; Mrs. Lyon, 552 Chapel St.; Mrs. Fowler, 111 Edgewood Ave.; Mrs. E. S. Burt, 61 Prospect St.; Mrs. Beckwith, 108 Howe St.; Mrs. Hayden, 514 Chapel St.; Mrs. Cowles, 16 Olive St.; Mrs. Haight, 99 Howe St.; Mrs. H. W. Thomson, 145 Edward St. (two in a room); Mrs. Burwell, 123 Park St.; Mrs. Blot, 136 College St.

$1 per day: Mrs. M. H. Buckingham, 557 Howard Ave, (two in a room); Mrs. H. A. Street, 397 Temple St. (for one), meals near; Mrs. J. A. Gillette, 163 York St., without board; Mrs. Thompson, 438 Elm St. (for two). Mrs. F. A. Jones, 1 Howe St., 50 cents a day, for one, meals next door; 75 cents for two. Divinity Hall, for men only, without board, will accommodate 100, 75 cents a person.

Persons desiring further information about boarding-house accommodations may address the Rev. Newman Smyth, D.D., Chairman of Committee, and their inquiries will receive attention.

History for Ready Reference
and Topical Reading
IN FIVE IMPERIAL VOLUMES
By J. N. LARNED, Ex-Pres. Am. Library Ass'n.
☞ Giving History on All Topics in the Exact Words of the Historians Themselves

This work contains the choicest selections, upon thousands of topics, from those historians whose writings have been accorded the highest place by the common consent of mankind.

It will answer more questions in History, more authoritatively, and with greater excellence of literary expression, than any other book in the world, and that, too, with the greatest economy of time.

It is in itself a Library of History, and it represents, as does no other work in the English language, the Literature of History.

Thus it has the fascination, the interest, and, so to speak, the flavor, as possessed by the writings of the best historians, biographers, and specialists. And "what we may call the historic sense is everywhere evinced in the analysis of subjects, in the choice and arrangement of topics, and in the relative fullness of the treatment of them."

Its character and value are attested by the following from myriads of testimonials:—

"I turn to it first for an answer to any historical question, and have not yet been disappointed in my search"
—Pres. DAVID T. HILL, Rochester University.

"I had decided that two encyclopædias and two dictionaries would answer my requirements for works of reference, but this work . . . occupies a field not covered by other works of reference."—Hon. W. P. WHITEHOUSE, Supreme Judicial Court, Me.

"I bought it at sight, and now, on examination, I think it the best work of the kind in the language."—Hon. JOHN W. ROWELL, Supreme Court of Vermont.

"It lengthens life and makes life richer to have the use of such a valuable work."—Prof. EDWARD NORTH, Hamilton College.

"We welcome and commend these elegant volumes without qualification."—Ex-Pres. HAYDEN, Western Reserve College.

"I bought it at sight, and consider its value far beyond the cost."—Rev. WARD PLATT, Sup't Instruction, Silver Lake Assembly.

Sent, carriage free, to responsible subscribers, on easy payments. Send for circular giving full information. Solicitors Employed.

THE C. A. NICHOLS CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass.

Woman's peace of mind is not improved by that feeling of corset discomfort. She need not have it—the R & G corset does not produce it. It supports and beautifies the form without undue compression of the parts.

*Price, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00, $2.50.
If your dealer does not carry it in stock, write
R. & G. Mfg. Co., 361 Broadway, New York.*

READY MAY 29

THE CENTURY FOR JUNE

Timely Articles
Beautiful Illustrations
Good Stories

Humor and Pathos of Presidential Conventions

By JOSEPH B. BISHOP

The Beginning of Nominating Conventions (1831)—Clay's Disappointment and Wrath—The First "Dark Horse"—Webster's Hopeless Quest—Lincoln's Confidence of Renomination—Blaine and Sherman in Defeat—Modern "Stampede" Tactics, etc.

"Mr. Keegan's Elopement"

A Story of Madeira.

By WINSTON CHURCHILL

Illustrated by B. West Clinedinst.

Notes on City Government in St. Louis

By DR. ALBERT SHAW

Author of "Municipal Government in Great Britain."

"St. Louis is the most satisfactory exponent of what may be called the distinctively American system of city government that the country affords on any similar scheme of magnitude."

How St. Louis Achieved Home Rule—The Municipal Parliament—How St. Louis Achieved Good Streets—Housing the People—Garbage as a Source of Wealth, etc., etc.

"Sayings and Doings of the Todds"

A Story of New York.

By VIOLA ROSEBORO'

The Story of the Boers

By JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

In the second of Mr. Bryce's papers on "Impressions of South Africa,"—what a prominent English politician and man of letters saw on a recent trip to the Transvaal.

Sargent and his Painting

By WILLIAM A. COFFIN

With 11 Illustrations.

Mr. Sargent's decorations in the Boston Public Library, his portrait of Joseph Jefferson, etc.—two pictures engraved by Cole.

The Invasion of Russia

In PROFESSOR SLOANE'S LIFE OF NAPOLEON

With 14 Illustrations.

The Alhambra

A Summer Trip to Spain.

By ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL

Illustrated by Joseph Pennell.

Chapters of

"Sir George Tressady"

"The Novel of the Year"

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD

and

"The Harshaw Bride"

By MARY HALLOCK FOOTE

Editorials on

Gold the Money of Civilization
The Unavailability of Trimmers
A Duty of Englishmen to America

Open Letters, In Lighter Vein, etc., etc.

Sold Everywhere. 35 Cents.

PUBLISHED BY

THE CENTURY CO., N.Y.

D. Appleton & Co.'s New Books

Wages and Capital

An Examination of the Wages Fund Doctrine. By F. A. TAUSSIG, Professor of Political Economy in Harvard University, author of "Tariff History of the United States" and "The Silver Situation in the United States." 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Prof. Taussig examines the relations of capital to wages, and concludes that wages are paid from capital, but not from a predetermined fund of capital. He examines and rejects the doctrine that wages are paid from the laborer's own product. The bearing of this general reasoning on practical problems, such as strikes and trades-unions, and on general economic theory, is then considered. In the second part of the book, the literary history of the wages fund doctrine and of the discussion of wages and capital is followed in detail.

This important and searching contribution to economic theory will have a wide-reaching effect on the development of political economy in the future, and will be indispensable for all who teach or investigate general economic theory.

His Honour, and a Lady

By Mrs. EVERARD COTES (Sara Jeannette Duncan), author of "A Social Departure," "Vernon's Aunt," etc. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

This brilliant picture of Anglo-Indian social and political life represents the author's ripest and most successful work. Her originality and quickness of observation have kept her from following a beaten track, while her unfading humor will prove a constant pleasure to the reader. An adroit study of character and keen analysis of motives are features of a novel which shows an advance in literary workmanship, and secures for the author a high rank among contemporary writers of fiction.

False Coin or True?

By F. F. MONTRÉSOR, author of "The One who Looked On," "Into the Highways and Hedges," etc. 16mo. Cloth, $1.25.

"Miss Montrésor is a writer with several distinct qualities. She does not follow beaten paths. She is distinctly original, and at the same time she does not fall into the ways of our typical modern original writers. . . . The views she gives of her characters are from the inside rather than from the outside, and she makes us feel with them and see them as they are. . . . We feel better for knowing her people."—Milwaukee Journal.

The Picture of Las Cruces

By CHRISTIAN REID, author of "The Land of the Sun," "The Land of the Sky," etc. No. 193, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The picturesque and dramatic romance of Mexico which this successful author has written will take a high place among the American fiction of the day.

BOOKS FOR SUMMER

Handbook of Birds of Eastern North America. With Keys to the Species; Descriptions of their Plumages, Nests, etc.; their Distribution and Migrations. By FRANK M. CHAPMAN, Assistant Curator of Mammalogy and Ornithology, American Museum of Natural History. With nearly 200 Illustrations. Third Edition. 12mo. Library Edition, cloth, $3.00; Pocket Edition, flexible morocco, $3.50.

"Far and away the best book that has appeared in this or any other country for many years: it is easily first, and with a long interval among numerous recent competitors for public favor. . . . In its own field it will stand for an indefinite period without a possible rival."—N. Y. Evening Post.

"A book that will easily take a leading place among the standard and classical treatises of the day, and it justly merits every particle of success that, beyond all doubt, is in store for it."—N. Y. Nidiologist.

Familiar Flowers of Field and Garden. By F. SCHUYLER MATHEWS. Illustrated with 200 Drawings by the Author. Third Edition. 12mo. Library Edition, cloth, $1.75; Pocket Edition, flexible morocco, $2.25.

"A book of much value and interest, admirably arranged for the student and the lover of flowers. . . . The text is full of compact information, well selected and interestingly presented. . . . A most attractive handbook of its kind."—New York Sun.

"A delightful book, and very useful. Its language is plain and familiar, and the illustrations are dainty works of art. It is just the book for those who want to be familiar with the well-known flowers."—Newark Advertiser.

READY SHORTLY

Familiar Trees and their Leaves. By F. SCHUYLER MATHEWS, author of "Familiar Flowers of Field and Garden," "The Beautiful Flower Garden," etc. Illustrated with over 200 Drawings from Nature by the Author. 12mo. Cloth, $1.75.

A book for the summer months, of great interest to those who love our familiar trees and wish to become better acquainted with them. Over 200 are accurately described in simple language. The drawings, taken directly from Nature, preserve the life and character of every leaf with perfect accuracy. All types are presented, whether common or exceptional, and full explanations are given.

The book is characterized by a careful avoidance of technical terms, and an independent principle of observation, only at times correspondent with that of the botanist. Not only is the botanical name and habitat of the tree given according to the highest authority, but the character and coloring of its leafage are recorded precisely as the observer is likely to be impressed by them.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO.
72 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

Summer Reading

BIOGRAPHY

The Life and Letters of Oliver Wendell Holmes

By JOHN T. MORSE, JR. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 2 vols., crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

"The work is, all in all, the best of the several biographies of American men of letters that have appeared in recent years. Taken together, the Memoir and the Letters form a complete and most engaging piece of literary portraiture."—The Dial, Chicago.

Bayard Taylor

By ALBERT H. SMYTH. With Portrait. 16mo, $1.25.

"An admirable addition to an interesting series."—The Outlook, New York.

Joan of Arc

By FRANCIS C. LOWELL. With Maps. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

"The story is one of the most thrilling, pathetic, and pitiful in all history. Mr. Lowell tells it in a manner and style which leave nothing to be desired."—Boston Advertiser.

OUT-DOOR BOOKS

Bradford Torrey

SPRING NOTES FROM TENNESSEE. 16mo, $1.25.
A RAMBLER'S LEASE. 16mo, $1.25.
BIRDS IN THE BUSH. 16mo, $1.25.
THE FOOT-PATH WAY. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.
A FLORIDA SKETCH-BOOK. 16mo, $1.25.

"He is not merely a philosopher and a sayer of happy things. He observes Nature keenly as well as sympathetically."—The Auk.

Olive Thorne Miller

FOUR-HANDED FOLK. 16mo, $1.25.

A book about such home pets as the kinkajou, "living balls," the lemur, marmosets, chimpanzee, the ocelot, and various kinds of monkey.

BIRD-WAYS. 16mo, $1.25.
IN NESTING-TIME. 16mo, $1.25.
LITTLE BROTHERS OF THE AIR. 16mo, $1.25.
A BIRD-LOVER IN THE WEST. 16mo, $1.25.

"Among the many agreeable studies of bird life and bird character, none have been more charming than those from the pen of Olive Thorne Miller."—Christian Union, New York.

Rowland E. Robinson

IN NEW ENGLAND FIELDS AND WOODS. 16mo, $1.25.

"We feel no hesitation in advising both those who love Nature and those who would learn how to love her to possess themselves of these charming sketches."—The Nation, New York.

NEW FICTION

Tom Grogan

By F. HOPKINSON SMITH. Illustrated by C. S. REINHART. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

"A stirring, thrilling, dramatic story.—Mail and Express, New York.

A Singular Life

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. $1.25.

"Miss Phelps is satisfied with nothing less than the best—in life, in love, and in religion."—London Christian World.

A Gentleman Vagabond and Some Others

By F. HOPKINSON SMITH. $1.25.

"Delightful reading."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Parson's Proxy

A very interesting story, of decided originality, by KATE W. HAMILTON. $1.25.

Pirate Gold

A capital story of Boston in the middle of this century, by F. J. STIMSON ("J. S. of Dale"). $1.25.

The Life of Nancy

Exquisite short stories, by SARAH ORNE JEWETT. $1.25.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston
11 EAST 17TH STREET, NEW YORK.

NEW BOOKS

PRINCIPLES OF PHYSICS. A Text-Book for High Schools and Colleges. By A. P. GAGE, of the English High School, Boston. Illustrated. 634 pages. $1.45.

SELECTIONS FROM POEMS OF KEATS. Edited by Professor ARLO BATES, Mass. Institute of Technology. 302 pages. $1.10. Athenæum Press Series.

MACAULAY'S ESSAY ON MILTON. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by H. A. SMITH, Instructor in English in Yale University. 32 pages. 30 cents.

OUTLINE OF THE PHILOSOPHY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. By GREENOUGH WHITE, Professor in the University of the South. 266 pages. $1.10.

PRINCIPLES OF ARGUMENTATION. By Professor G. P. BAKER, of Harvard University. 414 pages. $1.25.

POLITICAL ECONOMY. For High Schools and Academies. By R. E. THOMPSON, President of the Central High School, Philadelphia. 108 pages. 55 cents.

INDUCTIVE LOGIC. By W. G. BALLANTINE, President of Oberlin College. 174 pages. 90 cents.

RESPONSIVE READINGS. Selected from the Bible and arranged under Subjects for Common Worship. By HENRY VAN DYKE, D.D. 317 pages. 85 cents.

HOW WE ARE GOVERNED. By ANNA L. DAWES. 423 pages. $1.15. Revised edition of a standard book.

MONEY AND BANKING. Illustrated by American History. By HORACE WHITE. 488 pages. $1.50.

SELECTIONS FROM EPICTETUS. Long's Translation. Edited by EDWIN GINN. 240 pages. 60 cents. Also issued in pocket edition, with flexible leather covers. Classics for Children.

WHITE'S NATURAL HISTORY of SELBORNE. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by E. S. MORSE, Peabody Academy of Science, Salem, Mass. 251 pages. 60 cents. Classics for Children.

SOUTHEY'S LIFE OF NELSON. Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by ALBERT F. BLAISDELL. 242 pages. 60 cents. Classics for Children.

ELEMENTS OF BOTANY. By J. Y. BERGEN, Instructor in Biology in the English High School, Boston. 332 pages. Fully illustrated. $1.20.

CHEMICAL EXPERIMENTS. General and Analytical. By R. P. WILLIAMS, of the English High School, Boston. Boards. 212 pages. Fully illustrated. 60 cents.

The above publications may be ordered of all booksellers, or will be sent by the Publishers, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States on receipt of price.

GINN & COMPANY
PUBLISHERS
Boston New York Chicago Atlanta

In AMERICAN HOMES and Summer Resorts

How often the "Sunday evening sing" has to be stopped for want of books!

Hymns of Eventide, a booklet of 30 pages, gives choice and favorite hymns and tunes. A dozen for a family, or a hundred for a family hotel, secures pleasant Sunday evenings around the piano. 10 cts. each; $1.00 per dozen; 50 copies, $3.50; 100 copies, $5.00.

FORDS, HOWARD, & HULBERT
47 E. 10th St., N. Y.

PATRIOTISM IN SONG

A pamphlet of 16 pages containing new patriotic songs especially adapted to the celebration of our National Birthday by Churches, Sunday-Schools, Public Schools, and all patriotic orders. 100,000 copies placed in Public Schools of Phila. Endorsed by Dr. Edward Brooks, Supt. Public Schools, Phila., and representative clergymen. "They abound with inspiring patriotic sentiment." Sample by mail 5c.; $4.00 per 100, at bookstores or
Rev. John Lloyd Jones, 147 N. 10th St., Phila.

FREE Cut this out and send to-day for free catalogue $2.75 buys natural finish Baby Carriage with plated steel wheels, axle, springs, one piece bent handle. 3 years guarantee. Carriages sent on 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL. BUY FROM FACTORY & SAVE DEALERS' PROFITS. OXFORD MDSE. CO., 340 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY

Hamilton W. Mabie

ESSAYS ON NATURE AND CULTURE

A series of essays by HAMILTON W. MABIE. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25. (Just published to-day.)

OTHER BOOKS BY MR. MABIE.

My Study Fire. First Series. My Study Fire. Second Series. Under the Trees and Elsewhere. Short Studies in Literature. Essays in Literary Interpretation.

New Editions, each with three Illustrations in photogravure, in dainty binding. 16mo, cloth, gilt tops, per volume, $1.50.

Ian Maclaren

THE MIND OF THE MASTER

By the Rev. JOHN WATSON (Ian Maclaren). 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"The secret of the sweetness of this work is, we think, that it springs from the heart, and not (as is the case with so much of the 'religious' literature of the day) from the intellect. These studies are able expositions of truth, and there is a subtle charm of expression in them that wins and holds the reader's attention throughout. They should be heartily appreciated by thoughtful seekers after spiritual truth."—Observer.

OTHER BOOKS BY IAN MACLAREN

"Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," "In the Days of Auld Lang Syne," "The Upper Room," etc., etc.

Edmund Gosse

CRITICAL KIT-KATS

A Series of Literary Essays. By EDMUND GOSSE, author of "Gossip in a Library," "Questions at Issue," etc., etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

CONTENTS.—1. The Sonnets from the Portuguese; 2. Keats in 1894; 3. Thomas Lovell Beddoes; 4. Edward Fitz-Gerald; 5. Walt Whitman; 6. Tolstoï; 7. Christina Rossetti; 8. Lord de Tabley; 9. Toru Dutt; 10. The Short Stories of M. Zola; 11. M. de Heredia; 12. Walter Pater; 13. Robert Louis Stevenson.

Also by Mr. Gosse: "From Shakespeare to Pope." 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

DODD, MEAD & CO.
5th Ave. and 21st St., N. Y.

FOR SUMMER TRAVELERS

The Legends of the Rhine

By H. A. GUERBER

Author of "Myths of Northern Lands," &c.
1 volume. 12mo, cloth. Illus. Price, $2.00.

"This is a legendary guide to the Rhine."—N. Y. Times.

"If I were contemplating a trip abroad I would take this collective of Legends."—N. Y. Herald.

⁂ For sale by booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers
156 Fifth Ave., New York

FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Gospel Hymns, 1 to 6, for Devotional Meetings. Excelsior Music Edition, 739 Hymns, $75 per 100.
Gospel Choir No. 2. $40 per 100.
Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School. $30 per 100.
Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

A Popular Edition of THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE HISTORY, in a beautiful, substantial, and cheap form, has just issued from the press of The Henry O. Shepard Co., 212-214 Monroe St., Chicago. A grand, good book for the reader and a magnificently profitable one for the agent. Send for information.

THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY Co
CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SOLE MAKERS OF THE "BLYMYER" BELLS
FOR CHURCH SCHOOL. FIRE ALARM &c
Catalogue with 2500 testimonials. Prices and terms FREE.

If you want a hymn-book for use in Church or Sunday-School

write to us about it.

The Plymouth Hymnal, edited by Lyman Abbott, with the co-operation of Charles H. Morse and Herbert Vaughan Abbott, and The Plymouth Sunday-School Hymnal, edited by Thos. G. Shearman and Walton N. Ellis, are now being used with much acceptance in many churches and Sunday-schools throughout the country.

Specimen pages of either book will be sent free to any address on application, and a free (returnable) copy will be sent to any pastor, choirmaster, or superintendent, for examination with a view to introduction.

THE OUTLOOK CO.
13 Astor Place New York

Flying Along

You'll never know all the delightful spring and action of the perfect bicycle tire unless your wheel is fitted with

Hartford SINGLE TUBE Tires

THE STANDARD SINGLE-TUBES

Easy to have Hartford Tires on any bicycle. All you need do is insist, and the bicycle dealer will furnish them.

The Original Single-Tubes.
Cost Most. Worth Most.

THE HARTFORD RUBBER WORKS CO.
HARTFORD, CONN.
NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

How to Disinfect.

We desire to mail you free, a valuable illustrated book prepared at great expense. Simple directions on disinfecting in cases of contagious diseases and in everyday life—sinks, sewers, etc. Send your address.

"Sanitas" Co. Ld., 636 West 55th St., N. Y.

The Business World

The Spanish Tobacco Edict

The prohibition of the export of tobacco from Cuba will have a serious effect on the business of American importers, and will particularly injure the Key West tobacco industry. Efforts are being made to procure an extension of the time at the end of which the order takes effect, but there is little reason to expect success. Only ten days were given to remove stock already purchased. General Weyler explains his action by stating that the destruction of tobacco-fields by the insurgents has so reduced the stock of leaf tobacco in Havana that the Cuban factories will soon have to shut down and drive 15,000 cigar-makers out of work, leaving their families helpless. Large quantities of the tobacco now in Havana belong to American manufacturers, and it is urged here that the edict practically confiscates this tobacco. Rumors as to the action of our State Department in the way of remonstrance are as yet unconfirmed. Some papers talk rather wildly of retaliation. It is feared that in time many American cigar-makers may be thrown out of work, though there are large stocks of Cuban tobacco now in this country, enough to supply the demand for the immediate present. Last year the United States imported over twenty million pounds of leaf tobacco from Cuba, valued at about $7,250,000.

Trade and Stocks

The dullness of the stock markets continues, though the fact that positive depression has not occurred is regarded as in itself a most favorable sign under the circumstances, and the end of the week showed a tendency to strength. In the general inactivity there was little of special moment to note in railway securities; in industrials Sugar and American Tobacco recorded rises in price. Gold shipments were smaller than in immediately previous weeks. It was made known that Mr. J. P. Morgan has partly concluded in London a large sale of Northern Pacific 4 per cent. bonds. The money market was as dull as the stock market; call money averaged about 2½ per cent. In trade reports the most favorable incident was the decided falling off in the number of business failures. "Bradstreet's" reports for the week only 216, as compared with 265 the previous week. The practical beginning of summer naturally leads to less activity in general trade; dealers also hold that the political situation has a deadening influence. Exports of wheat were about the same as the week before—1,906,000 bushels, as against 2,754,000 bushels a year ago at the same time. Prices of wheat, flour, oats, sugar, lard, petroleum, and pig iron are slightly lower. Crop reports are generally favorable; in the East the long drought has done some damage, but recent rain has fallen. Leather and shoes have been in active demand.

American and Foreign Bicycles

We have already mentioned some of the startling figures of the year's bicycle manufacture in this country. The business is one in which many millions of dollars of capital are engaged—one bicycle-maker says about $40,000,000 for bicycles alone, not counting in the manufacture of tubes, chains, bells, lamps, cyclometers, saddles, clothing, etc., etc. It is said that about 75,000 men are engaged in the actual manufacture, while a large army of agents, salesmen, teachers, and repairers are making a living out of the "bicycle craze." If the popularity of wheeling should suddenly decrease, something like a panic would follow; of this, however, there is certainly no sign at present. One interesting phase of the subject—that indicated by the title above—is pointed out in the New York "Herald," which says that "whereas a few years ago a great many bicycles were imported from England, and even from France and Germany, to-day at least one of the English manufacturing companies has announced its intention of abandoning the American field, and doubtless others will follow. More than this, and infinitely more important, American bicycles have been proved to be so immeasurably superior, in weight, perfection of mechanism, and general excellence, to the English, French, or German article, that they are being exported in large quantities to those countries, where they have a large sale, and are not only better but cheaper than the home-made article. As a result, or, better, a synchronous consequence, of this noteworthy condition of affairs, an immense new industry has been created in this country, which gives employment to hundreds of thousands of hands, mostly skilled artisans, in all parts of the country."

Growth of American Export Trade

The London "Iron and Coal Trades Review" says: "The growth of the American export trade is one of the factors with which Englishmen will have to reckon in the near future. The American trade and other journals are devoting a great deal more space to this subject than our own, although the issues involved are probably much more serious to our own country than to the United States. We cannot very well keep up our industrial and commercial supremacy without a large export trade, whereas the United States would still be great and prosperous and progressive even if they did not export a dollar's worth of produce, whether raw or manufactured, from year's end to year's end. But the growth of the American export trade of late years has been startling, and, in some directions, even portentous. The export of manufactured goods from the United States is now nearly one-third of the total exports of the country, which at one time, and that not so very long ago, consisted almost exclusively of food and agricultural products. A recent utterance by one of the largest exporting houses in the United States was to the effect that 'America will probably, in the near future, dominate all the markets of the world in the production of manufactured goods. The old-time supremacy of England is on the wane, and even in England itself many grades of American goods, particularly cotton goods, manufactured leather and iron, are sold more cheaply than the native products.' The Americans themselves argue, and not unnaturally, that they must continue to increase the export of their manufactured goods, since their exports of food and other raw products must inevitably decline. In the long run this is no doubt likely to be so, but it is a far cry to the exhaustion of the resources of the United States for the production of food supplies. The last half-dozen years alone have witnessed the bringing under cultivation of enormous tracts of virgin soil in Oklahoma, Indian Territory, and Texas, within a thousand miles of the greatest distributing center, after London, in the world—namely, the city of Chicago. It is not, therefore, because they are likely to cease to export wheat and maize and pork and other agricultural products that the Americans are increasing their exports of manufactured products, but because they are impelled thereto by their command of cheap raw materials and by highly effective if not nominally cheap labor, which enables them to produce a larger quantity of any given product with the same number of hands as compared with the older countries of Europe."

Canadian Exports and Imports

A bulletin put forth by the Secretary of Agriculture, embodying the reports of thirty of our consuls in the Dominion of Canada, shows that the total exports of that country increased during the past decade 33 per cent., and the imports 13 per cent. From 1888 to 1891 Canada's trade with us exceeded her trade with any other country, but since then Great Britain has taken first rank. An important fact to be noticed by citizens of this country is that much of the agricultural product going abroad from Canadian provinces consists of cereals and flour in transit from the United States. Last year the proportion was one-third.

New Canals

The great ship canal from Bordeaux to Narbonne is one of the coming public enterprises. The distance is 320 miles, and the cost is estimated at $150,000,000. Boats will be towed by fixed engines. The long and stormy stretch about the Spanish Peninsula will thus be saved. It is now proposed to connect Toronto on Lake Ontario and Collingwood on the Georgian Bay by a ship canal. The distance is sixty-six miles—a short route, indeed, in comparison with that around by Lakes Huron, St. Clair, and Erie to Lake Ontario.

FINANCIAL

AMERICAN FIRE
INSURANCE COMPANY
Office, Company's Building,
308 & 310
Walnut St.,
Philadelphia
A.D. 1810.

SAFE INVESTMENTS
GOOD AS GOVERNMENT BONDS—
DOUBLE THE RATE
5% 6% 7%
Made in strictly first-class Real Estate Mortgages, State, County, City, and School Warrants and Bonds, with a view to absolute security and prompt interest payments. Best references Correspondence solicited.
JOHN P. DORR & CO., Investment Brokers
Seattle, Washington

YOU SELL
WE BUY
Do you want to sell a WESTERN MORTGAGE or Western Land—avoid foreclosure costs—stop sending good money after bad—get a good 5 per cent. investment instead?
State exact location, condition of title, and your lowest price. Over $2,000,000 in Western securities successfully handled by the present management of this corporation. THE BOSTON REALTY, INDEMNITY AND TRUST CO., 33 Equitable Building, Boston. Send for our Bond List.

Why do thousands of dollars lie idle in the banks bringing no interest? The money is safe but it draws no interest.
Isn't it better to purchase a good first mortgage on improved real estate drawing from 5 to 6 per cent. annually, the principal being as safe as though it were lying in the bank? We have mortgages of this class which we shall be glad to have investors examine in person, or we shall be glad to give them any information by correspondence.
H. O. Stone & Co.
206 La Salle St., Chicago

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York
Formerly New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co.
Mutual Life Building
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
Capital, - - - $2,000,000
Surplus, - - - $2,000,000
ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS, AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.
INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.
WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.
DIRECTORS
Samuel D. Babcock,
George F. Baker,
George S. Bowdoin,
Frederic Cromwell,
Walter R. Gillette,
Robert Goelet,
G. G. Haven,
Oliver Harriman,
R. Somers Hayes,
Charles R. Henderson,
Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
Augustus D. Juilliard,
James N. Jarvie,
Richard A. McCurdy,
Walter G. Oakman,
Alexander E. Orr,
Henry H. Rogers,
Henry W. Smith,
H. McK. Twombly,
Frederick W. Vanderbi:
William C. Whitney.

MORTGAGES AND LANDS.—Have you a mortgage or tract of land in the West that you wish to dispose of? Write me. Bankers and brokers, let me know what you have. Twenty years' residence. Address HENRY C. SMITH, Falls City, Nebr.

Selected
Securities
HF&S

GOVERNMENT BONDS
RAILROAD BONDS STATE BONDS
MUNICIPAL BONDS
BANK STOCKS

SEND FOR OUR LIST OF OFFERINGS

BONDS AND STOCKS BOUGHT AND SOLD
ON THE DIFFERENT EXCHANGES OF THE COUNTRY ON COMMISSION FOR CASH

HARVEY FISK AND SONS

NEW YORK
BOSTON
PHILADELPHIA

Correspondence

"Records and Pledges"

To the Editors of The Outlook:

"Great pressure is being brought to bear on Mr. McKinley to make some utterance on the currency question. We hope that he will resist the pressure and maintain his silence." "Silence is not dishonest, double-dealing is always so." From the foregoing remarks contained in the editorial entitled "Records and Pledges," in a recent number of The Outlook, I desire to express my absolute dissent.

To my mind, Mr. McKinley is guilty of moral cowardice in refusing to make some utterance on the currency question. He is, through the managers of his canvass, seeking to secure the support of two antagonistic forces. Two distinct statements, directly opposed one to the other, are made by these managers. Influenced by one or the other of them, gold and silver men alike have pledged themselves to his support. But now it has dawned upon these enthusiastic gentlemen that there is only one McKinley, and therefore either California or New Hampshire must have been deceived. Brushing past the faithful body-guard officered by one Hanna, they ask the Major himself for a plain statement of his financial views.

Your editorial says that his record is sufficient. But those claiming to be in his confidence—and, whether this claim be true or false, it is not contradicted—have undertaken to explain this record. They tell us, however Mr. McKinley may have spoken and voted from 1878 to 1890, he has recently undergone a change of heart. But it would seem to a candid observer that not only has his heart been changed, but broken—one half seeking its rest among the silver barons of Nevada, the other half its asylum with the gold bugs of Wall Street. Therefore, in order that we may correctly interpret this record, we are asking him, not to pledge himself in the interest of any coterie of politicians as your editorial infers, but simply to inform us, the plain people of this land, how he believes the Government may rightly solve the financial problem now confronting the Nation.

This policy of silence is in very truth dishonesty, in that, as I think I have shown, it involves double-dealing.

I would suggest that Mr. McKinley read Browning's "Lost Leader," and study well its meaning. And possibly, though I hesitate to say it, the editors of The Outlook might with advantage do likewise.

A Reformed Bourbon.

Catskill Station, N. Y.

Ought All to be Paid Alike?

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Three men go to pick berries in the field. Each is free to pick where he will, and to pick as many as he can. But one is stronger and quicker than the others. Besides, he judges better where berries are likely to be thickest. So he has thirty quarts at night, though the others have only fifteen and twenty. If the strongest says, "My brothers, I am more fortunate than you. But you also have worked faithfully, according to your strength and knowledge. We will share alike," that is love. But if the weaker ones say to the strongest, "You must divide with us," and if, when he refuses, they fall upon him, or compel him to yield by threats of violence, is there any love in that?

Two carpenters are laying shingles upon a village hall. One lays a thousand shingles in a day. The other is quicker of eye and hand, and lays fifteen hundred. The one gives as much to the community in two days as the other gives in three. If the community renders to him again as much in two days as in three days to the other, each man receives his own. If the more efficient says to the community, "It is true that I have produced more than my brother. But he also has worked faithfully, according to his ability. He also has a wife and children. He and I will share alike," that is love and it is beautiful. But if the community, without his will, returns to the more efficient only half the fair equivalent of the whole product of the two, it does not render his own to him, but robs him.

The question is not whether our present social machinery robs the many to enrich the few. To me, for one, it seems clear that it does. The question is not as to the validity of any assumption that one kind of work is superior to another, as Mr. Cleveland's or Dr. Lyman Abbott's to the carpenter's. It is not whether the product of Mr. Cleveland's work, or of Dr. Abbott's, is equivalent to the carpenter's who lays fifteen hundred shingles a day, or to his who lays a thousand, or is greater or less than either. My point is this: if the command, "Thou shalt not steal," has any meaning, the work of a man's hand is his own. Some men produce more than others, and wrong is done unless each man has liberty to retain what he has produced, or its equivalent. If each is permitted to retain his product, or its equivalent, the nation's store of riches, which your correspondent "S. A. R." speaks of, and which the nation should spread before its members to be enjoyed by all on equal terms, will contain just one class of things. They are the things the Creator has provided without men's work: the air and sunshine, the running streams, the surface of the earth where men must build, the fruitful soil, the minerals that lie beneath. To these things no man may claim a better title than any other.

I have no quarrel with my Socialist friends while they urge on each of us the high wisdom of working for others, and not for himself. But though I admit that I shall be a happier and a better man if I give my best to my brother men, it does not seem to me to follow that my brothers will do well to take from me forcibly some part of the berries I have picked or of the house I have built, because I have picked more than they, or built faster. Though it be admitted that the law of love is nobler than the law of justice, yet the law of love is beyond the jurisdiction of the State. The State is force. Force may do justice—it cannot compel love. Less than justice—injustice—will be done by him who shall try by the strong arm to accomplish more.

C. E. E.

Binghamton, N. Y.

Books Received

For the week ending May 15

AMERICAN BOOK CO., NEW YORK

Spencerian Penmanship (Vertical Edition), Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. 8 cts. each.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK

Cotes, Mrs. Everard (Sara Jeannette Duncan). His Honour, and a Lady. $1.50.

EDWARD ARNOLD, NEW YORK

Hamilton, M. Across an Ulster Bog.
Montrésor, F. F. Worth While.

THE CATHOLIC BOOK EXCHANGE, NEW YORK

Eucharistic Conferences. 50 cts.

DODD, MEAD & CO., NEW YORK

Gosse, Edmund. Critical Kit-Kats. $1.50.
Mabie, Hamilton Wright. Essays on Nature and Culture. $1.25.

HARPER & BROS., NEW YORK

Clinton, Henry Lauren. Extraordinary Cases. $2.50.
Keightley, S. R. The Cavaliers. $1.50.
Bailey, Alice Ward. Mark Heffron. $1.25.
Ysaguirre and La Marca. Cold Dishes for Hot Weather. $1.

HENRY HOLT & CO., NEW YORK

Rae, W. Fraser. Sheridan. 2 Vols. $7.

JOHN J. HOOD, PHILADELPHIA

Songs of Love and Praise, No. 3. Edited by J. R. Sweney, W. J. Kirkpatrick, and H. L. Gilmour. 35 cts.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., BOSTON

Morse, John T., Jr. Life and Letters of Oliver Wendell Holmes. 2 Vols. $4.
Bliss, William Root. Quaint Nantucket. $1.50.
Brown, Alice. By Oak and Thorn. $1.25.
Ward, Julius H. The White Mountains. $1.25.

LAMSON, WOLFFE & CO., BOSTON

Blodgett, Mabel Fuller. Fairy Tales. Illustrated by Ethel Reed.
Wheelwright, John T. A Bad Penny.

LEACH, SHEWELL & SANBORN, NEW YORK

Longfellow, H. W. Evangeline. Edited by Mary H. Norris. 35 cts.
Tennyson, Alfred, Lord. The Princess. Edited by H. W. Boynton. 35 cts.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO., PHILADELPHIA

Rowlands Effie A. A Faithful Traitor. 50 cts.

MACMILLAN & CO., NEW YORK

Dickens, Charles. The Uncommercial Traveler. $1.
Leland, Charles Godfrey (Hans Breitmann). Legends of Florence. $1.75.
Daudet, Alphonse. Tartarin on the Alps. Translated by Henry Frith. $1.
Carleton, William. Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry. Vol. III. Edited by D. J. O'Donoghue. $1.50.
Balzac, Honoré de. The Unknown Masterpiece (Le Chef-d'œuvre Inconnu) and Other Stories. Translated by Ellen Marriage. $1.50.
Lodge, Richard. Richelieu. 75 cts.
The Book of Job. Edited by R. G. Moulton. 50 cts

THE METAPHYSICAL PUBLISHING CO., NEW YORK

Brodbeck, Adolf. The Ideal of Universities. Translated by the Author. $1.50.

NEW AMSTERDAM BOOK CO., NEW YORK

Sutcliffe, Halliwell. The XIth Commandment. $1.25.

FLEMING H. REVELL CO., NEW YORK

Lee, James W. Henry W. Grady: The Editor; The Orator; The Man. 50 cts.

THOMAS WHITTAKER, NEW YORK

Butler, Clement M., D.D. History of the Prayer-Book. 50 cts.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, NEW YORK

American Orations. Edited by Alexander Johnston. Re-edited by J. A. Woodburn. $1.25.
Flint, Martha B. Early Long Island. $3.50.
Hadley, Arthur T. Economics. $2.50.
Conant, Charles A. A History of Modern Banks of Issue. $3.

WAY & WILLIAMS, CHICAGO

Peattie, Elia W. A Mountain Woman. $1.25.

Mrs. Nancy H. Tucker, who had just completed the building of a fine memorial church to the memory of her husband, died in North Brookfield, Mass., May 17. Her life had been one of self-denial and great frugality, but she leaves behind her a monument which shall make the work of her hands avail much.

It is hardly worth while to carry your silverware up stairs every night to protect it from thieves when you are destroying it down stairs every day by using worthless silver polish. USE which saves your silverware and preserves its brilliancy.

SILVER ELECTRO-SILICON POLISH

Sample free. Box, postpaid, 15c.

THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., 72 John St., New York.

The "New Idea" IS A
Paper Pattern
For all classes of Ladies' and Children's Garments.

No. 903. LADIES' WAIST
To be worn with or without a Fitted Lining.
Sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 in. Bust Measure.
Mailed to your address for 10c., and guaranteed as perfect in every detail as any pattern made.
Catalogue 500 designs, 5c.
Monthly Fashion Sheet free.
THE NEW IDEA PATTERN CO.
192 West Broadway, N. Y.

Beautiful Houses are made more beautiful, Commonplace Houses are redeemed, and even Ugly Houses are rendered attractive, by Cabot's Creosote Shingle Stains
"50% cheaper than paint."

23 Stained Cedar Samples, with colored sketches, sent on application.
SAMUEL CABOT, 81 Kilby St., Boston, Mass.
Agents at All Central Points

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.
Pure, Delicious Flavor. Mix with boiling milk or water, and it's made.
Stephen F. Whitman & Son, Philadelphia.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
25 CTS 25 CTS
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

An American Express Co.

"Travelers Cheque"

is practically a certified cheque made payable to one's order, for a fixed amount named on its face, in gold or its equivalent, in the currency of the country, at 20,000 places throughout the world, by an extensive list of Bankers and Hotels.

More available, economical, and secure than Letters of Credit, Circular Notes, or other forms of Travelers' credit.

Cheques, rates, and further information may be obtained at any Agency of

THE AMERICAN EXPRESS CO.

or at the principal offices of the Company,

65 Broadway, NEW YORK
78 Monroe St., CHICAGO
45 Franklin St., BOSTON

Give your Baby

a food which is all nourishment; one easily assimilated and which leaves no waste to lie undigested in the stomach. Such a one is the first manufactured in this country. It is every particle nourishment, easily absorbed by the system. All babies love Ridge's Food.

Ridge's Food

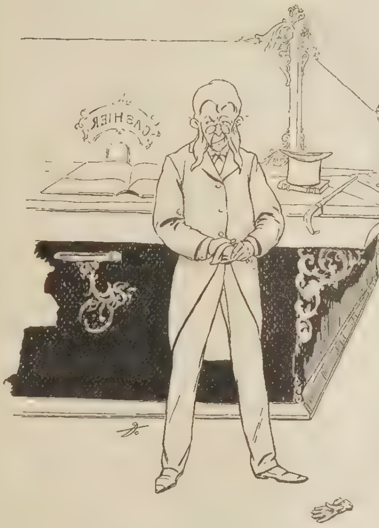
WOOLRICH & Co., Palmer, Mass.



"Cross Enough to Bite"

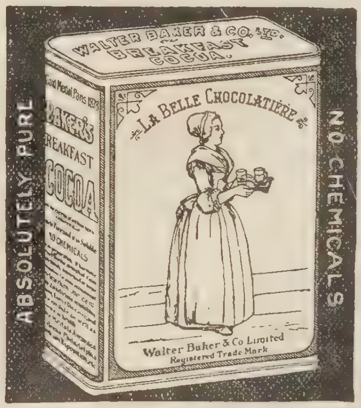
Are you this way every morning? Remove the cause of your indigestion and dyspepsia by assisting the digestive organs with a preparation which strengthens, not stimulates.

TRIGESTIA (Pepsin, Bismuth and Nux Vomica) tablets are worth a trial in the above case. One does it. Send for a FREE SAMPLE.

Price, 25 and 50 Cents per Bottle, postpaid

A. J. DITMAN, Chemist, 4 Barclay St.
NEW YORK

Absolutely Pure—
Delicious—Nutritious



THE

BREAKFAST COCOA

Made by

WALTER BAKER & CO. LIMITED

Established Dorchester, Mass., 1780

Costs less than one cent a cup. No chemicals.
Always ask for Walter Baker & Co.'s

BREAKFAST COCOA

Made at Dorchester, Mass.

It bears their Trade-Mark, "La Belle Chocolatière," on every can.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

The Outlook
A·Family·Paper

New Series of The Christian Union

Copyright, 1896, by The Outlook Company

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post-Office.

The Outlook is a weekly Family Paper, containing this week ninety-six pages. The subscription price is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance.

Postage is Prepaid by the publishers for all subscriptions in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. For all other countries in the Postal Union add $1.56 for postage.

Changes of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given. The notice should be sent one week before the change is to take effect.

Discontinuances.—If a subscriber wishes his copy of the paper discontinued at the expiration of his subscription, notice to that effect should be sent. Otherwise it is assumed that a continuance of the subscription is desired.

How to Remit.—Remittances should be sent by Check, Draft, Express-Order, or Money-Order, payable to order of THE OUTLOOK COMPANY. Cash should be sent in Registered Letter.

Letters should be addressed:
THE OUTLOOK,
Clinton Hall, Astor Place.
New York.

Contents for 30 May, 1896

EDITORIAL:

Political Conventions........................ 969
The Immigration Bill........................ 970
The Sugar Bounty Decision.................. 970
Rapid Transit.............................. 970
The General Assembly........................ 971
Coronation of the Czar...................... 971
Foreign Affairs............................. 972
Canadian Politics........................... 972
"Au Large"................................... 973
A Great Opportunity......................... 974
Flitting.................................... 975
From the Center............................. 978

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES:

Thrilling Moments....................... 976-985
By Henry van Dyke, A. W. Greely, Poultney Bigelow, C. F. Lummis, J. H. Sears, Kirk Munroe, C. H. Parkhurst, Walter Camp, Ernest Ingersoll, T. W. Knox, and C. L. Norton
Photographing in the High Alps.............. 986
By Marie Gozzaldi
Photography on the Greenland Ice-Cap.... 987
By R. E. Peary, U. S. N.
With the Mazama Club on Mount Adams.. 9
By W. D. Lyman
The Olympic Games........................... 993
By Miss Maynard Butler
The Real Broadway........................... 996
By Henrietta S. Lathrop
The Spectator Awheel........................ 998
Kate Carnegie. Chapters XI., XII.......... 1002
By Ian Maclaren
Noteworthy Gatherings...................... 1007

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:

The General Assembly....................... 1010
Baptist Anniversaries...................... 1010
Congregational Churches of New York..... 1010
Theology at Yale........................... 1010
Open-Air Preaching......................... 1010
Changes in the Doshisha.................... 1011
Methodist General Conference.............. 1011

BOOKS AND AUTHORS:

A Model Biography (Life and Letters of O. W. Holmes)............................... 1000
New Books.................................. 1001

THE HOME CLUB
CORRESPONDENCE
NOTES AND QUERIES

THE

HANDY BINDER

for The Outlook, made to hold compactly and conveniently twenty-six numbers, will be sent by mail on receipt of sixty cents.

THE OUTLOOK CO. - NEW YORK

Trade-Mark on Heel.

"Ball-Bearing"
Bicycle Shoe

Ball-Bearing Shoes are superior in fit, material, workmanship and wearing qualities. Many styles—Men's—Ladies'. Black, $3.00; Tan, $3.50; Ladies' Knee Boot, $4.50 to $8.00. Pratt Fasteners secure laces without tying.

Purchasers are cautioned to look for the Trade-Mark on the heel.

Do not be misled by trade-marks which are made to look like the "Ball-Bearing," but which are not the same. Insist on having "Ball-Bearing" bicycle shoes.

For Sale by all the Leading Dealers

If your dealer hasn't them, we will send you a pair prepaid on receipt of price.
Descriptive Booklet Free.

C. H. FARGO & CO. (Makers) - - - - - CHICAGO

A NEW BOOK ENTITLED
"DELFT EMBROIDERY"

Giving the colors of silk to use in working all the different designs. There are Engraved Illustrations of six beautiful patterns, with full instructions as to working each pattern; also information as to cost of linens and silk, and where they may be obtained.

Sent postpaid to any address for 6 cents in stamps.

THE BRAINERD & ARMSTRONG SILK CO.
139 UNION ST., NEW LONDON, CONN.

HOME TREATMENT FOR

HAY-FEVER

WE OFFER

A Cure That Stays

Our constitutional treatment not only gives relief, but eradicates the cause of the disease and cures to stay cured.

OUR NEW BOOK—Thesis for 1896—with 2,000 other references whom you can consult, now ready. Sent on application with blank for free examination. GET IT. Read it. Think it over. Talk with these people or write them. Get ready to meet the season's attack, and do it now. Address

Dr. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

8 Years Cured—W. L. WEDGER,
Roslindale, Boston, Mass.

7 Years Cured—J. L. TREVILLYAN,
24 5th St., N.E., Minneapolis, Minn.

8 Years Cured—MRS. A. P. FOSTER,
Chelsea, Mass.

5 Years Cured—J. W. GILLESPIE,
Black River, N. Y.

5 Years Cured—WM. E. WELLER,
164 Cherry St., Burlington, Vt.

Bits of Fun

The charity which gives away that which it doesn't want is more inclined to vaunt itself than any other kind.—Life.

"Papa, what is a 'walk in life'?" "It is that profession, my boy, in which everybody has to run like mad, or get left."—Chicago Record.

Hoax—Does Sillicus know anything about music? Joax—No; he doesn't know the difference between a string orchestra and a rubber band.—Philadelphia Record.

Mr. York—Don't you have trouble in keeping track of your city limits? Miss Chicago—Yes, but there is a strong movement on foot to abolish them altogether.—Truth.

"How did Swayzler came out in that little railroad deal he was working?" "It hasn't been settled yet. I don't see what else he can do but plead kleptomania."—Cincinnati Inquirer.

Proprietor (to Editor)—Well, the first number of our new paper looks well, but here is one thing I don't like. "What?" "Why, this communication signed 'An Old Subscriber.'"—Tit-Bits.

The "Interior" boasts of a subscriber with a subscription paid up to 1930. That man has taken from his posterity the privilege of using the argument, so dear to minds of a certain caliber, "Stop my paper."—The Congregationalist.

"I'm going to tell my pa on you," said Johnny Smithers, as the blacksmith pared some of the bone away from the horse's hoof. "Why? what have I done?" asked the blacksmith. "You ain't got shoes to fit Dobbin, an' you're whittlin' off his feet to suit those you have got."—London Telegraph.

We are told that Prince Talleyrand was suddenly awakened one night by the discharge of a firearm. Seeing his valet in the apartment, he asked him what he was doing there. "Prince," the man replied, with stolidity, "there was a mouse in the room, and, fearing it might disturb you, I shot it dead with a pistol."—Le Patriote Normand.

Customer—That meat that I bought here last, Mr. Cleaver, was frightfully tough. Butcher—Do you know, marm, that one reason why there are so many poor teeth nowadays is because they do not have enough exercise? Customer—But that steak couldn't be cut with a knife. Butcher—Yes, there is some mighty poor cutlery in the market now. Did you say five pounds, marm?—Boston Transcript.

A Career Started.—"I have been thinking for a long time," she said, with a serious expression which contrasted strongly with her usual airiness, "that I ought to have some serious purpose in life. So I have decided to go into literature." "You intend to pursue it seriously, do you?" "Yes, indeed. I've bought a lovely Louis XVI. desk, and I've got some of the most exquisite stationery you ever saw. Mother gave me a gold pen and a mother-of-pearl penholder, and I have just the prettiest silver inkstand!—all covered with filigree work, you know." "You are certainly well equipped." "Yes," she replied, serenely, "I've got a splendid start. All I have to do now is to sit down sometime and think up a piece to write."—Washington Star.

Doctors who are in the habit of using long words when visiting patients may take a hint from the following story: An old woman, whose husband was not very well, sent for a doctor. The doctor came and saw the old man. When he was departing he said to the old woman: "I will send him some medicine, which must be taken in a recumbent position." After he had gone the old woman sat down, greatly puzzled. "A recumbent position—a recumbent position!" she kept repeating. "I haven't got one." At last she thought, "I will go and see if Nurse Lown has got one to lend me." Accordingly she went and said to the old nurse: "Have you got a recumbent position to lend me to take some medicine in?" The nurse, who was equally as ignorant as the old woman, replied, "I had one; but, to tell you the truth, I have lost it."—Scottish-American.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR	Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC	New York.
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN	Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER	St. Louis.
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS.CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

NO MISREPRESENTATION on the part of our agents tolerated or of dealers or painters necessary. You know just what you are getting when you have painting done with

Pure White Lead

(see list of brands, which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil. Don't be misled by trying something else said to be "just as good." Any desired shade or color may be easily produced by using NATIONAL LEAD Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors.

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

A Drink That Satisfies . .

Do you realize that you can make a delightful summer beverage from . . . .

"IDEAL"
Root Beer or Lemonade
Tablets

Add one "IDEAL" tablet to a glass of water and sweeten to the taste, no preparation necessary. QUICK and REFRESHING.

ASK YOUR DRUGGIST FOR THEM

or send us 12 cents for a sample bottle.

Prepared solely by BILLINGS, CLAPP & CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Take a Combination Case of the LARKIN SOAPS
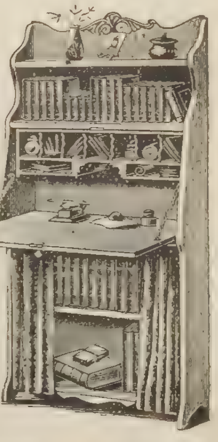
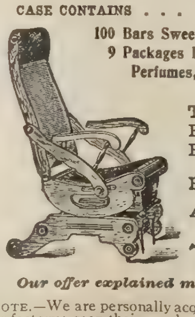
and a "Chautauqua"
Reclining Easy Chair or Desk
ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL.



CASE CONTAINS . . .

100 Bars Sweet Home Soap. 10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
9 Packages Boraxine. 18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.
Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.
If changes in contents desired, write.



The Soaps at retail would cost	$10.00
Either Premium is worth .	$10.00
Both if at retail . . .	$20.00

From factory to family, Both $10.

AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00; IF DISAPPOINTED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in The Outlook Nov. 16th, 23d, and 30th.

NOTE.—We are personally acquainted with Mr. Larkin, of the Soap Manufacturing Company of Buffalo: have visited their factory; seen their goods and premiums offered, and we know that they are full value. The only wonder is that they are able to give so much for so little money. The Company are perfectly reliable.—The Evangelist.

From The Churchman.—We have investigated the propositions in above advertisement, and are satisfied that the goods offered are worth more than price charged, and that the Company will do all they agree to.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Old Age

is usually another name for debility. Too much food, and improper food is eaten, overtaxing the impaired digestive organs; the kidneys do not properly carry off the effete products; the brain is sluggish. All these troubles are overcome by the use of

Freligh's Tonic

A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant

Digestion is improved; kidneys stimulated; brain brightened; new energy given. Absolutely harmless.

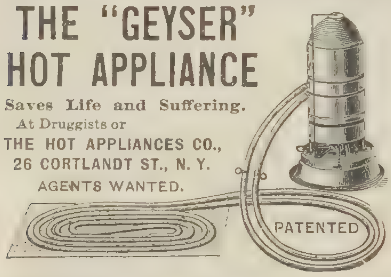
Prescribed by over forty thousand physicians for ten years past. Regular bottle, $1.00, 100 doses. All druggists, or by mail. Sample by mail, 25 cents. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, formula, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 Fulton Street, New York City.

Formula on Every Bottle.

THE "GEYSER" HOT APPLIANCE

Saves Life and Suffering.
At Druggists or
THE HOT APPLIANCES CO.,
26 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y.
AGENTS WANTED.



Throw away the cold, clammy poultices, wet cloths, hot-water bags, etc. They commence to grow cold as soon as applied, and therefore do more harm than good.

The Geyser Hot Appliance automatically supplies heat to any degree, uniform or gradually increasing, to any part of the body, producing results never before attained. Giving immediate relief and effecting cures in the following ailments, where all former methods have failed, viz.: pneumonia, pleurisy, neuralgia, sore throat, grippe, cramps, rheumatism, inflammation of bowels or kidneys, backache, carbuncles, and all other ailments when heat (wet or dry) is required.

Adopted by the leading hospitals and sanitariums and indorsed by all the medical profession.

It's easy to feed

some people, but proper nourishment for the invalid, convalescent and dyspeptic is hard to obtain.

Somatose

is a perfect Food and Tonic for the pale, thin anæmic, dyspeptic and overworked.

Somatose strengthens and nourishes; restores the appetite and increases the weight.

Somatose is for sale by all druggists in 2-oz., ¼, ½ and 1-lb. tins.

Somatose - Biscuit, palatable and strengthening.

Runkel Bros.' Somatose - Cocoa, for nursing mothers, invalids and convalescents. A pleasant and strengthening beverage for table use. Runkel Bros.' Somatose - Chocolate for eating and drinking.

All druggists. Descriptive pamphlets free of Schieffelin & Co., New York, Sole Agents.

Kiamensi Home for Epileptics

A quiet rural retreat under the constant personal care and professional supervision of experienced specialists.
A home—not an Asylum.
For particulars address
Horace Bradley, M.D., Box 262, Wilmington, Del.

Best Fifty Books of 1895

A list of 306 of the leading books of 1895 was recently submitted by the Public Libraries Division of the University of the State of New York to the librarians of the State and others to obtain an expression of opinion respecting the best fifty books of 1895 to be added to a village library. The Director, Mr. Melvil Dewey, says in a circular: "It was necessary to disregard some lists returned because more than fifty books were marked; a few others reached the office too late to be included. From 139 lists that met the conditions, the following choice is indicated:"

RANK		VOTES
1	Burnett, Mrs. F. H. Two Little Pilgrims' Progress. Scribner, $1.50	96
2	Kipling, Rudyard. Second Jungle Book. Century, $1.50	95
3	Maclaren, Ian, pseud. Days of Auld Lang Syne. Dodd, $1.25	94
4	Atkinson, Philip. Electricity for Everybody. Century, $1.50	85
4	Brooks, Noah. How the Republic is Governed. Scribner, 75 cts.	85
6	Coffin, C. C. Daughters of the Revolution and their Times. Houghton, $1.50	77
6	Stockton, F. R. Adventures of Captain Horn. Scribner, $1.50	77
8	Lodge, H. C., and Roosevelt, Theodore. Hero Tales from American History. Century, $1.50	72
9	Stedman, E. C. Victorian Anthology, 1837–1895. Houghton, $2.50	67
10	Crawford, F. M. Casa Braccio. 2 v. Macmillan, $2	64
11	Sherman, John. Recollections of Forty Years in the House, Senate, and Cabinet. 2 v. Werner Company, $7.50	63
12	Harris, J. C. Mr. Rabbit at Home. Houghton, $2	62
13	Mitchell, D. G. English Lands, Letters, and Kings. v. 3. Queen Anne and the Georges. Scribner, $1.50	59
14	Lippincott's Gazetteer of the World. New edition. Lippincott, $12	58
14	Walker, F. A. Making of the Nation, 1783–1817. (American Historical Series.) Scribner, $1.25	58
16	Zangwill, Israel. The Master. Harper, $1.75	56
17	Weyman, S. J. Red Cockade. Harper, $1.50	55
18	Clemens, S. L. Tragedy of Pudd'nhead Wilson. American Publishing Company, $2.50	54
18	Henty, G. A. Knight of the White Cross. Scribner, $1.50	54
20	Wiggin, Mrs. K. D. Village Watch-Tower. Houghton, $1	52
21	Porter, L. H. Cycling for Health and Pleasure. Dodd, $1	51
22	Lowell, J. R. Last Poems. Houghton, $1.25	50
22	Maartens, Maarten, pseud. My Lady Nobody. Harper, $1.50	50
24	Arnold, Matthew. Letters of Matthew Arnold, 1848–1888. 2 v. Macmillan, $3	49
24	Butterworth, Hezekiah. Zigzag Journeys Around the World. Estes, $2.	49
24	Davis, R. H. Princess Aline. Harper, $1.25	49
27	Ward, Mrs. E. S. P. A Singular Life. Houghton, $1.25	48
28	Balfour, A. J. Foundations of Belief. Longmans, $2	47
28	Crockett, S. R. Men of the Moss-Hags. Macmillan, $1.50.	47
28	Lang, Andrew. Red True Story-Book. Longmans, $2	47
31	Guerber, H. A. Stories of the Wagner Operas. Dodd, $1.50	46
31	Lang, Andrew. My Own Fairy Book. Longmans, $2	46
33	Crawford, F. M. Constantinople. Scribner, $1.50	45
33	Leypoldt, Mrs. A. H., and Iles, George. List of Books for Girls and Women and their Clubs. Lib. Bur., $1	45
33	Oliphant, Mrs. M. O. W. Makers of Modern Rome. Macmillan, $3	45
33	Weyman, S. J. From the Memoirs of a Minister of France. Longmans, $1.25	45
37	Wright, C. D. Industrial Evolution of the United States. (Chautauqua.) Flood, $1.	44
38	Brooks, E. S. Boy of the First Empire. Century, $1.50	43
38	Earle, Mrs. A. M. Colonial Dames and Goodwives. Houghton, $1.50	43
40	Bolton, Mrs. S. K. Famous Leaders Among Women. Crowell, $1.50	42
40	Davis, R. H. About Paris. Harper, $1.25	42
40	Farrar, F. W., and Others. Westminster Abbey and the Cathedrals of England. Winston, $3.50	42
40	Mathews, F. S. Familiar Flowers of Field and Garden. Appleton, $1.75	42
44	Greene, F. D. Armenian Crisis in Turkey. Putnam, $1	41
44	Jewett, S. O. Life of Nancy. Houghton, $1.25	41
44	Munroe, Kirk. At War with Pontiac. Scribner, $1.25	41
44	Willsey, J. H., comp. Harper's Book of Facts. Harper, $8	41
48	Shaw, Albert. Municipal Government in Continental Europe. Century, $2	40
48	Wiggin, Mrs. K. D., and Smith, N. A. Froebel's Gifts. (The Republic of Childhood. v. 1.) Houghton, $1	40
50	Scudder, S. H. Frail Children of the Air. Houghton, $1.50	39

The front wheel of a bicycle should be called "Pride," for often it goes before a fall.—Philadelphia Press.

3 Big Words

DIGESTIBLE
NUTRITIVE
PALATABLE

Rolled Into One

WHEATLET

A sensible breakfast food — supplies the right elements for nourishment and is delicious. Without the raw taste of oats and gritty foods.

Ask your GROCER for it to-day
THE FRANKLIN MILLS CO.
Lockport N. Y.

Health Springs from the Cocoanut

Pure and Wholesome

describes the new article of food just being introduced and for your health's sake you should investigate our

Cocoanut Butter

it is a superior article of guaranteed purity to be used in place of butter, lard or compounds in cooking. Requires only one-half to two-thirds the quantity used of other shortening. Endorsed by physicians for purity and by bakers and chefs for its economic value. Sold by all grocers. Write for free book about it.

THE PURE FOOD PRODUCT CO.,
544-554 N. Water St. CHICAGO

CRYSTAL FOUNTAIN GERM-PROOF FILTER

An absolutely perfect sanitary filter. Filtering cylinder of porous rock, cleaned instantly by revolving against automatic rock cleaner—without opening filter. No other filter has or can have this device. Full description and prices of filters in a book that will be mailed free to you. Send postal for it. Also Gravity Filters—in which we use the Crystal Fountain Rock Tube.

The Geo. L. Squier Mfg. Co.,
Filter Dept. "F." Buffalo, N. Y., U. S. A

For the Promotion of Agriculture

The first society for the promotion of agriculture in the United States was established in Philadelphia in March, 1785. The men who were most interested in this committee were those who had no immediate connection with agriculture. Washington and Franklin were honorary members, but the larger proportion were men of mercantile pursuits. In 1894 the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor in New York City determined to make a careful study of agricultural conditions in New York State for the purpose of ascertaining the causes of agricultural depression, and the reasons for the abandonment of farms. This study was one of the most careful which had ever been made, and its results were published broadcast in a special leaflet. Among the recommendations of the committee was that of an Agricultural Conference, which was held in New York City December 9, 1895, the principal speaker being George T. Powell, who discussed agricultural needs and conditions.

As a result of this Conference a Committee for the Promotion of Agriculture was organized, under the chairmanship of the Hon. Abram S. Hewitt. Among the other members of the Committee were R. Fulton Cutting, William E. Dodge, Jacob H. Schiff, Mrs. J. S. Lowell, and Howard Townsend. At its first meeting the Committee elected George T. Powell Director of the Department of Agricultural Education, which was organized along the lines of university extension. The campaign was opened at Mount Kisco, in Westchester County. The speakers who presented the various topics at these agricultural institutes were men thoroughly familiar with their subjects, as was evidenced by the attendance and interest at the sessions. The work included Purdys, South Salem, Yorktown, Purchase, Pleasantville, and Brewster, a total of seventy lectures being given. These meetings were held largely in the milk-producing districts, where the industry has been very greatly depressed—so much so that farmers in some instances were going out of the business. At Purdys one instance was found where a farmer kept careful record of the milk produced by his cows, with the result that he was fairly well satisfied. He knew what his income was; he knew the production of his animals; hence he could calculate the profits. This careful collation of accounts was urged upon the farmers.

The work among children was not neglected by the institutes. Mr. Powell had the valuable co-operation of Mrs. A. R. Comstock, of Cornell University. She treated plant life and insect life in a manner that helped to interest both young and old. There was a large attendance of children from the public schools, and the notes which were taken by the children served as a basis for educational work later.

The following instance shows a fact which is worth all the time and effort of this movement:

At the close of one conference a farmer came to Mr. Powell with the request that he would accompany him home and spend the night, because one son and two daughters were contemplating leaving the farm for the city. Mr. Powell talked with the children that evening, and in the morning went over the farm with them. He found the soil was admirably adapted for the production of fruits and vegetables, none of which had been attempted. Mr. Powell told them how the farm might be improved, and gave them an object-lesson in the pruning of peach-trees, and told them how they could raise a fine quality of fruit. He also suggested that the farm was admirably adapted for strawberry culture. At the close of next day's session the young people told Mr. Powell that they had decided to stay upon the farm and not go to the city.

The evening sessions were instructive as well as entertaining, the co-operation having been secured of Dr. Curtis, of Columbia College, who gave illustrated lectures showing how plants grow, how they obtain their food, the effect of fertilizers, and the manner in which these should be applied. By this means the farmers were able to get an insight of the underground work of the farm. Another lecturer presented certain phases of city life, showing how the people live in the thickly populated tenement districts, how the labor market was overstocked, and the conditions surrounding men and women, with the low wages which they must accept.

The fact that this work has been carried on in Westchester County has led twenty-one other counties to apply to Mr. Powell for the same kind of work. Perhaps the following statement by Mr. Powell to the Committee is the best résume of what has been accomplished: "After several years of experience and special study of this kind of work, I may say to the Committee that this series of agricultural schools just closed has represented the best quality of work for the promotion of agriculture that I have ever seen done in this country."

Every Man His Own Poet

You build a sonnet on about this plan:
  Your first line ground out, take the next one—so—
  And make it rhyme with this one, just below.
Then, next, you match the first line, if you can.
Don't hurry the machine. The lines must scan.
  With steady motion turn the crank. You know
  'Tis not a sonnet if it limps. Go slow.
Now find the rhyme for "scan"—for instance, man.
As to the last six lines some latitude
  May be allowed. Take any word, as "grove."
Now hunt a rhyme for "latitude." Try shrewd.
  This line must end with dove, or love, or strove;
And this with mood, or prude, or crude, or dude.
  And there's your sonnet. Throw it in the stove.

—Hartford Courant.

Findings—

"The best, of course," you tell your dressmaker, and trust to her using the

S·H·& M·
REGISTERED TRADE MARK

BIAS
VELVETEEN
SKIRT BINDING

Why don't you tell her to use it or, better still, buy it yourself?

If your dealer will not supply you we will.

Samples showing labels and materials mailed free. "Home Dressmaking," a new book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, telling how to put on Bias Velveteen Skirt Bindings sent for 25c., postage paid.

S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.

Kitchen Furnishing

COOKING UTENSILS, MOULDS, CUTLERY, CROCKERY, AND GLASS,
REFRIGERATORS,
HOUSE-CLEANING ARTICLES

LEWIS & CONGER

130 and 132 West 42d St., N. Y.

There's no help wanted from soap or anything else, when you use Pearline. Pearline and water—all alone by themselves—that's everything you need for the best, the easiest, the safest, the most economical washing and cleaning. What help can soap add to it? You might just as well get a horse to help a locomotive. Anything that soap can do, Pearline can do better—and can do a great deal more besides.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 484

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Relieves Paralysis after a Failure of Hot Springs

The late Dr. P. S. Jones of Virginia: "Awaking from sleep in a current of cold air, I found that I had suffered partial paralysis of my right leg, which proved to be of a permanent nature, and affected my locomotion so far that I walked with difficulty with the aid of a cane. Afterwards I was attacked with hæmaturia. My appetite and digestion were impaired, and I was nervous and sleepless and greatly depressed in spirits. In this condition I made, without deriving benefit, two protracted visits to the Hot Springs of Arkansas. On returning from my last visit I determined upon an experiment with BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 2, which proved most happy in result. After its use for some weeks, I am so improved as to be able to walk readily without my cane. The hæmaturia is entirely relieved. I can eat heartily; my digestion is good; nervous symptoms gone. I sleep soundly; am attending to my business pursuits, and hopeful of a complete recovery, from the continued use of the water. I do not undertake to account for the action of this water in paralysis, but simply state a fact."

This water is for sale by druggists and grocers generally, or in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00, f. o. b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent free to any address. Springs open for guests from June 15th to October 1st.

Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va. On the Atlantic & Danville Railroad.

SAPOLIO

Like a Good Temper, "Sheds a Brightness Everywhere."

EDUCATIONAL

New York City

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established 1855. 3 East 14th St., N. Y.

The Misses Ely's School for Girls
RIVERSIDE DRIVE
85th and 86th Streets, New York

Macy Manual Training High School
(For Boys and Girls)
Under supervision of Teachers College. Fits boys for Columbia College School of Mines in three years. Address
VIRGIL PRETTYMAN, Principal,
Morningside Heights, 120th St., West, New York City.

MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S
Boarding and Day School for Girls, 15 West 86th Street, NEW YORK CITY. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and Chaperonage for special students.

California

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont, Cal.—Full College courses leading to degrees of B.A., B.L., B.S. Degrees recognized by University of California and other similar graduate schools. Thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. An Academic course. Preparatory school preparing for all institutions connected with the College. Address C. G. BALDWIN, President.

Connecticut

Brookfield Center, Fairfield Co., Conn.
The Curtis School for Young Boys
A strong life in school and out, full of normal activities and healthy conditions. A clean moral atmosphere, a loyalty, a high purpose—full of help for your boy's manhood. Home life: single rooms. $500. 22d year. A book full of suggestion. FREDERICK S. CURTIS.

The Housatonic Valley Institute Cornwall Conn.
Among the Berkshire Hills of Northwestern Connecticut. Home School for boys. Classical, Scientific, Business, Preparatory Courses. Thirteenth year.
H. B. MacFarland, S. B., L. W. Arnold, A. B., Principals.

The Misses Stowe Principals of the HOMESTEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Greenwich, Ct. A Family School for 12 Girls.

WOODSIDE SEMINARY
Reopens Sept. 24th, 1896. City advantages for culture and study. Rural surroundings.
Miss SARA J. SMITH, Principal, Hartford, Conn.

MISS AIKEN'S BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. Daily drill in Miss Aiken's method. Prepares for college. For terms and circular apply to Principal, Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER SCOVILLE DEVAN, Stamford, Conn.

SCHOOL FOR BOYS—Summer Session
MARK PITMAN, A.M., Principal
Wallingford, Conn.
References:
Hon. WM. G. CHOATE, New York.
Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE, D.D., Boston.
Hon. NATHANIEL SHIPMAN, Hartford.
Dr. FRANCIS BACON, New Haven.

District of Columbia

Chevy Chase French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies.—Half an hour from Washington, D. C., by electric cars. French the Language of the house. Reopens October 1, 1896. Address Mlle. Léa Bouligny, P. O. Station E, Washington, D. C.

France

FRANCE, Paris.—St. Margaret's Church School. A French and American School for Girls. French the language of the household. Autumn term opens October 1. Terms, $1,000 a year. Address Miss JULIA H. C. ACLY, 50 Avenue d'Jéna.
A teacher will conduct pupils from New York to Paris in September.

Illinois

Rockford College for Women
Fall Term Opens Wed., Sept. 16, 1896
Classical and Science Courses. Excellent Preparatory School. Specially organized departments of Music and Art. Well-equipped Laboratories. Fine Gymnasium. Resident physician. Memorial Hall enables students to reduce expenses. For catalogues address SARAH F. ANDERSON, Principal, Rockford, Illinois. Lock Box 9.

Massachusetts

OAK GROVE HOME SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Amherst, Mass. Reopens September 23d, 1896. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley.
Miss VRYLING WILDER BUFFUM, A.B., Principal.

AMHERST, MASS.
Mrs. W. F. Stearns's Home School for Young Ladies. Reopens Sept. 22, 1896.

Massachusetts

Auburndale, Mass. (10 miles from Boston)
Lasell Seminary FOR Young Women
suggests to parents seeking a good school consideration of the following points in its methods:

1st. Its special care of health.

Resident Nurse supervising work, diet, and exercise; abundant food in good variety, and well cooked; early and long sleep, a fine gymnasium, furnished by Dr. Sargent of Harvard; bowling-alley and swimming-bath; no regular or foreknown examinations, etc.

2d. Its broadly planned course of study.

Boston proximity both necessitates and helps to furnish the best of teachers, including many specialists; with one hundred and twenty pupils, a faculty of thirty. Four years' course; in some things equal to college work; in others, planned rather for home and womanly life. Two studies required and two to be chosen from a list of eight or ten electives. One preparatory year. Special students admitted if eighteen years or over, or graduates of high schools.

3d. Its homelike air and character.

Training in self-government; limited number (many declined every fall for lack of room), personal oversight in habits, manners, care of person, room, etc.; comforts not stinted.

4th. Its handiwork and other unusual departments.

Pioneer school in scientific teaching of Cooking, Millinery, Dress-Cutting, Business Law for Women, Home Sanitation, Swimming.

Regular expense for school year, $500. For illustrated catalogue address (mentioning The Outlook),
C. G. BRAGDON, Principal.

Boston University Law School
New Hall, Ashburton Place,
Opens Oct. 7. Boston, Mass.

THE IDEA OF "GOING TO EUROPE" for a musical education grows weaker as the power of the New England Conservatory of Music, Elocution and Languages,
Boston, Mass., grows stronger. Already the largest in America, it competes with the world. Carl Fælten, Director. Send to Frank W. Hale, Business Manager, for prospectus.

THE CAMBRIDGE SCHOOL A select, private school for girls.
Best preparation for college. Many courses not leading to college. Comforts of home. Mr. ARTHUR GILMAN is the Director, Cambridge, Mass.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD SUMMER INSTITUTE, Cottage City, Mass. Nineteenth year begins July 13, 1896. Send for 80-page circular.
WILLIAM A. MOWRY, Pres., Hyde Park, Mass.

LOWELL, MASS. ROGERS HALL
A Home School for Girls and Young Women. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley. Reopens October first. Terms, $750. References: Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Mrs. Frederic T. Greenhalge. For further particulars address Mrs. E. P. UNDERHILL, M.A., Principal.

WALNUT HILL SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Natick, Mass. Two miles from Wellesley, seventeen miles from Boston. Certificate admits to Wellesley and other Colleges.
MISS CHARLOTTE H. CONANT, } Principals.
MISS FLORENCE BIGELOW, }

KINDERGARTEN NORMAL
DEP'T OF THE Industrial Institute
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Two years' course. Send for catalogue.

WORCESTER ACADEMY Prepares boys for any College or Scientific School. Buildings new with every modern improvement of School-House, Dormitories, Dining-Hall, Gymnasium, and Infirmary with trained nurse. Playground and oval unexcelled. 63d year begins Sept. 9, 1896.
D. W. ABERCROMBIE, A.M., Prin., Worcester, Mass.

Worcester Polytechnic Institute Worcester, Mass.
Courses of Study in Mechanical, Civil, and Electrical Engineering, and Chemistry. 158-Page Catalogue, showing appointments secured by graduates, mailed free. Expenses low. 29th year. T. C. MENDENHALL, President.

Michigan

University of Michigan SUMMER SCHOOL
June 29 till August 7
Nineteen departments (including Law). Seventy courses offered. For full information apply to the Secretary of the University, JAMES H. WADE, Ann Arbor, Mich.

New Hampshire

COLBY ACADEMY, New London, N. H.
$200 to $250 a Year. Co-educational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, PRESIDENT.

New Jersey

"Lost yesterday, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with 60 diamond minutes. No reward is offered, for they are gone forever."—HORACE MANN.

The Bordentown, (N. J.) FEMALE COLLEGE
aims to utilize every minute of the College year in the development of body, mind, and character. Your daughter may pass a busy life of work and play with us—enough of each to make the other necessary, and the girl cultured and happy. Our departments of Art and Music are finely developed.
Let us mail you our Catalogue. Write us fully about your daughter, and we will be equally frank with you.
Bordentown, N. J.
REV. J. W. BLAISDELL, President
FREDERICK T. SHULTZ, A.M., Head Master

The Misses Anable's English, French, and German Boarding and Day School
NEW BRUNSWICK, NEW JERSEY
College Preparation, Art, and Music. Apply for circulars.

New York

Wells College for the higher education of young women.
The catalogue gives full information about entrance requirements, courses of study, scholarships, expenses, etc., and will be mailed upon application to WILLIAM E. WATERS, Ph.D., President, Aurora, N. Y.

ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL
MANLIUS, N. Y.
Next term begins September 16th, 1896.
Apply to WM. VERBECK.

NEW YORK, Newburgh.
The Misses Mackie's School for Girls
Academic and College-Preparatory. Special advantages in Art and Music. Certificate admits to Vassar and Wellesley.
One and a half hours from New York.

SUMMER SCHOOL at the Peekskill, N. Y. Military Academy.
Location healthful; care and instruction excellent. Send for circular to Col. LOUIS H. ORLEMAN, Prin.

RIVERVIEW ACADEMY
61st year. Prepares thoroughly for college, the Government Academies, and Business. U. S. Army officer detailed at Riverview by Secretary of War.
JOSEPH B. BISBEE, A.M., Principal, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Mount Pleasant Military Academy
A high-grade school for boys. Fits for college and for business. 82d year. Library of 12,000 volumes. Summer session. Reference: Hon. JOSEPH H. CHOATE. Send for catalogue. CHARLES F. BRUSIE, A.M., ARTHUR T. EMORY, A.B., Principals. Sing Sing-on-Hudson.

BERKELEY ACADEMY RAMAPO MOUNTAINS
Summer session; real home life; one hour out; co-educational; $250 per year. Rev. J. Cameron, M.A., Suffern, N.Y.

IRVING INSTITUTE FOR BOYS
Tarrytown-on-Hudson, N. Y. 25 miles from N. Y. City. 41st year. Reopens Sept. 23, 1896 Summer term.
J. M. FURMAN, A.M., Prin.

EASTERN ❧ TEACHERS' ❧ AGENCY Miss E. F. FOSTER, Manager
50 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS. - Telephone, Boston, 775-2.
Teachers furnished for all grades of public and private schools. Specialists in any desired branches. Tutors and Governesses.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY LAWRENCE SCIENTIFIC SCHOOL Offers courses in Civil Engineering, Mechanical Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Mining Engineering, Architecture, Chemistry, Geology, Botany and Zoölogy, General Science, Science for Teachers, Anatomy and Physiology (as a preparation for Medical Schools). For the Descriptive Pamphlet apply to N. S. SHALER, Dean M. CHAMBERLAIN, Secretary, Cambridge, Mass.

New York

SARATOGA SUMMER SCHOOLS for both sexes. July 6 to August 14. Board $5.00 a week and upwards. 30 COURSES offered by faculty of Union College; also special coaching for entrance to any college this fall. 13 COURSES in Schools of Theology and Hebrew, by leading Professors from Hartford, New Haven, Philadelphia, Toronto, etc. Address D. F. Ritchie, Secretary, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

TROY, N. Y.
EMMA WILLARD SCHOOL

Preparation for all colleges open to women; four years academic course; graduate courses; departments of music and art. 83d year opens Sept. 23, 1896.
MARY ALICE KNOX, Principal.

Ohio

1020 Prospect Street, Cleveland, Ohio
Miss Mittleberger's School for Girls

Prepares for all Colleges open to women.
Fall term begins September 23.

Oberlin Theological Seminary 62d year opens Sept. 23d, with special advantages in the College and the Conservatory of Music. E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec.

OXFORD, OHIO
THE WESTERN A College and Seminary for Women

Miss Leila S. McKee, Ph.D., President. Forty-second year opens Sept. 9, 1896. Superior advantages for thorough Christian culture. Terms, $250 per year.

Pennsylvania

Miss Baldwin's School FOR GIRLS
BRYN MAWR, PA.

Miss FLORENCE BALDWIN, Principal. Preparatory to Bryn Mawr College. Within five years more than fifty pupils have entered Bryn Mawr College from this school. Certificate admits to Smith, Vassar, and Wellesley. Diploma given in both General and College Preparatory Courses. Fine fire-proof stone building. 25 acres beautiful grounds. For circular, address the Secretary.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Opens Sept. 30. Established in 1850. Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. For circular, apply to Principals, Frances E. Bennett, Sylvia J. Eastman, Ogontz School P.O., Pa.

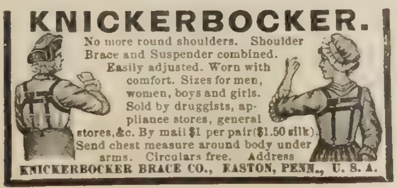
Miss Gordon's French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies and Little Girls
4110 and 4112 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Complexion Powder

Is a necessity of the refined toilet in this climate. Pozzoni's combines every element of beauty and purity.

It is universally known, and everywhere esteemed as the only Powder that will improve the complexion, eradicate tan, freckles and skin diseases.

For Sale Everywhere.



KNICKERBOCKER.

No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address
KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.

Common Sense for Bicyclers

The advice given by the greatest of bicycle-riders, Zimmerman, is commended to the vain and silly people who prove that they don't know how to ride every time they get on a wheel.

Zimmerman says: "In riding, sit up straight. It is not necessary for you to stoop over." Every sensible man knew that before, but four-fifths of the boys and young men who ride use low handle-bars and stoop over. Why? Simply from childish vanity. They think it makes them look like "scorchers." That is the height of their ambition. Now, here is the prince of bicyclists, the most famous of wheelmen, who says: "Sit up straight." He means, of course, in ordinary riding. In racing a wheelman can sit on his spine, or on his stomach, or on his head, if he wants to. That is exceptional, and has nothing to do with street and road riding. Low handle-bars are the curse of the wheel. They are a menace to public safety. They deform the body. They injure the health. If they were essential to bicycling, the wheel itself should be abolished. But they are no more necessary than any other sporting device is on ordinary occasions. They belong to the race-track, and nowhere else. A man who would go to church with a pair of boxing-gloves on his hands would be escorted to the door by the sexton.

Another piece of good advice given by Zimmerman was not to rush up hill. The strain on the heart of a rapid gait up grade is tremendous, and in many cases dangerous.

Not one young person in a dozen of those who scorch along on bicycles really knows how to ride. A good rider must know something more than merely how to stick on and go at a three-minute gait. Gracefulness, health, consideration for the rights of others, and other points are essential to good riding, and a very large proportion of alleged bicyclists make no account of these things.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

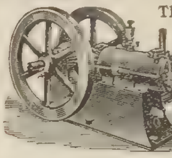
—Mr. Charles H. Hackley, of Muskegon, Mich., has added $25,000 to his original gift for a manual training school in that town, making his total gift $155,000.

The Lawton Simplex Printer

saves time and labor; money too—100 letters, postal cards, copies of music, drawings, or typewritten copy, in almost no time, and exact copies at that, by using the Lawton Simplex. Requires no washing or cleaning, and saves its cost over and again in sending out notices. Costs but little ($3 to $10).

Caution.—Other things are being made and called Simplex Printers. The only way to be sure of getting the genuine is to see that yours is the Lawton Simplex Printer. Send for circulars. Agents wanted.
LAWTON & CO., 20 Vesey St., New York.

THE CHICAGO GAS AND GASOLINE ENGINE



The Simplest Gas and Gasoline Engine on the Market.

Has no equal for absolute, steady speed and durability. It is a dwarf in size, but a Samson in strength. Catalogue sent on application.

MANUFACTURED BY
J. J. NORMAN CO.
64 and 66 So. Clinton St.,
Chicago, Ill.

A quarter spent in HIRES Rootbeer does you dollars' worth of good.

Made only by The Charles E. Hires Co., Philadelphia.
A 25c. package makes 5 gallons. Sold everywhere.

THE NEWTON REST CURE
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

A private house in a fine situation has been arranged by a physician to receive a limited number of ladies temporarily disabled through nervous diseases.

Those answering advertisements appearing in The Outlook will confer a favor upon the advertiser as well as the publisher by mentioning this publication.

The skeptic says: "If I really believed that letter I wouldn't hesitate a minute."

Thousands do believe, and are being cured of their Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh,

Hay Fever, Rose Colds, etc., by Booth's "Hyomei," the Australian "Dry-Air" treatment, which cures by inhalation.

87 Elm Street, Lawrence, Mass., May 6th, 1896.

Dear Sir:—I have been troubled with Bronchitis for the last five years and never found any permanent relief until I commenced using "Hyomei." In January last I made application to one of our leading life insurance companies, but at the medical examination the examining physician said that he could not pass me as my lungs and bronchial passages were badly congested. Soon after, I commenced using "Hyomei," and improved so rapidly that in one month again went before the same medical examiner and this time passed without any further ceremony.

E. B. MOORE (with H. A. Buell & Co.).

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete in Sealed Case (see cut), by Mail, $1.00, to any part of the United States; consisting of pocket inhaler, made of deodorized hard rubber (beautifully polished), a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send your address, and my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei does cure. Are you open to conviction?

Hyomei Balm cures all skin diseases—25 cents.

R. T. BOOTH, 23 East 20th Street, New York.

Trade-Mark

"Pride of the West"
Bleached Muslin.

For Sale by all Wholesale and Retail Dry Goods Dealers in the United States, in 36, 41 and 45-inch widths.

Manufactured by the Slater Cotton Company,
Pawtucket, R. I.

Coffin, Altemus & Co.
Sole Agents,

NEW YORK,
PHILADELPHIA,
BOSTON,
BALTIMORE

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR
W. L. DOUGLAS
$3. SHOE BEST IN THE WORLD.

If you pay $4 to $6 for shoes, examine the W. L. Douglas Shoe, and see what a good shoe you can buy for $3.

OVER 100 STYLES AND WIDTHS, CONGRESS, BUTTON, and LACE, made in all kinds of the best selected leather by skilled workmen. We make and sell more $3 Shoes than any other manufacturer in the world.

None genuine unless name and price is stamped on the bottom.

Ask your dealer for our $5, $4, $3.50, $2.50, $2.25 Shoes; $2.50, $2 and $1.75 for boys.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE. If your dealer cannot supply you, send to factory, enclosing price and 36 cents to pay carriage. State kind, style of toe (cap or plain), size and width. Our Custom Dept. will fill your order. Send for new Illustrated Catalogue to Box N.

W. L. DOUGLAS, Brockton, Mass.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Want advertisements of thirty words or less will be published under this heading at one dollar a week. Four cents a week is charged for each word in excess of thirty.

FOR SALE CHEAP.—A house of twelve rooms in the village of Salisbury, Connecticut, with about two and a half acres of land connected, a barn, and ice-house filled. Supplied with spring water and corporation water; five minutes' walk from R. R. Station. For particulars address DARWIN WARNER, Salisbury, Connecticut.

YOUNG WOMAN, college graduate, desires position in Northern summer school, or as tutor during summer. Will teach grammar-school branches or prepare for college. English and Latin specialties. No objection to country. References. Address M. K. C., Columbian University, Washington, D. C.

HOME FOR AN INVALID.—An experienced nurse having an attractive home, half an hour from New York, will receive an aged person or invalid. Best references from New York physicians and families. Mrs. N., No. 1,190, care Outlook.

MASSAGE.—Experienced masseuse (Swedish system) would like position as attendant to ladies, individually or in parties, for the summer. Rheumatic and nerve troubles a specialty Best of references. Address No. 1153, care of The Outlook.

VACATION IN THE CATSKILLS.—I should like to take charge of a few good boys during the summer vacation. Instruction if desired. Unexceptionable reference required. Martin Bähler, Prin., Boys' School, Orange Valley, N. J.

FOR RENT OR FOR SALE, at Delaware Water Gap, Pa., a ten-room cottage with bath-room, fine piazza, etc., located on high ground and near mountain paths, post-office, hotels, etc. Address H. W. BRODHEAD.

AT EAST ORANGE, N. J.—An attractive furnished room, closets, bath, gas, large shaded grounds, with board if preferred. Three minutes from Brick Church Station. References. Address No. 691, care Outlook.

WANTED—Position as tutor during the summer by a Wellesley graduate of experience. No objections to country, seashore, or traveling. Best of references furnished. Address A. W., No. 539, care The Outlook.

AT NORTHFIELD—A furnished flat; six rooms and bath-room, twenty windows and three piazzas, at fifty dollars per month, for July and August. Table board near by. Address Box 106, East Northfield, Mass,

AN AMHERST JUNIOR wants situation during July and August as private tutor to young man or men preparing for college. Terms reasonable. References furnished. Address Box 639, Amherst, Mass.

CHARMING HOME for young ladies on Massachusetts coast with lady of wide experience in chaperoning. Delightful climate: fine bathing; social advantages. For particulars address No. 738, care The Outlook.

A REFINED YOUNG LADY, familiar with French and German, desires for the summer a position as governess or as companion. No objections to travel. Address 742 So. Beech St., Syracuse, N. Y.

TUTORING wanted by a young man, a teacher of two years' experience. Has done private work and traveled with boys. Best of references. Address THEODORE F. COLLIER, Englewood, N. J.

SUBURBAN HOMES can be bought direct from owners at an advantage to the buyers; also first-class plots for investment. Address GRANDVIEW LAND COMPANY, 354 Fourth Avenue, New York.

WANTED—Two or three boarders in a pleasant home in a quiet country village of Western Massachusetts. For particulars address QUIET HOME, No. 1,217, care of The Outlook.

POSITION during the summer, as tutor in college or college preparatory work, by an Amherst graduate, class of '95, who is now teaching. Address Box 66, Becket, Mass.

About People

—A survivor of the Grande Armée, Joseph Roze, has just died at Aubigny, near Bourges, at the age of 102 years. He entered the army at eighteen, became a corporal, and received the St. Helena medal.

—Mr. Andrew Lang was asked recently to answer the question as to what "hymns had helped him most." He wrote in reply that he had derived most benefit from the Homeric hymns, especially those to Demeter and Aphrodite.

—Leo XIII. is the doyen of the Catholic episcopate. He received his episcopal consecration in 1843, and there is no Bishop living whose consecration is so old. It has rarely happened that the Pope was the oldest Bishop in the Catholic world.

—The Archbishop of Canterbury's choice of a third English Bishop for Japan—to be called Bishop of Hokkaido—has fallen on a Cambridge scholar, the Rev. Philip Kemball Fyson, Principal of the Theological College at Osaka, who has been in Japan since 1873.

—Lieutenant-General George Digby Barker, the new Governor of the Bermudas, is sixty-four years of age. He served in the Persian campaign of 1857, was at the relief of Lucknow during the Indian Mutiny, and has commanded the British troops in China.

—Oliver Caswel, a blind and deaf mute, to whom Dickens devoted several pages of his "American Notes," died not long ago at Conanicut, R. I. When Dom Pedro visited Newport some years ago, he sent for Caswel and presented him with a gold souvenir.

—The Empress Frederick of Germany will spend a large part of the next two years in England. She will become, it is said, the tenant of Ditton Park, the late Duke of Buccleuch's beautiful old place near Windsor, now belonging to Lord Montagu, of Beaulieu.

—Mr. Gladstone, in a recent speech to a gathering of his neighbors, said: "I am a Scotchman by blood. I am a Lancashireman by birth. I am a kind of Londoner by living so long there. I belong to most parts of the country, but my wife, as most of you know, is a good Welshwoman, and I think that to a great extent has infected me."

—The World's Proctor Memorial Association has announced that it will erect the largest observatory in the world on the summit of Mount San Miguel, near San Diego, Cal., as a memorial to the celebrated astronomer and author, Richard A. Proctor. The Association was organized some years ago in California, but it is proposed to make the observatory of an international character, and secure, if possible, the co-operation of the leading Governments of the world. The intention is to equip the institution with the largest telescopes ever constructed, the first one to have lenses five times the size of the Lick and four times that of the Yerkes telescope; if it proves a success, still more powerful instruments will be constructed on the sectional-lens principle, invented by Astronomer Gathman, of Chicago. Mount San Miguel comprises about 12,000 acres, and has an elevation of 3,600 feet.

—The "Christian World," of London, says:

> On Tuesday (April 21) Dr. James Martineau entered upon his ninety-second year. With physical powers hardly diminished, save for a growing difficulty of hearing, during the past decade, with undimmed spirits and intellect, and with unflagging interest in the questions which agitate his younger fellows, the venerable teacher becomes, perhaps, rather more averse than has been his wont to personal publicity; and his wishes on this head are, of course, implicitly obeyed by many friends and devoted admirers. He spent his birthday, as usual, quietly at home. During the day a quantity of beautiful flowers and many kind letters and messages of congratulation were delivered at 35 Gordon Square. Among the latter was a telegram sent, on the motion of Professor J. Estlin Carpenter, from a meeting of the Ministers' Institute, held at Manchester College, Oxford, on the same afternoon. Later in the day Principal Drummond received a reply from Dr. Martineau thanking the brethren for their "gracious remembrance and benediction."

False Economy

Is practiced by people who buy inferior articles of food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Infant Health is the title of a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Sent free by New York Condensed Milk Co., N. Y.

THE STAMP OF QUALITY

The Liberty

When you see it on your wheel, you know you have the best

THE LIBERTY CYCLE CO
4 Warren Street, New York City

STAMPED STEEL CEILINGS

DECORATIVE, DURABLE, AND BEST

for Dwellings, Churches, or Business Houses. Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue.

H. S. NORTHROP, 29 Cherry St., N.Y.

In making Soups

Always use

Cudahy's
Rex Brand
Extract of Beef

add a rich, delicious

FLAVOR

The Cudahy Pharmaceutical Co.
South Omaha, Neb.

A Painted Roof is painted best with DIXON'S Silica Graphite PAINT. Best results at least cost—lasts 15 yrs. Tell you more about it if you'll write us.

Jos. Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City, N. J.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

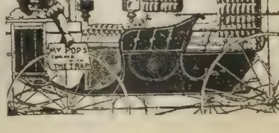
DIABETES FLOUR

Also Gluten Dyspepsia Flour, Barley Crystals, and Patent Biscuit Cake and Pastry Flour.

Unrivaled in America or Europe.

Pamphlets and Baking Samples Free.

Write Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.



MORRIS WOODHULL
Factory, DAYTON, O.
N. Y. Store, 366 Canal St.
Largest Variety
Traps, Surreys, etc.
Send for Catalogue.
High grade only
"Imperial" the latest

Recreation Department

It will give The Outlook Company much pleasure to assist you in planning your

Summer Outing

if you will write stating fully what you desire. No charge is made for this service.

Suggestions for planning a vacation or a trip anywhere in the world; printed information, if issued, concerning any Transportation Line, any Tour, any Hotel, or any Pleasure or Health Resort in any part of the world, will be sent on request, without charge, to any Outlook reader.

Address Recreation Department, The Outlook, 13 Astor Place, New York.

Hotel Proprietors

If you want the Best Service at Lowest Rates, send your orders for advertising to

HICKS'

Newspaper Advertising Agency

(WM. HICKS, Prop'r)

Vanderbilt Building, 132 Nassau St., N. Y.

Estimates furnished on application

For Ocean Travel, the Mountains, Yachting, and Camping

THE

Kenwood Rug

is an indispensable part of the experienced traveler's outfit. Light, attractive, and comfortable. Easily adjusted. Dealers sell them, or Illustrated Booklet and samples of materials FREE.

THE KENWOOD MILLS, Albany, N. Y.

FREE Outing Clothing Book, beautifully illustrated. Shows 1896 Styles. Only book on fashionable Outing clothing issued. Send 2c. stamp for Book F. WHITE DUCK TROUSERS by mail, post prepaid, $1.50. Send leg and waist measure; allow for 2-inch roll at bottom. Description.—Our trousers are made of extra quality Duck in the best manner; side, watch, and hip pockets; taped seams; wide hem on bottom and straps on waistband for belt. All hand-finished. Buy direct and save retailers' big profits. H. S. LOMBARD, Outfitter, 22, 24, 26 Merchants Row, Boston, Mass.

£ CHEQUES

of the Cheque Bank, London, are the best for Travelers Abroad. Send for circular which tells why. Cashed all over the world by Agents, Hotels, Shops, Bankers, etc. Each holder has His Own Bank Account, draws his own cheques, and saves time and money. Frederick W. Perry, General Agt., 2 Wall Street, New York.

ROAD MAPS

Of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, R. I., Conn.; these maps are handsomely colored, and show all the roads and points of interest; for sale by the dealers, or sent by mail by the publishers; price, 25 and 50 cents; send for catalogue. GEO. H. WALKER & CO., Lithographers, 160 Tremont Street, Boston.

GREAT SOUTHERN & WESTERN RAILWAY.

The Overland Route between America and Europe.

IRELAND

Queenstown—Cork, Blarney Castle, Glengarriff, Lakes of Killarney, Dublin. Special trains run from Queenstown in connection with American steamers. Tickets issued in New York are good for three months, allowing stop-over privileges.

Baggage checked New York to London.

For descriptive folders, tickets, tours, etc., apply to

C. A. BARATTONI, Gen'l Agt. 852 Broadway, New York.

EUROPE

Visitors to Europe are invited to visit our Branch Establishment at Avenue de l'Opera, 36 bis, Paris, and Nos. 221 and 221a Regent Street, W., London.

TIFFANY & Co.

UNION SQUARE
NEW YORK

EIGHT BOYS Bicycle Tour

Ireland England Scotland Mr. JOHN HALL JONES (Harvard Law School) and Mr. H. A. EATON ('93) wish to complete a party of eight boys for a bicycle and walking tour of the British Islands. Leave New York, "Majestic," July 1; arrive N. Y. Sept. 25. Terms, $550. Mr. Jones (27) and Mr. Eaton (25) have traveled abroad, taught and managed boys. Mr. Jones refers to Dean Briggs, of Harvard, Prof. James Barr Ames, and Prof. C. E. Norton. Mr. Eaton refers to Prof. F. G. Peabody, D.D., the Dean of Harv. Div. School, and Prof. Charles Eliot Norton. Apply to Mr. J. H. JONES, Harv. Univ., Cambridge, Mass.

EUROPE

A limited party will sail June 27th, on Steamship "Werra," of the North German Lloyd Line, for a tour of Sixty-five Days, visiting Gibraltar, Genoa, Pisa, Rome, Naples, Capri, Sorrento, Pompeii, Florence, Venice, Milan, Lucerne, Interlaken, Grindenwald, Lauterbrunnen, Berne, Paris, London, Liverpool. Price of tour, $475. For itineraries apply to

M. D. Frazar & Co. Globe Building, BOSTON, MASS.

Eight Other Attractive Tours

THIRTY Excursions to Europe. Ocean tickets by all lines. Send for "Tourist Gazette." Holy Land excursion leaves Sept. 8. Round the world party starts Oct. 1. F. C. CLARK, 111 Broadway, New York.

EUROPE Ideal Tour. "Umbria," June 27th. "City of Rome," July 4th. Best Tour, at low rates. Or Ocean Passage alone. Send to H. A. TODD, Corona (L. I.), N. Y.

EUROPE, 1896

11th SEASON

38 Days, all expenses $175
66 " " " $400

Circulars upon application.

ELIAS BROOKINGS, 54 Madison Ave., Springfield, Mass.

Eleventh Select European Party

JUNE 18—LAND OF THE MIDNIGHT SUN AND CENTRAL EUROPE. Exceptional advantages. Strictly first-class. Itineraries, etc., of Mrs. M. A. CROSLEY, 97 Rodney St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

SAILS JUNE 24. $575. Comprehensive European Tour of 64 days; very finest appointments; every expense included. Compare and decide. Itinerary, &c., of Rev. F. A. GRAY, Nashua, N.H.

EUROPEAN TOURS

Limited party, personally conducted by Dr. and Mrs. Paine, now forming. Unequaled arrangements. Terms reasonable. Address H. S. PAINE, M.D., Glens Falls, N. Y.

Europe

International Navigation Company's Lines

SAILING EVERY WEDNESDAY

From Piers 14 and 15, North River, New York (foot of Fulton St.)

AMERICAN LINE

NEW YORK—SOUTHAMPTON (London—Paris)

St Louis. . .	June 3, 10 A.M.
Berlin (Sat.)	June 6, 10 A.M.
St Paul. . . .	June 10, 10 A.M.
Paris (Sat.)	June 13, 10 A.M.
New York,	June 17, 10 A.M.
St Louis . .	June 24, 10 A.M.
Ohio . . Sat.	June 27, 10 A.M.
St Paul.	July 1, 10 A.M.
Paris . . (Sat.)	July 4, 10 A.M.
New York . .	July 8, 10 A.M.
St Louis . . .	July 15, 10 A.M.
St Paul. . . .	July 22, 10 A.M.
New York . .	July 29, 10 A.M.
Paris	Aug. 5, 10 A.M.
St Louis . . .	Aug. 12, 10 A.M.
St Paul. . . .	Aug. 19, 10 A.M.

RED STAR LINE

NEW YORK—ANTWERP

Westernland,	Jne. 3, 12 noon
Berlin (Sat.)	June 6, 10 A.M.
Southwark,	June 10, 9:30 A.M.
Noordland,	June 17, 12 noon
Friesland . .	June 24, 12 noon
Kensington . .	July 1, 2 P.M.
Westernland,	July 8, 12 noon
Southwark,	July 15, 1:30 P.M.
Berlin.	July 22, 12 noon
Noordland,	July 29, 12 noon

INTERNATIONAL NAVIGATION COMPANY

6 Bowling Green, New York

305-307 Walnut St., Philadelphia.
143 La Salle St., Chicago.
609 Market St. (Grand Hotel Bldg.), San Francisco.

---

85 Days in Europe

Four vacancies in limited party to visit England, France, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, Gibraltar. Personally escorted by Prof. CAMILLE THURWANGER, 31 Pierce Bldg., Boston.

DR. CHENEY'S PARTY

TO EUROPE. (9th season.) Personally conducted by O. D. Cheney, M.D., and wife, of Haverhill, Mass. Limited to 25. 78 days. Cunard steamer, June 27.

KIMBALL'S TOURS

in Europe (8th season). Limited party sails June 24, on "St. Louis." Moderate price, comprehensive route. EDWIN C. KIMBALL, 56 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

FOREIGN HOTELS

Austria

European Summer Resort

INNSBRUCK, TYROL, AUSTRIA

1,900 feet above the sea, with, dry, bracing climate; center for Coaching Trips and Excursions of all kinds; fine university, hospital, &c.

HOTEL TIROL (Open all the year.) Large, airy, sunny rooms, well furnished; superior cuisine; modern conveniences. Best references. Illustrated pamphlets on application. CARL LANDSEE, Prop'r.

England

Prince of Wales Lake Hotel

GRASMERE, ENGLAND

ENGLISH LAKES

HOME AND BURIAL PLACE OF THE POET WORDSWORTH

Strongly Recommended by Dr. Lyman Abbott

3 hours from Liverpool, 4 from Chester, 7 from London, 4 from Edinburgh or Glasgow. Most central for breaking journey going or returning from Scotland. Send to the Recreation Department for further information.

CROWN HOTEL

Scarborough, Eng.

Occupying the finest position in this beautiful seaside resort. Electric lights and bells throughout. Continental entrance lounge newly added. Terms on application. DOUGLAS GORDON (late of the Gordon Hotels, Lim.).

(For other advertisements in this department see following pages.)

England

CHESTER, ENGLAND QUEEN HOTEL

First-Class Hotel, connected with the General Railway by covered Way. Lift. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

Stratford-on-Avon, England Golden Lion Hotel

This favorite Inn was known in Shakespeare's time as "Ye Peacocke Inn," 1613. JOHN FRY, Prop.

Germany

Munich, Germany
"Bayerischer Hof" (BAVARIA)

Most fashionable Hotel

250 ROOMS & SALOONS

Electric Light, Lift, etc. Moderate terms.
Prop're, TH. SEIF$^{we.}$ Director, H. SCHLENK.

Holland

HOLLAND
AMSTERDAM
AMSTEL HOTEL

The largest hotel in Amsterdam. Strongly recommended to families. Every moderate comfort. Moderate prices

Italy

Lake of Como, Italy

GRAND HOTEL BELLAGIO
AND DEPENDANCE
HOTEL VILLA SERBELLONI

One of the finest Hotels in Europe. The most beautiful site on the Italian Lakes. Perfect sanitary arrangements Electric light. Telegraph in the hotel. L. BREITSCHMID, P.

Switzerland

Hotel Mont-Fleuri
TERRITET MONTREUX
LAKE OF GENEVA

600 Meters Above the Sea

First-class Hotel; most delightful and healthy situation; splendid view over the lake and the Alps; highly recommended to American families; summer and winter residence; lift, electric lights; moderate terms; omnibus at station Territet.
Circulars of The Outlook.

LUCERNE, SWITZERLAND
Hotel d'Angleterre

First class; lift; finest situation in Lucerne; arrangement de pension; prices moderate; opens April 1st. F. HEFFEN, Prop.

INTERLAKEN, SWITZERLAND
Hotel AND Pension St. George

Situated directly on the main promenade, opposite the park and the mountains. Cable-cars connect with steamboats and railroads. Highly recommended. C. LICHTENBERGER.

TRAVEL

SUMMER HOMES
IN VERMONT AND ON THE SHORES OF LAKE CHAMPLAIN

A NEW illustrated book, describing this unequaled summer resort section, offering the BEST TABLE BOARD, hospitable people, outdoor pleasures, fishing, boating, or perfect rest. Climate and scenery unsurpassed. Prices from $5 per week upwards.

Mailed free, on receipt five cents postage, on application to

A. W. ECCLESTONE, or S. W. CUMMINGS,
S.P.A., 353 Broadway, New York. G.P.A., St. Albans, Vt.

Summer Homes

in the Southern Berkshire and Litchfield Hills, along the Philadelphia, Reading, and New England Railroad

Handsomely illustrated book of 184 pages, giving full information, free at offices of DODD'S or WESTCOTT'S Express Co.'s in New York or Brooklyn, or will be mailed on receipt of 4 cents postage to W. J. MARTIN, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, Hartford, Conn.

MICHIGAN SUMMER RESORTS

REACHED BY THE POPULAR

CHICAGO AND WEST MICHIGAN RAILWAY

Mackinac Island
Petoskey, Bay View, Charlevoix, Traverse City

IDEAL SUMMER RESORTS

Pure Air
Cool Nights
Good Hotels
All the Comforts of Home

THROUGH SLEEPING-CARS are run from

CHICAGO—Via Michigan Central, C. & W. M., and G. R. & I.
DETROIT—Via Detroit, Lansing & Nor., and G. R. & I.
ST. LOUIS—Via Vandalia Line, C. & W. M., and G. R. & I.

TOURIST TICKETS AT REDUCED RATES

are sold by all ticket agents. Ask your home agent. Send for "Tours in Michigan." Beautifully illustrated.

GEO. DE HAVEN, Genl. Passr. Agt., Grand Rapids, Mich

Travel

Summer in the Country

Are you looking for some place which combines Health, Pleasure, Economy?

If so, send 6 cents for postage, or call and get free at offices below the illustrated book, "Summer Homes." It gives list of hotels, farm and boarding houses, with and upward, in Sullivan, Ulster, and Delaware Counties, on the main line and branches of the New York, Ontario, and Western Railway; 2,000 feet above the sea; location, prices, fares, &c., all in it. In New York, at No. 2 Battery Place; 165, 171, 371, 944, and 1323 Broadway; 737 6th Ave.; 134 East 125th St.; 273 West 125th St.; 251 Columbus Ave.; 92 East 14th St.; and 13 Astor Place. Ticket Offices foot of Franklin and West 42d Sts.; in Brooklyn, 4 Court St.; 860 Fulton St.; 98 Broadway; "Eagle" office, 249 Manhattan Av., Greenpoint. ILLUSTRATED HOMES. containing half-tone reproductions from photographs of 535 of the hotels, farm and boarding houses advertised in "Summer Homes," can be purchased of any ticket agent, price 25c. J. C. Anderson, General Passenger Agent, 56 Beaver St., N. Y.

BOARD AT $5 PER WEEK

On May 29 and 30 excursion tickets for one fare will be sold at 371 Broadway and ferry offices, giving an opportunity of personally selecting a summer home, and also enjoying a day's fishing in this delightful region; tickets good returning June 1st.

At Fallsburgh Station free carriage meets trains for River View House, Woodbourne, N. Y. on May 30th. MARTIN MERRITT.

THE Wabash Railroad

Forms an important link with all lines from the East to CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, KANSAS CITY, OMAHA, DENVER, SAN FRANCISCO, and all points West, Northwest and Southwest. . . . .

The ONLY through Sleeping Car Line from New York and Boston to St. Louis via Niagara Falls.

Leave New York, Grand Central Station, daily, 3:00 P.M.

Leave Boston, Fitchburg Railroad Station, daily, 6:00 P.M.

Through sleeping cars from New York and Boston to Chicago: leave New York, West Shore R. R., daily, 6:00 P.M. and 8 P.M.; leave Boston, Fitchburg R. R., daily, 7:00 P.M.

Stop-Off Privilege at Niagara Falls from One to Ten Days.

All meals served in Dining Cars. Palace Sleeping Cars, Parlor Cars. Also Reclining Chair Cars (seats free) are run in all through trains.

ALL TRANSFERS IN UNION DEPOTS

For information in regard to rates. etc., apply to H. B. McClellan, Gen. East. Ag't,
387 Broadway, New York

J. RAMSEY, JR., Vice-Pres. & Gen'l Mgr.
C. S. CRANE, Gen'l Pass. & Ticket Agt.
ST. LOUIS.

Are you going to the MOUNTAINS or SEASHORE? If so, take a Camping-House Perfect protection. Easily transported. See adv. on page 1042

Travel

FAMOUS Summer Resorts

OF COLORADO,

including the wonderful Gold Mining Camps of

CRIPPLE CREEK AND VICINITY,

ARE BEST REACHED VIA THE

MISSOURI PACIFIC RAILWAY

"Colorado Short Line"

FROM ST. LOUIS OR KANSAS CITY

Through Pueblo (the Pittsburg of the West).

Elegant through car service to PUEBLO, COLORADO SPRINGS, and DENVER, connecting with the Rocky Mountain Routes to the Pacific Coast

Weekly Tourist cars from the East to Pacific Coast, without change. Excursion Tickets at reduced rates.

For descriptive and illustrated matter, rates of fare, and further information, address the company's agents or WM. E. HOYT, General Eastern Passenger Agent, 391 Broadway, N. Y. City.

C. G. WARNER, Vice-President.
W. B. DODDRIDGE, Gen'l Manager.
H. C. TOWNSEND, Gen'l Pass. & Tkt. Agt.
ST. LOUIS

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK

Select parties will leave Buffalo, Cincinnati, Chicago, Detroit, and Toledo in July. Two weeks' tour, all expenses included. Send for programme.
"GATES' TOURS," Toledo, Ohio.

TRAVELERS' R. R. GUIDE Formerly Appletons'.

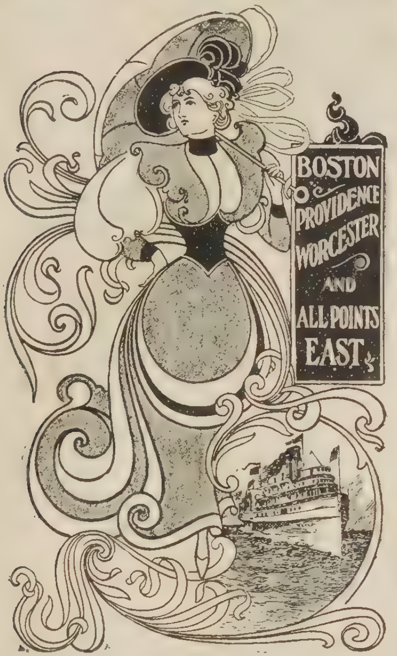
R. R. Maps and Time-Tables. Conveniently Indexed. Monthly—25 cents. 24 Park Place, N. Y.

Travel

Do You Travel East?

If so, you will save time and money, and add to your comfort, by taking one of the Steamers of the

PROVIDENCE AND STONINGTON STEAMSHIP CO.



PROVIDENCE LINE

THE Route between New York, Boston, Providence, Worcester, and all New England. Shortest Rail ride to Boston.

First-Class Music, Main Deck Dining Rooms

Steamers "Connecticut" and "Massachusetts" leave New Pier 36, North River, near foot of Canal St., daily, except Sunday, at 5:30 P.M.

STONINGTON LINE

Only direct Sound Route between New York, Narragansett Pier, Watch Hill. From New Pier 36, North River, New York, at 6 P.M., daily.

J.W.MILLER, President. W.DeW.DIMOCK, Ass't Gen. Passr. Agt. O.H.BRIGGS, Gen. Passr. Agt.

MICHIGAN'S GREAT SUMMER RESORTS

TRAVERSE CITY,
Ne-ah-ta-wan-ta,
Omena,
Charlevoix,
PETOSKEY,
Bay View,
Roaring Brook,
Wequetonsing,
Harbor Springs,
Harbor Point,
Oden-Oden,
MACKINAC ISLAND,
Upper Peninsula Points.

are reached most comfortably and quickly by the excellent train service of the Grand Rapids and Indiana R.R.

TOURIST TICKETS ARE ON SALE JUNE 1st TO SEPT. 30th, RETURN LIMIT OCT. 31st

MAPS AND DESCRIPTIVE
OF THE

Northern Michigan Resort Region

Time-cards, and full information may be had by application to ticket agents or addressing C. L. LOCKWOOD, G.P. & T.A., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Bicycle Tour for Boys

Parents interested in a four weeks' tour for their boys in Southern Berkshire next July may apply for itinerary and terms to GEO. A. HOADLEY, A.M., Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Pa.

SUMMER COTTAGES

TO RENT—On the ocean, at Wainscott, East Hampton, L.I., summer cottage, fully furnished; 14 rooms; bath-houses on ocean; pier on lake; surf-bathing, rowing, sailing, golf and tennis on place. Address
Mrs. W. D. WHITNEY, New Haven, Conn.

FOR RENT.—A furnished cottage of eleven rooms, besides laundry, bath-room, halls, etc.; delightfully situated on high ground. Sanitary conditions the best. For particulars address Box 407, Litchfield, Conn.

Burlington Route

VACATION TOURS
TO Colorado, Utah
AND Yellowstone Park

We desire to announce a series of five Tours through the wonderlands of America. They will be under the charge of an experienced agent and will leave Chicago and St. Louis on the following dates:

Tuesday, June 23. Fifteen days. Through the Rocky Mountains and New Mexico. Cost, $150.

Tuesday, July 7. Nineteen days. Through the Black Hills and Yellowstone Park. Cost, $175.

Tuesday, July 14. Twenty days. Through Colorado, Salt Lake City, and Yellowstone Park. Cost, $180.

Tuesday, July 21. Fifteen days. A complete tour of Colorado, the Switzerland of America. Cost, $130.

Tuesday, July 28. Eighteen days. Through Yellowstone Park and the Black Hills. Cost, $175.

The price of a ticket as given above includes all expenses; railroad and sleeping-car fare, hotel and livery bills, etc.

YELLOWSTONE PARK STAGE

The equipment, service, and general character of these Tours will be strictly first-class in every particular.

Descriptive pamphlet will be sent on application to T. A. Grady, Manager Burlington Route Tours, 211 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., or E. J. Swords, 385 Broadway, New York.

Hartford & New York Transportation Company

"HARTFORD LINE"

The Only Direct Passenger Line to

HARTFORD, MIDDLETOWN, GOODSPEEDS, EAST HADDAM, ESSEX, LYME, SAYBROOK POINT, FENWICK and Intermediate Landings on the

IDYLLIC CONNECTICUT RIVER

Connecting with Railroads for Springfield, Farmington, Unionville, Tariffville, New Hartford, Winsted, and Norfolk and for all points in

VERMONT, NEW HAMPSHIRE, THE WHITE MOUNTAINS and GREEN MOUNTAINS

Twin Screw Steel Steamers "MIDDLETOWN" and "HARTFORD" leave Pier 24, East River, New York, and foot State St., Hartford, daily except Sunday, at 5:00 P.M. Fare between NEW YORK and HARTFORD, $1.50, including Berth; Round Trip, good for 6 days, $2.25; Round Trip, good for season, $2.50; Staterooms, $1.00 each; Meals, 50 cts. ach.

GEORGE C. HILLS, Genl. Frt. & Pass. Agent, Pier 24, East River, New York.

Summer Cottages

Two for the Summer

MARBLEHEAD, MASS.

FURNISHED COTTAGE, Ocean Ave., near hotel and bathing beach, 10 rooms, bath-room and laundry. Well built, warm and dry; six chambers.

NONQUITT, MASS.

ALCOTT COTTAGE. Enlarged and rebuilt. Parlor (38.6x15), dining-room, kitchen, bath-room, and six chambers, furnished. Near post-office, telephone, and steamer landing; fine view of Buzzard's Bay. Good bathing. For particulars address

ALCOTT PRATT
3 Somerset Street, Boston.

WANTED for Summer Months A SMALL FURNISHED COTTAGE

For occupancy by four ladies, in White Mts. (N. H.) Region, Tamworth, Conway, or Jackson preferred. Address M. G. FRENCH, 225 Bishop St., New Haven, Conn.

LITTLEJOHN'S ISLAND CASCO BAY, MAINE
One hour from Portland

Well-furnished cottage of seven rooms to rent for $125. Address Mrs. R. M. SMITH, Williamsburgh, Virginia.

Summer Cottages

MT. DESERT—Seal Harbor.—Furnished houses for $175, $250, $350. Hot-water bath in second story. W. M. GRISWOLD, Cambridge, Mass

THE OWNER of a pleasant place at Mountain Station, N. J., will give rent for the summer to a gentleman and wife in exchange for board. References exchanged. Address S. H. HOWE, 85 Worth St., New York City.

THE CATSKILL COTTAGE OF MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD
(the "Eagle's Nest"), at Twilight Park, Haines Falls, New York, is offered for rent for the coming season. It is two thousand feet above the sea, and commands a fine view of the Hudson River Valley and the Berkshire Hills. It is near the Squirrel Inn. Six rooms, furnished. A photograph may be seen at the office of The Outlook. Also, at Twilight, a new twelve-room cottage; artistic; fully furnished; finely located, near Club-House; to private family only; photographs. For particulars apply to MARY A. LATHBURY, 17 Webster Place, East Orange, New Jersey.

LAKE GEORGE Furnished Cottage, also Studio to rent or for sale. Near hotels and station. Piazzas; ice; marketing daily at door. Address WILSON, 64 Clark St. Brooklyn, N. Y.

FURNISHED COTTAGES TO RENT
at reasonable prices; boating, bathing, and fine roads. Free illustrated catalogue. JEREMIAH ROBBINS, Babylon, L. I.

YONKERS and Vicinity
Choice properties, rent, sale, or exchange.
GEORGE A. FLAGG, 59 William St., N. Y.

FOR RENT—AT HOT SPRINGS, VA.
Large Stone House with all modern conveniences; with or without farm of a thousand acres. Apply to L. DUNN, 220 New Jersey Ave., S.E., Washington, D.C.

(For other advertisements in this department see following pages.)

SUMMER CAMPS

ADIRONDACKS! CAMP CEDAR!! A Summer School for boys under 16 years. July 1st to Sept. 9th. Study optional. Address
E. D. MONTANYÉ, Trenton, N. J.

An

Adirondack Club

furnishing to its members and their families a pleasant summer home in the best hunting and fishing region at very moderate expense, wishes a few more members. Address
THE IRONDEQUOIT CLUB,
Care Recreation Department, The Outlook.

ADIRONDACKS. Lake Placid

FRENCH RECREATION CLASS Also College Preparation.
FOR GIRLS.—Delightful combination of health and pleasure, with a profitable vacation. Mademoiselle DEBRAY-LONGCHAMP, 105 West 74th St., New York.

CHAMPLAIN CAMP FOR BOYS

FOR INFORMATION ADDRESS
J. J. MACVICAR
Principal Montclair Military Academy
MONTCLAIR, N. J.

CAMP ACADIA, for Boys Lake Winnipesaukee, N. H.

Best of references. Finest advantages on the whole lake. Athletics and mountain excursions a specialty. Study optional. Illustrated circular free. Address Rev. J. L. QUIMBY, Gardiner, Me.

BOYS' SUMMER CAMP

Lake Winnepesaukee, White Mountains, N.H.
References: Pres. Dwight of Yale, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew. Elaborate Equipment. Tutoring (optional). 20-page illustrated prospectus free. Address
Rev. JOHN M. DICK, B.D. (Yale), New Haven, Conn.

HOTELS AND RESORTS

Canada

Delightfully situated on shore of Lake Ontario, at the mouth of the Niagara River

QUEEN'S ROYAL HOTEL

Opens June 15th and Cottages

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, CANADA

Picturesque golf links. Tennis, beach bathing, black bass fishing, boating. Beautiful wheeling country. Thirty minutes from Niagara Falls.
Latest sanitation Rates reasonable
Send for illustrated pamphlet.
McGAW & WINNETT, Queen's Hotel, Toronto.

"The Pentanguishene"

PENETANG, ONT. (Muskoka District). Canada's Great Summer Hotel. Electric lighted; every convenience. Fine tennis courts. Fishing and boating unexcelled. Open June 8th. PATTERSON & PAISLEY.

ACADIA HOTEL

TRACADIE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND
Unrivaled as a health and pleasure resort. Boating, fishing, and surf-bathing. House opens June 15. Send for circulars. J. C. HALL, Manager.

Colorado

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.: The Antlers

Illustrated book, describing Colorado Springs, sent on request by E. BARNETT, Proprietor.

Connecticut

HAUTBOY HILL FARM

CORNWALL HOLLOW, CONN.
Farm-house and cottage to rent. Shade, running water, no mosquitoes. Ice, vegetables, milk supplied at low rates. Telephone and telegraph connections.

EASTFORD, CONN.

Country board for teachers. Correspond with Mrs. Hine, 121 York st., New Haven, Conn.

THE POCOTOPAUG

Near Lake Pocotopaug, East Hampton, Conn. Homelike house; clean rooms; good beds; excellent table; fine boating and fishing. For circulars address (Mrs.) C. B. BUELL.

Connecticut

A REFINED, QUIET FAMILY, without children, and having highest references, can have a delightful home with a private family; very large, cool old stone mansion; every modern convenience and comfort; hot and cold water; sanitary plumbing and heating; beautiful grounds and 50-acre farm in finest part of noted Old Enfield Street, near station on main line New Haven Road. Address HAZARD PLACE, Enfield, Conn.

CREST VIEW SANITARIUM GREENWICH, CT.

Enlarged, improved, first-class in all respects; home comforts. H. M. HITCHCOCK, M.D.

CHELSEA INN and COTTAGES

Hampton Hill, Conn., Windham Co. Location on one of the highest and most picturesque hill-tops in the State; connecting farm supplies fresh vegetables, milk and cream; all kinds of berries; a great variety of wild flowers. Cottages to rent in part or entire; rates from $8 to $12 per week. Parties seeking a cool, quiet, healthful and restful place in the country, write for circular.
F. E. WHITTAKER.

PEQUOT HOUSE AND COTTAGES

NEW LONDON, CONN.
Will Open on May 30
"A delightful combination of seashore and country life at the Pequot."
A number of furnished cottages, with hotel service and board, to let for the season.
For terms and circulars address
BLANCHARD & HAGER
NEW LONDON, CONN.

WEANTINAUG INN New Milford, Conn.

Under new management. Accommodations for coaching parties. OSCAR FLORENCE, Manager.

Maine

BAR HARBOR, MAINE RODICK HOUSE

300 rooms. Rates, $2 to $4 per day. Season rates on application. ALBERT W. BEE, Lessee and Manager.

"THE BAY VIEW" Ferry Beach, Bay View,

Saco, Me.—A unique summer resort; seashore and country combined. Pure spring water; perfect drainage; accommodates 200. Send for illustrated booklet.
Mrs. E. MANSON & SON, Owners and Managers.

AN ENCHANTED ISLE

HOTEL MADOCKAWANDO and Annex
on Heron Isle the Enchanted, will open June 20th. For circulars address E. ROGERS, North Adams, Mass., until June fifth; after, to Heron Island, Maine.

PARKER HOUSE

KENNEBUNKPORT, MAINE
CHARLES S. PATTEN - - - - - - - Proprietor
Send for illustrated booklet

KITTERY POINT, MAINE

PEPPERRELL HOUSE

Four miles from Portsmouth, N. H. A pleasant and healthy summer resort. Seashore and country combined. Safe boating. Good fishing. For descriptive circular terms, etc., address E. F. SAFFORD, Prop.

THE POCAHONTAS

Gerrish Island,
Kittery Point, Me.
H. A. COBB,
Manager.

Superbly located upon ocean. Beautiful woods close at hand. Every summer pastime. Finely situated shore land for sale. Furnished cottages to rent.

Blue Hill Inn

Near Mount Desert, Blue Hill, Me.
WILL OPEN JUNE 20
Perfect in all appointments; electric lights; pure spring water; table unexcelled—of a New England type. Rates, $10 to $15, single; $18 to $25, double. For further particulars address, until June 15th, H. L. BANKS, Manager, care Marlborough Hotel, Broadway & 36th St., New York.

Maine

THE LOOKOUT

(ON ISRAEL'S HEAD)
New house; very high; large rooms with grand ocean and country views; fine beach and picturesque cliffs.
GEO. H. LITTLEFIELD, Ogunquit, Me.

A FEW vacancies at a seaside farm. Fresh milk, cream, vegetables a specialty. Fishing from rocks, bathing, boating, and a fine view of the ocean. A fine cottage connecting. Address Capt. M. L. STAPLES, Ogunquit, Me.

THE HIGH ROCK OGUNQUIT, ME.

The leading house. Good location; good beach; boating, bathing, fishing, and pine woods. J. H. Littlefield.

POPHAM BEACH, MAINE THE ROCKLEDGE

FINEST VIEW ON THE ATLANTIC COAST
A thoroughly modern first-class hotel. Excellent Cuisine, fine Orchestra, perfect drainage, grand beach and surf bathing. No hay fever. Rates reasonable. Address
J. D. FORSYTH, Mgr.

Ty'n-y-Coed

CAMPOBELLO ISLAND— PASSAMAQUODDY BAY

Beautiful scenery; gigantic cliffs; delightful drives; golf links. For rates, circulars, etc., address
JOHN A. SHERLOCK,
373 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

SEASIDE INN

SEAL HARBOR, Mt. Desert Island, Me.
Opens June 10. Send for ill. booklet and rates.
A. & J. CLEMENT.

A SELECT party of ladies and gentlemen can be accommodated with first-class board at a very pleasant farm-house. Facilities for driving, boating, and fishing; near church, post-office, and railroad; scenery and surroundings unsurpassed; pure spring water; invigorating air; large rooms. M. E. STEVENS, South Bridgton, Maine.

Hotel Sorrento

SORRENTO, MAINE

This Magnificent Hotel will open June 15 with first-class appointments throughout; electric lights, Tennis Courts, Bowling, Baseball, etc.; excellent livery and beautiful drives; Hay-Fever patients receive instant relief; boating and fishing unsurpassed. Special terms for the season. Ladies' orchestra. Also a lot of newly furnished cottages for rent. For terms, circulars, etc., address, until June 10th, 17 State St., Boston, Room 4; after which, Hotel Sorrento, Sorrento, Me.
CHARLES L. YORKE, Mgr.

"OCEAN HOUSE." Leading Hotel at York Beach, Maine, directly opposite surf bathing. Send for circular, which give attractive features; terms liberal; fine playgrounds for children; good table; bathing fine

PASSACONAWAY INN

OPEN JUNE FIRST
GILLIS & MURRAY, MANAGERS
York Cliffs, Maine, and 71 Broadway, New York.

Maryland

Hotel Chautauqua

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK GARRETT CO., MD.

Summit of the Alleghenies, 2,800 feet above tide water. Hotel situate adjoining the Auditorium and Hall of Philosophy; newly painted, papered, and equipped, and under new management. For circulars and terms, address
JOHN DUNHILL, Business Manager.

Massachusetts

BERKSHIRE Ashley Hill Cottage, in town of Mt. Washington. Elevated, healthful, cool. Spring water. Good accommodations for 25. Mrs. L. MELIUS, Alandar, Berkshire Co., Mass.

BERKSHIRE HILLS.—Intervale Farm Large rooms, shade, daily mail, trout fishing; fresh vegetables, fruit, cream, and eggs; piano. $5 and $6 per week. (Miss) E. S. ROCKWELL, Alford, Mass.

DR. RING'S SANATORIUM

8 miles from Boston. Arlington Heights, Mass.
For Change, Rest, Care, and Treatment

Powder Point Hall

and Cottages, DUXBURY, MASS.
Good boating, bathing, and shade-trees. Illustrated circular. "The Pilgrim Town of Duxbury."

"A LODGE IN SOME VAST WILDERNESS!"

Not that—but—

A LOG CABIN AT THE RANGELEYS

Affording the perfection of rest, retirement, and recreation, and reached via standard gauge, all-rail route, just open, through the picturesque valleys of the Androscoggin and Swift Rivers into the heart of the "forest primeval" and to the very center of these far-famed fishing resorts of Maine.

The Rumford Falls Line

BOSTON TO BEMIS
225 MILES IN 9 HOURS!

Log Passenger Station, Bemis, on Lake Mooselucmaguntic.

For full information apply to PORTLAND & RUMFORD FALLS R'Y., PORTLAND, ME.

or to RUMFORD FALLS & RANGELEY LAKES R.R., RUMFORD FALLS, ME.

Massachusetts

Hill's Mansion House Easthampton Mass.
First-class in all its appointments. Send for descriptive circular to WILLIAM HILL, Manager.

THE SURFSIDE

GLOUCESTER, MASS.
F. H. SAWYER, Proprietor

Situated on a beautiful beach; grand harbor and ocean view; picturesque scenery; good bathing, boating, fishing, and delightful drives; excellent cuisine; luxurious beds; perfect drainage; will reopen about June 1st. Everything new and clean. Send for circular.

BERKSHIRE HILLS

PECK'S INN

Van Deusenville Station, N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., BERKSHIRE DIVISION
SEASON, JUNE 1 TO NOV. 1. Address for terms, &c.,
PECK'S INN, Great Barrington, Mass.

The Nautilus Inn Hull, Mass.
Now open. Right on the ocean, 45 minutes from Boston by boat. Address E. WILLARD FROST, Prop.

THE PRESCOTT

Kings Beach, Mass.
GOOD ROADS FINE BATHING
and a comfortable summer resting-place near Boston. Address Mrs. F. H. GOULD, Lynn, Mass.

THE HESPERUS MAGNOLIA MASS.
Open June to Oct. Reduced rates in June and September. ORRA PAIGE, Propr.

By the Sea
The Magnolia
Magnolia, Mass.

One hour from Boston on the North Shore. Sea and country pleasures. All improvements. Accommodates 300. Book and rates of
H. W. PRIEST, Proprietor.

Marblehead Rockmere Point COVE COTTAGES
Will open Ninth Season. For health, pure air, fine views, unequaled. Prominent headland; grounds and beach for bathing, boating, and fishing private for our guests. Special rates for June. Address J. R. GILES.

Ocean House
Swampscott, Mass.

Open June 25. Situated on North Shore of Massachusetts Bay. Fine bathing, boating, driving, cycling. For booklet and all information address MEAD & BROOKS, Proprietors.

Massachusetts

HOTEL TUDOR Nahant, Mass.
OPEN JUNE TO OCTOBER
A hotel strictly of the First Class.
WILLIAM CATTO, Proprietor.

VERANDA HOUSE ISLAND OF NANTUCKET
Will open June 15th. High, healthful; fine ocean views. Pleasant, homelike house, accommodating about 100 guests. Mrs. S. G. DAVENPORT.

A Pleasant Summer Home at Northampton, Mass. Open for guests July 1, 1896. Broad verandas, open grates, gas, bath accommodations. For circulars address Mrs. R. E. ROBOTHAM, 24 Green St., Northampton, Mass.

CAPE COD
AWAY OUT TO SEA
Write to Highland House, North Truro, Mass.

LARGE, pleasant farmhouse, with piazzas, large rooms, good beds, excellent table, bath-room. (One mile from B. & A. Railroad.) Moderate prices. Address Box 155, North Wilbraham, Mass. References exchanged.

EAST BAY LODGE
Osterville, Mass. Cape Cod.
Write for descriptive pamphlet. N. H. BEARSE, Propr.

Turks Head Inn

ROCKPORT, MASS.

Extreme point of Cape Ann, overlooking Thatcher's Island. Fine sea views and bathing beach. Will open for the season in June. For plans and circulars address J. F. HARVEY, The Ericson, 373 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston.

The Winne-egan Baker's Island, Salem, Mass.
The most charming summer resort on our New England coast. Opens June 13. Send for illustrated booklet.
NATHAN R. MORSE, M.D., Prop'r.

Massachusetts

BERKSHIRE HILLS

THE GREYLOCK

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.

The best hotel, and the most beautiful village, in the Berkshires. Open May 15th. For circulars or rates address SEISER AND VINING, Proprietors.

New Hampshire

BARTLETT, N. H.

CAVE MOUNTAIN HOUSE

Very pleasantly located, right in the heart of White Mountains; within 12 miles of the famous Willey Slide, 15 miles of the Notch, and an easy day's trip to Mt. Washington; all modern improvements; accommodates 75; $7 to $12 per week; reduced rates for families remaining the full season. E. A. STEVENS, Bartlett, N. H.

The GRAMERCY THE WHITE MTS. BETHLEHEM, N.H.
1,600 feet above sea-level. Delightful summer home for families. Send for booklet. E. STIMPSON.

WHITE MOUNTAINS

BETHLEHEM, N. H.

Turner House and Farm Long and favorably known to summer tourists. Unsurpassed views of White Mountain Scenery. Large, airy rooms. For circular address J. N. TURNER & SON.

To HOTEL PROPRIETORS
If you want the Best Service at Lowest Rates, send your orders for advertising to HICKS'
NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING AGENCY
(WM. HICKS, PROPRIETOR)
Vanderbilt Building, 132 Nassau St., N. Y.
Estimates furnished on application.

(For other advertisements in this department see following pages.)

Western Maryland Railroad
The Picturesque Pen-Mar Route

and Short Line to Gettysburg Battle-Field

CONNECTIONS: From the South and Southwest via N. & W. R. R. at Hagerstown
From the West via B. & O. R. R. at Cherry Run, W. Va.
From the North and East via Penna. R. R. at Baltimore

SUMMERING IN THE BLUE RIDGE MOUNTAINS

Season 1896 Opens June 24

"A HAVEN OF REST, RECREATION, AND DIVERSION"

Amid the enchanting and inspiring scenery of the Blue Ridge Mountains, 72 miles west of Baltimore and 15 miles east of Hagerstown, and majestically located at an elevation of nearly 2,000 feet above tidewater. The Blue Mountain House commands a magnificent and unobstructed view of the world-famed Cumberland and Shenandoah Valleys, covering at a single glance a peep into four States and twenty-two counties. One can scarcely conceive a more delightful spot to while away the sultry days of summer. Here, among the forest-crowned peaks of the Blue Ridge, Nature robs the "heated term" of all its terrors, and enterprise and business-like management render every comfort and luxury readily available. The days are pleasant and truly enjoyable, and the mountain breezes, impregnated with the healthful and appetizing aroma of the forest, are refreshing and invigorating. In construction, appointment, and management, THE BLUE MOUNTAIN HOUSE justly holds its place among the most noted Summer resorts of the country Accommodations for 500 Guests. First-Class Appointments, Excellent Cuisine.

Address J. P. SHANNON, Mgr., until June 20, Carrollton Hote , Baltimore, Md. After June 20, Blue Mountain, Md.
Write for Western Maryland R. R. descriptive publications, "Gettysburg in War and in Peace," "Summer Boarding on Panoramic W. M. R. R. and Sites for Homes," MAILED FREE.

J. M. HOOD, General Manager. BALTIMORE, MD. B. H. GRISWOLD, Gen'l Passenger Agent.

New Hampshire

THE UPLANDS
AND COTTAGES, BETHLEHEM, N. H.
Located on the highest point in town; wide lawns thorough heating for late guests; accommodates 150.
Send for guide to Bethlehem. F. H. ABBOTT, Prop.

BRADFORD SPRINGS HOTEL
BRADFORD, N. H.
Capacity 150. $2.00 per day; $7.00 to $12.00 per week. Send for circulars. HENRY McCOY, Proprietor.

The Moosilauke
SITUATED AT
BREEZY POINT, N. H.

On the southern spur of Mt. Moosilauke, at an elevation of 1,700 feet, accommodates 100 guests. The house is heated by steam and open fires, is lighted by gas, and has on three sides piazzas twelve feet broad. Post-office in the house; telephone connection with the telegraph office at Warren. Best sanitary condition is secured by scientific plumbing. Entire immunity from hay fever. The air is pure and bracing, and the water from mountain springs has, by analysis, been pronounced absolutely pure. Prices very reasonable. Send for souvenir circular.
EDWARD B. WOODWORTH.

SENTER HOUSE
Centre Harbor, N. H.

On beautiful Lake Winnipesaukee. A modern hotel, well equipped. Excellent cuisine. Location offers all advantages of both mountain and lake. Fine bass fishing. Pure water supply from Belknap Spring; temperature of water, 44°. Write for illustrated booklet.
A. W. EAGER, Manager.

BLAIR'S HOUSE
J. C. BLAIR & SON
P. O. Address, BLAIR, N. H.
Also Managers
ASQUAM HOUSE
SHEPARD HILL
P. O. Address, HOLDERNESS, N. H.
Send for Circulars.

INTERVALE, N. H. BELLEVUE HOUSE
Open June 1. Fine views of the mountains. A pretty booklet is sent free. J. A. BARNES' SONS.

The Eagle Mt. House and Hall
JACKSON, N. H.
Opens for the season June 1st. The trout season in Jackson opens same date. This is a jolly house. Lots of young people, particularly young men. You can get an eight-page circular by addressing the Propr., C. E. GALE.

Are you going to the MOUNTAINS or SEASHORE?
If so, take a Camping-House Perfect protection. Easily transported. See adv. on page 1042

New Hampshire

Jackson, White Mountains, N. H.
The Iron Mountain House
Will open June 1. Special rates until July 15. Send for illustrated circular. W. A. MESERVE.

PLINY RANGE HOUSE
WHITE MOUNTAINS
GEO. W. CRAWFORD & SON, Jefferson Highland, N. H.

SOO-NIPI PARK LODGE Lake Sunapee, N. H.
Private hotel; 1,200 ft. above sea; modern improvements; home comforts and quiet; grounds, 400 acres; two miles lake shore; promenade pier; bracing climate; pine and balsam; safe boating; beach bathing; mountain drives; N. Y. physician. Rooms for May, June and July (height of salmon, trout, and bass fishing season). Address THEO. R. SHEAR, 29 Wall St., N. Y.

Chiswick Inn
White Mountains, Littleton, N. H.
Opens June 25th, 1896. Under new management. Delightful location, beautiful scenery. Prices reduced from last year, but house kept up to a high standard. For terms, etc., write B. BUTLER, Prop., Belchertown, Mass., until June 1st: after that date, Littleton, N. H.

MOUNT PLEASANT HOUSE
in the White Mountains, N. H.
OPENS JULY 1st
The new cottage opens June 15th, with single an double rooms at low rates. Parlor-cars from New York through by daylight. ANDERSON & PRICE, Mgrs. also of Hotel Ormond, Florida.

The Grand
Mont Vernon, N. H.
1,100 feet above the sea. Season June 25 to Oct. 1
HARRY A. EDGERLY, Proprietor
220 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.

North Conway N. H. EDGEWOOD COTTAGE
On a large farm a little out of the village; good views of the mountains, shade trees, large rooms, excellent table. Special rates by the season. GEO. F. WOLCOTT.

Sunset Hill House
WHITE MOUNTAINS, N. H.
OPENS JUNE FIRST
To give those who wish to go to the country early an opportunity to spend the most delightful month of the season in the midst of the finest scenery of the White Mountain region. Descriptive booklet sent on application to BOWLES & HOSKINS,
Sugar Hill, N. H.

New Hampshire

PROFILE HOUSE AND COTTAGES
WHITE MOUNTAINS, N. H.
OPENS JUNE 29. CLOSES OCTOBER 1.
Address Hotel Vendôme, Boston, or Profile House N. H. TAFT & GREENLEAF.

New Jersey

THE CHALFONTE
OCEAN FRONT, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. Sea-water baths in house. Elevator and every modern convenience. Send for illustrated booklet. E. ROBERTS' SONS.

THE IRVINGTON
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
A cheerful, homelike hotel on the Beach; excellent table; reasonable terms. CHAMBERS & HOOPES.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
THE SHELBURNE
On the Ocean Beach
Open throughout the year. Every convenience, including hot and cold sea-water baths, passenger elevator, etc. J. D. SOUTHWICK, Manager.

BERNARDSVILLE, N. J.
SOMERSET INN
AND COTTAGES Open June 3d
35 miles from New York, on the D., L. and W. R. R., in the Highlands of New Jersey, via Barclay or Christopher St. Ferry. GEO. W. TUTTLE, Manager.

Long Branch
West End Hotel and Cottages
Cottages open Thursday, June 11.
Hotel opens Thursday, June 25.
New and improved toilet and bath arrangements on every floor of the hotel. Plans can be seen and engagements made at the NEW YORK OFFICE, 52 BROADWAY (ROOM 39).
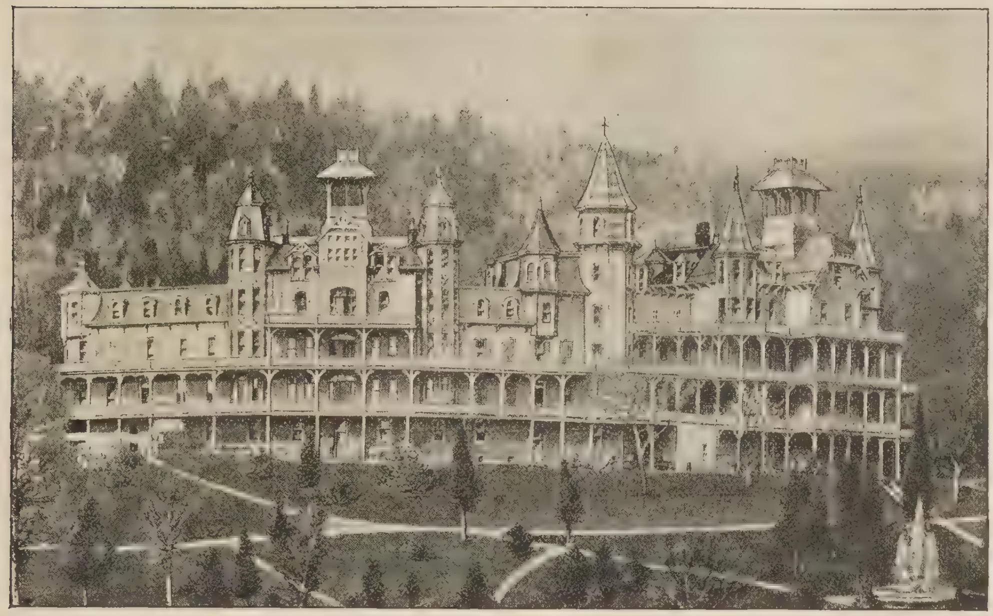
D. M. & W. E. HILDRETH, Proprietors.

OCEAN REST, Ocean City, New Jersey.—Directly on the beach; large porches; excellent bathing and good table. Terms, $5.00 to $7.00 per week; $1.00 to $1.50 per day. Mrs. S. E. SCHERER.
Phila. Add., 3643 Locust St.

ON THE OCEAN FRONT!
"The Paradise of Watering Places"
SEVEN MILES BELOW LONG BRANCH
MONMOUTH HOUSE
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.
Open from June 20 to September 20.
BENJAMIN H. YARD, Proprietor.
Write for descriptive pamphlet, containing terms and information, New York Office, "Scofield's," Metropolitan Building.

WALTER'S SANITARIUM

WALTER'S PARK (Wernersville), Pa.



Walter's Park is a grand mountain park of 500 acres, with its own Money-Order Post-Office, Long-Distance Telephone, with the most superb mountain air, absolutely free from malaria, mosquitoes, and rarely dew; with magnificent mountain springs from granite rock, 1,000 feet above tide-water; with scenery declared by travelers "equal to anything in Europe or America;" with pine and cedar groves and chestnut forests; with splendid drives, excellent livery; our own Jersey dairy; butter, eggs, fruits, and vegetables fresh and sweet.

Walter's Sanitarium is its central thought, the product of 20 years of earnest work. It offers, in addition to the most comprehensive system of treatment, the largest range of appliances, with the largest experience in applying them (25 years).

COUNTRY LIFE WITH CITY COMFORTS

ELECTRIC LIGHT, HYDRAULIC ELEVATOR, STEAM HEAT AND OPEN GRATES, LIBRARY, POST OFFICE, TELEPHONE.

BATHS, MASSAGE, SWEDISH MOVEMENTS (both mechanical and manual)

ELECTRICITY (Static, Galvanic, Faradic), OXYGEN, VACUUM.

Terms moderate. New illustrated catalogue. Be careful to address correctly, always Walter's Sanitarium, or ROBT. WALTER, M.D., Walter's Park, Pa.

New York City

Good Living—

good beds—good service—scrupulous cleanliness—quiet—central location. These are a few of the good points of the

Westminster Hotel

cor. 16th Street and Irving Place, one block east of Union Square, New York

American Plan; $3.50 per day and up

4th ave. cars to and from Grand Central Depot, one block away; Broadway cable, two blocks.

New York

THE DOWIE HOUSE (WESTERN CATSKILLS)

Altitude 1,840 ft.; large communicating rooms; modern conveniences; excellent table; beautiful scenery. For particulars and city reference apply to CHAS. MOORE, Andes, Del. Co., N. Y. Season from May 15th to Nov. 1st.

BLUE MOUNTAIN HOUSE

Adirondacks, Blue Mountain Lake (Ham. Co.), N. Y.

2,000 feet above the sea. Finest views in Adirondacks. Write for circulars. TYLER M. MERWIN, Prop.

The Algonquin and Cottages

ADIRONDACK MOUNTAINS

Situation commands magnificent scenery on Lower Saranac Lake. Recent improvements include electric lighting. Open June 1st. Pamphlet and terms on application. JOHN HARDING, Algonquin, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

THE NIAGARA HOTEL,

Cor. Porter Avenue and Seventh St.

Now is the time for tourists, families and business men to stop at this charmingly located hotel. It is homelike and comfortable. Table unsurpassed. Large, cool rooms, with or without baths. Free from noise and smoke. Beautiful palm house and conservatory. Rates Low. Take Niagara Street Trolley Line. C. J. SPAULDING, Manager.

CATSKILL MOUNTAIN HOUSE

Open June 20. 3½ Hours from New York. CATSKILL MOUNTAIN HOUSE Co., Catskill, N. Y.

New York

HOTEL CHILDWOLD

Adirondacks

CHILDWOLD PARK, N. Y.

Facing beautiful Lake Massawepie, right in the heart of the Adirondacks, yet reached in 9 hours from New York. Every facility for boating, driving, hunting, camping, etc. Cottages to rent. Mr. GRISWOLD, Room Clerk, 626 Tract Bldg, 150 Nassau St., New York. Will call on request. Pamphlet mailed on application. Address N. Y. office.
WM. F. INGOLD, Mgr.

BOARD in private family, Suburbs of Catskill. Magnificent views. Tennis grounds extensive. Terms moderate. Address C., P. O. Box 237, Catskill, N. Y.

WOODMERE HEIGHTS CATSKILL N. Y.

Every home comfort; fine drives; shade, boating, bathing; river, mountain, intervale scenery. Circular. A. PARSONS.

CHATEAUGAY CHASM HOUSE

CHATEAUGAY, N. Y.—Rates, $8 to $15. Open June 1. For pamphlet address GEO. H. CRAPON.

THE BANNER HOUSE

Chateaugay Lake, N.Y. J. S. KIRBY, Prop'r.

BUCK MANSION, in the Adirondacks; invigorating air; ample grounds; historical drives; commodious buildings; restful beds; excellent table; 50 guests; board, $7 to $9. SAML. BUCK, Crownpoint, N. Y.

New York

Gleason Sanitarium

ELMIRA, N. Y.

1852 (Formerly Elmira Water Cure) 1896

A comfortable winter home for invalids of both sexes. All modern improvements. All forms of aths, massage, electricity, etc.; pure spring-water; under care of regular medical graduates of long experience. Send for illustrated booklet.

MT. MEENAHGA

OPENS JUNE 2d

A Summer Home, with SIX COTTAGES CONNECTING. 100 miles from New York. 1,500 ft. above sea-level. In the midst of great natural beauty. Pure water; dry, exhilarating air; electric bells; gas; steam heat and wood fires. Peculiarly attractive in June. For circulars and rates address U. E. TERWILLIGER, Ellenville, N. Y.

GREYLOCK HALL

FAR ROCKAWAY, LONG ISLAND, N. Y.

Information on application. Mrs. R. MOTT, Propr.

THE CARL MYERS BALLOON FARM, Frankfort, N. Y. Elegant country mansion; city conveniences; gas, best plumbing, 7 baths, spacious grounds, airy verandas, fine views; no home similarly equipped open to the public. Circulars.

(For other advertisements in this department see following pages.)

SUMMER IN THE COUNTRY

Are you looking for some place which combines

HEALTH, PLEASURE, ECONOMY?

If so, send 6 cents for postage, or call and get free at offices named below the illustrated book, "Summer Homes." It gives list of hotels, farm and boarding houses, with

BOARD AT $5 PER WEEK and upward, in Sullivan, Ulster, and Delaware Counties, on the main line and branches of the

New York, Ontario & Western R'y

2,000 feet above the sea; location, prices, fares, &c., all in it.

IN NEW YORK At No. 2 Battery Place; 165, 171, 371, 944, and 1323 Broadway; 13 Astor Place; 737 Sixth Ave.; 134 East 125th St.; 273 West 125th St.; 251 Columbus Ave.; 92 East 14th St.; Ticket Offices foot of Franklin and West 42d Sts.

IN BROOKLYN 4 Court St.; 860 Fulton St.; 98 Broadway; "Eagle" Office; 249 Manhattan Ave., Greenpoint.

"ILLUSTRATED HOMES"

containing half-tone reproductions from photographs of 535 of the hotels, farm and boarding houses advertised in "Summer Homes," can be purchased of any ticket agent; price, 25c.

J. C. ANDERSON, General Passenger Agent, 56 Beaver St., New York

---

New York

The Highland House

GARRISON-ON-HUDSON, N.Y.

Directly opposite West Point, 50 miles, 1¼ hours from New York City. A select family hotel. Pure mountain air; purest spring water; sanitary arrangements modern and perfect. Excellent table a specialty. Tennis, croquet, bowling, beautiful drives, fine wheeling. Open in May. Write for booklet. J. W. & G. W. GARRISON.

GLEN LAKE HOUSE

FAMILY HOTEL TERMS REASONABLE

Dry mountain air; beautiful scenery; fishing; boating; all amusements.

E. BIRDSALL, Mgr. S. T. BIRDSALL, Prop.
Glen Lake, Warren Co., N. Y.

SAN CARLOS ON THE LAKE

(Formerly CLUB HOUSE)
GREENWOOD LAKE, NEW YORK

OPENS JUNE FIRST. For particulars and terms apply to "THE SAN CARLOS," 69 South Oxford Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., or at Greenwood Lake, after May 15th.

Catskill Mountains

Hotel St. Charles

OPENS JUNE 1st

Delightful month in the mountains. Hotel complete with every modern convenience, including passenger elevator. For booklets, rates, etc., apply to F. H. SCOFIELD, Metropolitan Building, Madison Square, New York; or to J. H. BURTIS, JR., Propr., Hunter, N. Y.

TREMBLEAU HALL

LAKE CHAMPLAIN, Port Kent, N. Y. Open June first. 'Bus meets all boats and trains. Write for illustrated booklet. FARRELL & ADGATE.

THE GEM OF THE ADIRONDACKS

LAKE DUANE

Beautiful scenery; good fishing and boating; pure running spring water throughout the house; bath-rooms, steam heat, old-time fireplace, and all conveniences. Fine drives. A quiet and restful retreat in the woods and mountains. Terms moderate. For full particulars and circulars write to W. J. AYERS & SON,
Hotel Ayers, Lake Duane, Franklin Co., N. Y.

LAKE GEORGE—Hulett's

The most picturesque part of the Lake. Good table; boating, bathing, fishing; country attractions. Rates are moderate and there is plenty to do, For illustrated book address H. W. BUCKELL, Hulett's Landing, N. Y.

Marion House

West Side, LAKE GEORGE, N. Y.

All modern improvements; electric lights, gas, elevator, fine orchestra, billiards, bowling, lawn tennis, first-class livery; steam yachts, rowboats, good fishing and sailing; special inducements to families. Plans and full particulars at 256 5th Ave. (Rupert A. Ryley Co.). Opens June 24.

JAMES STUART LEE,
HAMILTON P. BURNEY, } Props.

New York

Adirondack House

KEENE VALLEY, N. Y.

S. KELLEY, Prop'r. Illustrated Booklet on application.

ESTES HOUSE, Adirondacks

Booklet sent on application to J. H. ESTES, Prop., Keene Valley, Essex Co., N. Y.

Lake Kushaqua in the Adirondacks

Beautiful Resting Place

Direct Vestibule Limited. Opens June 20.

Our booklet tells all about it.
Send for it.

C. A. WOOD & CO., Mgrs., 51 East 44th St., N. Y. City.

ADIRONDACKS

The RUISSEAUMONT

At Lake Placid, N. Y.

WILL OPEN, JUNE 1st. Special Rates for June.
Address T. EDMUND KRUMBHOLZ.

Sullivan County, N. Y.

Kiamesha Lake HOUSE

New hotel, accommodates 250; newly furnished throughout; gas and electric bells, Welsbach burners; closets and bath on each floor; our own orchestra; bicycle room; photographic dark room; bathing, boating, bowling, fishing, tennis, etc.; more amusements, both indoor and outdoor, than any other house in the county. Terms to suit the times. Write for elegantly illustrated circular.
C. M. BARTLETT, Monticello, N. Y.

FENTON HOUSE

Best location in the Adirondacks. Rooms in cottages. Thirty thousand acres of game preserve exclusively for guests. More deer than in any other section. Address CHAS. FENTON, Number Four, N. Y.

PLEASANT PROSPECT, SUMMER HOME. Near station: accommodates 25. Photograph at Outlook Office. For particulars address Mrs. FLORA T. HOWELL, Pine Bush, Orange Co., N. Y.

MIZZEN TOP HOTEL

QUAKER HILL, DUTCHESS CO., N. Y.

Opens for the season June 20

N. S. HOWE, - - - - - Proprietor

Post Office address, PAWLING, NEW YORK

Mr. HOWE will be at the Windsor Hotel, New York City, until June 1, mornings.

FERNWOOD HALL LAKE OZONIA

One of the most healthful and beautiful Homes in the Adirondacks. Send for Booklet.
FREDERIC M. HEATH, Owner, Potsdam, N. Y.

New York

Twenty-third Season of

Chautauqua

center of the Chautauqua Reading Circle, and the original of fifty Chautauquas in the United States and Great Britain, was founded in 1874, and has become an important factor in our national life.

Occupying well-wooded, naturally terraced land, at a beautiful point on the northern shore of Chautauqua Lake, this sylvan town contains more than five hundred attractive cottages, and many other buildings used for public exercises, lectures, and recitations. The area is laid out in winding avenues, rustic parks, and recreation grounds. Water supply pure. Perfect system of sanitation.

Summer Schools offering 106 courses in a wide range of subjects under 72 teachers from leading universities and colleges.

Distinguished Foreigners

Prof. George Adam Smith (Glasgow), Prof. Jos. Agar Beet (London), Rev. Charles Aked (Liverpool).

Preachers for 1896

E. Benj. Andrews, G. A. Smith, G. A. Gordon, F. W. Gunsaulus, John H. Vincent, Chas. Aked, R. H. Conwell.

Prominent Speakers

Pres. Chas. Eliot, Pres. William R. Harper, Prof. F. G. Peabody, Robt. E. Peary, Dr. J. M. Buckley, Rev. B. T. Washington, Prof. John W. White, Prof. N. M. Butler, et al.

Entertainment and Recreation in great variety. Readings, Tableaux, Receptions. Outdoor Sports of all kinds.

Cost of Living at the Minimum

Address W. A. Duncan, Sec., Syracuse, N.Y.

To HOTEL PROPRIETORS

If you want the Best Service at Lowest Rates, send your orders for advertising to

HICKS'
NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING AGENCY
(WM. HICKS, PROPRIETOR)
Vanderbilt Building, 132 Nassau St., N. Y.
Estimates furnished on application.

For HEALTH AND PLEASURE GO TO THE

Catskill Mountains

The Only Through Car Line and Only All-Rail Route to this Popular Resort IS VIA THE

Ulster & Delaware R.R.

This Road, with its Narrow Gauge Division through the Famous Stony Clove, reaches all the principal points in the Mountains.

Stamford,
Hotel Kaaterskill,
Hunter,
Tannersville,
Arkville,
Laurel House,
Roxbury,
Haines Corners,
Catskill Mt'n House,
Grand Hotel,
Pine Hill,
Big Indian,
Fleischmanns,
Griffins Corners,
Margaretville,
Phoenicia,
Shandaken,
Mt. Pleasant,
Onteora, Elka, Twilight, Sunset, and Santa Cruz Parks.
Schoharie Manor.

The haunts of

RIP VAN WINKLE and how to reach them

CONNECTIONS

At KINGSTON POINT
With Hudson River Day Line Steamers.

At RONDOUT
With Night Line Steamers, Steamer Mary Powell, and New York Central & Hudson River Railroad.

At KINGSTON
With West Shore and Wallkill Valley Railroads.

Send 6 cents postage for Summer Book, with Map of the Catskills and list of over 1,000 Hotels and Boarding-houses, to

N. A. SIMS
General Passenger Agent
RONDOUT, N. Y.

CHURCHILL HALL STAMFORD NEW YORK

Healthful and attractive; elevation 1,800 feet; parlor cars from Philadelphia; five hours from New York by fast train service; capacity 300. House has modern equipment. Send for illustrated book with opinion of Henry Ward Beecher and Lyman Abbott, or apply to E. R. Jenkins, Fifth Ave. Hotel, June 1 to 7, 3 to 6 P.M.

S. E. CHURCHILL, M.D.

New Grant House

STAMFORD, N. Y.

Open June 1st to Nov. 1st

Elevation, 1,800 ft. For booklet address JOHN P. GRANT, Prop.

New York

STAMFORD, N. Y.

The Westholm

New House; Modern Improvements; Best Cuisine. A few rooms for June, September, and October only. Perfect heating by improved hot-water system; pure air; large rooms. For information address

Mrs. H. S. PRESTON.

ATCHINSON HOUSE

STAMFORD, N. Y. Elevation 2,000 feet. Write for Booklet. W. D. ATCHINSON, Prop.

New York

INGLESIDE

STAMFORD, N. Y.
Now Open

On Seminary Heights. First-class in all respects; excellent cuisine. Send for circular. E. O. COVEL.

Stamford in the Catskills

Greenhurst

First class in all respects, recently enlarged and improved. Open grate fires. Bath-rooms and closets. Sanitary connection with village sewer. Terms reasonable. For circulars and all particulars address E. E. VAN DYKE.

New York

"THE CATSKILLS" THE GREYCOURT INN

STAMFORD, N. Y.

Electricity. Send for circular, S. J. BROWN.

Hubbell Cottage

Stamford (N. Y.), in the Catskills

Modern improvements. Large rooms. Prices moderate. H. P. HUBBELL, M.D., Prop'r. Circulars on application.

Some Prefer, some need, for a season, a quiet, retired place on a farm, supplying home com forts. TERRY HOMESTEAD furnishes these; city appointments water works, plumbing, sewerage, finest spring water, farm products, beautiful mountains, etc. Address

A. W. TERRY, STAMFORD, N. Y.

Are you going to the MOUNTAINS or SEASHORE? If so, take a Camping-House Perfect protection. Easily transported. See adv. on page 1042

(For other advertisements in this department see following pages.)

New York

RICHFIELD SPRINGS, N. Y.
Twenty-Second Season

Spring House and Baths

OPEN JUNE 20th TO OCTOBER
New York Office: Windsor Hotel. T. R. PROCTOR.

SABBATH DAY POINT HOUSE
ON Lake George N. Y. Write for circular to F. E. CARNEY, Sabbath Day Point, N. Y

ADIRONDACKS

The Ampersand

Opens June 1

Delightful month in the woods

For particulars and special terms for June apply to C. M. EATON, Saranac Lake, N. Y., or 31 West 42d St., New York City.

LAKE GEORGE

Silver Bay House

OPEN JUNE TO OCTOBER

A select family resort. Sanitary conditions are the best. Absolutely pure mountain spring water. Milk, vegetables, and fruits from the hotel farm and gardens. Large recreation hall detached from main house. Best bathing beach on the Lake. Saddle-horses, carriages, and a fine fleet of rowboats. References to best families in N. Y. and Brooklyn. Terms very moderate; special for June. Photo. Booklet sent. Address, until June 1st,
M. WILSON, 215 West 57th St., N. Y., or
J. J. WILSON, Silver Bay, N. Y.

Hotel Uncas On Lake George

New hotel; appointments complete; rates are moderate; steamers land at hotel pier. Circular, reference, and terms. Address SMITH SEXTON, Silver Bay, N. Y.

Excelsior Spring Hotel

SARATOGA, N. Y., is unique in that it combines all the advantages of a great resort with the pure air, the quiet, and the greater freedom of the country. Opens third season under present management June 1. Illustrated booklet. C. W. LAWRENCE, Proprietor.

LAKESIDE FARM Saratoga, N. Y.—Large rooms; fine shade; lovely view; lake on farm; carriage to Saratoga, 1½ miles, each day. Information at Outlook. Box 51. R. CALKINS.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRING HOTEL, Saratoga Lake. Thirteenth Season. Boating, hunting, and fishing. Send for new illustrated circular.
T. C. LUTHER, Prop., P.O. Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

HUESTIS HOUSE

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

Open from May 15 to Nov. 1st

Enlarged and greatly improved since season of '95. Send for illustrated pamphlet.
W. B. HUESTIS, Prop.

Dr. Strong's Sanitarium

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

For health or pleasure. The appointments of a first-class Hotel. Elevator, electric bells, sun-parlor, and promenade on the roof. Suites of rooms with baths. Massage, Electricity, all baths and health appliances New Turkish, Russian, and Natural Sulphur-Water baths. Dry tonic air, Saratoga water, croquet, lawn-tennis, etc. Open all the year. Send for illustrated circular.

THE DELAVAN

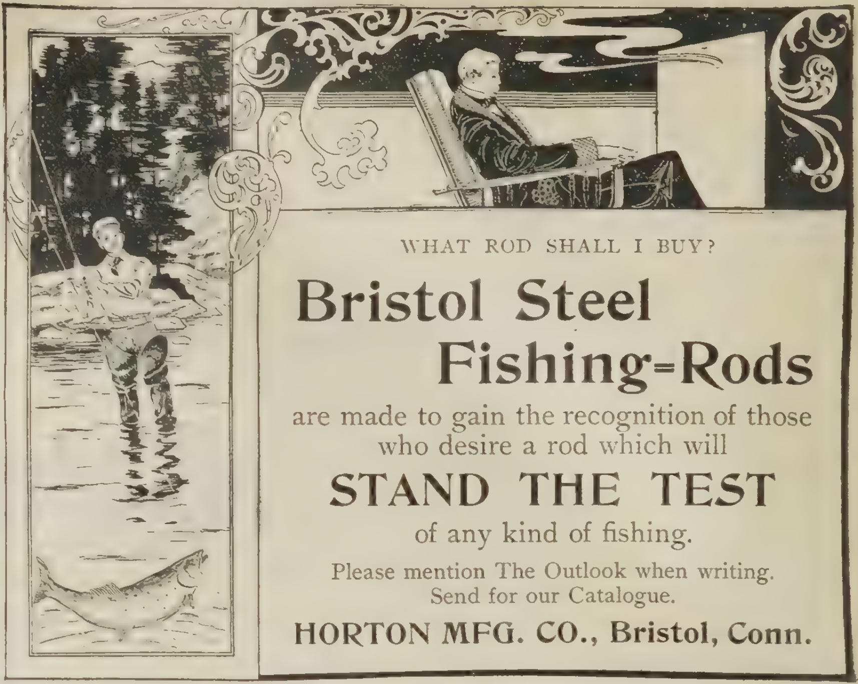
ON GREAT SOUTH BAY

Fifty miles from New York. Special rates for June.
A. D. FOSTER, Sayville, Long Island, N. Y.

THE ELMORE SAYVILLE, (L. I.), N. Y.

Select family hotel, delightfully located on Great South Bay. Opens June 10. JAS. L. SPAULDING, Proprietor.

Windlemere Tarrytown-on-Hudson, N.Y. Magnificent scenery; beautiful drives; shade, lawns, piazzas, sun-parlor. Commutation, 11 cts. per day. Address as above.



WHAT ROD SHALL I BUY?

Bristol Steel Fishing-Rods are made to gain the recognition of those who desire a rod which will STAND THE TEST of any kind of fishing.

Please mention The Outlook when writing.
Send for our Catalogue.

HORTON MFG. CO., Bristol, Conn.

WE LEAD AS MANUFACTURERS OF

Settees or Out-Door Benches

BETHLEHEM
FOUNDRY & MACHINE CO.
South Bethlehem, Pa.

Send for Circulars and Prices.

The above cut illustrates a Fairmount Park Bench, 5 feet long, set up ready for use; also one in knocked-down shape for shipment. An excellent Bench in every way. Price, $3.00. Discounts to dealers.

The New Mathewson

Narragansett Pier, R. I.

OPENS JUNE 20th

SEND FOR CIRCULARS AND TERMS TO
260 FOURTH AVE., N. Y.

New York

NEPTUNE BRINE BATHS

For Rheumatism, Gout, and Nervous Diseases

The Glen Springs

A Sanatorium for those Seeking Health and Rest

A medical staff experienced in the use of the Waters. All approved therapeutic appliances and modern improvements. ALL FORMS OF BATHS.

VALUABLE MINERAL SPRINGS

NEPTUNE SPRING is a 67 per cent. Brine, containing the largest amount of Chloride of Calcium of any Spring in the world. Location overlooks thirty miles of Seneca Lake. Send for illustrated pamphlet.
WM. E. LEFFINGWELL, Manager, Watkins, N.Y

ADIRONDACKS
SCHROON LAKE Pine Grove

A Physician's home for the care and treatment of those suffering from Pulmonary or Nervous affections. Full particulars on application. Best of reference furnished. Open June 1st, 1896. H. W. LINCOLN, M.D.,
113 Hancock St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

New York

IN THE LAND OF PEACE

The Ontio, Unadilla, N. Y.

THOUSAND ISLANDS

Among America's most charming resorts; the NEW COLUMBIAN HOTEL, at 1,000 Island Park, N. Y., and the HOTEL WESTMINSTER, Westminster Park, Alexandria Bay, N. Y.; great family hotels; modern and first-class; charges moderate. Send for descriptive pamphlet and terms.
H. F. INGLEHART & SON, Proprietors.

CATSKILL MOUNTAINS
SOPER HOUSE, Windham, N.Y.

Accommodates 75; elevation, 1,800; modern improvements; hot and cold water on all floors; amusement hall; bowling, boating, lawn tennis, etc. Send for circular.

Beatty Homestead Sixty miles from N. Y. City; extensive piazza; large rooms; plenty of shade. Circulars and photograph at The Outlook. MARGARET BEATTY, Washingtonville, Orange Co., N.Y.

GRAND VIEW SANATORIUM

WERNERSVILLE, PA.

Beautifully situated on a slope of South Mountain. Extensive piazzas. Panoramic view most beautiful, stretching out north and east 50 to 100 miles. Asthma, Hay and Rose Fever are unknown among the natives here. Plenty of walks through the evergreen woods. Many interesting and historic points; Ephrata and Lititz, old Moravian settlements, Crystal Cave, and the inexhaustible Cornwall Iron Mines are near. Good, pure water; bathing facilities ample; large gymnasium; good drives; horseback riding, tennis, etc.; heated by steam and open grates; a substantial table. Unequaled as a delightful summer home to recuperate in. We are glad to send our illustrated pamphlet.

Drs. WENRICH & DEPPEN, Wernersville, Pa.

The "Grand View" as seen from the Lebanon Valley

New York

The Evergreens

Pleasant rooms; large lawn; boating; bathing. Also a large and a small Cottage to rent.
Mrs. L. A. JAGGER, West Hampton, L. I., N. Y.

THE WESTPORT INN

Westport-on-Lake Champlain, N. Y. Fine climate. "Westport Mountain Spring" water. Health record very high. No mosquitoes. Mrs. O. C. Daniell, Man.

Oregon

PORTLAND, OR.—THE PORTLAND. One of the most complete and elegant hotels in this country; American plan; $3.00 per day and upward.
W. H. BARMORE, Manager.

Pennsylvania

THE GLENWOOD

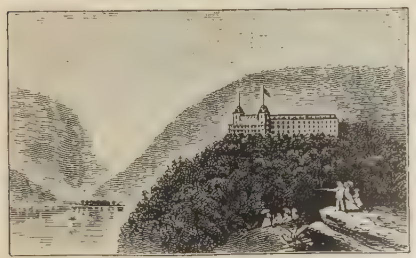
DELAWARE WATER GAP, Pa.

Capacity 200. A popular and healthy mountain resort; high, cool, and delightful; large shady grouuds; fine driving, boating, bathing, and fishing; elegant rooms; fine table and best service; rates moderate. Open in May.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR. JOHNSON BROS.

The Kittatinny

DELAWARE WATER GAP, PA.

Open from May 1st until Nov. Easy of access; 2¾ hours rom New York by D., L. & W. R.R. The largest and most attractively located hotel in the Delaware Valley and the only one having an elevator. Heated by steam. Rooms en suite, with bath, etc. Send for booklet.
W. A. BRODHEAD & SONS.



WATER GAP HOUSE

DELAWARE WATER GAP, PA.

Situated in the Blue Ridge, in northern Pennsylvania, 2½ hours from New York by D., L. & W. R.R. Healthful and beautiful. Opens June 10. L.W. BRODHEAD.

COUNTRY BOARD.—1,900 ft. elevation. Ten minutes from station. Spacious grounds, shade, modern improvements, home comforts. Terms moderate. Will rent for $50 per month. Address Box 24, Montrose, Pa.

MOUNTAIN SUNSET HOUSE

WERNERSVILLE, PA.

First-class family place, 4 hrs. from New York City, 2 hrs. from Phila. Delightful climate; fine dry air; pure water; cool nights. Booklet free.

Pennsylvania

GLEN SUMMIT HOTEL

GLEN SUMMIT, PA. Opens June 20 W. H. CROSBY, Manager.

On L. V. R. R., four and one-half hours from New York; 2,000 feet elevation; finest driving and bicycling, and all other amusements; first-class orchestra. For booklets and other information apply to FRED. SCOFIELD,
Metropolitan Building, Madison Square.

GOOD BOARD; pure mountain air; good water; nice drives; cheap rates. Send for circular and terms to THEO. REICHARD, Prop., MOUNTAIN VIEW HOUSE, Mount Bethel, Pa.

Preston's Sunnyside

On the South Mountains

Wernersville, Pa.

Magnificent scenery, extensive park, delightful air, pure water, table and appointments excellent. For pamphlet address
JAMES H. PRESTON.

Rhode Island

THE ARLINGTON

Narragansett Pier, R. I.

Open June to October. Accommodates 100. Write for circulars and terms. EARNEST L. CASWELL.

THE MASSASOIT

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I.

Now open. Terms reasonable. J. BABCOCK.

METATOXET HOUSE

Narragansett Pier, R. I.

Twenty-ninth season opens June 1. Superior location, modern improvements; 225 guests.

The Queen of American Watering-Places

Leland's Ocean House

NEWPORT, R. I.

Season of 1896 opens June 25th. Long and favorably known as the most fashionable Summer Hotel in America. WARREN LELAND, Jr., Mgr. NewYork office, 306 5th Ave.

NEWPORT, R. I. —Large, airy rooms; excellent table board; modern conveniences; house near the water.
Mrs. JAS. HARDY, 3 Victoria Ave., Newport, R. I.

Vermont

FAIRVIEW FARM North Hartland, Vt. High, healthy locality. Accommodates thirty. Terms, from five to seven dollars a week. For particulars apply to Mrs. E. B. GATES.

Vermont

BRAINTREE, VT.—Favorite summer resort. Good trout fishing and hunting near; good roads for bicycling; pleasant drives. Application by letter will receive prompt attention. P. J. BLANCHARD, Propr.

BRANDON, VT., on Central Vermont R. R.—Board in a private family; large, pleasant rooms, with views of the mountains. Write for descriptive circular and views of place to Mrs. S. W. JONES.

The Montvert

Middletown Springs, Vermont

Celebrated for its magnificent scenery, bracing air, fine drives, and Mineral Springs, which possess medicinal and healing properties which have made their fame worldwide.

3,000 feet above the sea, its elevated position ensures a dry atmosphere in which malaria is unknowu, and where sufferers from hay fever obtain immediate relief.

Accommodations for 350. Appointments, cuisine, and service of the highest order. Send for pamphlet, terms, etc.

E. W. EAGER, Manager
THE HANOVER, 2 E. 15th St., New York City

THE PROSPECT

Vergennes Vt.

On Otter River, daily steamer on river and across Lake Champlain; beautiful situation, broad piazzas, extensive grounds, delightful scenery, fine view of river and mountains, glorious sunsets, pleasant drives, comfortable vehicles, careful driver, boating, fishing, tennis, croquet, pleasant rooms, excellent beds, baths, piano, good table, filtered water; special rates for June and September.
GEO. E. STONE, Prop.

The Green Mountain Lodge

WATERBURY CENTER, VT. A charming resort, quiet and homelike. Delightful mountain scenery. Good board; fresh milk, cream, butter, vegetables. Large, airy rooms, good beds, bathroom. Pianos, organ, and library. Livery and laundry. Mails twice a day. Prices from $4.00 to $7.00 per week. Open June 20th. Circular free to any address. F. W. REEDER, Manager.

LAKE ST. CATHERINE HOUSE

WELLS, VERMONT

Among the Green Mountains, delightfully located 150 feet from water's edge of beautiful Lake St. Catherine; mountain scenery; boating, fishing, and bathing; fine roads for bicycling. For descriptive booklet apply to Recreation Department, The Outlook, or to IRVING WOOD, Prop.

ARCADIA RETREAT

In the Green Mts.

An ideal place for rest and recreation. Beautiful scenery; pure air; pure water; fishing and boating. Information at The Outlook office or address J.R. Parker, West Burke, Vt.

Virginia

HOTEL ALPHIN Hot Springs, Bath County, Virginia. Three hundred yards from the Mammoth Bath House. All modern improvements; opens June 10th, 1896; remains open throughout the entire year. Address L. C. ALPHIN, Proprietor.

EVERGREEN HOME, 50 miles from Washington, D. C.; 2 daily mails, shade, spring water; especially suited to Christians desiring quiet resting-place. For terms, description (with picture), address H. M. HOGE, Lincoln, Va.

FOREIGN TRAVEL AGENCY.

LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.
CALEDONIAN RAILWAY
GREAT SOUTHERN & WESTERN RAILWAY.

EUROPE

Shortest and popular routes. Queenstown, Liverpool, Glasgow and London. Luxurious Parlor Sleeping and Dining cars. Tours in Ireland, Scotland, Wales, England, Paris, &c.—Picturesque Lakes, Ancient Cathedrals and Castles, Great Universities, Shakespeare's Country, &c.

Baggage Checked Through New York to London.

MONEY SAVED; COMFORTS SECURED; INCONVENIENCES AVOIDED.

For Estimates, Folders, Maps, Tickets, etc. apply to
C. A. BARATTONI, Gen'l Agt. 852 Broadway, New York.

PORTABLE

Camping Houses

This house, 12x21, 2-ply, $185.

The thing to take to the Seashore or Mountains

All sizes. Moderate in price. Good floors and roofs. Nicely finished. Perfect protection from wind and rain. No nails or screws to put in. Any one can put them up. Easily handled and shipped.

If you are interested, we shall be glad to mail you full information and prices.

AMERICAN PAT. PORTABLE HOUSE MFG. CO., Corona, L. I., N. Y.

ALPINE PASS

COLORADO

PECULIAR INTEREST attaches to this pass owing to the fact that it is the highest railroad point in North America (11,660 feet) and is at the western portal of the loftiest railroad tunnel in the world. It is situated on the Gunnison Division of the South Park Line (Denver, Leadville, and Gunnison Railway) on the Pacific Slope of the great transcontinental divide. Upon application we will mail copy of a little book entitled "South Park and the Alpine Pass." It covers particularly this section of Colorado, now attracting the attention of so many tourists and wonder hunters. We also have a most complete book upon the mining interests of Colorado, entitled "Colorado's Gold." Six cents in stamps to cover cost of mailing. B. L. WINCHELL, General Passenger Agent, Denver, Colorado.

THE Hotel Chamberlin

OLD POINT COMFORT

FORT MONROE, VA.

Most complete and the most magnificent hotel on the Atlantic Coast. Everything known to the science of hotel construction which conduces to health, pleasure, or comfort will be found in it. GEORGE W. SWETT, Manager.

Before deciding on the locality for your Summer vacation

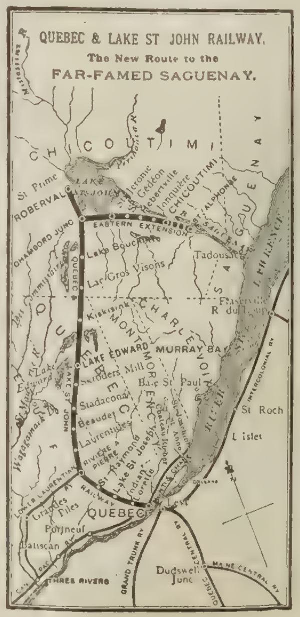
You will find it to your interest to make inquiries about the

QUEBEC & LAKE ST. JOHN RAILWAY

The New Route to the Far-famed Saguenay

And the ONLY RAIL LINE to the Delightful Summer Resorts and Fishing Grounds north of Quebec, and to Lake St. John and Chicoutimi, through the

CANADIAN ADIRONDACKS



Trains connect at Chicoutimi with Saguenay Steamers for

TADOUSAC, CACOUNA,
MURRAY BAY, and QUEBEC

A round trip unequaled in America, through matchless Forest, Mountain, River and Lake Scenery, down the majestic Saguenay by daylight and back to the Fortress City,

Touching at all the Beautiful Seaside Resorts on the Lower St. Lawrence, with their Chain of Commodious Hotels.

Hotel Roberval, Lake St. John, has first-class accommodation for 300 Guests, and is run in connection with the Island House, at Grand Discharge, of Lake St. John, the center of the Ouananiche Fishing Grounds.

Parlor and Sleeping Cars

MAGNIFICENT SCENERY
BEAUTIFUL CLIMATE

Apply to the Ticket Agents of all Principal Cities.

A beautifully illustrated Guide Book free on application.

ALEX. HARDY Gen. Pass. Agt., J. G. SCOTT Secy. & Manager.
Quebec, Can.

The Maine Central Railroad

REACHES

THE MAINE WOODS, THE MAINE COAST
THE WHITE MOUNTAINS

FULL OF

REST for the brain-worker;
SPORT for the angler and hunter;
HEALTH for the invalid;
ELBOW-ROOM for all.

THE MAINE CENTRAL RAILROAD

reaches the big game and mammoth trout, the cheek-tanning sea-breezes, the nerve-bracing clear air, and a right jolly good time for all.

DROP A LINE

AND ASK ABOUT THOSE 10-POUND TROUT TAKEN ON A FLY, AND ALSO ABOUT THE

SPECIAL TWO WEEKS' TOURS AT NOMINAL EXPENSE

Write to F. E. BOOTHBY, G.P. & T.A., Portland, Maine, stating time and expense, and full suggestions with guide-book and maps will be forwarded.

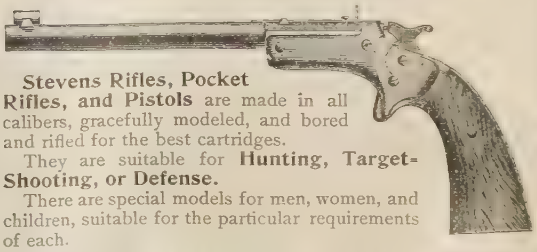
"Whither will ye go?"

Seekers of Recreation should Remember this:

STEVENS RIFLES, PISTOLS AND POCKET RIFLES

A Rainy Day in Camp. Pistol Practice with a Stevens Pistol.

Are the arms chosen by Travelers, Explorers, Bicyclists, Anglers, and those who seek recreation out of doors, because they are the most accurate firearms made; they possess the greatest compactness; can be speedily taken apart, packed in a trunk or valise, and quickly assembled for use.



Stevens Rifles, Pocket Rifles, and Pistols are made in all calibers, gracefully modeled, and bored and rifled for the best cartridges.

They are suitable for Hunting, Target-Shooting, or Defense.

There are special models for men, women, and children, suitable for the particular requirements of each.

A circular describing the numerous models of Rifles, Pocket Rifles, and Pistols made by this Company is sent free upon application to any part of the world.

THE J. STEVENS ARMS & TOOL CO.
P. O. Box 33, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

MICHIGAN CENTRAL
THE NIAGARA FALLS ROUTE

A First-Class Line
For First-Class Travel

A SUMMER NOTE-BOOK fully descriptive of the Summer Resorts of the North and East, and profusely illustrated, sent for six cents.

Chicago, New York,
Boston
AND THE EAST VIA NIAGARA FALLS and BUFFALO

THE Favorite Summer Tourist Route
TO Niagara Falls, the Adirondacks,
The Thousand Islands and Rapids of the St. Lawrence,
The Catskill Mountains and Berkshire Hills,
The White Mountains and New England Coast.

Grand Excursion to Buffalo July 5 and 6
One fare for the round trip

Copyright, 1895, By O. W. Ruggles, G. P. & T. Agt.

Send for "NOTES FOR TEACHERS," containing valuable information relative to Buffalo and Niagara Falls.

CITY TICKET OFFICE, 119 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

R. H. L'HOMMEDIEU, Gen'l Superintendent, DETROIT
L. D. HEUSNER, General Western Passenger Agent, CHICAGO
O. W. RUGGLES, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, CHICAGO

Where the Breezes Softly Blow

Would you breathe the healthful air,
Would you flee from business care,
Would you listen to the birds amid the trees?
Would you hide from worldly strife,
Take another lease of life,
And revel in doing just as you please?

Would you hunt and fish and row,
With your heart and cheeks aglow,
Would you dwell 'mid vernal beauty bright and rare?
Then come, O come away,
And let God's sunshine play
Upon you ere you climb the golden stair.

Yes! come from care away,
Let's be merry and be gay,
Let's get a taste of heaven here on earth.
Come out and greet the Spring,
While its joys are on the wing,
And make the glad air gladder with your mirth.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW where to go, send your address for a list of "Summer Tours" published by the CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL RAILWAY
GEO. H. HEAFFORD, General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.

THE MOST VACATION FOR THE LEAST MONEY

If you want the greatest possible vacation—faultless climate; the finest bathing, boating, bicycling, fishing; beautiful scenery, with historical old towns and crumbling old forts—in short, a vacation full of health, rest, novelty, and interest,

Go to Nova Scotia the Ideal Summer Land

It costs only $5.00 to get there (from Boston), and hotel rates are delightfully low. The steel steamers of the Yarmouth S. S. Line, the "Boston" and "Yarmouth," the finest and fastest steamers that enter Boston Harbor, make four trips a week, leaving Boston at noon and reaching Yarmouth at six next morning. And from Yarmouth you can reach all parts of Nova Scotia.

Write for free folder; or send ten cents postage for handsome new illustrated book, "Beautiful Nova Scotia," to J. F. Spinney, Agent.

YARMOUTH STEAMSHIP CO.
43 LEWIS WHARF, BOSTON, MASS.

700-MILE SEA TRIPS which may be made on modern steamships of the

OLD DOMINION LINE

sailing every week-day from New York to Old Point Comfort, Virginia Beach, and Norfolk are the most enjoyable short outings possible

OLD POINT COMFORT, VA.

Three-day trips, with accommodations at leading hotels, $17.00.

Two days continuous round trip, all expenses included, $13.00.

Send for full information.

OLD DOMINION S. S. CO.
Pier 26, N. R., New York, N. Y.
W. L. GUILLAUDEU
Vice-President and Traffic Manager

All things come to those who hustle while they wait

BUT, we do NOT wait for business to come to us. We keep hustling all the time to secure your patronage, and to retain it after you are our friends. THEREFORE our service and equipment are maintained at a standard of excellence unsurpassed, and our constant endeavor is to make you comfortable and happy while a traveler on the Lehigh Valley Railroad System

BLACK DIAMOND EXPRESS

The Finest Trains in the World. Daily except Sunday between New York, Philadelphia, and Rochester and Buffalo. Ten hours New York to Buffalo. Library, Café, and Dining Cars! Superb Vestibuled Coaches! Observation Pullman Palace Chair Car!

OUR Trains are vestibuled.
Engines burn anthracite coal exclusively.
Trainmen are uniformly courteous and attentive.

WE Operate solid vestibuled limited trains between NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, and CHICAGO, via Niagara Falls, and have our own dining-car service on the à la carte plan.

ALL The pleasant summer resorts of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and New York are reached via this picturesque route.

FOR Time-tables, rates, information as to hotels, etc., address
CHAS. S. LEE, General Passenger Agent,
228 South Third St., Philadelphia

RAMSDELL'S DAILY LINE

FOR NEWBURGH

CRANSTON'S, WEST POINT, COLD SPRING, CORNWALL

The New and Elegant Iron Screw Steamers "HOMER RAMSDELL" and "NEWBURGH"

THE FASTEST PROPELLERS ON THE HUDSON RIVER

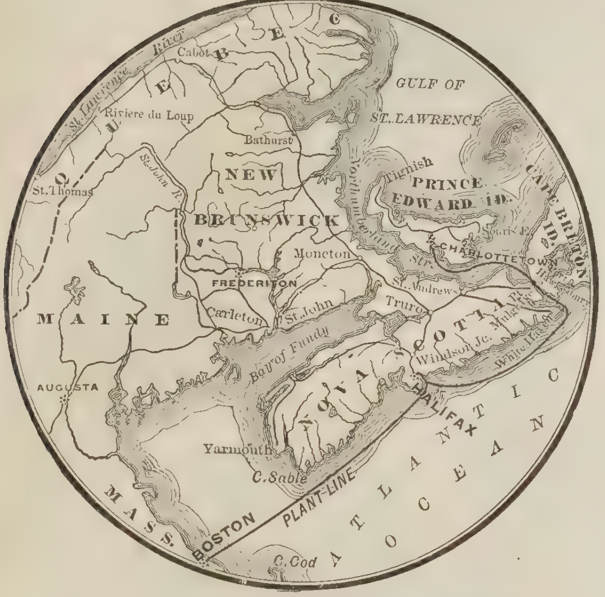
Leave New York from New Pier 24, foot of Franklin Street, daily, except Sunday, at 5:00 P.M.; Sunday at 9:00 A.M., landing at 133d St., N. R., 9:25 A.M. Leave Newburgh daily at 7:00 P.M. United States Hotel at steamboat landing, Newburgh. Dinner, 50 cents.

The up trip Sunday morning affords one of the pleasantest and most select Excursions of any line running from New York. Fare, 50 cents.

This Line offers unsurpassed service in every particular. Large and luxuriously furnished saloons and staterooms, heated by steam and lighted by electricity. The trip by the up steamer affords a most enjoyable sail on the Hudson in the early evening; past the wonderful Palisades and through the far-famed Highlands, the most beautiful part of the River.

W. F. HOWE, Agent, Pier 24, Foot of Franklin Street, N. Y.

Only One Night at Sea to a Foreign Land



Nova Scotia, Cape Breton,
Prince Edward Island
BY THE SHIPS OF THE Canada Atlantic &
Plant S.S. Line
FROM BOSTON

TWO SAILINGS WEEKLY
Staunch Superb Steel Passenger Ships,
Carrying U. S. and Canadian Mails

M. F. PLANT,
Vice-President & Manager.
B. W. WRENN,
Passenger Traffic Manager.

SEND FOR HANDSOME ILLUSTRATED LITERATURE

B. F. BLAKE, Asst. Gen'l Passenger Agt.,
131 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.

J. J. FARNSWORTH, Eastern Passenger Agt.,
261 Broadway, N. Y.

Summer Tours

LOW EXCURSION RATES

TO Colorado, Salt Lake,
The Dakota Hot Springs,
Yellowstone National Park,
Pacific Coast
and Puget Sound Points,
Alaska,
St. Paul, Minneapolis,
Duluth, Ashland, Marquette, and the Health and Pleasure Resorts of the West and Northwest.

Full information can be obtained at Principal Offices:

208 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO,
423 BROADWAY, NEW YORK,
5 STATE STREET, BOSTON,

Or by addressing the General Passenger and Ticket Agent at Chicago

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE
CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY

Van Buskirk's
(FRAGRANT) SOZODONT
TEETH
HARDENING THE GUMS
And imparting a delightfully refreshing have already become black by decay
HALL & RUCKEL
PROPRIETORS
Nº 215 Washington Street,
Formerly Nº 218 Greenwich St.
NEW YORK
U S
THIS PACKAGE TWO-THIRDS ACTUAL SIZE

AFTER THE SPIN, USE REFRESHING

Fragrant as Flowers

Pure and Harmless

Liquid and Powder in One

Sold Everywhere

Sozodont

FOR THE

TEETH AND BREATH.

Preserves the Teeth

Cleanses the Mouth

Hardens the Gums

Sweetens the Breath

No "outing" preparations are complete unless SOZODONT is included. If you have never tested those qualities which have made this delightful dentifrice popular for more than Half a Century, a sample of the liquid (including sample of Sozoderma Soap) will be mailed to you provided you send three cents for postage and mention The Outlook. Address HALL & RUCKEL, NEW YORK, Proprietors of Sozodont, Spalding's Glue, and other well-known preparations.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY'S NEW NOVELS

NEW NOVEL BY HENRY JAMES

EMBARRASSMENTS

By HENRY JAMES, author of "The Bostonians," "The Aspern Papers," "A London Life," "Partial Portraits." 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

THE BOSTONIANS. 12mo, $1.75.
THE PRINCESS CASAMASSIMA. 12mo, $1.25.
THE ASPERN PAPERS, AND OTHER STORIES. 12mo, $1.00.
THE REVERBERATOR. A Novel. $1.00.
A LONDON LIFE. 12mo, $1.00.
THE LESSON OF THE MASTER, AND OTHER STORIES. 12mo. $1.00.
THE REAL THING, AND OTHER TALES. 12mo, $1.00.

By F. Marion Crawford.

Adam Johnstone's Son

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, Author of "Saracinesca," "Pietro Ghisleri," "Don Orsino," "Casa Braccio," etc. With 24 full-page Illustrations by A. Forestier. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"It is not only one of the most enjoyable novels that Mr. Crawford has ever written, but it is a novel that will make people think."—Boston Beacon.

By the Author of "A Kentucky Cardinal," "Aftermath," "John Gray," etc.

Summer in Arcady

A Tale of Nature

By JAMES LANE ALLEN, Author of "A Kentucky Cardinal," "Aftermath." "The Blue Grass Region of Kentucky," "John Gray," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

"This story by James Lane Allen is one of the gems of the season. It is artistic in its setting, realistic and true to nature—indeed, a veritable gem that must become classic."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

NOW READY

A FIRST FLEET FAMILY

A Hitherto Unpublished Narrative of Certain Remarkable Adventures Compiled from the Papers of Sergeant William Dew of the Marines. By LOUIS BECKE and WALTER JEFFERY. With numerous illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

By the Author of "John and I."

The Dream-Charlotte

A Story of Echoes. By M. BETHAM EDWARDS, Author of "John and I," "Romance of Dijon," "Dr. Jacob," "Kitty," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"The story is one of power, dealing with the Norman peasantry during the French Revolution."—Philadelphia Record.

"It is no exaggeration to say that the author has never done anything better."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Zola's New Novel.

Rome

By ÉMILE ZOLA, Author of "Lourdes," "La Débacle," "Doctor Pascal," etc. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. 2 vols. 16mo, cloth. $2.00.

"There is no living writer, and there are few dead ones, who could give so vivid a picture of a picturesque place as Zola."—New York Evening Sun.

"Zola's 'Rome' will probably survive most of his other books. . . . It forms a powerful picture of the Papal Court and its surroundings."—The Athenæum.

By Charlotte M. Yonge.

The Release ;

Or, Caroline's French Kindred. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "Daisy Chain," "The Long Vacation." etc., etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"'The Release' is a novel by Charlotte M. Yonge and a decidedly good one."—Minneapolis Journal.

"It will be fully as pleasing to the youthful as to the older mind."—Boston Globe.

By Emma Marshall.

An Escape from the Tower

A Story of the Jacobite Rising of 1715. By EMMA MARSHALL, Author of "The White King's Daughter," "Kensington Palace," etc. With Frontispiece. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

New Volume of the Iris Series of Novels.

Mrs. Martin's Company

And Other Stories. By JANE BARLOW, Author of "Irish Idylls," "Maureen's Fairing," etc. With Illustrations by Bertha Newcombe. 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

BY CORNELIA ATWOOD PRATT

THE DAUGHTER OF A STOIC

By CORNELIA ATWOOD PRATT. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"Here is a novel the beauty and the refinement of whose language, aside from its splendid purpose, should withstand triumphantly the wear and tear of a generation of love stories."—Boston Courier.

"'The Daughter of a Stoic' is a charming story."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

NEW MISCELLANEOUS PUBLICATIONS

HORT.—Life and Letters of Fenton John Anthony Hort, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Sometime Hulsean Professor and Lady Margaret Reader in Divinity in the University of Cambridge. By his Son, ARTHUR FENTON HORT, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. With Portrait. 2 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth.

Riverside Letters. A continuation of "Letters to Marco." By GEORGE D. LESLIE, R.A., Author of "Our River." With Illustrations by the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth.

Old Melbourne Memories. By RALPH BOLDREWOOD, Author of "Robbery Under Arms," etc. Second Edition. Revised. 12mo, cloth.

Women in English Life from Mediæval to Modern Times. By GEORGIANA HILL, Author of "A History of English Dress." With Portraits. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth, pp. (Vol. I.) xiii. + 350, (Vol. II.) x. + 362. Price, $7.50.

The Evolution of Bird-Song. With Observations on the Influence of Heredity and Imitation. By CHARLES A. WITCHELL, Author of "The Fauna of Gloucestershire." 12mo, cloth, pp. x. + 253. Price, $1.75.

The London Burial-Grounds. Notes on their History from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By Mrs. BASIL HOLMES. With 63 fine Illustrations. Small 4to, cloth.

WORDSWORTH.—The Poetical Works of William Wordsworth. Edited by WILLIAM KNIGHT. To be completed in 16 volumes. With Portraits. Vols. I., II., and III. now ready. 12mo, cloth, pp. (Vol. I.) lxiv. + 337, (Vol. II.) x. + 438. Each. $1.50. (Eversley Series.)

Poems. By CECIL FRANCES ALEXANDER (C.F.A.). Edited, with a Preface, by William Alexander, D.D., Oxon., LL.D., Dublin, etc., Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of all Ireland. With Portrait. 12mo, cloth.

God's Garden. Sunday Talks with Boys. By the Rev. W. J. FOXELL, M.A., B. Mus. (Lond.). With an Introduction by the Rev. F. W. FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S., Dean of Canterbury. 12mo, cloth, pp. xiii. + 177. Price, $1.25.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, 66 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

If you take pains to learn the experience of users of the Caligraph Typewriter

You Will Use No Other

Send for our latest Booklet, Catalogue, and Paper Sample Book

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO.
237 Broadway, New York

Stock-taking Sale.

Beginning this week, a thoroughly organized Sale, in every department, to decrease stock.

Particularly good values and moderate prices in the Remnants, Short Lengths, and Oddments of Silks, Dress Goods, and Wash Fabrics.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway and 11th St.,
New York.

Don't Wear a Corset

when you ride, play tennis, or attend gymnasium. Be sure to wear style No. 296 FERRIS Bicycle Corset Waist; every physician will recommend it. Permits full expansion of the lungs. Beautiful shape, stiff bust, graceful, comfortable—elastic sides—supports skirts and stockings.

FERRIS Bicycle Corset Waist

Ask for style No. 296 at your merchant's, or send $1.00 and get them by mail from the makers.

FERRIS BROS., 341 Broadway, New York.

A Book you will Want to Read

Just issued by The Century Co.

NOTES OF THE NIGHT

By Charles C. Abbott

Author of "A Naturalist's Rambles about Home," "A Colonial Wooing," etc.

A group of delightful essays and sketches by a trained observer and naturalist, whose skill in depicting the various aspects of nature was never more strikingly exemplified than in the pages of this book. Price, $1.50.

"C. C. Abbott's latest and altogether alluring volume."—THE OUTLOOK.

"He tells his story with simplicity and charm. The book is delightful in every sense."—The Advance.

"Dr. Abbott is a naturalist who can write without fear of the dry-as-dusts."—The Independent.

"Another of Dr. Abbott's delightful out-door books." The Evangelist.

The Puppet-Booth

By Henry B. Fuller

Author of "With the Procession," "The Chevalier of Pensieri-Vani," etc.

A book of twelve highly imaginative plays of a kind new to American literature. Intensely interesting. Price, $1.25.

A Strange, Sad Comedy

By Molly Elliot Seawell

Author of "Maid Marian, and Other Stories," "The Berkeleys and their Neighbors," etc.

An international romance, the scene laid in Newport, New York, and Virginia. Price, $1.25.

Sold everywhere. Published by

THE CENTURY CO., N. Y.

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

Volume 53 Saturday, 27 June, 1896 Number 26

POLITICAL events moved rapidly last week. The Republican Convention assembled at St. Louis on Monday, June 15, at noon. A vivid impression of the Convention is furnished by a correspondent on another page; the platform is reprinted in full on page 1216, and editorial comment on the platform and the nominations is made in another column. The desire of the Republican party as a whole had been so plainly indicated that the Convention was in effect a ratification meeting, ex-Governor McKinley having been nominated on the first ballot by a vote of 661½ to 240½, and the nomination was immediately made unanimous. Mr. Hobart was also unanimously nominated. The impassioned speech of Senator Teller on behalf of the free-silver men was the dramatic feature of the Convention. Those who differ most widely from Senator Teller do not doubt his entire and even passionate sincerity. It looks at this moment as if the free-silver men would wait until the meeting of the Democratic National Convention before deciding upon their policy. In case that Convention declares in favor of free silver, they may co-operate with it. If it does not, they will undoubtedly nominate a ticket of their own, with Senator Teller in the chief place. In any event, the country now has the satisfaction of having the currency question presented to it in a definite and unmistakable form. It is unquestionably the issue of the present campaign; all attempts on the part of politicians of either party to subordinate it to other issues have so far signally failed, and will fail. The popular instinct has fastened itself upon the currency question as the question of the hour, and all those who believe in frank, honest, and courageous dealing with public questions as peculiarly essential in a democratic country will rejoice that the day of evasions and compromises is past.

◆

William McKinley, the Republican nominee for the Presidency, has been so prominently before the public for the last ten years that his personality and the principal facts in his life are already widely known. He is of Scotch descent, and an American in the sense in which Richard Grant White declared the word ought to be used; that is to say, his ancestors came here before the Revolution. Born in Ohio in January, 1843, he attended various schools and entered Allegheny College at Meadville, Pa., but fell ill, was obliged to leave college, and began to teach, with the expectation of completing his college course later. He was eighteen years of age when the war began, and in June, 1861, he enlisted, saw active service in several campaigns, and was brevetted Major for gallant and meritorious services at Opequan, Cedar Creek, and Fisher's Hill. He remained with his regiment until the end of the war, when he began the study of law at Canton, O., where he now lives, and was admitted to the bar in 1867. He soon attracted attention as a speaker, and entered public life as an enthusiastic Republican. In 1876 he was sent to Congress, and served seven terms in that body, taking an active part in Congressional life from the beginning. He early attracted attention as an enthusiastic protectionist, and his zeal not only placed in his hands the preparation of the bill which bears his name, but has given him the position of leadership he holds in his party. Defeated for Congress in the election of 1890, he was almost immediately elected Governor of Ohio, and was re-elected two years later. He was married in 1871. Mrs. McKinley has, unfortunately, been an invalid for many years, but, in spite of her ill health, has contributed, it is said, in no small measure to Major McKinley's popularity and success. The face and figure of Major McKinley indicate vigorous health, steadiness of nerve, and cheerfulness of temperament. He is an attractive and persuasive speaker, an excellent conversationalist, and a man of unblemished personal character.

◆

The nomination by the Republican Convention of Mr. Garrett A. Hobart, of New Jersey, for the Vice-Presidency—like that of Mr. Stevenson by the Democrats in 1892—illustrates the difficulty, under present conditions, of placing in nomination for the Vice-Presidency a man of really National reputation. But, although Mr. Hobart has not hitherto been widely known outside of his own State, he is in every other respect a fit and excellent candidate. He is in warm sympathy with the principles and aims enunciated in the platform; his personal integrity and character are of the highest; and he has had a wide experience within his own State in business, legal, and political matters. Mr. Hobart was graduated at Rutgers College in 1863, and soon after entered the practice of law. As an attorney, a stockholder, and a receiver, he has had much to do with many large corporations, and his executive abilities developed in this way are great. He has been Speaker of the New Jersey Assembly and President of the New Jersey Senate. His legislative career has been an active one, and a large number of bills have been originated by him. His name has been mentioned more than once in connection with the United States Senate, and there is little doubt that he could have obtained a nomination if he had desired it. In 1880 he became Chairman of the Republican State Committee, and has continued in that office ever since. For the last twelve years he has been a member of the National Republican Committee. Mr. Hobart is about fifty-two years of age. In placing him in nomination Judge Fort, of New Jersey, thus described him: "He is in the prime of life; a never-faltering friend, with qualities of leadership unsurpassed, of sterling honor, of broad mind, of liberal views, of wide public information, of great business capacity, and withal a parliamentarian who would grace the Presidency of the Senate of the United States."

◆

A most important event in the Democratic campaign for the week has been the statement made public by President Cleveland. In it he expresses his belief that the Democratic party will not be "so unpatriotic and foolish" as to place in its platform a demand for the "free, unlimited, and independent coinage of silver;" he reiterates his attachment to the party and belief in its future; and he declares that he "desires hereafter no greater political privilege than to occupy the place of private in its ranks." There is even yet an astonishingly small amount of discussion regarding the Democratic candidates to be put in nomination at Chicago. President Cleveland's declaration would seem to remove him from the list of possible candidates, although some papers still declare that he would accept the nomination if forced upon him. It would seem quite improbable in any case that the free-silver men, who form such a large proportion of the delegates, would be willing to accept Mr. Cleveland as a candidate. Democratic conventions were held last week in Maine, Florida, Arkansas, Delaware, and Idaho. In Maine, after a fierce wrangle, a resolution was adopted by a majority of ninety-two opposing the free coinage of silver, and favoring the single gold standard "unless a different standard is adopted through international agreement." In Florida the single-standard men gained a partial victory, though by a narrow margin; a resolution instructing the delegates in favor of free coinage was defeated, and one referring all financial questions to the National Convention was adopted by a vote of twenty-three to twenty-two; a majority of the delegates elected are opposed to free coinage. The Arkansas Convention, on the other hand, adopted resolutions urging the free coinage of silver at the ratio of sixteen to one, and opposing the issue of interest-bearing bonds for any purpose in time of peace. The Idaho Convention also declared emphatically for free coinage, and the same is true of the convention in Delaware. A recent estimate places the number of delegates elected who are in favor of free coinage as 576, of those opposed as 352; 298 are still to be chosen.

⁂

Quite as important as Mr. Cleveland's expression of opinion on the currency question is the very definite statement which Mr. W. C. Whitney puts forth, and which is notable alike for its frank disclosure of his own position and its frank expression of anxiety for the future of the Democratic party. He says that for the last fifteen years leaders of public opinion in the South and West have been advocating as a remedy for existing financial ills free coinage of silver at sixteen to one; that this advocacy has been general and conscientious; that a large majority of the delegates to the coming Democratic Convention have been elected for the purpose of incorporating that doctrine into the platform of the party. Eastern Democrats, on the other hand, believe almost universally that such action would bring general ruin to the country, and that the incorporation of free coinage into the platform would be likely to cause a disruption of the party. If the movement for free coinage meant the establishment and maintenance of gold and silver upon equal terms with each other and at a parity of purchasing power, there would be no substantial disagreement in the party; but free coinage, in Mr. Whitney's judgment, would mean going over to a silver basis. France, Germany, Belgium, Italy, and Austria desire to establish the double standard, but no two or three of them, even with the co-operation of this country, believe themselves able to maintain the double standard. In Mr. Whitney's judgment, the prospects for international action looking for bimetallism were never so promising. "It has come to pass that among the persons in Europe who are trained, recognized scientists upon monetary and economic questions, scarcely one is not at the present moment advocating the desirability of the joint standard as the real solution of the monetary difficulties of the world. This includes every professor engaged in teaching or lecturing on these subjects in the universities of Great Britain." Such a consensus of scientific opinion tends to diffuse itself rapidly, and that diffusion is going on. At this moment, when the possibility of international action is becoming more definite, it would be, he thinks, a fatal mistake for this country to take up, alone, free coinage of silver on its own account, as the financial disorder which going over to the silver basis would produce might postpone indefinitely the realization of international action for the establishment of bimetallism. Mr. Whitney closes his statement by an emphatic declaration that he will not under any circumstanccs be a candidate for the Presidency.

⁂

The Supreme Court of Indiana last week handed down a decision affirming the constitutionality of the Nicholson temperance law. This law, it will be recalled, forbade the local authorities to issue licenses against the remonstrance of a majority of the voters, required the removal of all blinds or screens preventing a full view of saloon bars during hours in which sales are illegal, and made it unlawful for any one not a member of the saloon-keeper's family to enter a bar-room when sales are prohibited. The Court declared that it had no right to pass upon the wisdom of the law, or even its justice, unless express provisions of the Constitution had been violated. No such violation was found in the law. The attorneys for the liquor-dealers maintained that the local option provision gave a majority of the voters in a locality a legislative power, while the Constitution restricted the exercise of such power to the representatives elected by the people of the whole State. The Court held, however, that the control of the liquor business in a locality was not a legislative function, and that it might be delegated to the whole body of the voters as constitutionally as to a Board of Supervisors. The Court further held that all the important restrictions placed upon the sale of liquor were constitutional, and that any citizen who signed a remonstrance against the issue of licenses could not withdraw his name after the time for the obtaining of new signatures had passed. This last point in the decision is especially important, as the liquor-dealers have in many places prevented the closing of the saloons by inducing a few signers of remonstrances to withdraw their names, and thus reducing the number of the remonstrants to a minority of the voters. It is believed that the Court's decision will be followed by the systematic enforcement of the law in nearly all parts of the State.

⁂

The City Club of New York some months ago began an examination of the books used by the election inspectors in this city at the last election. The objects of this investigation were twofold: to obtain definite information concerning the competency of the men who applied yearly for the position of election inspectors, and to secure accurate data as to the number, location, and disabilities of the voters claiming assistance. The result of the examination, which has been conducted by the Club at the expenditure of considerable money and time, has justified the effort. At the last election 2,379 voters were assisted. Of this number over thirteen hundred declared themselves illiterate; they could neither read nor write. More than six hundred in one Assembly District gave defective eyesight—partial blindness—as the reason for asking assistance. Seventy-seven were assisted because of old age. The loss of arms, hands, or legs prevented one hundred and thirty-four citizens from voting without assistance. Paralysis was given as the cause of needing assistance by one hundred and three; rheumatism was given by thirty-four; nervousness by twenty-three; palsy by fourteen. One gave "a confused mind" as the reason for needing assistance, and two "invalids" were assisted. The greatest illiteracy existed in the Second Assembly District, two hundred and eighty-nine voters acknowledging their inability to read or write. This is, on an average, six to each election district. The Second Assembly District extends from Whitehall Street to Canal Street. It has been, and is, one of the strongest Tammany districts in the city, and is always the scene of more or less disorder on election day. The district ranking second in illiteracy is the Sixth Assembly, one hundred and fifty-four in this district acknowledging their inability to read and write. The examinations show that the election inspectors had but a faint conception of the law governing the casting of the ballot.

❀

The college commencement season has not been marked by any very striking incident, but the reports from the different colleges show a steady growth in resources and in number of students, in spite of the long financial uncertainty and depression. Every year registers an important expansion of educational opportunities, large additions to educational apparatus, and a material gain in the financial resources of the different institutions. There is, indeed, no more encouraging sign of the times in this country than the progress which higher education has made during the last twenty years. Two American scholars have been selected for the highest university honors abroad. The University of Cambridge has conferred honorary degrees on Professor Simon Newcomb, of the Johns Hopkins University, and on Professor Francis A. March, of Lafayette College, a selection which will command the assent of all American scholars. Professor Newcomb has already received similar recognition from other universities abroad and in this country of his eminent attainments as an astronomer and as a mathematician. Professor March has long been one of our foremost philologists and one of our most eminent teachers. Among interesting local events of the year is the offering of a prize in poetry at Yale University, which is to be open for competition to any member of the University, on some subject relating to history and art. The judges who are to make the award this year are Mr. Edmund Clarence Stedman, Mr. Thomas Bailey Aldrich, and Mr. Francis Fisher Browne. In this connection it is a pleasure to note the organization of a series of courses for teachers in the same university, embracing such subjects as psychology and pedagogy, political and social science, history, English, the modern languages, mathematics, and a number of sciences. The course will consist of twenty-four exercises which are to be given on Saturdays during the college year, and are to be under the charge of the best-known men in the Faculty of the University.

❀

Another hopeful indication of the possibility of international arbitration is seen in Lord Salisbury's reply last week to an address presented by a committee of the International Arbitration League, headed by Sir John Mowbray. Lord Salisbury not only expressed the desire of the British Government to arbitrate disputes whenever possible, but specifically declared that there was every hope that the matters now under discussion between the United States and Great Britain would soon be amicably arranged. Lord Salisbury said that it was his desire that the principle of arbitration should be extended as far as was consistent with the just rights of those whose interests were committed to the charge of the Government, and he believed that the same view prevailed in the United States. The various difficulties besetting the question had to be solved one by one, and the deputation must not be impatient if the discussion of these matters was conducted with deliberation and circumspection, in order that no mistake should be made whereby the ultimate triumph of the principle might be jeoparded. From other official English and American sources it is learned that negotiations between the two countries in regard to the Venezuelan question are in progress and that a settlement may soon be reached. Just what basis is likely to be determined upon it is as yet impossible to say, as the diplomats on both sides of the ocean are naturally extremely reticent. A report that a collision had lately occurred between Venezuelans and parties of British Columbians in the disputed territory lacks confirmation.

❀

Lord Salisbury has made, in the House of Lords, a definite statement with regard to the ultimate aims of the Nile campaign. The immediate object of the expedition, according to the Prime Minister, and as the world knows very well, is to protect Egypt from the inroads of the Soudanese and to assist Italy at a critical point. So far as the protection of Egypt is concerned, the most experienced students of the situation have long felt that that could be accomplished only by a practical control of the Soudan country. General Gordon declared twelve years and more ago that Egypt could be guarded only by destroying the Mahdist force. "If the Governments of Egypt and France do not pay more attention to the Soudan, . . . the absorption of the Soudan from Cairo is only a question of time;" and his main charge against the policy of the Government was expressed in the words, "You will not let Egypt keep the Soudan, you will not take it yourself, and you will not permit any other country to occupy it." This policy, which the Government refused to follow at the time, Lord Salisbury has now apparently adopted. He has committed himself apparently to the restoration of order in the country where General Gordon fell a victim, if not a martyr, to his own earnest conviction of the moral necessity of English rule in that section. The Prime Minister does not commit himself to anything further than the occupation of Dongola this year, but it is very clear that the expedition will not stop at Dongola. The very occupation of that place will arouse a sentiment in the Soudan which will compel England to make herself master of the resources which the Mahdists now hold in reserve and of the country which furnishes such a basis for activity. The task of ruling Egypt has never been a light one. It looks now as if it would impose upon England the necessity of keeping order not only along the Nile but in that vast expanse of territory which has been so prolific of religious fanaticism and political disorder in the past.

❀

The festivities at Moscow did not pass off without untoward incidents, the most appalling of them, of course, being the awful tragedy which involved the death of several thousand persons who had come to share in the festivities. An unexpected incident occurred at a dinner at the German Union. Prince Henry was present as a representative of the Emperor of Germany. In the course of his speech the chairman referred to the other German princes who were present as members of Prince Henry's suite, and also as the vassals of the Emperor of Germany. This statement was not only incorrect in both particulars and very much out of taste, but it was also extremely unfortunate in the present state of feeling, the steady aggressions of Prussia having already borne fruit in a general state of suspicion and irritation among the princes of the other German States. If Prince Henry had had tact, he would instantly have disavowed or qualified the unfortunate phraseology of the chairman, but he allowed it to pass; thereupon Prince Louis of Bavaria, the heir apparent of the Regent of that Kingdom, with more heat than formality, interrupted the chairman and protested that the German princes were in no sense the vassals of the Emperor of Germany, but his allies, and that every German State in the Empire was as sovereign as Prussia itself. Prince Henry then made the second blunder of leaving the room in evident anger. The incident in itself is not important, but it shows that good breeding does not always obtain even among the highest personages and on the most august occasions. It is significant, however, of the feeling toward Prussia which is steadily growing in the other German States, and especially in the South German States. The German Empire is grounded in the affections and sentiment of the German people, but the German Empire is one thing, and the absorption of the Empire by the Prussian State is another; and the latter is a process which is likely to be resisted in every possible form.

❀

It has long been evident that the French Protectorate of Madagascar could not be permanent in its character. An arrangement by which a practically subject country manages its own affairs and commits its foreign affairs to the management of a conquering race is not a lasting arrangement. No surprise was excited, therefore, by the bill which has been introduced into the French Chamber of Deputies formally annexing Madagascar and organizing it as a French colony. It is quite likely that this may be in the long run a favorable turn of affairs for the island itself; although the brave resistance of the Hovas, in addition to the fact that they are being despoiled of possessions which are theirs by right, has not made other nations especially sympathetic to the French movement. Moreover, the French have not been successful as colonists. No people in Europe love their own homes so devotedly as the French, nor suffer so much from nostalgia when they are in other lands. There is, in fact, no other land in which the arrangements for living on a moderate income are so comfortable as in France, and no other country in which so much material pleasure can be gotten out of life with such a small expenditure of strength and money. This delightful home attraction has told against the success of French experiments in colonization, and so far the colonies which France has planted have drawn upon her resources rather than contributed to them. It is said that over $30,000,000 a year are spent on the French colonial possessions, and that Algeria, where France has so long had a free hand and enjoyed so many opportunities of turning her possession to profitable account, still taxes the mother country about one-half that amount per annum; and these expenditures, it ought to be added, are in the line of ordinary expenses. To these must be added great sums for the support of military establishments. The French are attracted by a showy foreign policy, but they have paid very dearly for it in recent years—so dearly that they must regard the addition of Madagascar to the territory covered by the French flag with no sanguine expectations of increased revenue or prosperity.

❀

While hosts of American art students have sought and found instruction in France, very few have made use of French academic opportunities. The enormous majority of all Americans studying abroad have spent their time mainly in Germany. This has been due, not only to the great opportunities which German universities have offered, but also to the fact that their doors have been thrown wide open to foreign students. In France, on the other hand, no attempt has been made to encourage the coming of students from abroad, and, in fact, everything has been done to discourage them. In Germany the diplomas of American colleges are accepted at their face value. In France examination requirements which have presented great difficulties to foreign students have barred the way to entrance to university studies. Dr. H. J. Furber, of Chicago, has not only given this matter a good deal of attention, but has set at work influences which have brought about a very material modification of the conditions of admission in the departments of science at the French universities. He prepared and sent to the French Minister of Public Instruction, in June, last year, a memorial, in which he set forth the facts already stated, and this was followed by the formation of a Franco-American Committee, upon which was secured the active co-operation of some of the foremost French scholars. As a result of discussion and petition, a ministerial decree was recently issued which places American students in the Faculty of Sciences substantially on the same footing as native French students, the diploma of any well-known American college being sufficient to secure matriculation. After matriculation, a student may elect his own courses, study wherever he pleases, and present himself for final examination in his own good time. Thus not only ease of admission is secured, but freedom of transference from one institution to another. In the Faculty of Science and also of Theology, French institutions of higher learning are now as hospitable as the German universities, and it is likely that the Faculty of Letters will soon follow the example set by the other Faculties.

❀

Benjamin H. Bristow, whose death occurred in this city on Monday of this week, has been removed for nearly twenty years from the sphere of politics. He will be remembered, however, as representing much that is best in political life. As Secretary of the Treasury under President Grant, the vigor and astuteness shown by him in prosecuting those engaged in the notorious Whisky Ring frauds earned the gratitude of the better elements in both parties. He at once became prominent as a possible candidate for the Presidency, and in the National Republican Convention of 1876 he received on the first ballot 113 votes. During the campaign which followed he cordially supported Mr. Hayes. Mr. Bristow was a Kentuckian by birth, and, after supporting Mr. Lincoln in his first candidacy for the Presidency, entered the Union Army, fought under General Grant, and was wounded in the battle of Shiloh. His ability as a lawyer was of the highest, and it found unusual opportunity for its exercise when he held the office of United States District Attorney for Kentucky and that of Solicitor-General of the United States. During the last years of his life he had resided in New York, and had carried on an extensive and important law practice.

❀

It would be difficult to name any person who would be more missed from the literary and social fellowship of New England than will be Mrs. Mary B. Claflin, whose sudden death occurred last week. Both her country home at Newtonville and her city home in Boston were for many years centers of a fellowship not to be seen in any other community in the United States, and in few if any other homes. Mrs. Claflin was not accustomed to make much of formal gatherings of literati—though some remarkable occasions of this sort are connected with the history of "The Old Elms," such as the Mrs. Stowe breakfast, given a number of years ago. But her home was a hospitable resting-place, where men of genius were at ease, without demands made on them or exhibition made of them. Among her intimate friends were Holmes, Longfellow, Whittier, Mrs. Stowe, Lucy Larcom, Stedman, Phillips Brooks, Henry Ward Beecher, Wendell Phillips, Garrison, and Sumner. Mrs. Claflin has given the public a little glimpse of this beautiful life in her last book—"The Old Elms." She was a woman of remarkable executive ability, of singular poise of character, with that excellence of judgment which such poise generally confers, with a refined culture, the result of a long life spent in really the best society of the country—best measured by heart and mind—and a fine literary taste, showing itself as truly in her conversation as in her too infrequent contributions to literature. All her gifts she consecrated with great singleness of purpose and unconscious simplicity of nature to the service of others. No one thought of envying her the wealth, position, culture, and friends she possessed, because they were all used by her to confer blessing upon others. "I know," says Paul, "both how to be abased and how to abound." There are not too many Americans who know how to abound. This is a knowledge which Mrs. Claflin possessed in an eminent degree, and it won for her from all who knew her at all intimately that love which is so much to be desired above mere admiration. She was admired for her abilities; she was loved for her unselfish employment of them. Many a charity will miss her as sorely as will the social circles which she helped to create and inspire.

The Republican Platform

The Republican platform, in its clear enunciation of principles and in its wise silences, is superior to any recent platform literature in our political history. It is wisely silent respecting the issues which grew out of the war. It has turned its face from the past toward the future. With the exception of the planks on the subject of temperance and woman—planks so platitudinous that a reasonable sense of humor should have sufficed to exclude them—the platform expresses, in clear and cogent English, positive convictions on the great National issues of the hour. Its most important utterances, by which the issues of the campaign will practically be decided, are those upon protection, currency, and our foreign policy.

Its protection plank seems to us to mark a decided advance toward a permanent protective policy over any previous utterance of the Republican party. Whether a comparison of this with previous platforms would justify this declaration or not, it is certain that protection as defined in this platform is proposed, not as an incident in a revenue-raising tariff, nor as a temporary expedient for promoting infant manufactures until they are strong enough to meet with foreign competition, but as a permanent National policy for the purpose of excluding foreign competition and raising domestic prices—protection, not of manufactures by the admission of raw material free, but of the products alike of the field and of the factory. With this is coupled a declaration in favor of reciprocity—"free admission for the necessaries of life which we do not produce." The principle of protection as thus defined seems to us to have as its intended effect the building up of a wall between nations. If generally accepted by other nationalities, we should find our breadstuffs excluded from England and our pork from Germany, for it is a poor rule which does not work both ways. The Outlook desires, on contrary, to see all walls between nations taken down, and the same unrestricted traffic between all the civilized nations of the globe which now exists between all the States of this Union. Reciprocity might bring this about, but not reciprocity as defined by the Republican platform. The voter, however, has to decide, not between ideal systems, but between such systems as are practically offered to him in the alternatives of a political campaign. Between a tariff system organized for the protection and promotion of all American industries, agriculture and manufacturing, and such a hybrid as finally passed the Congress of the United States, by which, despite a platform declaring in favor of tariff for revenue only, protection was offered, not to all American industry, but to certain special industries favored by financial interests in the Senate, we cannot think the American people will long hesitate. The Republican platform offers a definite, consistent, self-respecting policy. So did Mr. Cleveland's famous message; so did the Wilson Bill as it proceeded from the hand of its author. So did not the present tariff measure after great corporate interests had exerted their influence upon it.

On the currency question the Republican party declares itself "opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved." This is perfectly explicit, and the country is to be congratulated on so definite and clear a statement. On all currency questions we speak with reserve. They are confessedly most difficult; they require expert judgment; and, unfortunately, expert judgment is not always disinterested. We believe that the gold standard has worked, and is working, serious injury and serious injustice; but, so far as we can judge, the abandonment of the gold standard by this country without the co-operation of the other nations with which it is commercially united would work greater injury and greater injustice. It would almost inevitably give us two kinds of money, of unequal value. It would almost inevitably shake, if it did not shatter, the credit system on which the prosperity of the Nation depends. It would almost inevitably separate us from other nations with which our commercial prosperity is identified, and impair our credit alike in our own country and in other countries. It would not improbably delay, and possibly prevent, the adoption of a bimetallic standard by international agreement, so effectively urged by Mr. Whitney in his letter from which we quote in another column. Whether it produced these results or not, it would be a leap in the dark; and a leap in the dark it is never wise for a people to take, and the Anglo-Saxon people are never inclined to take it. As between the free coinage of silver and the maintenance of the present standard until bimetallism can be secured by international agreement, the latter we believe to be the more conservative, the more cautious, and the safer course.

Upon the third great National issue, perhaps the most important of the three, the Republican platform favors what may be properly termed an aggressive foreign policy. It believes that the Hawaiian Islands should be controlled by the United States, that "the Nicaraguan Canal should be built, owned, and operated by the United States," that the Danish Islands should be purchased for a naval station, that increase of colonial possessions in either the North or South American continents, even by purchase, should be resisted, and that our navy and our harbor and seacoast defenses should be further enlarged. Upon these points The Outlook differs from the Republican platform. We believe that it is wise to leave the Hawaiian Islands to take care of themselves; not to interfere with the affairs of the South American States, except for the protection of our own National interests in the remote contingency of their being in peril; to leave the Nicaraguan Canal to be built by private enterprise whenever there is a prospect of sufficient commercial profit to justify so great an undertaking; and, finally, we doubt the wisdom of any further enlargement of our navy, and we think that a permanent court of arbitration would be a far more effective and a far less expensive protection to our coast than any enlargement of harbor and seacoast defenses.

Professor Phelps on International Arbitration

Professor E. J. Phelps, in an article in the July "Atlantic Monthly," states from the conservative point of view the objections to a permanent court for the settlement of all issues between nations—a supreme court of Christendom, analogous to the Supreme Court of the United States. His objections may be briefly stated to be (1) that "an arbitration cannot extend the rules of international law beyond what is already established, since those rules find their only sanction and authority in the general consent of nations;" (2) "nor can it be expected that any controversy whatever which involves national honor will be submitted to arbitration by any nation capable of self-vindication;" (3) "that the same considerations will likewise prevent the reference to such a tribunal of any dispute involving the integrity of the territory of a nation;" (4) and, finally, that "in no case whatever can that remedy (arbitration) be successfully proposed where popular feeling on the one side or the other has reached fighting heat and has passed beyond the control of representative government."

Anything which Professor Phelps writes on this subject is entitled to be treated with great respect by all readers of intelligence on both sides the Atlantic. Nevertheless, we cannot but think that Professor Phelps's article shows more of the spirit of the lawyer than of the statesman; of the man who is governed by precedents than of the man who is guided by principles. There is danger, certainly, in the visionary who evolves an ideal out of his own imagination and then seeks to conform his practice or the practice of the community to this ideal. But there is also danger in the traditionalist who imagines that nothing can be which has not been, and measures all propositions for reform by historical precedents. The wise philosopher does neither; he considers the history of the past chiefly that he may learn from it what are the principles by which mankind should be guided and governed, and when he has elucidated these principles he applies them with unhesitating courage to new conditions. Thus, he perceives that a permanent tribunal has taken the place of wager of battle in the settlement of questions of personal and property rights; that public opinion has taken the place of the duel in the settlement of questions of personal honor; that the Supreme Court of the United States has taken the place of war in the settlement of controversies in this continent arising between over forty independent States; and, finally, that in the last century more than seventy-five different questions arising between different nations have been settled by appeal to courts of arbitration. From this history of the progress of the past he deduces the conclusion that the day is not far distant when all questions between nations will be settled by an appeal to reason, as now all questions between individuals are settled and all questions between the States of this Union.

To answer Professor Phelps's objections as briefly as we stated them: (1) An international tribunal would be the method of determining what is the general consent of nations, as now the State tribunal determines what is the general consent of individuals. (2) No question of national honor can be stated which would not better be solved by the appeal to reason than by the appeal to force of arms. (3) The integrity of national territory, regarded, as it ought to be, as a sacred trust, would be better protected by such an appeal than by the arbitrament of arms, which settles nothing but the relative force of the combatants. (4) And, finally, the creation of a permanent court, to which as a matter of course all issues arising should be referred, would prevent popular feeling from passing beyond the control of representative government exactly as it has prevented popular feeling from passing beyond such control, except in one instance, during the hundred years of our national existence.

It appears to us that Mr. Phelps has not acquainted himself even with the latest precedents. At least there is nothing in his article to indicate that he is aware of the fact that, within the last twelve months, France has, by the nearly unanimous action of its legislative chambers, proposed a permanent treaty of arbitration between that country and the United States; that negotiations are now pending between England and the United States for a permanent tribunal for the settlement of issues arising between those two nations; and that the International Parliamentary Conference, in which were members from fourteen different European Parliaments, has not only proposed to its respective Governments the organization of a permanent tribunal, but has formulated a plan for its organization. With these indications present before us, we ought not to go back one or two hundred years to determine what can be done in this close of the nineteenth century and this opening of the twentieth for the substitution of reason in the place of force as a means of settling questions of justice between the nations.

Growth Through Experience

There is a general agreement among men that experience is the most effective and successful of teachers; that for many men no other form of education is possible; and that those who enjoy the fullest educational opportunities miss the deeper processes of training if they fail of that wide contact with the happenings of life which we call experience. To touch the world at many points; to come into relations with many kinds of men; to think, to feel, and to act on a generous scale—these are prime opportunities for growth. For it is not only true, as Browning said so often and in so many kinds of speech, that a man's greatest good fortune is to have the opportunity of giving out freely and powerfully all the force that is in him, but it is also true that almost equal good fortune attends the man who has the opportunity of receiving truth and instruction through a wide and rich experience.

But individual experience, however inclusive and deep, is necessarily limited, and the life of the greatest man would be confined within narrow boundaries if he were shut within the circle of his own individual contact with things and persons. If Shakespeare had written of those things only of which he had personal knowledge, of those experiences in which he had personally shared, his contribution to literature would be deeply interesting, but it would not possess that quality of universality which makes it the property of the race. In Shakespeare there was not only knowledge of man, but knowledge of men as well.

His greatness rests not only on his own commanding personality, but on his magical power of laying other personalities under tribute for the enlargement of his view of things and the enrichment of his portraiture of humanity. A man learns much from his own contacts with his time and his race, but one of the most important gains he makes is the development of the faculty of appropriating the results of the contacts of other men with other times and races; and one of the finer qualities of rich experience is the quickening of the imagination to divine that which is hidden in the experience of other races and ages.

The man of culture must not only live deeply and intelligently in his own experience, rationalizing and utilizing it as he passes through it; he must also break away from its limitations and escape its tendency to substitute a part of life, distinctly seen, for the whole of life vaguely discerned. The great writer, for instance, must first make his own nature rich in its development and powerful in harmony of aim and force, and he must also make this nature sensitive, sympathetic, and clairvoyant in its relations with the natures of other men. To become self-centered, and yet to be able to pass entirely out of one's self into the thoughts, emotions, impulses, and sufferings of others, involves a harmonizing of opposing tendencies which is difficult of attainment.

It is precisely this poise which men of the highest productive power secure; for it is this nice adjustment of the individual discovery of truth to the general discovery of truth which gives a man of imaginative faculty range, power, and sanity of view. To see, feel, think, and act strongly and intelligently in our own individual world gives us first-hand relations to that world, and first-hand knowledge of it; to pass beyond the limits of this small sphere, which we touch with our own hands, into the larger spheres which other men touch, not only widens our knowledge but vastly increases our power. It is like exchanging the power of a small stream for the general power which plays through Nature. One of the measures of greatness is furnished by this ability to pass through individual into national or racial experience; for a man's spiritual dimensions, as revealed through any form of art, are determined by his power of discerning essential qualities and experiences in the greatest number of people. The four writers who hold the highest places in literature justify their claims by their universality; that is to say, by the range of their knowledge of life as that knowledge lies revealed in the experience of the race.

It is the fortune of a very small group of men in any age to possess the power of divining, by the gift of genius, the world which lies, nebulous and shadowy, in the lives of men about them or in the lives of men of other times; in the nature of things, the clairvoyant vision of poets like Tennyson, Browning, and Hugo, of novelists like Thackeray, Balzac, and Tolstoï, is not at the command of all men; and yet all men may share in it and be enlarged by it. This is one of the most important services which literature renders to its lover; it makes him a companion of the most interesting personalities in their most significant moments; it enables him to break the bars of individual experience and escape into the wider and richer life of the race. Within the compass of a very small room, on a very few shelves, the real story of man in this world may be collected in the books of life in which it is written; and the solitary reader, whose personal contacts with men and events are few and lacking in distinction and interest, may enter, through his books, into the most thrilling life of the race in some of its most significant moments.

No man can read "In Memoriam" or "The Ring and the Book" without passing beyond the boundaries of his individual experience into experiences which broaden and quicken his own spirit; and no one can become familiar with the novels of Tourguéneff or Tolstoï without touching life at new points and passing through emotions which would never have been stirred in him by the happenings of his own life. Such a story as "Anna Karénina" leaves no reader of imagination or heart entirely unchanged; its elemental moral and artistic force strike into every receptive mind and leave there a knowledge of life not possessed before. The work of the Russian novelists has been, indeed, a new reading in the book of experience; it has made a notable addition to the sum total of humanity's knowledge of itself. In the pages of Gogol, Dostoievski, Tourguéneff, and Tolstoï the majority of readers have found a world absolutely new to them; and in reading those pages, so penetrated with the dramatic spirit, they have come into the possession of a knowledge of life not formal and didactic, but deep, vital, and racial in its range and significance. To possess the knowledge of an experience at once so remote and so rich in disclosure of character, so charged with tragic interest, is to push back the horizons of our own experience, to secure a real contribution to our own enrichment and development. Whoever carries that process far enough brings into his individual experience much of the richness and splendor of the experience of the race.

The Outlook Vacation Fund

In the issue of The Outlook of May 30 under this head was published a letter announcing that the writer had sent to The Outlook a handkerchief and a hammock, both the work of the women of Paraguay, the handkerchief to be sold for the benefit of this Fund, the hammock to be sent to Cherry Vale. The hammock is so beautiful that it did not seem to be designed for rough, out-of-door use, and subject to the ravages of the weather. The editors decided that both of these articles should be offered for sale in the columns of The Outlook for the benefit of the Vacation Fund. This decision was announced in the same issue in which the donor's letter was published; the sale to close June 20, the articles on that date to be assigned to the highest bidders.

The bidding was spirited. Several offers of ten dollars each were made for the handkerchief. Offers of varying amounts were made for the hammock. One offer made stated that the money was to be kept whether it was the highest bid or not.

The highest bid for the handkerchief was twenty dollars, made by a lady, a resident of New York City. The highest offer for the hammock was one hundred dollars, made by a gentleman, a resident of New York State. The owners of these two articles are to be envied for the pleasant thoughts that must always be associated with their use.

THE VACATION FUND

Previously acknowledged	$1.443 38
Mrs. J. I. B., Summit, N. J	25 00
A Working Woman	2 00
T. C. Van N	5 00
F. H. W	5 00
M. E. C., New York, N. Y	5 00
J. F. R., Hutchinson, Kan	2 00
A Friend, Pomona, Cal	5 00
Young Ladies' Institute, Windsor, Conn.	10 00
F. W. Van W	15 00
Mrs. L. E. P., River Falls, Wis	5 00
Presbyter, for Hammock	100 00
King's Daughters Circle, Hillside School, Norwalk, Conn.	8 50
E. A. N	25 00
C. J. E., Middletown, N. Y	5 00
N. Y. G., Syracuse, N. Y	3 00
Mrs. J. E. C., Corning, N. Y	5 00
Mrs. M. O., Corning, N. Y	5 00
J. S. T., New York, N. Y	5 00
From a Friend	5 00
W. W. L., Philadelphia, Pa	10 00
Mrs. S. S. B., Camden, N. J	5 00
H. C. C., Boston, Mass.	5 00
L. H. S., New Haven, Conn	3 00
Tokio, Japan	2 00
Friend in Ohio	1 00
G. B. T	2 00
Mrs. J. E., Ridgefield, Conn	25 00
Altruria	5 00
M. G. B., Montclair, N. J	10 00
R. B. G. G., East Greenwich, R. I	10 00
L. W. D., Brookline, Mass	3 00
M. L. F., Swarthmore, Pa	10 00
Total	$1,774 88

The Republican National Convention

From a Special Correspondent

MY first impression of the St. Louis Convention was an unfavorable prepossession. By the time our train left Philadelphia nearly every car was filled with men wearing badges. A more frivolous body, to use no stronger word, it would be difficult to get together. If there was any thoughtfulness or seriousness of purpose among them, it was not apparent in looks, manners, conversation, or behavior. It was the kind of a crowd a horse-race would have attracted. Upon reaching St. Louis, however, and seeing the delegates separated from the claqueurs who came in the interests of candidates, I found that my prepossession had to be modified. The delegates, as a whole, were a strong body of men. They did not represent the more serious elements in the Republican party; but they were representative of its successful business men. Many of them, indeed, bore the familiar stamp of the professional politician indifferent to ideas and scornful of moral reforms. But the professional politician was less in evidence than I anticipated. Taken as a whole, the delegations were composed of what are called the "solid" men of the Nation.

The real battle of the Convention, as every one knows, had been fought and finished before its opening session. The question of candidates had been determined by the instructions of the people. Had it not been so determined, Mr. McKinley would never have been nominated. One had only to visit a very few delegation headquarters on Monday, or mingle a very little among the crowds that thronged the lobbies of the principal hotels, before he found that the dominant spirit of the Convention was for neither the Ohio platform nor the Ohio candidate. The men who served as delegates, even from the States further West than Ohio, were, as a rule, out of sympathy with Mr. McKinley on the money question. Even in the California delegation, which was instructed to support the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, a majority of the delegates were personally in favor of the gold standard. The men who are sent as delegates to the National Conventions represent the classes and forces favorable to monometallism, and if those at St. Louis could have gone back and faced their constituency, they would not only have adopted a gold platform, but they would have nominated a candidate to match it. Mr. Reed would probably have been the favorite. There was far more enthusiasm for him than for any one else. Had he been nominated, it is possible that the Convention might have been described as an enthusiastic one.

What made it worth while to attend the Convention was the opportunity it gave to learn at first hand about the political situation in every part of the country. Every delegation had its headquarters in one of the leading hotels, and it was easy to find some one at leisure and glad to talk with you, no matter what headquarters you visited. It is true that some of these talkative gentlemen were no more instructive than the ordinary newspaper editorial or campaign manager's bulletin. You had only to know how the talker stood to know how "everybody" stood. But the testimony of such incarnations of public sentiment was less confusing than would appear if it were reported. The whole manner of the men would indicate to you that they were simply claiming, and you had only to drop the conversation and talk with some one else. A surprising number of men would tell you that their opinions differed from those of most of the people in their States. Particularly was this true of those who came from rural districts in the South. Most of these men were themselves hostile to the silver movement—some of them regarding it as a Democratic device to account for the fearful depression of trade under the Democratic Administration. This depression these men thought was due to the Democratic tariff, and they believe that with the restoration of protection high prices would return for farmers as well as manufacturers, and prosperity would again be universal. But while these were their views, they would tell you with regret that the farmers in their States were talking nothing but free silver, and that the silver movement in the rural districts knew no lines either of party or color.

The great triumph of the men who managed the gold-standard movement in the Convention was the change in sentiment among the Southern delegates before a vote was reached. This change was especially marked among the negroes. In part it was due to the able and honorable work done by Dr. Courtney, a member of the Massachusetts delegation. Dr. Courtney took in hand the task of intellectually persuading the negro delegates to accept gold. On Monday he assembled them in the Massachusetts headquarters, and pleaded with them, for the credit of their race, to support the standard demanded by the culture of the party. There was, however, another delegate at work among the negroes whose arguments were believed to have been of another kind. This was William Pitt Kellogg, the carpetbag Governor of Louisiana who later became distinguished as the leader of the worst elements among the negroes in the lottery campaign four years ago, and in the New Orleans campaign a few weeks ago. Between Dr. Courtney's public appeals to the negroes and Mr. Kellogg's private appeals, all but six of them were persuaded to indorse the gold standard.

Before Monday was over the silver men knew precisely how the battle had gone, and what would be their own course of action. On Monday evening one of their leaders, who was a personal friend, outlined to me the programme which afterwards was carried out. He and his associates were more delighted with the prospect of an explicit gold-standard plank than Senator Lodge and Mr. Platt themselves. They had felt that they could not support the party if it really stood for the continuance of the gold standard, and they were profoundly grateful that the real attitude of the party was to be expressed in a way that could not be misunderstood by any of their constituents. This was particularly the sentiment of the younger men, and my friend told me that in his State the silver movement was pre-eminently a young men's movement.

The first day's proceedings of the Convention had but one distinguishing characteristic, and that has already been dwelt upon by every independent paper in the country. It was the utter absence of enthusiasm. The speech made by temporary Chairman Fairbanks was not in any way a poor speech, and it was altogether in accord with the platform adopted by the Convention. But it fell perfectly flat. Its declarations for "sound money" and against the free coinage of silver elicited some applause, but its declarations for protection scarcely any at all. The day following, permanent Chairman Thurston's speech was much better received. Each sentence declaring the attitude of the party upon various public measures was received with cheers, and they had a genuine ring. The remainder of the second day's proceedings, however, were characterized by a general lifelessness. They were, indeed, of a routine nature, and no Convention could have been deeply stirred by them. The most important business transacted was the disposition of the report of the Committee on Credentials in favor of seating the contesting or McKinley delegation from the State of Delaware, instead of the regular or Quay delegation led by Mr. Addicks. Upon this there were spirited speeches, Mr. Hepburn, of Iowa, pleading the case of the Delaware boss whose name has become synonymous with the purchasing of votes. The vote upon this question furnished the first real test of the strength of the McKinley following. It stood 545½ to 359½ in favor of sustaining the Committee's report and seating the McKinley delegation. As some professed supporters of Mr. McKinley voted in favor of the Addicks delegation, the assurance of Mr. McKinley's nomination was made doubly sure.

On the afternoon of the second day the Committee on Resolutions met, and the break in the party which the events of Monday foreshadowed was accomplished. In the Committee on Resolutions the silver men could make their strongest showing, for each State and Territory, however small its population, had a representative. North Carolina alone among the Southern States supported the free-coinage contingent, but this support gave the silver men eleven votes upon the Committee. Senator Teller pleaded with all his strength and all his heart for the adoption of a bimetallic plank. The speech he made in this Committee was really the farewell of the silver men to the Republican party. Senator Teller was himself deeply affected. In his youth, he said, he had left the Democratic party on the slavery issue before the Republican party was organized. This change he had made easily, for he was then young and his political life was before him. It was very different for him now to leave the party to which he had given the strength of his life, and from which he has received his highest honors. There were tears in a good many eyes, and one Western Senator actually cried over the impending separation. During the evening I heard Congressman Hartman, of Montana, describe the scene. "It was," he said, "as if they were burying friends." But the separation was inevitable. The silver men were not ready to compromise further than to accept the free coinage of the American product, or general free coinage with a tariff on imported silver equal to the difference between the price of foreign bullion and that of American coin. Each of the compromise propositions was negatived by the same vote as the free-coinage proposition pure and simple, and when the silver men left the meeting of the Committee they left it realizing that they were no longer members of the Republican party.

In the evening I met several of their leaders. I had been impressed with the marvelous hold Senator Teller had upon his younger colleagues, and when I met him I found that this was due to the personality of the man more than to his ability or his exceptional scholarship. His face was plain, but his bearing was characterized by dignity and sincerity. Later in the evening, by mere accident, I rode with him to the suburbs. There was nothing aggressive about his attitude. He was perfectly clear about the course to pursue, but had evidently entered upon it in no light mood. He was confident of the triumph of his cause, but he remarked, rather sadly, that he did not know that he should live to see it. Congressman Towne, of Minnesota, the ablest free-coinage Republican of the Northwest, was confident that his State would support the free-coinage cause. The currency question so completely overshadowed every other in the campaign that he had little doubt of the fusion of all the free-coinage elements. Mr. Bryan, of Nebraska, who holds in the Democratic ranks the same position as Mr. Towne in the Republican, urged as strongly as Mr. Towne that fusion must and could be effected.

On the last day of the Convention the programme agreed upon was carried out. Senator Foraker presented the majority report of the Committee on Resolutions; Senator Teller presented the minority report, favoring the free coinage of silver. After reading the plank offered by the minority, he urged its adoption in a speech stating at length the attitude of himself and his colleagues. This speech was vigorously applauded by the silver men on the floor and in the galleries, but in no way equaled his appeal to the Committee on Resolutions the day before. The Convention heard him through, but not without some manifestations of impatience. Then followed the vote upon the free-coinage resolution. It was tabled by a vote of 818½ to 105½. In most States in which the vote was divided each delegate was required to go on record. But this declaration of faith did not satisfy the free-coinage men. Senator Dubois, of Idaho, requested that the gold-standard plank be separated from the remainder of the platform, and each delegation vote upon it. There were many Republicans, he said, who opposed the gold standard though they did not accept the free coinage of silver, and he wished the delegates to place themselves on record in this matter. Colorado and Montana seconded the request for a division of the platform, and the roll-call was ordered on the anti-silver plank. This was indorsed by a vote of 812½ to 105½. Thereupon Senator Teller asked the privilege of the floor for Senator Cannon, of Utah, who read the protest of the more radical silver men against the change in the party's creed, and the announcement that they could no longer consider themselves members of the Republican party. When Senator Cannon reached the concluding paragraph, declaring that the Republican party, "once the redeemer of the people," was "now about to become their oppressor," he was stopped by a sweeping storm of hisses and cries of "traitor." The Convention would hardly have allowed him to read the names of the signers of the protest had it not been for Chairman Thurston's dignified handling of the situation. With difficulty restoring quiet enough to make himself heard, he called out in a clear voice, "The Chair suggests to the Convention that the Republican party, in convention assembled, need not fear any declaration." For the first time since the Convention opened, the hall rang with cheer after cheer given because the feeling compelled it. Senator Cannon was at last permitted to read the names of the signers. Thereupon he and Senator Teller shook hands with the officers of the Convention and left the hall, followed by their supporters, a few cheers, and a volley of howls of derision.

What happened after this, except the balloting, will be of no interest a year hence, or even a few weeks hence. Senator Lodge's speech nominating Speaker Reed fell below the expected level. So, too, did that of Mr. Depew nominating Governor Morton, though this was better received. No one of the speeches stirred the Convention. The outcome was already determined, and oratory full of purpose and fire was perhaps impossible. At all events, no one of the orators reached a high level. The twenty-five minutes' applause at Mr. McKinley's name, and the fifteen minutes' applause which greeted that of Senator Quay, were mere demonstrations of enthusiasm, not expressions thereof. When the candidates for Vice-President were named, the enthusiasm manifested was for Henry Clay Evans, of Tennessee, defrauded last year of the Governorship of that State. Nevertheless, Mr. Hobart, of New Jersey, with the solid support of the New York and Pennsylvania delegation, had an easy victory.

The bolt of the silver delegates at St. Louis was not the result of the explicit "gold" plank adopted in the platform. The matter had been talked over for months, and the silver-mining States had determined not to accept another compromise. The explicitness of the anti-silver plank simply added Senator Pettigrew, of South Dakota, to the number of those who walked out of the Convention, and Senator Hansborough, of North Dakota, to the number of those who will support the new silver party. The nomination of Senator Teller by the seceding delegates had also been long under advisement. His candidacy had been assured the support of several of the most prominent Populists and a large number of prominent Southern Democrats. To the latter Senator Teller's opposition to the "Force Bill" and his support of the income tax seemed ample compensation for his protectionism. When, therefore, the seceding silver delegates met and nominated him, they knew that his name would receive at least respectful consideration at Chicago and enthusiastic advocacy at the later conventions at St. Louis. The address issued by the silver delegates nominating Senator Teller set forth briefly that allegiance to personal conviction is a higher duty than allegiance to party; that the question of the maintenance of the single gold standard or "the restoration of bimetallism" is the supreme issue of the campaign; that those who believe in the free coinage of both metals must act together to obtain success; and that the public and private life of Senator Teller fit him for the leadership of the allied forces. The document issued by the Populist leaders indorsing the position of the silver Republicans, and urging the acceptance of Senator Teller's candidacy by the Populist party, was inferior in style and lacked the signatures of many of the best-known Populists. Nevertheless, it was signed by the Chairman of the Populist National Committee and several other men prominent in the party organization.

St. Louis, Mo.

FRANCES E. WILLARD

Frances E. Willard[1]

By Lady Henry Somerset

IN the life of Cardinal Manning, which has lately attracted so much attention in England, it is narrated that, while still a dignitary of the Church of England, Manning obtained an interview with the late Pope. As an English ecclesiastic he was much pained to find that the head of the Holy Roman Church was singularly ignorant of some of the most salient features of the Anglican Communion. But the Pope was interested to know any particulars that he could give of a woman who had done much for prison reform and for the uplift of fallen humanity, and questioned him closely on Mrs. Elizabeth Fry, her work, and the sect to which she belonged (of which he seemed to know nothing), and eagerly asked every possible detail. The reforms which called out the consecrated energy of Mrs. Fry have to a large extent ceased to be matters of vital and immediate interest. Our prisons are no longer places where men and women are herded together like human cattle; and the best methods for the management of penal settlements occupy the thoughts of all who are interested in sociology. But the fact that the necessity for her work has in a measure passed away has in no way minimized the greatness of the woman who brought about such amelioration. She stands as the ideal prisoners' friend, in whose footsteps each one has endeavored to tread who has sought in any way to assist the friendless and forlorn.

In like manner I believe that long after the Temperance Reform has become a matter of past history, long after the "Woman Question" has brought about the equality of men and women, political, social, and financial, the name of Frances Willard will be remembered, not only as one who led a great movement, but as one who gave her life, her talent, her enthusiasm, to make the world wider for women and better for humanity.

Such a record will be associated with no particular form of philanthropy, but will stand among the landmarks of the ages that point the progress of the world along the upward way. Remarkable as a speaker, excellent as a writer, with a genius for organization, perhaps Miss Willard's rarest gift is the power of inspiring others with a belief in what they can accomplish. Many a speaker has attained oratorical fame and many a philanthropist has accomplished wonderful ends by devotion and hard work, but to few has it been given so to arouse women on every hand that on all sides captains have been called, companies have been enlisted, armies organized, and the most timid, undeveloped, and apparently commonplace individuals have been transformed, under the magic power of her enthusiasm, into untiring workers and gifted speakers. She possesses in a rare degree the quality of making others believe that they are capable, for the simple reason that she believes it herself. She sees the germs of a possibility where to the ordinary eye there is nothing but the arid and commonplace, but under the sun of her sympathy this germ grows into a very harvest of accomplishment. There are women in America and England who have probably brought the question of the possibilities for women as clearly before the public mind as Frances Willard, but to none belongs the honor so much as to her of having influenced the masses of the home women. It is comparatively easy to convince a thinking few of the logical position which the advocates for women's liberty bring forward; it is extraordinarily difficult to penetrate the walls of prejudice which have surrounded the average woman, which has kept her a patient prisoner under the dominion of man in Church, in home, and in State, and which has been reinforced by the misquotations and misunderstandings of religious teaching, and cemented by the traditions which have been handed down for centuries; but when the history of these times comes to be written it will be found that this is actually what Frances Willard has accomplished. It has not only been carried out by the infinite patience, iron determination, and extraordinary personal sympathy of the woman herself, who, having devoted herself to a line of work, has gone forward as unswervingly as the arrow flies from the bow. Difficulties have not daunted her, sneers have not sapped her enthusiasm, fatigue and hardship have not held her back.

AN EARLIER PORTRAIT

---

[1] This article forms one in the series "Founders of Great Movements." A previous article in this series was that on General William Booth, by Commander Railton, in The Outlook for February 22. Other articles will be on Dwight L. Moody, by Prebendary Webb-Peploe; on Bishop Vincent, by President W. R. Harper; and on Francis E. Clark, by John W. Baer.

MISS WILLARD'S COTTAGE AT TWILIGHT PARK

Miss Willard has been depicted so often in pen and pencil, in the mezzotint of the critic and the full coloring of the admirer, that it is difficult to present an original view of such a model; but, instead of "beginning at the beginning," as the children say, I propose to present Frances Willard as she appears to-day, and, looking down the avenue of time, trace that distant horizon which has caused her to be all that she is to the world of philanthropy and reform.

In October, 1891, I stood for the first time on the platform of the railway station in the "classic town" of Evanston. I had only landed in America a few weeks, but my steps were naturally bent to the Mecca of White Ribboners. It was a sunny autumn day; the rare tints of ruby and gold that gleam as summer's funeral torches in the glad New World were flaming in brilliant beauty along the shady alleys of that lovely spot on the shores of Michigan.

Like all temperance women good and true, I had placed Miss Willard's image in the inmost shrine where I pay loyal devotion to those rare spirits who lead the ranks of reform; and yet, as the train glided towards Evanston, I felt that our idols seem made but to be shattered, and this one also might possibly shortly be dashed violently to the ground. On the platform she awaited my coming—a delicate, fragile figure in a pretty blue dress, her small hand shading her eyes as she looked about attentively seeking her guest; and as she came toward me I saw a face so kind and frank that it seemed as though the peaceful simplicity of childhood had somehow remained unruffled by the chilling blasts of life. Extending her hand, she greeted me, not as a stranger, but as a sister beloved and as one to whom her soul was linked by that strong fellowship and suffering that binds us in our "peaceful war," a holy comradeship in the common cause for the uplift of humanity. From that hour I have felt that we were friends—friends not alone to joy in each other's companionship, but in that truer sense that binds souls, only to form a new link in the lengthening chain of love and loyalty that holds humanity to God.

A few minutes later I was in Rest Cottage, as it was then in its completeness; for since that day the sun has set on that great life that was the center of the home circle. Mrs. Willard stood there then in the doorway to meet me, erect and queenly still, in spite of her eighty-seven years! She greeted me with that gentle kindness that showed at once her innate refined and quiet dignity; and as we sat round the supper-table that night, amid the dainty, bright, yet simple surroundings of that charming home, and, later, gathered round the open hearth in Miss Willard's "den," or walked next day on the pretty lawn with its trees and flowers, grape arbor, and rustic dovecote, I felt that, in all my wanderings up and down the world, I had never found a more harmonious home—a spot which seemed to combine the breezy atmosphere wafted from the great wide world with the fragrant family life which remained unruffled in its holy calm.

INTERIOR OF THE TWILIGHT PARK COTTAGE

ANNA A. GORDON AND FRANCES E. WILLARD

A few days later I went to Boston to attend the World's and National Conventions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It was the most remarkable gathering I ever witnessed. The Convention opened on November 12 in Tremont Temple, and the immense building was thronged at nine o'clock, many taking their seats in the early dawn. The vast audience and their enthusiastic interest were the seal of the work accomplished by that great organization. From the hour we met in the bright sunshine of that opening morning till the time we parted, five days later, in the dim twilight of the closing hour, an unbroken sense of God's overshadowing presence rested upon the meetings. It seemed as though each woman there had responded afresh to her Master's call, and had given her life and power anew to fulfill the purposes of God.

During the Convention the crowds assembled were so immense that the great hall could not accommodate them. Six overflow meetings were held daily in different churches. Nothing is more significant than the fact that on the Sundays during these memorable days sixty pulpits were occupied in the city and suburban churches by women. The Convention itself was a sight never to be forgotten. Delegates from forty-four States and five Territories occupied the floor, alert, intelligent, and eloquent, all bent on the business of the hour. Perfect order reigned, and the galleries were filled with eager spectators. It would be impossible to look upon that wonderful gathering without knowing that the words of prophecy were fulfilled, and great indeed was "the company of women that published the Word." Philanthropic work of every description was represented, notably evangelistic, educational, preventive, and reform in all its branches—religious, legal, and social—classified into forty departments. The consecrated power of America's womanhood had united to redeem the country and the home.

On the crowded platform there stood the slender figure of the woman who led that Convention with a master hand. We are told that when Sir Michael Costa, the greatest conductor we have ever known, wielded the baton, and gave the signal for the mighty orchestra to commence, as the great harmony filled the air with a burst of melodious sound, the violins leading in plaintive refrain, supported by the volume of a hundred instruments, on a sudden the great master paused, and, looking up, said, "Where is the piccolo?" The magic culture of his sensitive ear missed that one small sound in the harmonious whole. Miss Willard, with the same infinitely fine perception, knows each note that should be struck, each tone that should vibrate in the great White Ribbon chorus. Her marvelous power of calling forth the best arises, perhaps, chiefly from the fact that she expects the best, and each one wishes to meet the standard by which she is measured by her leader.

Such a gathering of women, such perfect command of the situation, are not mere chances. It is not often that rare talent is given to one woman by which she can bring so much to pass. Nothing happens in this world; "it is the toil of a life woven into the warp of womanhood," was the thought that crossed my mind as I watched this scene; and as I noted the delicate lines that had been drawn by the chisel of time on the pale face of the President, I knew that she was among those who had laid down her life to find it again in the women whom she was creating for the twentieth century and the glad good times she was helping to bring to the world.

Capacity for work, untiring and unremitting, is one of the great characteristics which the close friendship of these years has revealed; and, save when sleeping, I have never seen her idle. She knows no days of leisure; on the cars, out walking or driving, her hand is always busy making notes, or her brain planning, thinking, devising some new method to help forward the welfare of all the various enterprises with which she is connected. The secret of her success has perhaps lain in this, that she has set herself towards her aim, and nothing would tempt her from that goal. The most glorious mountain scenery will not deter her from accomplishing the allotted task she has in mind. She has written her annual address with her back to the White Mountains, determined to see nothing but her work. On the Hudson, one glorious day, sooner than not accomplish her task when all were rejoicing in the radiant beauty of that most wonderful scene, Frances Willard sat below because she "had work to do" for a coming Chautauqua meeting. She is among those who accomplish because she understands how to deny herself, and it is this constant habit that has molded her mind and made her work ring true.

During these past years this indomitable energy has been turned to pioneer work, and Miss Willard, having set herself the herculean task, or "stint," as she called it, in GENERAL OFFICERS OF THE WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

Agnes E. Slack Lady Henry Somerset

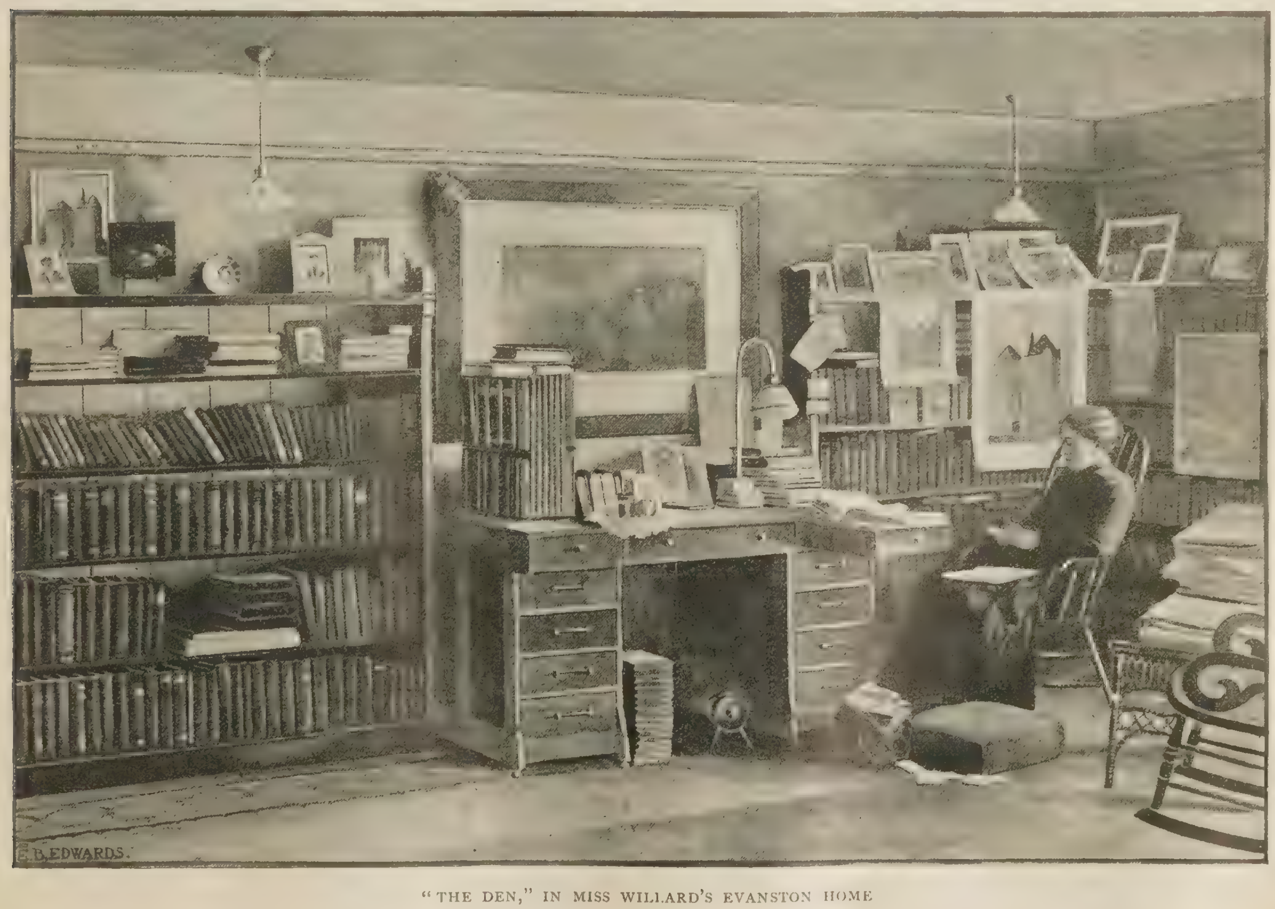
Anna A. Gordon Frances E. Willard Mrs. Mary E. Sanderson remembrance of the old farm days, of visiting every city of 10,000 inhabitants, and generally those that had but 5,000, accomplished in a few years a work that it would have taken many women a lifetime to build up. During those long days of travel her faithful and devoted companion, Anna Gordon, has told me of the ceaseless letters, articles, leaflets, that flew from her busy hand. Often she arrived after a weary day's journey only in time to go to the platform and face that great pitiless public which, in spite of its kindness and good nature, so little understands the vitality that is poured out when the speaker gives up himself and lays his best at its feet. It requires an energy as superabundant as Miss Willard's to carry on the multiplicity of interests that surround her life, the details of organization, and the responsibility of that vast association that has grown under her hand. "You have a fatal versatility," said a friend to her; and, with a little sad smile, she has often repeated the remark, for with her nature it has required a real consecration to consent so far to sacrifice her ambition as to be obliged to limit her powers to do the thing in hand less well than it could be accomplished, because it was to the interest of the work to limit the time allotted to any one department.

FRANCES E. WILLARD

As a speaker Miss Willard is in her way unique, with a wonderful combination of eloquence, pathos, and humor; a sense of proportion and an understanding of her audience that make her utterance always harmonious with their requirements. It is probably this power of "rapport" with other souls that has been her greatest talent—the quick understanding that always seizes the perspective of every circumstance from another's angle of vision, and the intense humanness of the woman. The most difficult crises have been often averted by the gentle touch and the whispered explanation, "See here, honey!" and who could fail to feel that ill humor, bitterness, and carping must be laid aside, and that larger-souled charity reign which seemed to radiate from the heart of the President till the darkest corners lurking in the human mind were touched by its warmth and genial glow! "She is ambitious" is the worst condemnation of her enemies, but surely if there is a noble, a pure, a true ambition, it has been that of Frances Willard. For she, forsaking a career as brilliant as any that ever opened to a young woman, deliberately adopted a vocation that promised not one cent of money, consecrated herself to the most unpopular reform of her time, and devoted her best years to the most arduous and often apparently thankless tasks.

An army of women the world over can testify to the unselfish interest with which she has ever placed those who worked by her side in positions of prominence, and labored for their advancement with greater eagerness than she has ever sought her own. Nothing has conduced more to the building up of the great edifice of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union than the way she has always with diligent care gathered these "lively stones fitly joined together."

Among those characteristics which have often struck me I may mention her utter absence of self-assertion. I have sometimes smiled when I have listened to conversations between her and younger workers. They will tell her all



"THE DEN," IN MISS WILLARD'S EVANSTON HOME

MISS WILLARD AT HOME

they have done, their opinion on questions to the consideration of which she has given her life, and no word will ever escape her either of all she has accomplished or all she knows upon the subject. The gentle question will draw on the eager talker, who too often takes most literally the aphorism that it "is more blessed to give than to receive."

A great surrender is the price paid for all real success. Frances Willard was early called to choose between the pleasant path of culture and self-advancement and the dusty highway of the reformer. In 1871 she was elected the First President of the Women's College in Evanston. Her great capacity for leadership soon showed itself, and the extraordinary influence she obtained over the minds of her pupils was manifest in that development of individual character which has been her constant care. The question that was always kept before her girls was not, "What are you going to be in the world?" but "What are you going to do?" So that after six months under her tuition each of her scholars had a definite idea of a life-work. One of her pupils, now the wife of a college president, says:

> In the most important part of her work as an educator—the development of character—I can speak from the most intimate knowledge. In this I doubt if she ever had a superior, and but for Arnold of Rugby I should have said an equal. Her power over the girls who came under her influence was most extraordinary. It is an amusing fact that some people regarded it with a mixture of wonder and fear, as something a little allied to witchcraft—an inexplicable spell not founded in reason. But she never used her personal power of winning friends for the mere purpose of gaining the friends. She never seemed to do anything from policy, nor to think whether she was "popular" or not. She was always planning for our happiness and welfare, and would go to any amount of trouble to gratify us. Then she was always reasonable. She never insisted that a thing must be simply because she had said so, but was perfectly willing to see and acknowledge it if she herself was in the wrong. Her ideals of life and character were very high, and she succeeded in inspiring her girls with a great deal of her own enthusiasm. I never, at any other period of my life, lived under such a constant, keen sense of moral responsibility, nor with such a high ideal of what I could become, as during the years in which I so proudly called myself one of "her girls."

Like many other speakers, her call to address large audiences came to her as by an accident rather than by design.

During the years 1868 to 1870, Miss Willard had enjoyed rare opportunities for travel in Europe and in the East, and at a women's missionary meeting in Chicago she had spoken of her visions of a new chivalry—the modern crusade which the women of her country should enter upon: the chivalry of justice; the justice that gives to woman a fair chance to be all that God meant her. The next day a wealthy, well-known Methodist called on her, and entreated her to use the remarkable gift she undoubtedly possessed, and to speak out to the world all that God had put into her heart. She appealed to her mother for advice, and with characteristic courage that large-hearted woman answered, "My child, enter every open door." And so it came about that Miss Willard addressed a great audience in Chicago, and the next day the city papers were filled with columns about the eloquence of this young woman.

"AT LAST." MISS WILLARD'S VICTORY OVER THE BICYCLE

Copyright. From "A Wheel Within a Wheel." The F. H. Revell Company, New York. By permission.

In 1874 a very Pentecost of God swept over the continent, and Miss Willard caught the first sound of that new language of reform which had been given to the women who had been called to join the ranks of the crusade against the liquor traffic. In that year she resolved to resign her post as President of the College. After the union of the Women's College with the University at Evanston it had become impossible for Miss Willard to carry on her work according to the principles she had laid down, and sooner than abandon the methods she believed to be right she gave up the position she had delighted to fill. She suffered acutely in arriving at this decision, and it seemed to her, on leaving her cherished pupils and the institution she loved so dearly, as though her life-work was broken almost before it was begun. But the scholars whom God trains learn hard tasks to fit themselves for the work that he has prepared, and Miss Willard, in the pause that followed this great decision, clearly heard the call which was to her the opening of a new existence. The Woman Question had long been to her of vital interest because it formed part of the great human question. She saw that until woman participated in purifying political life the corruptions which everywhere undermine the real interests of the Nation could not be swept away. Years before this thought had matured she had anticipated the movement that swept over New York in 1874–5, and on looking back over her annual addresses we find page after page devoted to the thought that the political and municipal life of America must be brought into harmony with the religious and ethical teachings of that great country. There are those who, even in these days, condemn women for taking any part in public questions; but to Miss Willard politics is part of her religion, for she believes the government of the country to be an integral part of the service demanded by God from every loyal soul. It was inconceivable to her mind that women should forever occupy the position of ambulance nurses in life's great army, without pausing to ask themselves why the sick and the wounded were strewn around them, and what was the real question at issue in dealing with the evils of the legalized liquor traffic. Almost every reformer is ahead of his age, and the message that he has brought to the world has been one of prophecy. It is only, probably, when the goal of life for him has been reached that his prediction has passed into fact, and men and women forget that the age ever existed when such teaching called forth the severest criticism of the so-called Christian world. There must unquestionably be a movement of reform in the political and municipal life of the great free country across the Atlantic, and when that history comes to be written, the name of Frances Willard and the brave women who stood around her will be indissolubly linked with the crisis which made for the larger liberty of the land they love.

The accompanying picture of Miss Willard and Miss Rebecca Krikorian was taken April 20, 1896, just as Miss Willard was about to sail for England. Miss Willard was one of the first to grasp the awful significance of the Sassoun massacre a year and a half ago, and she has not ceased, with pen and voice, to plead for the Armenian sufferers, and to warn Christendom of the terrible retribution that is sure to follow if this colossal crime against humanity is allowed to pass unatoned. The burden of Miss Willard's farewell address in Chickering Hall was a plea to the womanhood of America to extend the strong arms of their love and protection around their sisters in Armenia. Miss Krikorian, who is a very interesting and effective speaker, is the daughter of the able pastor of the great Protestant Church of Aintab. This venerable man, after forty years of faithful service, has been thrown into a Turkish prison for refusing to sign lying Turkish documents to the effect that the reported outrages were false, and that the Armenians had every reason to be grateful for the privilege of living under the beneficent shadow of his Majesty Sultan Abd-ul-Hamid.

In 1878 Miss Willard definitely entered the temperance ranks, and was made President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Illinois. The acceptance of this office was, however, coincident with a time of severe struggle for this ardent soul. She addressed at this period great gatherings of men in Chicago at midday, composed principally of the denizens of the saloon, the unemployed, and all the flotsam and jetsam of the great city. "I was glad often to think," said Miss Willard, "when I looked at their pinched faces, that I, too, knew what it was to be hungry." She had given up a remunerative position in order to "cast her bread upon the waters," and, as sometimes happens, it did not seem at that time as if she would find it even after many days. Her mother shared her struggle nobly, and together they fought the grim want that seemed likely to invade their little home. By the kindness of friends the bare necessaries of life were provided for her in order to enable her to continue her work, and by degrees, when the fame of her lectures began to spread, she was enabled by her speaking to earn a subsistence for herself and the mother whom the women of the White Ribbon army have loved to call St. Courageous.

In 1879 Miss Willard was elected President of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and in 1881, accompanied by Miss Gordon, she made the tour of all the Southern States, and it is a remarkable fact that her extraordinary tact enabled her to speak along the most advanced lines without offending any of the conservative Southern women. There is, however, little doubt that her work accomplished more than this. As a Northerner going to the South so soon after the terrible conflict had rent the Nation, she was one of the first to take the olive branch and bring home the message that "all ye are brethren" in that greater struggle for the union of souls against the enemies of mankind.

From that time onward work thickened round her. First it was the Purity Department that engaged her attention, when the Nation was aroused by a cry that came from across the water, and Miss Willard dared prejudice in order to stand for women oppressed and downtrodden. Probably the greatest crucifixion of her life came to her when she felt that she must leave the Republican party, in which she had been reared and to which her father had been a stanch adherent, and throw in her lot with a political faction that took a decisive ground against the liquor traffic. Those are days the bitterness of which it would be difficult to gauge; for there is nothing so hard to bear as the criticism of friends beloved and of comrades in a good cause.

Miss Willard has since 1892 been editor-in-chief of the "Union Signal," the official organ of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and to her belongs the honor of having conceived the first really great international scheme that was to bind women the world over. Not content only with carrying out her plans in her own country, her great soul reached out to the ideal of uniting the English-speaking nations of the world, and, indeed, women the world over, by one strong link under the banner on which is inscribed the battle-cry of home protection. One by one she sent forth women to all parts of the world, apparently helpless, moneyless, and friendless: but the promise that "according to your faith be it unto you" has been wonderfully fulfilled in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and as each went out she gathered around her in every part of the globe groups of women who have remained loyal and devoted, until now the international organization is a fact and not a dream. Perhaps nothing could speak more eloquently of the culmination of this work than the magnificent demonstration held in Albert Hall last year, when the fifty countries in which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union exists were represented—"a great human mosaic," as Canon Wilberforce eloquently described it. Her visit to England was the occasion of a magnificent recognition of her powers. "It is the finest speech I ever heard," was the verdict of the leader of the United Kingdom Alliance, after her great address in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester: and probably no man or woman has in our generation received from the philanthropists of this country a more generous ovation than was accorded to her in Exeter Hall when first she came to these shores. "The best-loved woman in the United States" is the saying that I have most often heard applied to her in her own country. But it would be impossible to know her and to conceive for a moment that any adulation or admiration could spoil the independence of her character. Of Puritan ancestry, tracing her descent from sturdy yeomen of a little village in Kent, where, in the crabbed handwriting of the fifteenth century, stands the record of her ancestors' births, deaths, and marriages, Miss Willard has inherited from her New England mother and her worthy father that fearlessness and backbone that enabled the pioneers to found the great nation of which Americans are so justly proud. Brought up on a farm in Wisconsin, Miss Willard seems to have retained

ANNE WHITNEY'S BUST OF MISS WILLARD, FOR WHICH WHITTIER WROTE THE INSCRIPTION:

She knew the power of banded ill,
But felt that Love was stronger still,
And organized for doing good
The World's United Womanhood.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET

all through her life the wholesome, breezy atmosphere of those early days, when she and her sister scampered like young colts over the prairie, and yet conned their books and listened to their mother's beautiful rendering of the finest gems of literature by the old farm fireside. I have never heard of a single human being who, having admired Frances Willard on the platform or in her public work, was disappointed in her when he came to know her in her home; and this, I think, is the highest testimony that can be given to any public life. She brings to her work and to all her concepts of reform the winged spirit that must always fly above the ordinary level of the world's daily round; a soul that is ever looking upward, and that seems to expand in the conscious presence of the Spirit that guides her life and meets her asprations. She looks upon questions of theology and reform with a wideness of vision that enables her to embrace the whole group of humanity, and yet she does not lose sight of the great horizon from which "the dayspring from on high hath visited" her. As I have studied her life in these last years I have been often reminded of the words she spoke before the Council of Women in 1888, which to me seem to be in complete harmony with the key to which her being is attuned in its growing sense of the world invisible:

"I go like a bee into the gardens of thought; I love to listen to all the voices, and I go buzzing around under the bonnets of the prettiest flowers, and the most fragrant, just like this bee; and when it is a lovely life and a sweet life, it seems to me I get a lot of honey; but I have a wonderful bee-like fashion of carrying it all home to my own Methodist hive. I couldn't do any other way. I am made that fashion; it is part of me. It is worked into the woof and warp of my spirit, the result of the sweet old ways in which I was brought up. I should have to deny myself in my inmost heart if I didn't believe what mother had taught me at her knee; if I didn't, above all the teachings and all the voices, reverence the Voice that calls to me from the pages of the Bible; if I didn't, above all things and always, in my mentality and spirituality, translate God into the term Jesus Christ: I cannot rest except there. The inmost Voice, deep down in my heart, says: 'Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!' Receive it as I sit here listening to women I love and revere and honor for their loyalty to what they believe is the highest and best. Receive it as I go forth into the crowded ways of life with so many voices calling me on every hand. Receive my spirit! It will be the last thought that this brain will think, it will be the last quiver of this heart that has ached and rejoiced. 'Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!'"

It must oft fall out
That one whose labor perfects any work
Shall rise from it with eyes so worn that he,
Of all men. least can measure the extent
Of what he has accomplished.

The temperance cause, in spite of the gigantic strides it has made of late years towards success, is still relegated to the shadowy land of unpopular and supposedly impracticable and visionary reform. The time, however, is at hand when it shall rise phœnix-like and triumphant; and the men and women of the future will look back over the pages of history where, written in golden letters, shall stand the names of the true patriots of this age, and none will be more clearly traced thereon than that of FRANCES WILLARD.

THE PRIORY, REIGATE, ONE OF THE HOMES OF LADY HENRY SOMERSET

WAITING FOR THE WORD TO MARCH
The Street-Cleaners' Parade in New York, May 26, 1896

Colonel Waring's "White Angels"

A Sketch of the Street-Cleaning Department of New York

By William W. Ellsworth

THE march of Colonel Waring's men down Fifth Avenue on a pleasant afternoon last May was one of the most inspiring sights that New York has seen in many a day. We have had "labor parades" before, but never one like this. Here was a body of men whose duty it is to do what is generally considered a menial work—to sweep our streets and take away our garbage—and they marched like honest, loyal citizens, proud of their glistening uniforms and proud of their organization and the man who led them. We who looked on saw one of the greatest examples of the truth of the old-time phrase, "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." It was a victory for honesty in municipal government, a victory for real reform, a victory for common sense over "practical politics." Perhaps some who stood upon the curb came to scoff, but no one in sight of the writer did any scoffing after the procession once swung into sight. The people applauded a good "alignment" as if they were looking on at a parade of the Seventh Regiment; and it is safe to say that they went home with a higher idea of the "dignity of labor" and a deeper consciousness of pride in their own city than they had ever known before.

There was infantry and there was artillery in the procession. The infantry bore no arms, and was clad in shining white. The artillery was made up of carts, clean and freshly painted, each one covered with white canvas. The five hundred and fifty drivers sat up straight, each man on the right-hand side of his cart; and the fourteen hundred foot-soldiers marched in close-set ranks, shoulder to shoulder, keeping step to the music of the bands which led each battalion. The Stars and Stripes fluttered over the ranks, and the one sign borne in the procession told the whole story:

420 MILES
OF STREETS
CLEANED DAILY

We all had seen the "white angels" on the streets, an odd man here and there, working hard and no longer leaning wearily on his broom as in days of yore, and we had seen an odd cart going about now and then to collect the sweepings. We knew that these men worked under some sort of system, and that it must be a good one, but it is safe to say that the public had no suspicion of the thoroughness of Colonel Waring's organization until that procession went down Fifth Avenue. That the men and carts were divided into "stables," that everything was perfectly systematized, that there was a genuine esprit de corps in this body of street-cleaners—this was the surprise. And at least one onlooker made up his mind that he would find out more about it—and what he has found out is here set down for the benefit of the readers of The Outlook.

HOW THE STREETS ARE SWEPT

On a June morning, a few preliminaries having been arranged, a smart horse and buggy drew up to the writer's door, driven by a young man clad in a modest uniform and a white helmet. The words "Department of Street-Cleaning" were lettered on the side of the buggy, and the young man was a "district superintendent" who was about to undertake the work of initiating his guest into the mysteries of street-cleaning. He was on his regular morning round of visits to section foremen, and before we had gone two blocks a bicycler with a white helmet was seen pedaling along in the distance. When he saw us he stopped his wheel, produced his written report of the previous day's work, and the two men discussed the affairs of the district together. The report showed the number of sweepers who had been at work, regular and extra men, the number of cart-loads of garbage, ashes, and sweepings removed, closing with "No ashes or garbage left in streets." If anything has gone wrong in the district, the foreman is expected to telephone to the stable before eight o'clock, at which hour the superintendent makes out his general report to the main office and sends it by special messenger before starting out on his rounds. The superintendent does not have his foremen wait for him at any particular place, but prefers to drive around and find them. They do not know within an hour when to expect him, and from this time on he is liable to appear at any moment—and general inspectors and members of the personal staff of Colonel Waring are on the alert day and night.

The city is divided into eleven districts, each in charge of a superintendent, and nine of these districts have their own stables. The district visited by the writer runs from Fifty-eighth Street to One Hundred and Twelfth Street, on the West Side. It includes all the streets and avenues between Central Park and the Hudson River, and two streets north and south of the Park as far east as Sixth Avenue, which, for districting purposes, bisects the city. The superintendent has under him seven section foremen, with one hundred and twenty-two regular sweepers and sixty carts. Each foreman is responsible for a section about eight blocks in length and across the full width of the district—eight to ten miles of streets. He has from fifteen to twenty sweepers and eight carts in his charge. Each sweeper takes care of about six short blocks or three long blocks, which he sweeps at least once a day and often twice or three times, depending on the traffic. The asphalt of Hester Street, down town on the "East Side," crowded with playing children and hucksters, is swept five times a day. Some of the business districts in the lower part of the city are swept only at night. Broadway, from Fourteenth Street to the Battery, is swept by a contractor, and the same avenue from Twenty-second Street to Eighteenth is taken care of by Italians under a contractor employed by the storekeepers, as has been the custom for many years. There are still some private sweepers in the residence districts, but, as a foreman said, "We don't pay any attention to them—we clean the streets just the same."

COLONEL GEORGE E. WARING, JR.

In the district which the writer visited are three "section stations"—comfortable rooms secured where the rent is low ($40 a month or less), which are at fairly regular intervals in the district; these are the headquarters of the sweepers. In the old days the men met anywhere, and went to work with more or less irregularity. Now they know just where they belong and what streets they are responsible for. They reach the section stations in the morning in time to put on their white uniform, each one leaving his extra clothing on a peg which bears his name above it. A man (usually somewhat superannuated) is in charge of each station and stays there during working hours. At 6:45 the men line up on the curb before the section foreman, the roll is called, and any special instructions which may have come in a general order from headquarters are given out. Then they are "inspected" just as if they were policemen; uniforms must be fairly clean, and belts and badges in proper place. If a man is sick he sends word and a substitute is taken on for the day. The extra man does not need a uniform, but he must have a white cap.

Colonel Waring was sharply criticised when he put his men into white uniforms, but the result has shown that he knew what he was about. A man in white duck is as incapable of concealing himself as an ostrich. A sweeper who comes out of a liquor-saloon becomes the cynosure of every eye in the block; and a section foreman, bicycling along an avenue, can tell at a glance down a side street whether his men are at their posts or not. The cost of the uniform is $1.25 (each man must have two), the helmet is $1.30, the oilskin suit for rainy days $1.10, and belt and buttons 88 cents—total, $5.78. The city provides each sweeper with broom, watering-can, and scraper (for asphalt); a bag-carrier will soon be added. The man must furnish a shovel and a small hand-broom.

The sweepers are paid $720 a year, which is $2 a day for 360 days, and as they do not work on Sundays except in emergencies, the pay is a little over $2 a day. New men are now paid $600 for the first year, $660 for the second, and $720 for the third, but all who were employed before January 1, 1896, receive the highest wage. They are probably the best-paid unskilled laborers in the world, but they are doing such good work that the city does not begrudge it to them, and, moreover, they are rapidly becoming "skilled." New York is perfectly willing to pay for clean streets; what we used to object to was paying for dirty ones.

Sunday work is done when it is necessary—after processions on Saturday, etc.—and in some districts a few sweepers and carts are out for several hours every Sunday. The sweepers work till four o'clock in the afternoon, with an hour for dinner. After four the section foreman goes over all of his streets (thorough work in this was made possible by the bicycle) to see that they are in good condition and that all the garbage and ashes have been removed. If he finds any cans unemptied, he telephones to the stable for a cart, unless the can has been put out since the proper hour, in which case he calls the attention of the householder to the matter.

The greatest difficulty which the department has to contend with is the generally dirty habits of the people who use the streets. They throw away banana-skins, bits of paper, and even whole newspapers. If there were plenty of proper receptacles for street refuse, and if the public once got hold of the idea that the thing to do was to put things into such receptacles, this evil could gradually be cured. The societies which Colonel Waring is forming among the school-children to help along the street-cleaning work are doing a great deal of good, especially in the poorer quarters. A man goes along the sidewalk there and carelessly tears up and throws away a letter, and the first thing he knows a small gamin is plucking at his coat, and telling him he'd "better pick up dem papers, 'cos it's against the law, see? and he'll get pulled." The man indignantly spurns the small boy, and proceeds on his way. The boy proceeds also, running along at a respectful distance until he sees a "cop." He tells the "cop" and the "cop" tells the man, and the man goes back and picks up the papers. He has had his lesson, but there are several hundred thousand men just like him in this great city, and it takes a good while to get around.

That the down-town crowded quarters of New York are now kept as clean as Fifth Avenue is a well-known fact. The section foremen there have less territory to cover and more sweepers. It is said that the daily applications at a large free dispensary on the East Side have fallen away one-third in a year—a result which the doctors attribute to better health on account of clean streets.

THE HORSES AND CARTS

The department stables are kept in as good condition as the best private ones. The writer has visited five out of the nine, and each one was as neat as a typical new pin. Not more than two horses out of from sixty to eighty were on the sick-list in any of them, and in one stable but one horse out of eighty had a sore back. Their tails are cut short, but not docked. The carts, sometimes kept in the stables and oftener in vacant lots near by, were in perfect order, tipped up and packed in even rows. The carts are washed every third day in some stables, and in others, where the conveniences are not as great, only once a week. The harnesses are hung up in order, and there is a full supply of extra harness. In the old days there was no extra harness at all, and a break meant the loss of a man's time, with horse and cart, until repairs were made. Each stable has its own blacksmith, harness-menders, etc., and there is a veterinarian to every three stables.

THE PRIZE CART

The drivers come on duty at 6:30 in the morning, and after roll-call and inspection they harness up (each man has his own horse, cart, and harness, for which he is responsible) and start out on their rounds, first gathering the garbage and then the sweepings. At noon most of them are able to take their horses to the stables, as the dumps are generally near stables. The men are through with their work for the day between three and six in the afternoon, the average hour being four o'clock. Hostlers clean and feed the horses. Drivers and sweepers are paid alike, but a driver has more responsibility, and it is harder for him to keep his clothes in good order (he wears a brown suit and helmet); nevertheless many men are fond of horses, and some consider the position of driver to be more important than that of sweeper.

A few new stables would greatly facilitate the work, for as now arranged a horse and cart may be obliged to go two or three miles to the place where they are to collect garbage and ashes, and perhaps another journey of about the same distance to a dump. There is, for instance, no dump on the West Side between Forty-seventh Street and One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street, a distance of about four miles. There used to be one at Seventy-ninth Street, but it has been abandoned. A horse and cart travel from twenty to thirty miles a day, collect from four to ten loads, according to distance, and the average cost per load is sixty-five cents.

DISCIPLINE

The discipline of the department is on a military basis. Each man is responsible for the men under him. The Commissioner and his deputy are at the head. The general superintendent is in charge of the district superintendents, and the assistant superintendent directs the stable foremen and looks after the horses. The district superintendents give their instructions to the section foremen, who, in turn, communicate directly with the sweepers. There is a conference once a month between the representatives of Colonel Waring's personal staff and the men, represented by one delegate from each section station and one from each stable. As a result of this conference valuable suggestions are often made regarding the detail of the work. The offenses which may be committed, subjecting men to fine or dismissal, are fifty in number—about one-half referring to sweepers and one-half to drivers. A list of these offenses and penalties, printed in large type, is posted conspicuously in section stations and stables. Some extracts from it are given in the accompanying schedule:

SOME OF COLONEL WARING'S STAFF

EXAMPLES OF PENALTIES FOR OFFENSES

Offenses are reported through foremen to superintendents as a first, second, third, or fourth violation of a rule, and the recommendation for punishment must not exceed the code of penalties. When the prescribed penalty is dismissal, the offender may be suspended without pay, awaiting the action of the Commissioner. A fourth violation of rules indicates incorrigibility and brings dismissal. There are no suspensions except in cases of men recommended for dismissal. Men who refuse to work while subject to forfeiture of pay are at once dismissed. "D" means dismissal. 1, 2, 3, 5, and 10 mean forfeiture of so many days' pay.

Rule.	Character of Offense.	Penalty.
		Offense
		1st	2d	3d	4th
1	Absence for more than five days without authority of the Commissioner	D
2	Failure to report or send notice to foreman when sick	1	3	D
3	Absence from roll-call at proper hour	1	2	3	D
5	Failure to provide himself with prescribed uniform, oilskin suits, sweater, and badge, after reasonable time	D
6	Failure to wear prescribed uniform and badge while on duty in the manner directed by orders	3	D
10	Neglecting or abusing a horse, whipping or striking a horse, using a horse who is sick or lame, and failing to take such horse to stable or reporting him to foreman	D
12	Neglecting to have lost shoes replaced on horse at nearest department stable as soon as practicable.	1	3	5	D
16	Failure to remove bits and to dump carts while feeding at noon	5	D
17	Deliberately trotting or galloping a horse	5	10	D
19	Loitering at work	2	5	D
24	Neglecting to pick up small stones found on route, and failing to report large ones or other obstructions lying in the street, such as gutter-planks, etc., to section foreman	1	3	5	D
29	Neglecting to keep load covered and allowing it to blow or spill on street	3	D
32	Accepting or demanding a fee or gratuity for work done	D
33	Entering a liquor-saloon during work hours	3	D
34	Being under the influence of liquor while on duty..	D
43	Being boisterous or using profane language or any incivility to citizens	1	3	5	D
46	Failure to sweep properly	1	2	3	D
48	Absence from post of duty without reasonable excuse	2	3	5	D

It will be noted that these are the maximum penalties, and full punishment is not always meted out. During the first year of Colonel Waring's régime the chief penalty was dismissal. Often a man was dismissed for a time and then taken back; but on January 1, 1896, the rule went into force by which men who were re-engaged had to come in at the new rate ($600 for the first year), and a temporary suspension became so serious that it was necessary to inaugurate some system of lesser punishments. The present plan went into force about April 1 of this year.

In each stable there is a large blackboard where the names of men disciplined are written out for the benefit of their fellows, with the character of the offense and the punishment.

ESPRIT DE CORPS

This was a term which was absolutely unknown in the nomenclature of street-cleaning before the days of Colonel Waring. To-day there is as much esprit de corps among the officers and men of the Street-Cleaning Department of New York City as among any body of men in the world. The difference between the old régime and the new is almost solely owing to the fact that the men have found out that nothing is of importance but good work. In the old days the district boss got his man "on a broom" and kept him there. A conscientious stable foreman who tried to have the harness kept in order or the horses well cared for was liable to get himself into trouble. There were no penalties, and every man was as good as every other man—the common laborer often having more "pulls" than his chief. I talked with several stable foremen who were on the force in the old days, and they said that there was only one feeling to-day among them all—they wouldn't go back to the old plan if they could; they know just where they stand, and if they want to keep their places it is only necessary to do good work. Of the 2,500 men now on the pay-rolls about 1,500 were there before Colonel Waring came in. They have done well, and they have been retained. It took some of them quite a time to experience a change of heart, and to find out that it was an actual fact that politics was no longer "in it," and that no one had any power over them except their superior officers. Having once experienced the change, they worked just as well as any one, and many have been advanced and are now filling important positions. An old Tammany foreman, with a diamond still gleaming in his shirt-front (but it was Sunday and he was excusable) told the writer that the men who took the most pride in the recent procession, and drilled the hardest and worked the best, were the "left-overs"—"and Colonel Waring will tell you so, sir."

A DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT AND HIS ASSISTANT

The procession, by the way, was paid for by the force. The men were to have new uniforms and helmets, and it was a good time to show them off and make an impression on the public. The men wanted to do it, and they paid for it—thirty-five cents for a sweeper or a driver, and more for those who had higher salaries. The amounts were paid voluntarily and not as assessments, and the total cost (mostly for bands) was about $1,600. The drilling was done in the early morning before roll-call.

The district superintendent who drove me around is twenty-five years of age, a graduate of an institute of technology, and a civil engineer by profession. He gets $1,800 a year, and is having an out-of-door life full of interest and incentive, and there is no reason why young men of the same education should not be doing similar work in scores of American cities instead of contentedly drifting along as draughtsmen at $10 and $12 a week. It occurred to me that if any of the smaller cities are in need of Street-Cleaning Commissioners or Superintendents they could not do better than to send to Colonel Waring and get away from him just such a young man as my district superintendent—though I doubt if the Colonel will thank me for making the suggestion.

The Barrens

By William Wilfred Campbell

I know a bit of common countryside,
  A stretch of bleak and lonely open land,
Where none of earth's glad beauties do reside,
  Nor joyous children of the seasons bland.

Men pass it by as drear and commonplace,
  Where only bogs and knotted roots are found,
And, like a worn and sodden human face,
  It wears no smile, nor giveth gladdening sound.

A few gnarled trees all twisted wry ashape
  Across the dismal sky-line, autumn-blown,
Lean, like to lonesome, grotesque ghosts, agape
  For some lost weird the vanished years have known.

A zigzag fence all mossed and tumble-down,
  A worn cow-path athwart the barren hill,
A few dead stalks and sedges sere and brown,
  Make up this dreariness so stern and still.

Yet I have seen, at settings of the sun
  And autumn morns, joys that this landscape wore,
As though through lonely hours its heart had won
  Some secret beauty from great nature's store.

And I have stood and marveled at the peace
  And patient splendor of that lonely place,
As of a life that, having won release,
  Had left the hopes, new found, on its dead face.

Protestantism in New York

The "Christian City" for May contains an interesting article entitled "A Short Chapter from the Book of Numbers," in which it answers the question, Has Protestantism advanced numerically in New York during the last thirty years? It shows that within the limits of New York City the gain in population has been 86 per cent., while the gain among the Methodists has been 56 per cent., thus indicating that, while the denomination has steadily increased in numbers, the population has increased faster. The Hebrews and Roman Catholics, on the contrary, have increased about 200 per cent. Thirty years ago these elements were about one-third of the population; now they are about one-half. In the metropolitan district the population exceeds 4,000,000. The gain of population in thirty years has been 133 per cent.; the gain of membership in the Methodist Church about 120 per cent. The gain of the Methodists in the suburbs has been greater than in the cities. The gain, however, in that denomination during the last decade is much greater than that of the preceding one, and has nearly reached the ratio of the population's increase. The percentage of gain in some of the other denominations is as follows: Episcopalians, 180 per cent; Presbyterians, 49 per cent.; Baptists, 43 per cent.—as against the total gain of the population of 86 per cent.; the Episcopalians alone outstripping the ratio of the gain of population. In the metropolitan district the rates of increase have been as follows during the last thirty years: Episcopalians, 195 per cent.; Methodists, 120 per cent.; Baptists (on imperfect data), 111 per cent.; and Presbyterians, 105 per cent. These figures show that the actual increase of the four Protestant denominations has equaled that of the population. An interesting inquiry arises at this point: To what are we to ascribe the great growth of the Episcopal Church? In New York City it leads all the denominations. We believe that the answer to the question is to be found, first, in the fact that it has behind it enormous wealth, as, for instance, that of the Trinity Corporation, and that of several other churches. It is financially a matter of comparative ease to plant churches wherever they are needed. In the next place, we mention the wise policy of Episcopalians in the operation of their churches. They do not expect a rector to be preacher, pastor, manager, and general visitor. The one-man ministry is practically unknown among them. Many of their churches have six or eight different clergymen in active service.

Buffalo, the City of Homes[1]

By the Rev. William Burnet Wright

Rt. Rev. A. Cleveland Coxe, D.D., LL.D.
Bishop of Western New York

Buffalo has suddenly become known as the largest market in the world for coal, for flour, for fresh fish, for sheep; and the second for lumber, grain, and cattle. Along the lakes which pour their traffic into her lap an amount of tonnage moves each year greater than that which enters the port of Liverpool or London or all the harbors on our Atlantic coast; and Niagara Falls is expected soon to make her the most important factory in the Union. During the ten years preceding 1890 her population increased from 155,000 to 255,000; the last five years have seen it swelled by nearly 100,000 more; and the fastest railroad train on earth is fully occupied in carrying others to share in her material prosperity.

In view of these well-known facts, one may ask whether the city is being "puffed up" into a second Babylon, or edified after the model of the "New Jerusalem." Her growth in stature is conspicuous. Is her heart gaining strength sufficient to throw life into all her fast-accumulating tissues?

Her physical conditions are such as tend to develop the sound body which helps so much in producing the sound mind. Her streets, broad, straight, and paved with asphalt, are swept clean by frequent winds from the lake. A superb system of parks and parkways, easy accessible, and free from the pneumonia of placards and policemen warning "off the grass," oxygenates her blood. The Niagara River makes perfect drainage easy, and Lake Erie furnishes an unlimited supply of water, which criminal carelessness alone can keep from being always pure. Her dwellings are not built in blocks, but stand apart, each in a bath of air, so that she is not plagued as other cities are by disease-breeding tenement-houses.

Hon. James O. Putnam

That these advantages have neither been neglected nor abused is indicated by a letter written recently to the Superintendent of her Health Department by a Committee sent from Nashville to inspect the sanitary arrangements of other cities with a view to the improvement of its own. The letter says: "We are about completing our trip of investigating sanitary matters. New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington have given us valuable information. . . . We will say that, after looking over the field thus far, you have the ideal system in nearly every particular. Hence, in view of bringing your system particularly and prominently before our people of Nashville, we inclose you a list of questions which we hope you will answer."

The late Rt. Rev. Stephen V. Ryan
(Roman Catholic) Bishop of Buffalo

This glance at the house will prepare the reader to consider the people who live in it. A careful census taken last May by the police, and confirmed from other sources, shows them to be—rejecting fractions—109,000 Americans; 9,000 other persons whose mother tongue is English; 100,000 Germans, 59,000 Poles, 35,000 Irish, 7,000 Italians, and 19,000 who can be grouped only by saying that among them is spoken nearly every language under heaven and that they have come from every zone between the pole and the equator.

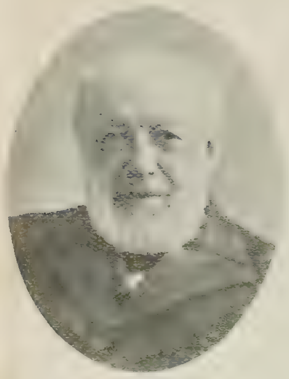
The welfare of the city depends upon the success it has in changing these heterogeneous and often antagonistic citizens into homogeneous Americans. The task is difficult, but facts show that it is possible.

The Poles and the Italians each occupy a separate section. To some extent that is true of the Americans and the Germans. But the geographical lines which separate the two last are fading rapidly, and the prevalence of German names among the most influential firms and in the most honorable positions shows that the distinction between "Saxon and Teuton" is vanishing. The green flag also is no longer conspicuous, and the yellow harp is learning to play "Hail Columbia" correctly and with spirit. The Poles and the Italians still appear like veins of trap in the bed-rock, but there is reason to believe that they also will in due

ARCH OVER DELAWARE AVENUE (BUFFALO PARK)

---

[1] Previous articles in this series have been: "The Higher Life of American Cities" (introductory), by Mr. Theodore Roosevelt (The Outlook for December 21, 1895); "The Higher Life of New York City," by Albert Shaw (The Outlook for January 25, 1896); "The Higher Life of Chicago," by Melville E. Stone (The Outlook for February 22); "The Higher Life of Boston," by Edward Everett Hale (The Outlook for March 28); and "The Higher Life of New Orleans," by Grace King (The Outlook for April 25). Other articles will be on Philadelphia, by Mr. Talcott Williams, and on St. Louis, by the Rev. John Snyder.



Hon. Eben Carleton Sprague
First President of the Liberal Club

John Milburn
President of Liberal Club

R. B. Adam
Chairman Graves Cross Commission, etc.

Rev. S. S. Mitchell
Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church time yield to the subtle power which has already Americanized so many others; and that power is the influence of the home.

T. Guilford Smith
President Buffalo Library

William P. Letchworth
President State Board of Charities

There is probably no other city of considerable size in which so large a proportion of the people, both rich and poor, live under their own roofs. That fact seems to me the "in hoc signo" of her higher life.

Like other large communities, Buffalo has its "submerged tenth," but the "infected district" is small and peopled chiefly by the dregs of the lake and canal service, together with those others whom such sediment always attracts. Even this Sodom of homeless outcasts is steadily improving, partly through the influence of the Salvation Army, the Rescue Mission, and the free kindergarten recently established there, and still more through an influence which has been scarcely recognized yet, except by the police. Italians, attracted by its cheapness, are crowding into the district. They are of the poorest and most ignorant class, and have vices enough and to spare; but they are singularly free from that particular vice which has drawn the degraded population together, and their presence is slowly driving out those who pander to it. These Italians are exceptionally faithful in their marital relations, and through them the family is gradually banishing the brothel.

There is much ignorance and crime in the "Little Poland" which forms the east part of Buffalo. It is probably at present the least American and the most turbulent section of the city, and gives more trouble to the police than any other. Yet one fact justifies the expectation that it will in time exert a potent influence for civic virtue.

BUFFALO LIBRARY

The Poles, as a class, are poor. They are not distinguished for truthfulness or honesty. They are ignorant of the English language, know little of American institutions, and are almost totally indifferent to their civic duties. They have shown, especially in their ecclesiastical affairs, that same incapacity to obey majorities which effaced their country from the map of Europe. But a seed planted anywhere will, if it grows long enough, transform refuse into fruit, and the seed of promise among the Poles is their eager desire to make homes for themselves. To own a bit of ground with a little house upon it is with them a passion. To gratify that passion they hoard and save and deny themselves luxuries, comforts, and what others count necessities. Thus they plant themselves in the soil, and this characteristic must ultimately make them good citi-

Joseph P. Dudley
President Board of Managers
State Hospital

THE STATE HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE

A View of the Lake

The Boat-house
BUFFALO PARK

zens—citizens whom demagogues cannot easily control. Every tax levied they will feel. They are putting themselves where their pockets will become their teachers. Signs of promise already appear. They have begun to withdraw their children from the parochial and send them to the public schools, because they feel the need of the English language for their own protection. Here and there one who has paid for his house by living in a single room and letting all the others has discharged his lodgers, got the "carpet and the piano," and yielded to the cravings for a life less sordid than he has ever known. Such first-fruits of the Polish garden have begun to unite in neighborly fellowships. The last month of 1895 saw the establishment of the first Polish club for "Improvement in Science, Literature, and Art." It is officered by intelligent, educated, and capable men. It has already the nucleus of a library, and appears to be the first oasis in their deserts of toil.

While what may properly be called "home influence" has begun to purify the infected district and to Americanize "Little Poland," the same power has worked even more conspicuously among the affluent citizens.

An observant stranger visiting Buffalo a few years ago would have been struck by the contrast between the splendor of her dwellings and the squalor of her public buildings. He might have inferred that it revealed a lamentable lack of public spirit, of civic pride. The inference would not have been unjust, but it would have misled him if he failed to observe a sentiment growing beside the hearthstones which must in time produce the change which would astonish him should he return to-day. For the business part of the city has at last begun to put on beautiful garments and to anoint itself with gladness above its fellows. Among the many buildings for business purposes which have arisen as if by magic within the last four years, several are distinguished no less for beauty than for size and convenience, and one of them, on Ellicott Square, easily takes precedence, both for grandeur and for grace, of any business structure known to me on either side of the Atlantic. To look upon it is an education. These superb edifices and the magnificent churches built within three years were sure to come as soon as the taste trained in affluent homes to be satisfied with nothing but the best began to look out of its windows. A community does well to provide for the comfort and beauty of its homes before attending to the decoration of its markets.

IN ELLICOTT SQUARE

Hon. L. L. Lewis

It has been said that in Buffalo "nothing is ever done until it has to be done." This sneer at the conservatism of her business men is adequately answered by the fact that Buffalo has been remarkably exempt from the depressing dampness caused by collapsing bubbles, and has suffered less than any important city in the Union from financial panics. Home life rarely breeds reckless speculators, and "they laugh best who laugh last," say domestic and substantial burghers.

That awakening to a sense of civic responsibility which has recently appeared in many American communities came to Buffalo with great power four years ago, and wrought as it might be expected to do in a city of homes.

ST. PAUL'S (EPISCOPAL) CHURCH

Its immediate cause was the brutal trampling by the State Legislature upon the city's charter. The outrage produced intense and general indignation. Men looked out of their windows and perceived that while they had nestled at home an iniquitous political ring had been silently undermining the foundations of their dwellings. Indignation was not exhausted in expletives, though they were abundant. The outrage was speedily corrected, and its chief perpetrator left the city. The spirit of reform grew stronger. It began its work where reforms were most needed; where they would be of most permanent benefit; where lovers of home would naturally feel the keenest interest—namely, with the public schools. These had been vilely neglected by the men of wealth and influence who could educate their children where they liked. Four years ago the schools had become such as are inevitable wherever the positions of teachers are used as rewards for political services, and paid to the orders of saloon-keepers or others who have delivered or are expected to deliver a required number of votes. Less than five years ago a child in one of the public schools brought home a note from his teacher. The note contained four lines of writing, and six offenses against the elementary laws of English orthography and grammar. This note was less exceptional than representative of the quality of instruction the city was giving to its children, when a spontaneous insurrection of citizens threw out of office the culprits directly responsible for the crime, and elected for Superintendent of Education a man of rare honesty and capacity. Improvement began immediately, and has steadily continued. The schools are approaching a true ideal. Other influences—some of them stimulated and some of them created by the same revival—are helping the superintendent in his work. The college alumnæ have organized in an "Association for the Improvement of the Public Schools," and the ladies composing it are alert in using every opportunity of service. The competent lady teachers in the schools themselves have formed an association for the same purpose, and a citizens' league, composed of representative men, has made its influence felt in the same direction.

But the demand for better education has not been confined to the public schools. It pervades the city as an atmosphere, and of her fifty private schools and seminaries there are few it has not benefited.

Four years ago there was not a kindergarten in Buffalo. There are several now; ten free ones are sustained by voluntary contributions, and the time seems near when kindergartens will be adopted into the public-school system. Last year the University of Buffalo completed the educational ladder by adding to its departments a School of Pedagogy designed to perfect teachers in the highest branches of their art. The school already numbers eighty-one pupils, of whom some are graduates of the Normal, and some are successfully filling prominent positions in their profession.

The other departments of the University, its Schools of Law, Medicine, Dentistry, and Pharmacy, all well equipped, attract a large and steadily increasing clientage.

Seventeen small libraries, each containing from a thousand to eight thousand volumes; open at convenient hours; many of them free, and some of them charging a nominal fee, are scattered in different parts of the city. "The Grosvenor," a reference library of thirty-five thousand well-selected volumes, free to all, has during the last year completed and occupied a commodious building, centrally located, and thus augmented its usefulness; while "The Buffalo Library" owns in the heart of the city a building of great beauty and of size sufficient to allow indefinite expansion.

The Civil Service Association meets quietly in a private

WOMAN'S EDUCATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL UNION

NEW LAFAYETTE CHURCH (PRESBYTERIAN)

GROSVENOR LIBRARY

parlor. It has done much to cultivate a civic spirit in the community; has increased its activity under the encouragement of the general awakening four years ago, and recently received a letter from Mr. Silas W. Burt, the State Civil Service Commissioner, in which he says that he and his colleagues consider it a model for all other cities in the State. Nine Good Government Clubs owe their birth to the same revival.

The Woman's Civic Club, recently founded by the Woman's Union, is throwing into kitchen and parlor the light which other agencies shed into office and store, and the increase of civic spirit is revealed by the general interest manifested by both sexes in applications for municipal franchises. A few years ago the city could give away most valuable rights without attracting attention, but now, when a grant is asked for, the whole community pricks its ears and becomes righteously belligerent.

Good homes make good neighbors, and Buffalo is remarkable for the number of small associations in which neighbors drawn together by community of tastes have united for mutual improvement in body, brain, and heart. I have counted a hundred such, and there may be as many more. For physical culture there are athletic, fishing and shooting, golf, polo, and bicycle clubs unnumbered. For the brain there are scientific, literary, architectural, archæological, historical, microscope, and even a chess and checker club. For the culture of the heart there are social, artists', florists', dramatic, and musical clubs. Among these smaller associations, which bring multitudes of men and women together in helpful relations, and are as flowers gemming the ground, larger institutions of similar origin stand like trees. In the "Buffalo Club" the opinions of many representative men may be learned upon any subject which has excited public interest. The Saturn also sheds a kindly influence, and the University Club, composed of college graduates, and just a year old, already exerts a powerful influence for the intellectual advancement of the community.

A wholesome impulse has been given by the Liberal Club, organized four years ago. It is an association of two hundred and fifty gentlemen, who dine together once a month and discuss some subject of importance after hearing it treated by the best-qualified expert that can be found. The address is published in the daily papers, and thus made profitable to the whole community. This Club has proved so useful that one hundred and fifty names are on its waiting list, and a second like it has been recently established. The ladies have sought and achieved the same ends by similar methods, but without the dinner, in the Woman's Contemporary Club.

As might be expected where there are so many Germans, Buffalo is fond of music. One of the influences which have drawn the Germans and Americans together comes from the spacious music-hall which Germans built and Americans frequent. Under the fostering care of both there has been developed, from home talent exclusively, an orchestra which renders well the classic symphonies, and a chorus of three hundred voices.

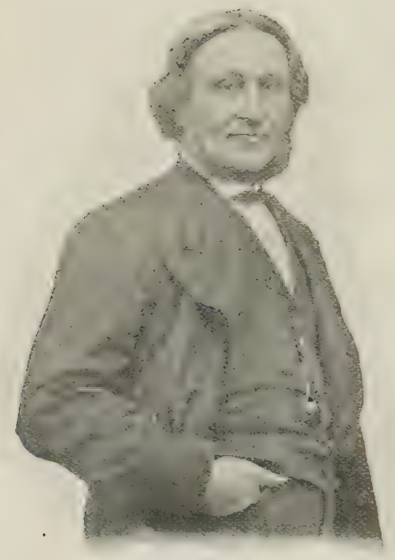
The charitable work of the city is prosecuted with great and steadily increasing energy. It would be bewildering and useless to enumerate the hospitals and homes for every kind of feebleness, and the many institutions founded to help those who need help in brain or purse as well as in body. These are not characteristic of Buffalo. They are similar to those in other cities. It ought, however, to be said that they have increased both in number and efficiency at a rate which keeps pace—and does more than that, I think—with the city's material growth. Like most beneficent agencies, they draw their life-blood from the churches. The Outlook, assuming that all are familiar with the Prince of Denmark, has asked only for the other parts of Hamlet. Therefore I have not named the churches. One fact, however, about them demands remark. It is this. They are bringing their methods of work into more perfect harmony with that subtle tendency which seems to characterize the genius of Buffalo. Two of them have already established in the least affluent regions of the city homes on the college settlement plan, and a third will probably do the same within a year.

The facts which warrant bright hopes for the future of Buffalo are these: 1. The efforts made for the moral welfare of the city are radical. They aim to make good men and women; not to build a temple with peat sods, but first of all to bake good bricks. 2. They work in harmony with the peculiar and historic genius of the community. They bear the stamp "home-made." 3. They are energetic and they are general.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION BUILDING

A Friend of Letters: Alexander Macmillan

By Hamilton W. Mabie



ALEXANDER MACMILLAN

The names of some publishers have been so intimately associated with the literary history of their times that they seem as much a part of that history as the names of those men of Letters whose friends and counselors they were. So much has been said about the antagonisms between writers and publishers that the world is likely to forget the close and helpful relations which often exist between two groups of men whose interests, from any rational point of view, are substantially identical. As a matter of fact, it has happened more than once that large-minded publishers have contributed materially to notable literary movements, not only by loyal co-operation with writers of force and influence, but by sagacity of that high order which foresees the drift of thought and recognizes the advent of a new current in human affairs. In England and in this country men of this type have rendered services of a high order, not only to men of Letters, but to the cause of Letters.

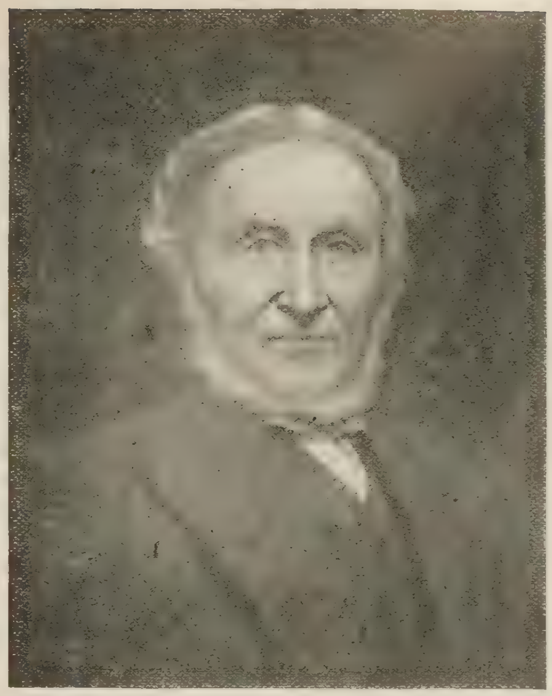
When Mr. Alexander Macmillan died, a few months since, The Outlook promised its readers a fuller account than was possible at the moment of one of these far-seeing and large-minded friends of Letters. It was the characteristic good fortune of Alexander and Daniel Macmillan to establish not only business but intimate personal relations with a group of writers so notable that the imprint of the house has become a kind of guarantee of the quality of the books which bear it. The brothers came of a sturdy and honorable stock; a stock of immense moral and physical vitality, self-respecting, indefatigable, and capable in many directions. Born on the island of Arran, the memories of Argyllshire were long preserved among the descendants of Malcolm Macmillan, the grandfather, who had carried his narrow fortunes from the mainland to the island, and who was a thrifty farmer, an Elder of the Established Church, and a man of rugged character enriched by a vein of sentiment and tenderness. Of his son, the father of Daniel and Alexander Macmillan, the elder brother once wrote: "He was a large, strong man, and only too ready to use his strength. . . . A braver, a more upright man never left this world. I wish I could remember more of him. But what I do makes me feel that he was truly a king and priest, and true 'man of God.'" And he speaks of his mother as "one of the noblest and purest spirits ever manifested in the flesh."

The brothers started early upon the arduous career of building fortune and reputation on the simple and ancient foundation of integrity and industry. They had persistency, enthusiasm, and ability. The beginnings were obscure and unpromising, and, although highly characteristic of the men, must be passed with a word. "I never had the least ambition to rise in the world, as it is called," writes Mr. Alexander Macmillan. "I think that is the bane of life and action. Do the work that is given you; that seems to me the real law of life. Never mind whether you rise or not. It makes my heart ache when young fellows call on me, as they often do, asking for situations, or for work of higher kind than that they have. I have, I am thankful to say, often been able to help a man to work. I count it a great privilege when I can; but ambitious youths who want to rise in the world, and not simply to do the little bit of work God gives them, are very hopeless."

These words sum up also a noble practical philosophy, and, with certain other words of Daniel Macmillan's, they may well form a gospel of rational, Christian business life: "We booksellers, if we are faithful to our task, are trying to destroy, and are helping to destroy, all kinds of confusion, and are aiding our great Taskmaster to reduce the world into order and beauty and harmony. Bread we must have, and gain it by the sweat of our brow, or of our brain, and that is noble, because God-appointed. Yet that is not all. As truly as God is, we are his ministers, and help to minister to the well-being of the spirits of men. At the same time it is our duty to manage our affairs wisely, keep our minds easy, and not trade beyond our means." The idealism so often latent in the Scotch character, and the clear, practical sense which is the heritage of the Scotch race, were never more happily blended than in these words, at once so spiritual in their outlook upon life and so sagacious in dealing with it.

There was a long apprenticeship of hard work before the two brothers, who, by different roads, were steadily approaching the common work to which taste, ability, and circumstances all led the way. In 1843 Daniel Macmillan became the owner of a small publishing business in Cambridge, and Alexander speedily joined in the modest venture. The young men were singularly well equipped for their occupation and opportunity; they had made the most intimate acquaintance not only with every branch and article of book-making, but with the spiritual quality and significance of books. They seem to have cared for only the best in thought and style; and no small part of their success was due to the moral insight which each possessed. Success came soon, in a moderate way, but on high lines, and that success was uninterrupted. It was not only a peculiarly honorable success, but it was a success readily explained by the character of the men who were behind it. They were so closely associated and so harmonious in their views and tastes that it is impossible to write of one without writing of the other; and the sketch of Daniel Macmillan, so affectionately prepared by Thomas Hughes, is also the sketch of Alexander Macmillan. The correspondence of the two reads like a chapter out of the literary history of the times; so intimately associated were they with the men who were making that history, and so deeply were their spiritual as well as their material fortunes involved in it. It is a chapter torn from the rich intellectual life of the period, starred with great names, and disclosing a life of thought and aspiration of notable range and impressiveness.

KNAPDALE, UPPER TOOTING, FOR SOME YEARS THE RESIDENCE OF ALEXANDER MACMILLAN, AND PRESENTED BY HIM TO THE SUFFRAGAN BISHOP OF SOUTHWARK



ALEXANDER MACMILLAN

From a Painting by H. Herkomer, A.R.A.

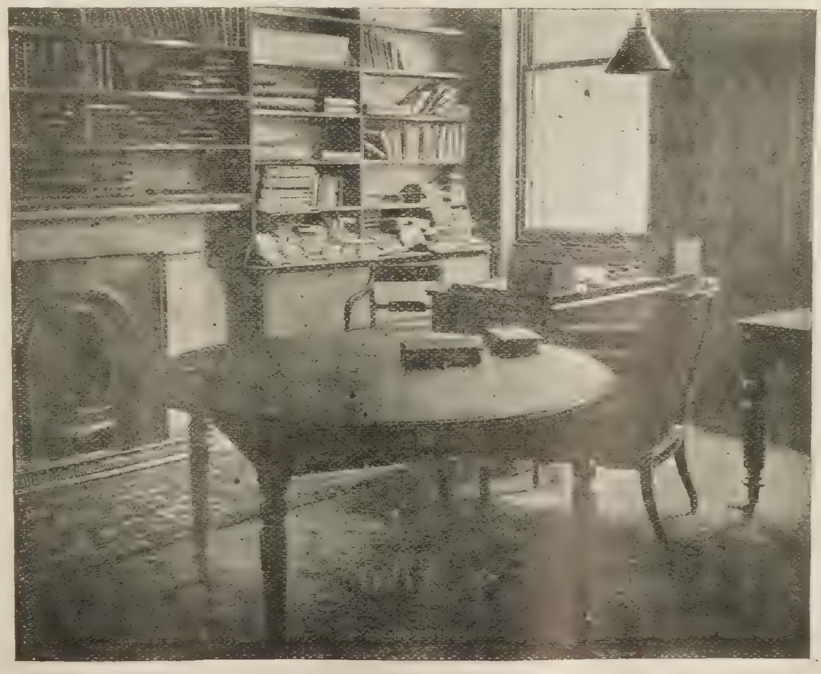
The young publishers were, by virtue of native intelligence and passionate study, men of genuine culture, quite capable of giving as well as of receiving in the fellowship of the eminent writers with whom they came into such intimate friendship; capable, indeed, of that intelligent, independent judgment which is in itself a high development of the critical faculty. They were as deeply moved by the spirit of the new time as were the new men to whom they were drawn. Their thrift and sagacity were matters of method; both were idealists at heart. They shared the kindling hopes of the age. "His youthful enthusiasms for Carlyle and Coleridge, for Shakespeare, Burns, Shelley, Wordsworth, Tennyson, never changed or faded," wrote a friend of Alexander Macmillan. "He was specially devoted to Plato. . . . He had mastered the leading prose Classics, and they formed for him a secret standard and criterion of excellence which saved him in a way from false admirations, or from being deceived by that specious mediocrity which is perpetually appearing in fresh shapes above the horizon. A lifelong enthusiasm for the best models was at the root of his highest success as a publisher."

The letters of Daniel Macmillan abound in clear-cut characterization and criticism. He describes a recently published volume of Newman's sermons as "a very curious specimen of the skeptical turn of his mind. He very much reminds me of our great Scotch skeptic, David Hume. . . . He holds fast by Christianity as developed in 'the Church,' because the balance of probabilities seems in its favor. If he had not been a Christian and a Churchman, he would have been one of the powerfulest skeptical logic-mills we have had set a-going in this country for many years." Of Byron he writes: "He never seems to have loved any one. No one seems ever to have loved him heartily. There is a most hateful sense of hollowness running through these letters. . . . I still hold out for Shelley. The 'Prometheus Unbound' is a noble utterance of his most noble nature." Perhaps the greatest spiritual influence to which the two brothers were exposed came from Maurice, one of the loftiest natures and one of the richest minds of the century. The accuracy of Daniel Macmillan's estimates is evidenced not only by his acute comment on Newman, but also by his noble characterization of Maurice: "He towers far above all others, and yet he is the most profoundly humble man I ever knew. . . . He seems to care only for what is living and real."

The letters are full of sagacious judgments, of sound opinions, of evidences of a wide and rich fellowship with the best men and the most catholic thought. They explain the fact that the catalogue of the house, which grew apace, was not simply a list of great names, but a record of friendship as well. Maurice, Tennyson, Huxley, Spencer, Blackie, Patmore, Kingsley, Arnold, Palgrave, and Hughes were among those whose books bore the imprint of Macmillan & Co. The older brother died in the summer of 1857, and the business, already well established, came under the sole control of Mr. Alexander Macmillan. "Westward Ho!" reached its third edition during the same year, and in that eventful year "Tom Brown's School Days" attained almost at a bound its great and deserved popularity; a popularity which shows no signs of waning. Henceforth success bred success until the business had assumed the commanding position it has now held so long and with such sustained vigor and skill. The keen sense of what constitutes literature, the genius for turning business into personal relations, combined with thrifty methods and shrewd ventures, which were characteristic of the founders of the house, have become traditional in its management.



ALEXANDER MACMILLAN'S ROOM AT BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, ENGLAND

KATE CARNEGIE[1]

By Ian Maclaren

Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush," "The Days of Auld Lang Syne," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XIII.—PREPARING FOR THE SACRAMENT

English folk have various festivals in the religious year, as becometh a generous country, but in our austere and thrifty Glen there was only one high day, and that was Sacrament Sabbath. It is rumored—but one prefers not to believe scandals—that the Scottish Kirk nowadays is encouraging a monthly Sacrament, after which nothing remains in the way of historical declension except for people to remain for the Sacrament as it may occur to them, and for men like Drumsheugh to get up at meetings to give their religious experiences, when every one that has any understanding will know that the reserve has gone out of Scottish character, and the reverence from Scottish faith. Dr. Davidson's successor, a boisterous young man of bourgeois manners, elected by popular vote, has got guilds, where Hillocks' granddaughter reads papers on Emerson and refers to the Free Kirk people as Dissenters; but things were different in the old days before the Revolution. The Doctor had such unquestioning confidence in himself that he considered his very presence a sufficient defense for the Kirk, and was of such perfect breeding that he regarded other Kirks with unbroken charity. He was not the man to weary the parish with fussy little schemes, and he knew better than to level down the Sacrament. It was the summit of the year to which the days climbed, from which they fell away, and it was held in the middle of August. Then nature was at her height in the Glen, and had given us of her fullness. The barley was golden, and, rustling in the gentle wind, wearied for the scythe; the oats were changing daily, and had only so much greenness as would keep the feathery heads firm for the handling; the potatoes, having received the last touch of the plow, were well banked up and flowering pleasantly; the turnips, in fine levels, like Hillocks', or gently sloping fields, like Menzies', were so luxuriant that a mere townsman could not have told the direction of the drills; the hay had been gathered into long stacks like unto the shape of a two-storied house, and the fresh aftermath on the field was yielding sweet morsels for the horses of an evening; the pasture was rich with the hardy white clover, and one could hear from the road the cattle taking full mouthfuls; young spring animals, like calves and lambs, were now falling into shape and beginning independent life, though with an occasional hankering after the past, when the lambs would fall a-bleating for their mothers and calves would hang about the gate at evening, where they had often fought shamelessly to get a frothy nose once more into the milk-pail.

Our little gardens were full a-blow, a very blaze and maze of color and foliage, wherein the owner wandered of an evening, examining flowers and fruit with many and prolonged speculations—much aided by the smoke of tobacco—as to the chance of gaining a second at our horticultural show with his stocks, or honorable mention for a dish of mixed fruit. The goodwife might be seen of an afternoon, about that time, in a sunbonnet and gown carefully tucked up, gathering her berry harvest for preserves, with two young assistants, who worked at a modest distance from their mother, very black as to their mouths, and preserving the currants as they plucked them by an instantaneous process of their own invention. Next afternoon a tempting fragrance of boiling sugar would make one's mouth water as he passed, and the same assistants, never weary in well-doing, might be seen setting saucers of black jam upon the window-sill to "jeel," and receiving, as a kind of blackmail, another saucerful of "skim," which, I am informed, is really the refuse of the sugar, but, for all that, wonderfully toothsome. Bear with a countryman's petty foolishness, ye mighty people who live in cities, and whose dainties come from huge manufactories. Some man, reading these pages, will remember that red-letter day of the summer-time long ago, and the faithful hands that plucked the fruit, and the old kitchen, with its open beams, and the peat fire glowing red, and the iron arm that held the copper-lined pan—much lent round the district– and the smack of the hot, sweet berries, more grateful than any banquet of later days.

The bees worked hard in this time of affluence, and came staggering home with spoil from the hills, but it was holiday season on the farms. Between the last labors on the roots and the beginning of harvest there was no exacting demand from the land, and managing farmers invented tasks to fill up the hours. An effort was made to restore carts and implements to their original color, which was abruptly interrupted by the first day of cutting, so that one was not surprised to see a harvest cart blue on one side and a rich, crusted brown on the other. Drumsheugh would even send his men to road-making, and apologize to the neighbors—"juist reddin' up aboot the doors"—while Saunders, the foreman, and his staff labored in a shame-faced manner, like grown-ups playing at a children's game. Hillocks used to talk vaguely about going to see a married sister in Glasgow, and one year got as far as Kildrummie, where he met Piggie Walker, and returned to have a deal in potatoes with that enterprising man. More than once Drumsheugh—but then his position was acknowledged—set off on the Tuesday for Carnoustie with a large carpet-bag, containing, among other things, two pounds of butter and two dozen eggs, and announced his intention of spending a fortnight at the "saut water." The kirkyard would bid him good-by, and give him a united guarantee that Sabbath would be kept at Drumtochty during his absence, but the fathers were never astonished to see the great man drop into Muirtown market next Friday on his way west—having found four days of unrelieved gayety at that Scottish Monaco enough for flesh and blood.

This season of small affairs was redeemed by the Sacrament, and preparations began far off with the cleaning of the kirk. As early as June our beadle had the face of one with something on his mind, and declined to pledge himself for roups of standing corn, where his presence was much valued, not on business grounds, but as an official sanction of the proceedings. Drumtochty always felt that Dr. Davidson was fully represented by his man, and John could no longer disentangle the two in his own mind—taking a gloomy view of the parish when he was laid up by lumbago and the Doctor had to struggle on single-handed, and regarding the future, when both would be gone, with despair.

"Aye, aye, Hillocks," he once remarked to that worthy, "this 'ill be a queer-like place when me an' the Doctor's awa'.

"Na, na, a' daurna promise for the roup, but ye can cairry it on whether a'm there or no; prices dinna hang on a beadle, and they're far mair than appearance. A'm juist beginning tae plan the reddin' up for the Saicrament, an' 'a've nae speerit for pleesure; div ye ken, Hillocks, a' wud actually coont a funeral distrackin'?"

"Ye hev an awfu' responsibility, there's nae doot o' that, John, but gin ye juist jined the fouk for ae field, it wud be an affset tae the day, an' the auctioneer wud be lifted."

With the beginning of July, John fairly broke ground in the great effort, and was engaged thereon for six weeks, beginning with the dusting of the pulpit and concluding with the beating of Drumsheugh's cushion. During that time the Doctor only suggested his wants to John, and the fathers themselves trembled of a Sabbath morning lest in a moment of forgetfulness they might carry something of their farms with them and mar the great work. It was impressive to see Whinnie laboring at his feet in a grassy corner, while John watched him from the kirk door with an unrelenting countenance.

---

[1] Copyright, 1896, by John Watson.

The elders also had what might be called their cleaning at this season, examining into the cases of any who had made a "mistak" since last August, and deciding whether they should be allowed to "gang forrit." These deliberations were begun at the collection plate, where Drumsheugh and Domsie stood the last five minutes before the Doctor appeared, and were open to the congregation, who from their places within learned the offenders' prospects.

"The Doctor 'ill dae as he considers richt, an' he's juist ower easy pleased wi' onybody 'at sets a-greeting, but yon's ma jidgment, Dominie."

"I do not wish to dispute with you, Drumsheugh"—Domsie always spoke English on such occasions—"and the power of the keys is a solemn charge. But we must temper a just measure of severity with a spirit of mercy."

"Ye may temper this or temper that," said Drumsheugh, going to the root of the matter, "but a' tell ye, Dominie, there's ower mony o' thae limmers in the country juist noo, an' a'm for making an example o' Jean Ferguson."

So Jean did not present herself for a token on the approaching fast day, and sat out with the children during the Sacrament with as becoming an expression of penitence as her honest, comely face could accomplish. Nor did Jean or her people bear any grudge against the Doctor or the Session for their severity. She had gone of her own accord to confess her fault, and was willing that her process of cleansing should be thorough before she received absolution. When a companion in misfortune spoke of the greater leniency of Pitscourie, Jean expressed her thankfulness that she was of Drumtochty.

"Nane o' yir loose wys for me—gie me a richt minister as dis his duty;" which showed that, whatever might be her deflections in conduct, Jean's ideas of morals were sound.

Preparations in the parish at large began two weeks before the Sacrament, when persons whose attendance had been, to say the least, irregular slipped in among the fathers without ostentation, and, dropping into a conversation on the weather, continued, as it were, from last Sabbath, used it skillfully to offer an apology for past failures in church observance.

"It's keepit up wonderfu' through the week, for a' never like ower bricht mornin's," old Sandie Ferguson would remark casually, whose arrival, swallow-like, heralded the approach of the great occasion. "The roads are graund the noo frae the heich (high glen); we've hed an awfu' winter, neeburs, up oor wy—clean blockit up. Them 'at lives ablow are michty favored, wi' the kirk at their door."

"It's maist extraordinar' hoo the seasons are changin'"—Jamie Soutar could never resist Sandie's effrontery. "A' mind when Mairch saw the end o' the snow, an' noo winter is hangin' aboot in midsummer. A'm expeckin' tae hear, in another five year, that the drifts last through the Sacrament in August. It 'ill be a sair trial for ye, Sandie, a wullin' kirk-goer—but ye 'ill hae the less responsibility."

"Millhole's here, at ony rate, the day, an' we're gled tae see him"—for Drumsheugh's pride was to have a large Sacrament—and so Sandie would take his place at an angle to catch the Doctor's eye, and pay such rapt attention to the sermon that any one not knowing the circumstances might have supposed that he had just awaked from sleep.

Plowmen who on other Sabbaths slept in the forenoon and visited their sweethearts the rest of the day, presented themselves for tokens on the fast day, and made the one elaborate toilette of the year on Saturday evening, when they shaved in turns before a scrap of glass hung outside the bothy door, and the foreman, skilled in the clipping of horses, cut their hair, utilizing a porridge-bowl with much ingenuity to secure a round cut. They left early on the Sabbath morning, forming themselves into a group against the gable of the kirk, and being reviewed with much satisfaction by Drumsheugh, who had a keen eye for absentees from the religious function of the year. At the first sound of the bell the plowmen went into kirk a solid mass, distributing themselves in the servants' pews attached to the farmers' pews, and maintaining an immovable countenance through every part of the service, any tendency to somnolence being promptly and effectually checked by the foreman, who relaxed when alone on other days, but on Sacrament Sabbath realized his charge and never closed an eye. The women and children proceeded to their places on arrival, and the fathers followed them as the bell gave signs of ceasing. Drumsheugh and Domsie then came in from the plate and the administration of discipline, and the parish waited as one man for the appearance of John with the Bible, the Doctor following, and envied those whose seat commanded the walk from the manse down which the procession came once a week with dignity, but once a year with an altogether peculiar majesty.

Drumtochty exiles meeting in London or other foreign places and recalling the Glen, never part without lighting on John and passing contempt on all officials beside him. "Ye mind John?" one would say, wagging his head with an amazement that time and distance had in no wise cooled, and his fellow-glensman would only reply, "Aye, ye may traivel the warld ower or ye see his marrow." Then they would fall into a thoughtful silence, and each knew that his neighbor was following John as he came down the kirkyard on the great day. "Comin' in at the door lookin' as if he didna ken there wes a body in the kirk, a' aye coontit best," but his friend had another preference. "It wes fine, but, man, tae see him set the bukes doon on the pulpit cushion, and then juist gie ae glisk roond the kirk, as much as tae say, 'What think ye o' that?' cowed a'thing." It has been given to myself, amid other privileges, to see (and store in a fond memory) the walk of a University mace-bearer, a piper at the Highland gathering, a German station-master (after the war), an alderman (of the old school), but it is only justice to admit, although I am not of Drumtochty, but only as a proselyte of the gate, that none of those efforts is at all to be compared with John's achievement. Within the manse the Doctor was waiting in pulpit array, grasping his father's snuff-box in a firm right hand, and it was understood that, none seeing them, and as a preparation for the strain that would immediately be upon them, both the minister and his man relaxed for a minute.

"Is there a respectable attendance, John?" and the Doctor would take a preliminary pinch. "Drumsheugh does not expect many absentees."

"Naebody's missin' that a' cud see, sir, except that ill-gettit wratch, Tammie Ronaldson, and a' coont him past redemption. A' gaed in as a' cam doon, and gin he wesna lyin' in his bed sleepin' an' snorin' like a heathen!"

"Well, John, did you do your duty as an officer of the church?"

"A' stood ower him, Doctor, an' a' juist said tae maesel', 'Shall a' smite wi' the sword?' but a' left him alane for this time." And so they started—John in front with the books, and the Doctor a pace behind, his box now in the left hand, with a handkerchief added, and the other holding up his gown, both dignitaries bare-headed, unself-conscious, absorbed in their office.

The books were carried level with the top button of John's waistcoat—the Psalm-book being held in its place by the two extended thumbs—and neither were allowed to depart from the absolute horizontal by an eighth of an inch, even going up the pulpit stairs. When they had been deposited in their place, and slightly patted, just to settle them, John descended to make way for the Doctor, who had been waiting beneath in a commanding attitude. He then followed the minister up, and closed the door—not with a bang, but yet so that all might know he had finished his part of the work. If any one had doubted how much skill went to this achievement, he had his eyes opened when John had the lumbago, and the smith arrived at the kirk door three yards ahead of the Doctor, and let the Psalm-book fall on the pulpit floor.

"We're thankfu' tae hae ye back, John," said Hillocks. "Yon wes a temptin' o' Providence."

Once only had I the privilege of seeing John in this his glory, and the sight of him afflicted me with a problem no one has ever solved. It might, indeed, be made a branch of scientific investigation, and would then be called the Genesis of Beadles. Was a beadle ever a baby? What like was he before he appeared in his office? Was he lying as a cardinal in petto till the right moment, and then simply showed himself to be appointed as one born unto this end? No one dared to hint that John had ever followed any other avocation, and an effort to connect John with the honorable trade of plumbing was justly regarded as a disgraceful return of Tammie Ronaldson's for much faithful dealing. Drumtochty refused to consider his previous history, if he had any, and looked on John in his office as Melchizedek, a mysterious, isolated work of Providence. He was a mere wisp of a man, with a hard, keen face, iron-gray hair brushed low across his forehead, and clean-shaven cheeks.

"A've naething tae say against a beard," on being once consulted, "an' a'm no prepared tae deny it maun be in the plan o' Providence. In fact, gin a' wes in a private capacity, a' michtna shave, but in ma public capacity, a've nae alternative. It wud be a fine story to gang roond the Presbytery o' Muirtown that the Beadle o' Drumtochty hed a beard."

His authority was supreme under the Doctor, and never was disputed by man or beast save once, and John himself admitted that the circumstances were quite peculiar. It was during the Doctor's famous Continental tour, when Drumsheugh fought with strange names in the kirkyard, and the Presbytery supplied Drumtochty in turn. The minister of St. Mungo's, Muirtown, was so spiritual that he left his voice at the foot of the pulpit stairs, and lived in the Song of Solomon, with occasional incursions into the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and it was thoughtless not to have told Mr. Curlew that two or three dogs—of unexceptionable manners—attended our kirk with their masters. They would no more have thought of brawling in church than John himself, and they knew the parts of the service as well as the Doctor: but dogs have been so made by our common Creator that they cannot abide falsetto, and Mr. Curlew tried them beyond endurance. When he lifted up his voice in "Return, return, O Shulamite, return, return," a long wail in reply, from below a back seat where a shepherd was slumbering, proclaimed that his appeal had not altogether failed. "Put out that dog," said the preacher in a very natural voice, with a strong suggestion of bad temper; "put that dog out immediately; it's most disgraceful that such . . . eh, conduct should go on in a Christian church. Where is the church officer?"

"A'm the Beadle o' Drumtochty"—standing in his place—"an' a'll dae yir pleesure;" and the occasion was too awful for any one, even the dog's master, to assist, far less to laugh.

So Laddie was conducted down the passage—a dog who would not condescend to resist—and led to the outer gate of the kirkyard, and John came in amid a dead silence—for Mr. Curlew had not yet got his pulpit note again—and faced the preacher.

"The dog's oot, sir, but a' tak this congregation tae witness, ye begood (began) it yirsel," and it was said that Mr. Curlew's pious and edifying chant was greatly restricted in country kirks from that day.

It was not given to the beadle to sit with the elders in that famous court of morals which is called the Kirk Session, and of which strange stories are told by Southern historians, but it was his to show out and in the culprits with much solemnity. As a familiar of the Inquisition, he took oversight of the district, and saw that none escaped the wholesome discipline of the Church.

"Ye're back," he said, arresting Peter Ferguson as he tried to escape down a by-road, and eying the prodigal sternly, who had fled from discipline to London, and there lost a leg; "the'ill be a meetin' o' Session next week afore the Saicrament; wull a' tell the Doctor ye're comin'?"

"No, ye 'ill dae naething o' the kind, for a'll no be there. A've nae suner got hame aifter ma accident but ye're tormentin' me on the vera road wi' yir Session. Ye drave me awa' aince, an' noo ye wud harry (hunt) me aff again."

"A weel, a weel"—and John was quite calm—"dinna pit yirsel' in a feery-farry (excitement); ye 'ill gang yir ain wy and earn yir ain jidgment. It wes for yir gude a' spoke, and noo a've dune ma pairt, an' whatever comes o't, ye 'ill no hae me or ony ither body tae blame."

"What think ye 'ill happen?"—evidently sobered by John's tone, yet keeping up a show of defiance. "Ye wud think the Session wes the Sheriff o' Perthshire tae hear ye blawin' and threatenin'."

"It's no for me tae say what may befa' ye, Peter Ferguson, for a'm no yir jidge, but juist a frail mortal, beadle though I be; but a' may hev ma thochts.

"Ye refused the summons sax month syne, and took yir wys tae London—that wes contumacy added tae yir ither sin. Nae doot ye made certain ye hed escapit, but hed ye? A' leave it tae yirsel', for the answer is in yir body," and John examined Peter's wooden leg with an austere interest.

"Aye, aye, ma man," he resumed—for Peter was now quite silenced by this uncompromising interpretation of the ways of Providence—"ye aff tae London, an' the Lord aifter ye, an' whuppit aff ae leg. Noo ye declare ye 'ill be as countermacious as ever, an' a'm expeckin' the Lord 'ill tak the ither leg, an' gin that disna dae, a' that remains is tae stairt on yir airms; and, man Peter, ye 'ill be a bonnie-like sicht afore a's dune."

This was very faithful dealing, and it had its desired effect, for Peter appeared at next meeting, and in due course was absolved, as became an obedient son of the Church.

John did not, however, always carry the sword, but bore himself gently to young people so long as they did not misbehave in church, and he had a very tender heart towards probationers, as being callow members of that great ecclesiastical guild in which he was one of the heads.

When one of those innocents came to take the Doctor's place, John used to go in to visit them in the dining-room on Saturday evening, partly to temper the severity of his wife, Dr. Davidson's housekeeper, who dealt hardly with the lads, and partly to assist them with practical hints regarding pulpit deportment and the delivery of their sermons. One unfortunate was so nervous and clinging that John arranged his remarks for him into heads—with an application to two classes—and then, having suggested many points, stopped under the yew arch that divided the kirkyard from the manse garden, and turned on the shaking figure which followed.

"Ae thing mair; aifter ye're dune wi' yir sermon, whether ye're sweatin' or no, for ony sake fa' back in yir seat and dicht (wipe) yir broo," which being done by the exhausted orator, made a great impression on the people, and was so spread abroad that a year afterwards it won for him the parish of Pitscourie.

CHAPTER XIV.—A MODERATE

As a matter of fact, Dr. Davidson, minister of Drumtochty, stood exactly five feet nine in his boots, and was therefore a man of quite moderate height; but this is not what you had dared to state to any loyal and self-respecting person in the parish. For "the Doctor"—what suggestions of respect and love were in that title on a Drumtochty tongue!—was so compactly made, and bore himself with such dignity, both in walk and conversation, that Drumsheugh, although not unaccustomed to measurement and a man of scrupulous accuracy, being put into the witness-box, would have sworn that Dr. Davidson was "aboot sax feet aff and on—maybe half an inch mair, stannin' at his full hicht in the pulpit." Which fond delusion seemed to declare abroad, as in a parable, the greatness of the Doctor.

Providence had dealt bountifully with Dr. Davidson, and had bestowed on him the largest benefit of heredity. He was not the first of his house to hold this high place of parish minister—the only absolute monarchy in the land—and he must not receive over-praise for not falling into those personal awkwardnesses and petty tyrannies which are signs of one called suddenly to the throne. His were the pride of blood, the inherent sense of authority, the habit of rule, the gracious arts of manner, the conviction of popular devotion, the grasp of affairs, the interest in the people's life, which are the marks and aids of a royal caste. It was not in the nature of things that the Doctor should condescend to quarrel with a farmer or mix himself up with any vulgar squabble, because his will was law in ninety cases in a hundred, and in the other ten he skillfully anticipated the people's wishes. When the minister of Nether Pitfoodles—who had sermons on "Love, Courtship, and Marriage," and was much run after in Muirtown—quarreled with his elders about a collection, and asked the interference of the Presbytery, Dr. Davidson dealt severely with him in open court as one who had degraded the ministry and discredited government. It was noticed also that the old gentleman would afterwards examine Nether Pitfoodles curiously for minutes together in the Presbytery, and then shake his head.

"Any man," he used to say to his reverend brother of Kildrummie, as they went home from the Presbytery together, "who gets into a wrangle with his farmers about a collection is either an upstart or he is a fool, and in neither case ought he to be a minister of the Church of Scotland." And the two old men would lament the decay of the ministry over their wine in Kildrummie Manse—being both of the same school, cultured, clean-living, kind-hearted, honorable, but not extravagantly evangelical clergymen. They agreed in everything except in the matter of their after-dinner wine, Dr. Davidson having a partiality for port, while the minister of Kildrummie insisted that a generous claret was the hereditary drink of a Scottish gentleman. This was only, however, a subject of academic debate, and was not allowed to interfere with practice—the abbé of Drumtochty taking his bottle of claret in an appreciative spirit, and the curé of Kildrummie disposing of his two or three glasses of port with cheerful resignation.

If Drumtochty exalted its minister above his neighbors, it may be urged in excuse that Scottish folk are much affected by a man's birth, and Dr. Davidson had a good ancestry. He was the last of his line, and represented a family that for two centuries had given her sons to the Kirk. Among those bygone worthies, the Doctor used to select one in especial for honorable mention. He was a minister of Dunleith, whose farmers preferred to play ball against the wall of the kirk to hearing him preach, and gave him insolence on his offering a pious remonstrance. Whereupon the Davidson of that day, being, like all his race, short in stature but mighty in strength, first beat the champion player one Sabbath morning at his own game to tame an unholy pride, and then thrashed him with his fist to do good to his soul. This happy achievement in practical theology secured an immediate congregation, and produced so salutary an effect on the schismatic ball-player that he became in due course an elder, and was distinguished for his severity in dealing with persons absenting themselves from public worship, or giving themselves overmuch to vain amusements.

At the close of the last century the Doctor's grandfather was minister of the High Kirk, Muirtown, where he built up the people in loyalty to Kirk and State, and himself recruited for the Perthshire Fencibles. He also delivered a sermon entitled "The French Revolution the just judgment of the Almighty on the spirit of insubordination," for which he received a vote of thanks from the Lord Provost and Bailies of Muirtown in council assembled, as well as a jewel from the Earl of Kilspindie, the grandfather of our lord, which the Doctor inherited and wore on the third finger of his left hand. Had Carmichael or any other minister decked himself after this fashion, it had not fared well with him; but even the Free Kirk appreciated a certain pomp in Dr. Davidson, and would have resented his being as other men. He was always pleased to give the history of the ring, and generally told a story of his ancestor, which he had tasted much more frequently than the sermon. A famous judge had asked him to dinner as he made his circuit, and they had disputed about the claret, till at last its excellence compelled respect at the close of the first bottle.

"'Now, Reverend Sir,' said the judge, 'this wine has been slandered and its fair fame taken away without reason. I demand that you absolve it from the scandal.'

"'My Lord,' said my worthy forbear, 'you are a great criminal lawyer, but you are not well read in Kirk law, for no offender can be absolved without three appearances.'

"My grandfather," the Doctor used to conclude, "had the best of that jest besides two bottles of claret, for in those days a clergyman took more wine than we would now think seemly, although, mark you, my sagacious grandfather always denounced drunkenness, on two grounds: first, because it was an offense against religion, and, second, because it was a sign of weakness."

Some old folk could remember the Doctor's father, who never attained to the Doctorate, but was a commanding personage. He published no sermons, but, as the first Davidson in Drumtochty, he laid the foundations of good government. The Kilspindie family had only recently come into the parish—having purchased the larger part of the Carnegies' land—and Drumtochty took a thrawn fit, and among other acts of war pulled down time after time certain new fences. The minister was appealed to by his lordship, and, having settled the rights of the matter, he bade the factor wait in patience till the Sacrament, and Drumsheugh's father used to tell unto the day of his death, as a historical event, how the Doctor's father stood at the communion-table and debarred from the Sacrament evil livers of all kinds, and that day in especial all who had broken Lord Kilspindie's fences, which was an end of the war. There was a picture of him in the Doctor's study, showing a very determined gentleman, who brought up both his parish and his family upon the stick.

With such blood in his veins, it was not to be expected that our Doctor should be after the fashion of a modern minister. No one had ever seen him (or wished to see him) in any other dress than black cloth and a broad-brimmed silk hat, with a white stock of many folds and a bunch of seals depending from some mysterious pocket. His walk, so assured, so measured, so stately, was a means of grace to the parish, confirming every sound and loyal belief, and was crowned, so to say, by his stick, which had a gold head, and, having made history in the days of his father, had reached the position of a hereditary scepter. No one could estimate the aid and comfort that stick gave to the Doctor's visits, but one quite understood the force of the comparison Hillocks once drew, after the Doctor's death, between the coming to his house of the Doctor and a "cry" from his energetic successor under the new régime.

"He's a hard-workin' body, oor new man, aye rin rinnin', fuss fussin', roond the pairish, an' he's a pop'lar hand in the pulpit, but it's a puir business a veesit frae him.

"It's juist in an' oot like a cadger buyin' eggs, nae peace an' nae solemnity. Of coorse it's no his blame that he's naethin' tae look at, for that's the wy he wes made, an' his father keepit a pig (china) shop, but at ony rate he micht get a wise-like stick.

"Noo, there wes the Doctor 'at's dead an' gone; he didna gang scrammelin' an' huntin' aifter the fouk frae Monday tae Saiturday. Na, na, he didna lower himsel' prayin' an' paiterin' like a missionary body. He announced frae the pulpit whar he wes gaein' and when he wes comin'.

"'It's my purpose,'" and Hillocks did his best to imitate the Doctor, "'to visit the farm of Hillocks on Wednesday of this week, and I desire to meet with all persons living thereon;' it wes worth callin' an intimation, an' gied ye pleesure in yir seat.

"On Tuesday aifternoon John wud juist drap in tae see that a'thing wes ready, and the next aifternoon the Doctor comes himsel', an' the first thing he dis is tae lay the stick on the table; an' gin he hed never said a word, tae see it lyin' there wes a veesitation. But he's a weel-meanin' bit craturie, Maister Peebles, an' handy wi' a magic lantern. Sall," and then Hillocks became incapable of speech, and you knew that the thought of Dr. Davidson explaining comic slides had quite overcome him.

This visitation counted as an event in domestic life, and the Doctor's progress through the Glen was noted in the kirkyard, and any special remark duly reported. Nothing could be more perfect than his manner on such occasions, being leisurely, comprehensive, dignified, gracious. First of all he saluted every member of the family, down to the bairns, by name, for had he not at least married the heads of the household, and certainly baptized all the rest? Unto each he made some kindly remark also—to the good man a commendation of his careful farming, to the good wife a deserved compliment on her butter; the eldest daughter was praised for the way in which she was sustaining the ancient reputation of Hillocks' dairy; there was a word to Hillocks' son on his masterly plowing; and some good word of Dominie Jamieson's about the little lassie was not forgotten. After which the Doctor sat down—there was some difficulty in getting the family to sit in his presence—and held a thorough review of the family history for the last year, dwelling upon the prospects of Charlie, for whom the Doctor had got a situation, and Jean, the married daughter, whose husband might one day have a farm with four pair of horses in the carse. The Doctor would then go out to give his opinion on the crops, which was drawn from keen practical knowledge—his brochure on "The Potato Disease: Whence it Came and How it is to be Met" created much stir in its day—and it was well known that the Doctor's view on bones or guano as a preferable manure was decisive. On his return the servants came in—to whom also he said a word—and then from the head of the table he conducted worship—the plowmen looking very uneasy and the children never taking their eyes off his face, while the gudewife kept a watchful eye on all. At the prayer she was careful to be within arm's reach of Hillocks, since on one memorable occasion that excellent man had remained in an attitude of rapt devotion after the others had risen from their knees, which sight profoundly affected the family, and led the Doctor to remark that it was the only time he had seen Hillocks play the Pharisee in public. The Doctor's favorite passages were the eulogium on the model housewife in Proverbs, the parable of the Good Samaritan, and the 12th chapter of Romans, from which he deduced many very searching and practical lessons on diligence, honesty, mercy, and hospitality. Before he left, and while all were under the spell of his presence, the Doctor would approach the delicate subject of Hillocks' "tout-mout" (dispute) with Gormack over a purchase at a roup, in which it was freely asserted that Gormack had corrupted the Kildrummie auctioneer, a gentleman removed above pecuniary bribes, but not unaffected by liquid refreshment. So powerfully did the Doctor appeal to Hillocks' neighborliness that he took snuff profusely, and authorized the Doctor to let it be understood at Gormack that the affair was at an end, which treaty was confirmed by the two parties in Kildrummie train, when Hillocks lent Gormack his turnip-sowing machine and borrowed in turn Gormack's water-cart. Mr. Curlew had more than once hinted in the Presbytery of Muirtown that Dr. Davidson was not so evangelical as might be desired, and certainly Mr. Curlew's visitation was of a much more exciting nature; but St. Mungo's congregation was never without a quarrel, while the Doctor created an atmosphere in Drumtochty wherein peace and charity flourished exceedingly.

Whatever might be urged in praise of his visitation, surely the Doctor could never be more stately or fatherly than on Sacrament Sabbath, as he stood in his place to begin service. His first act was to wipe elaborately those gold eye-glasses, without which nothing would have been counted a sermon in Drumtochty Kirk, and then, adjusting them with care, the Doctor made a deliberate survey of the congregation, beginning at his right hand and finishing at his left. Below him sat the elders in their blacks, wearing white stocks that had cost them no little vexation that morning, and the precentor, who was determined no man, neither Saunders' Baxter nor another, should outsing him that day in Coleshill. Down the center of the kirk ran a long table, covered with pure white linen, bleached in the June showers and wonderfully ironed, whereon a stain must not be found, for along that table would pass the holy bread and wine. Across the aisle on either side, the pews were filled with stalwart men, solemn beyond their wonted gravity, and kindly women in simple finery, and rosy-cheeked bairns. The women had their tokens wrapped in snowy handkerchiefs, and in their Bibles they had sprigs of apple-ringy and mint, and other sweet-scented plants. By and by there would be a faint fragrance of peppermint in the kirk—the only religious and edifying sweet, which flourishes wherever sound doctrine is preached, and disappears before new views, and is therefore now confined to the Highlands of Wales and Scotland, the last home of our fathers' creed. The two back seats were of black oak, richly carved. In the one sat the General and Kate, and across the passage Viscount Hay, Lord Kilspindie's eldest son, a young man of noble build and carriage, handsome and debonair, who never moved during the sermon save twice, and then he looked at the Carnegies' pew.

When the Doctor had satisfied himself that none were missing of the people, he dropped his eye-glass—each act was so closely followed that Drumsheugh below could tell where the Doctor was—and took snuff after the good old fashion, tapping the box twice, selecting a pinch, distributing it evenly, and using first a large red bandana and then a delicate white cambric handkerchief. When the cambric disappeared, each person seized his Bible, for the Doctor would say immediately with a loud, clear voice, preceded by a gentlemanly clearance of the throat, "Let us compose our minds for the worship of Almighty God by singing to his praise the first Psalm.

"That man hath perfect blessedness
Who walketh not astray—"

Then Peter Rattray, of the high Glen, would come in late, and the Doctor would follow him with his eye till the unfortunate man reached his pew, where his own flesh and blood withdrew themselves from him as if he had been a leper, and Peter himself wished that he had never been born.

"Five minutes earlier, Peter, would have prevented this unseemly interruption—ahem.

"In counsel of ungodly men,
Nor stands in sinners' way."

Before the Sacrament the Doctor gave one of his college sermons on some disputed point in divinity, and used language that was nothing short of awful.

"Grant me those premises," he would say, while the silence in the kirk could be felt, "and I will show to any reasonable and unprejudiced person that those new theories are nothing but a resuscitated and unjustifiable Pelagianism." Such passages produced a lasting impression in the parish, and once goaded Drumsheugh's Saunders into voluntary speech.

"Yon wes worth ca'in' a sermon. Did ye ever hear sic words oot o' the mooth o' a man? Noo, that bleatin' cratur Curlew 'at comes frae Muirtown is juist pittin' by the time. Sall, ae sermon o' the Doctor's wud last yon body for a year."

After the sermon the people sang,

'Twas on that night when doomed to know, and the elders, who had gone out a few minutes before, entered the kirk in procession, bearing the elements, and set them before the Doctor, now standing at the table. The people came from their pews and took their seats, singing as they moved, while the children were left to their own devices, tempered by the remembrance that their doings could be seen by the Doctor, and would receive a just recompense of reward from their own kin in the evening. Domsie went down one side and Drumsheugh the other, collecting the tokens, whose clink, clink in the silver dish was the only sound.

"If there be any other person who desires to take the Sacrament at this the first table" (for the Sacrament was given then to detachments), "let him come without delay."

"Let us go, dad," whispered Kate. "He is a dear old padre, and . . . they are good people and our neighbors."

"But they won't kneel, you know, Kit; will you . . . ?"

"We 'ill do as they do; it is not our Sacrament." So the father and daughter went up the kirk and took their places on the Doctor's left hand. A minute later Lord

Hay rose and went up his aisle, and sat down opposite the Carnegies, looking very nervous, but also most modest and sincere.

The Doctor gave the cup to the General, who passed it to Kate, and from her it went to Weelum Maclure, and another cup he gave to Hay, whom he had known from a child, and he handed it to Marget Howe, and she to Whinnie, her man; and so the two cups passed down from husband to wife, from wife to daughter, from daughter to servant, from lord to tenant, till all had shown forth the Lord's death in common fellowship and love, as becometh Christian folk. In the solemn silence the sunshine fell on the faces of the communicants, and the singing of the birds came in through the open door with the scent of flowers and ripe corn. Before the congregation left, the Doctor addressed a few words of most practical advice, exhorting them, in especial, to live in the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount, and to be good neighbors. It was on one of those occasions that he settled a dispute between masters and men—whether the cutting of grass for the horses' breakfast should be included in the day's work—and ended the only bitterness known in Drumtochty.

At the kirk gate Hay introduced himself to his father's friend, and the General looked round to find his daughter, but Kate had disappeared. She had seen the face of Marget Howe after the Sacrament as the face of one in a vision, and she had followed Marget to the road.

"Will you let me walk with you for a little? I am General Carnegie's daughter, and I would like to speak to you about the Sacrament; it was lovely."

"Ye dae me much honor, Miss Carnegie," and Marget slightly flushed, "an' much pleasure, for there is naething dearer tae me than keeping the Sacrament; it is my joy every day and mickle comfort in life."

"But I thought you had it only once a year?" questioned Kate.

"With bread and wine and outward sign that is once, and maybe eneuch, for it makes ane high day for us all, but div ye not think, Miss Carnegie, that all our life should be ane Sacrament?"

"Tell me," said Kate, looking into Marget's sweet, spiritual face.

"Is it no the picture of His Luve, who thocht o' everybody but Himsel', an' saved everybody but Himsel', an' didna He say we maun drink His cup and live His life?"

Kate only signed that Marget should go on.

"Noo, a'm judgin' that ilka ane o's is savit juist as we are baptized intae the Lord's death, and ilka time ane o's keeps back a hot word, or humbles a proud heart, or serves anither at a cost, we have eaten the Body and drunk the Blood o' the Lord."

"You are a good woman," cried Kate, in her impulsive way, so quick to be pleased or offended. "May I come to see you some day?"

"Dinna think me better than I am: a woman who had many sins tae fecht and needit many trials tae chasten her; but ye will be welcome at Whinny Knowe for yir ain sake and yir people's, an' gin it ever be in ma poor tae serve ye, Miss Carnegie, in ony wy, it wull be ma joy."

Twice as she came through the woods Kate stopped: once she bit her lip, once she dashed a tear from her eye.

"Where did you go to, lassie?" and the General met Kate at the gateway. "Lord Hay came to the drive with me, and was quite disappointed not to meet you—a very nice lad, indeed, manly and well-mannered."

"Never mind Lord Hay, dad; I've been with the most delightful woman I've ever seen."

"Do you mean she was in kirk?"

"Yes, sitting across the table—don't laugh; she is a farmer's wife, and a better lady than we saw in India."

"Oh, dad," and Kate kissed her father, "I wish I had known my mother; it had been better for me, and . . . happier for you."

[To be continued in the July Magazine Number of The Outlook]

◆

Never too poor, too ugly, too dull, too sick, too friendless, to be useful to some one.—Kate Gannett Wells.

The Bible and the Child[1]

The Bible as Literature

By Washington Gladden

The Bible is the book of religion, but it is also, by eminence, the book of literature. Well may we call it The Book; it is the prolific mother of books; since the invention of printing the book-makers have been busy, a good share of their time, in producing Bibles, and books about the Bible.

The influence of our English Bible upon our language in keeping our speech simple and direct and unstilted is beyond all comprehension. Euphuistic dandyism and Johnsonese magniloquence have been slain by its homely eloquence; and not only have thirsty souls with joy drawn the water of life by its aid from the wells of salvation, but scholars and writers of books have drawn the freshness and grace of literary form from its pure well of English undefiled. It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that our greatest English writers have been the men who best knew their Bibles. John Bunyan read almost no other book, and he contrived to write a book of which, it is said, more copies have been printed than of any other English book except the Bible itself. Of men as far apart in their view of life as Byron and Ruskin, it could with equal truthfulness be said that their mastery of style is largely due to their perfect familiarity with the English Bible.

Complaints of the Bible as archaic and uncouth in its literary form have not, indeed, been wanting; and some of the most amusing books in the language are those which have undertaken to remedy this defect. A translation of the New Testament published in New England in 1833, by an Episcopal clergyman, exhibits in its introduction the need of such a reconstructed Bible. "While various other works," says the translator, "and especially those of the most trivial attainment, are diligently adorned with a splendid and sweetly flowing diction, why should the mere uninteresting identity and paucity of language be so exclusively employed in rendering the Word of God? Why should the Christian Scriptures be divested even of decent ornament? Why should not an edition of the heavenly institutes be furnished for the reading-room, saloon, and toilet, as well as for the church, school, and nursery; for the literary and accomplished gentleman as well as for the plain and unlettered citizen?" This is what this fine writer essays to do, and a few samples of the way he does it may be instructive:

> When thou art beneficent, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand performs.
>
> Contemplate the lilies of the field, how they advance.
>
> At that time Jesus took occasion to say, I entirely concur with thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth.
>
> Every plantation which my heavenly Father has not cultivated shall be extirpated.
>
> Salt is salutary; but if the salt has become vapid, how can it be restored?
>
> Be not surprised that I announced to thee, Ye must be reproduced.
>
> For this the Father loves me, because I gave up my life to be afterwards resumed. No one divests me of it, but I personally resign it. I have authority to resign it, and I have authority to resume it.
>
> There are numerous apartments in my Father's temple; if not, I would have informed you.

This will serve as an illustration of the kind of writing to which, for long periods, we might have been delivered, if it had not been for the better model, always in the hands of the common people, of the strong and simple Saxon of our English Bible.

Most true is the contention of Matthew Arnold that, although the Bible is the book of religion and the book of conduct, we cannot draw from it the religious and the moral truth of which it is the treasury unless we treat it as literature. Literature it is, beyond all controversy, and not science, nor philosophy, nor theology. Grievously do we abuse it when we take its phrases as theological formulas, and undertake to piece them together in what we call systematic theology. "To understand that the language of the Bible is fluid, passing, and literary, not rigid, fixed, and scientific, is the first step," says Arnold, "towards a right understanding of the Bible." It is a step which many theologians have never taken. If our Sunday-school teachers could get possession of this truth, a good foundation would be laid for a spiritual and vital theology. And then it would be well to go a little deeper and try to comprehend the fact that all language is an instrument which man has devised for himself—a tool which he has fashioned, and is all the while reshaping for his uses; that it is necessarily imperfect and fallible—never, at its best estate, an instrument of precision; and that the best we can hope for is an approximation to the perfect utterance in words of spiritual realities. That profound discussion of the nature of language in the introduction to Dr. Bushnell's "God in Christ" should be carefully studied by every one who tries to interpret the Bible. In the application of what are called the exact sciences—as, for example, in engineering—it is often necessary to repeat measurements or tests a great many times, and take the average of results that greatly vary. And in the expression of highest truth by means of human language the same method must be employed. The thing has to be said over, many times, in many ways; one analogy after another must be suggested, one aspect after another considered, until, by comparison and combination of all these impressions, the mind reaches something like a complete apprehension. "If we find the writer," says Dr. Bushnell, "moving with a free motion, and tied to no one symbol, unless in some popular effort or for some single occasion; if we find him multiplying antagonisms, offering cross-views, and bringing us round the field to see how it looks from different points, then we are to presume that he has some truth in hand which it becomes us to know. We are to pass round accordingly with him, take up all his symbols, catch a view with him here and another there, use one thing to qualify another, and the other to shed light upon that, and by a process of this kind endeavor to comprehend his antagonisms, and settle into a complete view of his meaning." This is an excellent statement of what is meant when it is said that the Bible is literature, and must be studied as literature in order to be understood.

---

[1] Previous articles in this series have been by the Very Rev. F. W. Farrar, Dean of Canterbury (The Outlook for March 21), the Rev. R. F. Horton, D.D. (The Outlook, April 18), and the Very Rev. W. H. Fremantle, Dean of Ripon (The Outlook, May 2). Other articles in the series will be by Professor Frank C. Porter, of Yale University, and by Lyman Abbott.

But while the spiritual and moral content of the Bible is always the main subject of our study the Bible is well worthy of our attention also on account of its literary form. It was the architectural splendor of his capital, no doubt, that the poet was thinking of when he wrote: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined forth." If the beauty of architecture is one medium by which he may be manifested, the beauty of the moving epic, the rhythmic ode, the stately oration, the sparkling epigram, is another and a far more perfect medium. The literary beauty of the Scriptures is not an accident; beauty is an essential element of all divine revelation, and as such deserves our most reverent study.

What Professor Moulton describes as "literary morphology" is a matter of interest, and the attempt which he has made, in his recent volume entitled "The Literary Study of the Bible," to give us some account of the leading forms of literature preserved for us in the Scriptures—to show us "how to distinguish one literary composition from another, to say exactly where each begins and ends; to recognize epic, lyric, and other forms as they appear in their Biblical dress, as well as to distinguish literary forms special to the sacred writers," is one to which the attention of all students of the English Bible may well be called. But more important than these technical distinctions is the recognition of the grace and loveliness with which the language of the Bible is often clothed. The power to discern this beauty needs to be cultivated. "Consider the lilies," said the Master. The word seems to mean that we are to sit down among them and study them, to pore over their loveliness until it enters into our souls and takes possession. I know not why so many of the fair flowers of speech are strewn upon the pages of the Book of books, unless it be that their beauty is meant to appeal to our thought and to give us a high and pure pleasure. Consider these blossoms also. This is an integral part of the gospel of God—the revelation of beauty. He saves from that which is low and base by offering us pleasure in that which is high and pure. "Let each one of us," says the Apostle, "please his neighbor for that which is good, unto edifying." It is thus that we become the children of our Father in heaven. And the Book which above all others reveals Him offers to our minds abundant pleasure in the graces of beautiful speech.

It may be supposed that such a message as the Bible contains could have been delivered to men in language as tame and unimaginative as that of the Westminster Confession or the Thirty-nine Articles—that God's Bible might have contained no poetry, no music, no kindling eloquence. But such a supposition could not long be entertained by a thoroughly sane mind. The truth about God's love for man and man's life in God cannot be told in cold, logical formularies; the words into which it is poured will glow and burn; the sentences which are charged with it fall into rhythmic beat and reverberation. The hope and joy and glory of it are the best of it, and these cannot be put into logical propositions. The creeds are not the Gospel, any more than the skeleton is the man. The Gospel is not the Gospel when it is separated from the forms of beauty with which it came forth from the heart of God.

The question how the children who are studying the Bible can be made to discern and enjoy this beauty is one to which I am not inclined to propose any definite solution. The main thing is that those who teach the book shall themselves be filled with a sense of its beauty; out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will speak. It would be well for all teachers to study Mr. Moulton's book; but it would not be well for them to burden the minds of their pupils with the technical distinctions of literary form.

To read the Bible with the pupils—if one can read well—selecting those narratives which are most dramatic and those poems which are most beautiful, is the best way of conveying to their minds the sense of its beauty. We read so much by chapters, and study so much by scraps and sentences, that the sense of literary unities is scarcely awakened at all. To read through, at one sitting, or continuously, with judicious omissions, the story of Abraham, or the story of Joseph, or the story of Elijah, or the story of David, or the story of Ruth—not stopping to make many expository comments, and only pointing out the defective ethical standards which the stories often imply, when they are judged by Christ's perfect rule—would be a most valuable exercise in a Sunday-school class. The narratives can be trusted to make their own impression, and it would be difficult to find language more picturesque or attractive than that in which the Bible clothes them. A little maid of seven, after listening with interest to the reading of Bible stories paraphrased for children, said, with a sigh, "Yes, that is good; but I like the real Bible better."

The reading of the lyrical portions of the Bible with young people a little more mature might also be profitable. Such magnificent odes as the Song of Moses and Miriam, the Song of Deborah, the Song of David, should be read through with the pupils, and not marred or belittled by a word of passing comment. To return, after the reading, and call attention to the music of the phrases, the march of the rhetoric, and the splendor of the imagery, would be judicious. But the principal qualification of the teacher is the ability to feel, and to express in his own reading, the lyrical beauty of the poetry. Many of the Psalms and the Prophecies, not a few of the discourses of our Lord, and notable passages in the Epistles and in the Apocalypse, can be treated in the same way. The arrangement of these poetical materials which Mr. Moulton has given us, in strophe and antistrophe, and in what he calls lower and higher parallelisms, while sometimes fanciful, is, on the whole, very helpful to the appreciation of the poetry, and would greatly assist the teacher who sought, by such a method, to convey to his pupils the beauty of the forms in which the saving truth of the Bible is expressed.

Books and Authors

The Reign of Law[1]

We have here the concluding volume of a series, whose first installment, "The Reign of Law," obtained such favorable regard a quarter-century ago. The title of that work indicated the character of the series, and the thesis involved in it is strongly emphasized in the present volume. So far from theology being an inquiry into merely subjective phenomena, it deals with objective realities, which in their essence are the supreme facts of the Universe. "It everywhere rests on Nature as a word for one all-pervading kingdom."

This "Philosophy of Belief" is, therefore, a work of different scope from Mr. Balfour's "Foundations of Belief," which was an inquiry into the theory of knowledge. It has more affinity with Dr. Matheson's "The Psalmist and the Scientist." But while that undertook to show a fundamental concord between the principles lying at the heart of the sacred oracles and those at the base of modern science, the Duke's work is to exhibit the main positions of Christian theology, as everywhere based on natural and necessary laws. So much of these is recognizable as to give us a certainty that they reign even where untraceable. Aiming to avoid whatever points are in controversy between theologians themselves, the writer shows how the truths of theology, as facts, reveal natural law as prevailing in the spiritual no less than in the physical world, e. g.: "We have brought a large part of the Christian system under the domain of Law, when we have recognized as necessary, or natural, such conceptions as . . . that the human mind is in some real measure and degree an image of the mind which is supreme in Nature; that a fuller and higher incarnation of it cannot be regarded as difficult of belief; that inspiration, in an infinite variety of degrees, is quite according to the existing constitution and course of things; that the nature and efficacy of sacrifice admits of some reasonable explanation;" etc., etc. The author then goes on to show how Christian ethics, as an inseparable part of Christian theology, is grounded in the natural constitution of things, and how prayer also has its sphere of objective efficiency under the all-including reign of law.

The eminent social position of the writer adds to whatever interest belongs to his treatment of the subject. When statesmen of the British Empire like Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Balfour, and the Duke of Argyll take the field in behalf of Christian theology, we see a great change from the middle of the last century, when Montesquieu said that in the higher circles of English society "every one laughs if one talks of religion." Whatever the present skepticism may count for, we see a rising, not a refluent, tide.

But while freely conceding the ability of the Duke as a theological writer, comparing well with some distinguished doctors of divinity, we have been perhaps most interested in his present work as typical of this time of transition—a time when many stalwart thinkers, who possess the modern spirit, show themselves as yet not so possessed by it as to escape vacillation between the ideas from which they are parting and those which they are laying hold of. The Duke makes a clean sweep of the distinction, still held so tenaciously by many of his fellow-Presbyterians, between the natural and the supernatural. He tells us that it is "purely modern," and "irrational." All that is natural is in fact divine. Human instincts are divinely inspired. Christ appeals to the natural reason and conscience as "the inspired element in man," which will respond to him. "It is significant," he says, "of the sense which Christian theology attaches to the nature of authority, that St. Paul should speak so strongly and so absolutely on the independence of the individual reason in the last resort." He does not hesitate to eliminate the miracle of the dividing of Jordan for the Israelites by referring to a similar event in the thirteenth century, due to a landslip which dammed the river.

On the other hand, he adduces "the conceptions of Christian theology on what are called the 'Persons of the Godhead'" as specimens of a class of ideas "which we are expected to accept on authority alone," since "they all lie in a region which our own consciousness tells us is absolutely inaccessible to any knowledge of our own depending on reason." The word "authority," as here used, is elsewhere defined as that guidance by "the instrumentality of other minds, higher and richer than our own," which we adopt in all daily affairs. But who are those "other minds," on whose authority we are "expected to accept" conceptions of the "three Persons" which no internal light of our own can reveal? To say that they are the divinely gifted evangelists and apostles is to beg the question, now at issue between Christian thinkers, whether the New Testament writers are really sponsors for the verity of the so-called Athanasian creed, whose propositions the Duke has well described as lying in a region inaccessible to the reach of our own reason.

This is a marked case, but not the only case, of incongruity between the old and the new stands in the author's thought, a characteristic which gives such a piebald color to much theologizing of our time. For this the amateur has no cause to be ashamed in the company of the professional. It does, however, seem strange that a writer so well read in contemporary criticism should say of the titles given in Isaiah ix., 6, to the newborn child, that they "are not conceivably applicable to any mere man."

We were about to remark on the noble and inspiring chapter which ends the book, on "Christian Belief in its Relation to Philosophy," but our limits forbid. In view of what we have said, it should be added that in this long and trying period of theological reconstruction the books most helpful to the largest number of inquiring minds are books of this sort, however marked by incongruities. Their unloosened grasp on some conceptions that are passing away inspires confidence to lay hold with them on other conceptions that are destined to prevail. Nature is Spirit. Life is the self-existent, aboriginal Reality. Human life is an included fragment within the divine. Human wills enter as an element into the divine will. Such are the ultimate truths, of which glimpses appear on our author's pages as in his prospect, if not in his possession. He is on the road; he knows the way; he is still in touch with many that are further behind, and therefore the more trusted and helpful as their guide out of the mist to the mount of vision.

---

[1] The Philosophy of Belief; or, Law in Christian Theology. By the Duke of Argyll. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $5.

An Instructive Review[1]

We all know Froude; we admire his genius, we respect his purpose, even if we do not always laud his success in rewriting history more closely to truth. The interest which cannot fail to attach to this posthumous publication is saddened by our regret that he is with us no more. It is a familiar story that it is concerned with. Its special claim upon our attention, apart from the fact that it is his, is in the attempt which it makes, so characteristic of him, to eliminate misconceptions in the interest of historical reality. The illusions which inevitably haunt us in studying the past arise from our habit of viewing it through the medium of the ideas of our own time. Thus, unhistorical conceptions of the Protestant Reformation arise and prevail. Protestant and Catholic divide now upon dogmas, and we are wont to think it was so at the first. Catholicism and the supremacy of an infallible Pontiff are now synonymous, and to rebel against the latter is to break with the former. But it was not so in Luther's time, when, as Froude says, half of Catholic Europe "regarded the Papacy as a usurpation and an impertinence." According to Cardinal Contarini, at that time, the conversion of Luther and all his followers would not have hindered the rebellion against the Roman hierarchy from going forward with undiminished vigor.

When we speak of the Reformation, we think of the theological and ecclesiastical consequences which it ran into. Our historian puts these aside to show us what it originally was—a revolt of the laity against the clergy—against the most enormous and immoral tyranny that the world has ever endured. In the demonstration of this fact he is content to set aside Protestant testimony at Cardinal Newman's disparaging estimate of it, as based on "bold, wholesale, unscrupulous lying." He rests his case wholly on Catholic witnesses, and "Catholic documents of undoubted authenticity."

The Council of Constance in 1415 had given a warning which the corrupt hierarchy had disregarded. The infamous Pope John XXIII., whom it deposed, was the precursor of the still more infamous Alexander VI. at the end of that century. To him the name of "Antichrist," which only a Protestant fanatic would now apply to Leo XIII., was given by a Catholic at Rome in a letter inviting the interference of the Emperor Maximilian. The fuel of revolution had been thickly piled throughout northern Europe when it was kindled by the spark that Luther struck.

Just then the King of Spain, Charles V., became Emperor of Germany. We usually think of him as the baffled foe of Luther. In Mr. Froude's pages we see him also as the baffled reformer of the Church, whose loyal son he was from first to last. From his accession in 1520 to the Council which met at Trent in 1545, his hope was to maintain the unity of Christendom by reforming the abuses which threatened to disrupt it. The cry of Germany was for a General Council composed of the laity as well as the clergy, presided over by the Emperor, and on German, not Italian, soil. The doctrinal questions of a later period were as yet undeveloped. The demand was for moral reform, for simple righteousness. This demand the Emperor respected, and did what in him lay to make it prevail at Rome. He failed, and it was the disappointment of his life.

---

[1] Lectures on the Council of Trent. Delivered at Oxford, 1892-3, by James Anthony Froude, late Regius Professor of Modern History. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $2.

The successive Popes with whom Charles had to deal insisted that the Council should be held in Italy, composed of the clergy only, and presided over by the Pope or his legate; that is, that the chief offenders should be judges in their own case. To this it finally had to come, either this or no Council at all, with the single concession that it should be at Trent, in the Tyrol, not far from the Italian frontier. But when Charles had got his Council together, it took the bit in its teeth, it defied control, it was bent on making schism permanent, it became farcical, and was finally broken up by fear of a raid by Maurice of Saxony, acting, as Mr. Froude thinks, in secret collusion with the Emperor. And so the last hope of the peace of Christendom vanished.

The question on which the Church divided in the Reformation was the right of the laity to have a voice in spiritual matters. Rome fought against this as involving her destruction, and she prevailed. Ten years later another Council met at Trent, but only to recognize the fatal consequences of the first, and to equip the Church for reconquest of her lost ground.

As to the often alleged failure of the Reformation, two things may be said: First, and conformably to Mr. Froude's conception of the Reformation, as originally a revolt of the laity against the clergy, we may say with him that every one of the "hundred grievances," in protest against which Germany demanded a General Council, has ceased to exist, many of them even to be remembered. "Everywhere, in Catholic countries as in Protestant, the practices have been abandoned which the laity rose then to protest against. The principles on which the laity insisted have become the rule of the modern world."

Secondly, however disappointed were the hopes of the Reformers concerning the immediate future, their work was no more a failure than the labor of the farmer in the frosty spring. They introduced two germinant principles of illimitable expansive power—the freedom of the individual conscience in immediate responsibility to God, and the authority for conscience of the light enshrined in the records of divine revelation. Poorly as they themselves comprehended or applied them, these principles form the life-blood of whatever sound or stable progress the world is making now. These principles, moreover, when realized, issue in that true toleration, earnest, not indifferent, which respects the right of judgment even of those whose judgment it most opposes. Mr. Froude's remark, "We only tolerate what we think unimportant," therefore leaves us with the doubt whether he has fully discerned the heart of the Reformation movement, whose superficial character he has so accurately described.

* * *

Bishop W. Boyd Carpenter, of Ripon, makes a careful and extended study of the Sermon on the Mount in The Great Charter of Christ. What he says is not as important as what he has left unsaid. The real difficulty that religious teachers of the present day are feeling is in the adjustment of modern civilization, with what seem to be its necessary forms and conditions, to the beatitudes. We cannot but feel that Bishop Carpenter has failed to answer this demand. With all the excellences of his diction and with all the ingenuity of his thought, we fail to find in this volume what we most want. It is suggestive of many things; it is in some directions devout and spiritual; but it is not applied to the demands that modern society is pressing upon us; the Bishop does not tread the earth. We do not say that his interpretation of the Sermon on the Mount cannot be applied, only Dr. Carpenter does not show us the way in which it is to be applied. (Thomas Whittaker, New York.) His other recent book, Some Thoughts on Christian Reunion, published by Macmillan & Co., has as its fundamental idea that the causes which have led to the rise of sects in Christendom have been the desire to make some special or new doctrine a condition of Christian communion. In consequence of this premise he believes that the way to Christian union is to suppress these special or new doctrines. He is quite right in saying that we want more of the spirit of religion and less of the letter; because intellectual agreement cannot reasonably be expected. He sees much hope for reunion in the decline of interest in special theological ideas, and he believes that Christendom will ultimately unite upon the basis of the historic creeds. It is not easy to see how to reconcile this position with the other, about the spirit and not the letter. Upon the whole, we lay down the book with a feeling of disappointment. The author appears to desire most of all a union of the Episcopal Churches. The non-Episcopal Churches he practically ignores, and while he hopes for a union of the Anglican and the Eastern Churches, he has no reason to hope for a union of the Anglican and the Latin Churches.

The question has arisen, especially within the past year, whether Chaucer and Spenser ever held the position of poet laureate; indeed, if it ever existed before the time of Ben Jonson. This question has been answered generally in the negative, but never so completely as by the author who writes under the pseudonym of "Kenyon West" in The Laureates. (F. A. Stokes Company, New York.) In this book we learn that the laureateship was made a regular office in 1630, Ben Jonson being the first to hold it, and that the annuities given by Edward III. to Chaucer, and by Elizabeth to Spenser, were the sole causes for the tradition of their being laureates. The volume gives us in concise form a condensed account of the lives and works of all the English laureates, together with extracts from their works. The sketches are condensed yet comprehensive, and the selections are admirable—many of them must have been weeded out from a mass of poems unfit to be read in this age. We must give special praise to the classification of the selection from Wordsworth. More than in any other classification his biography is reflected in his verse. This is emphasized by the dates which are appended to each poem. This book brings out clearly what ought to be as clearly understood nowadays, namely, that the laureateship does not mean the appointment of the greatest poet, but of the person whose personality is most pleasing to the Court, and who is most in sympathy with the monarch. It is surprising, therefore, that so many great poets have been included in the category, for greatness presupposes independence. However, we have in the cases of both Wordsworth and Tennyson independence united to a genuine regard for the crown and for the royal family. This statement makes plain the fact that the appointment of Shelley or Byron would have been as impossible as the appointment of Mr. Swinburne or of Mr. William Morris in our own day; while the appointment of Mr. Alfred Austin was strictly in accord with the traditions of the place.

In the volume on the Book of Deuteronomy, by Andrew Harper, Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis, Ormond College, Melbourne, we have one of the best of that valuable series, "The Expositor's Bible." Professor Harper accepts in the main the general results of recent higher criticism, at least as far as Deuteronomy is concerned, declining, however, to accept the extreme conclusions of some critics. He is independent, cautious, reverent, earnest, and always fresh and suggestive. He believes heartily in the inspiration of the Scriptures, and accepts them as the Word of God; and he also believes in the continuous presence of God with his people. His book is pervaded by a delightful spirit. His treatment of the various religious and ethical questions connected with Deuteronomy will prove of great and material assistance to many—we think all—who desire to be true to all real light, and yet do not see how to reconcile the positions of recent criticism with a genuine faith in the inspiration of the Bible. It is too much to say that they will find all their difficulties removed, as it is too much to expect that the most "advanced" students will be satisfied; but all will find the treatment of the questions involved able and candid and devout—the product of a mind notably alert and vigorous, open and generous, richly stored, combining care for the best in the past with readiness for the ever new disclosures of God's spirit. The book is notable also for the writer's sense of the wholeness of human life, his discernment of the fundamental needs and laws common to all people. It thus gives a distinct impression of the practical wisdom of the Deuteronomic code. But especially is the book eminent and constantly quickening to the spiritual life in the writer's apprehension of the fatherly love of God as prompting, and as enshrined in, the Mosaic law. (A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York.)

He is a brave man who dares to attempt that "easie running verse with tendere feet" of which Edmund Spenser was the master, yet so great courage has Mr. George Musgrave, M.A., of St. John's College, Oxford, and now Barrister at Law. What is still more remarkable is that Mr. Musgrave has thought good to use the Spenserian stanza as a medium to translate the Divine Comedy of Dante into English. We do not like the result of the attempt. The author is evidently able to translate Dante as well as the English tongue will permit. But his form of verse is a hindrance. It seems to us foreign to the Terza Rime. The stanza breaks the strain of the narrative where it should not be interrupted, and it necessitates the use of words that are archaic. This latter feature would not be objectionable were the archaic wording suitable to the dignity of Dante's thought, but it is not always so. In fact, at times the diction has the air of burlesque. Besides, the author is frequently driven to coin words, which, while their meaning may be obvious, by reason of their oddity distract the attention. It is not good to coin words to help out verse. With all this license, the verse itself often halts. Consequently, notwithstanding some felicitous renderings, we cannot pronounce this translation, which covers only the Inferno, a success. (Macmillan & Co., New York.)

There is a delightfully unconventional flavor to the sermons of A. K. H. Boyd in the volume Occasional and Immemorial Days. (Longmans, Green & Co., New York.) They are long sermons, genial, mellow, and discursive as the essays of a "Country Parson." In point of fact, some of them are essays rather than sermons; but they all tend to edification. We have been particularly interested in the sermon "Church Life in Scotland: Retrospect and Prospect," which was preached before the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1890. In a tender and kindly way Dr. Boyd contrasts the present of Scotch Presbyterianism with the past, and the contrast is striking. Our readers know that Dr. Boyd is a Broad Church Presbyterian, and the knowledge of this will give the key to all these sermons.

We have received from the Open Court Publishing Company a new edition, enlarged and revised, of the Religion of Science; also a new edition of Professor Max Müller's Three Lectures on the Science of Language; also a fourth edition, exactly, so far as one can discover, like the former editions of the same book, of The Gospel of Buddha, which is extremely interesting but ought to be fortified with a preface telling the unlearned reader that no life of Buddha is contemporary; none was written for over a thousand years after his death. In addition to these books there is also The Psychology of Attention, by Ribot, which ought to be read by our preachers and teachers. In fact, psychology ought to be taught in our divinity schools, and Ribot's would be useful as text-books in the curriculum.

Dr. Cunningham Geikie has continued his Bible studies into the New Testament under the caption New Testament Hours. The latest volume, The Apostles: Their Lives and Letters, covers the period from A.D. 55 to A.D. 64. In reality the work consists of a running comment on the Epistles to the Galatians, Corinthians, Romans, Colossians, Philemon, Ephesians, Philippians, Timothy, and Titus, fortified with pictures and a chronology. It is not a student's work, but will be acceptable to Bible classes and to the home circle. (James Pott, New York.)

New Books

[The books mentioned under this head and under that of Books Received include all received by The Outlook during the week ending June 12. This weekly report of current literature will be supplemented by fuller reviews of the more important works.]

One of the most elaborate of recent discussions of The Doctrine of the Incarnation is that contained in two large volumes from the hand of Mr. Robert L. Ottley, President of the Pusey House, Oxford, a position which is likely to indicate pretty definitely his attitude on the question. The Outlook will make further comment on this work at a later day. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

The Poetical Works of William Wordsworth, edited by William Knight, commented upon in these columns two weeks ago, has reached its fourth volume, which contains as a frontispiece Boxall's portrait of the poet. (Macmillan & Co., New York.)——The same imprint is upon A Bachelor's Establishment, translated from Balzac by Clara Bell, with a preface by George Saintsbury, and also, in the Popular Edition, The Poetical Works of Alfred, Lord Tennyson, upon volumes four and five of The Idylls of the King.

Before the publication of "The Red Badge of Courage" Mr. Crane had written two stories which have now been given to the public: Maggie, a Girl of the Streets (D. Appleton & Co., New York), and George's Mother (Edward Arnold, New York). It is encouraging to know that these books preceded the story which has brought its writer into such prominence, for they do not in any respect compare in quality with "The Red Badge of Courage."——The story of a life which by strange vagaries of fortune put its past so far behind it that the shadows of that past never fall athwart the future is found in Honor Ormthwaite, by the author of "Lady Jean's Vagaries." (Harper & Brothers, New York.)——The readers of Jane Barlow's Irish stories will welcome her latest book, Mrs. Martin's Company. This collection of stories has the characteristic touch of local color and intensity of sympathy. The illustrator, Bertha Newcombe, has caught the spirit of the author, and her illustrations have a charm as peculiar as the text. (Macmillan & Co., New York.)——The reading public is indebted to the same publishers for a beautiful edition of Sense and Sensibility, illustrated by Hugh Thompson. Never has Jane Austen been introduced to the world in garments more fitting.——Every lover of outdoor life longs, in some happy moment of leisure, for a book written by a lover of nature who loves man and understands him; such a book is In a Dike Shanty, by Maria Louise Poole. (Stone & Kimball, Chicago.)——Messrs. Harper & Brothers, New York, have added to their new edition of the works of Thomas Hardy The Wessex Tales.

In the handsome new edition of Mark Twain's works appears A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court, which is, in our judgment, one of Mr. Clemens's inferior pieces of work. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)——Jerry the Dreamer, by Will Payne (Harper & Brothers), is a novel of American life.——Miss Lilian Bell's latest story, The Under Side of Things (Harper & Brothers, New York), is in a way a society novel, and entirely different in spirit and background from "A Little Sister to the Wilderness."

Mr. W. C. Brownell's account of Newport, which appears in the American Summer Resorts Series (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York), is a very carefully written piece of work, discriminating, well balanced, and full of the sentiment of one of the most beautiful localities in America. It is a study of the old town done in a literary spirit, and is not in any sense a mere journalistic sketch.——From the same publishers comes the second volume of the new edition of Johnson's Lives of the Poets, already commented upon in these columns.——The Works of Max Beerbohm (same publishers) is a dainty volume which contains seven essays lightly written, full of agreeable comment, and clever in characterization. The title is humorous or pretentious; probably the first.

The Mermaid Series receives an addition in the form of a collection of The Plays of Sir John Van Brugh, edited, with an introduction and notes, by A. E. H. Swaen. The volume is also furnished with Leigh Hunt's essay on Van Brugh, and contains four plays, "The Relapse," "The Provoked Wife," "The Confederacy," and "A Journey to London." (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)——The same publishers have put their imprint upon a volume of Lyrical Verse from Elizabeth to Victoria, selected and edited by Oswald Crawfurd. The poets of the present reign are omitted. The editor has endeavored to select the most characteristic lyrical verse of each poet, and to present in that way a fairly representative body of English verse of this order.

Mr. H. Clay Trumbull's Threshold Covenant; or, the Beginning of Religious Rites (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York), is a serious study in a field with which the writer has already made himself preëminently familiar.

The initial volume in the extensive and valuable Riverside School Library, announced by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Boston), is, very appropriately, Mr. John Fiske's War of Independence, a volume which is a model in its way and for its purpose. Further comment on the whole series will be made later.

Mr. Watson's sonnets called out by the Armenian question have been collected and published in a dainty volume by Stone & Kimball (Chicago), under the title The Purple East; and the George H. Eastman Company, of this city, have made an equally dainty volume of Mr. Gustav Kobbe's My Rosary, and Other Poems.

Lovers of music and of birds will welcome The Evolution of Bird-Song, by Charles A. Witchell. (Macmillan & Co., New York.)——A second and revised edition of Public Speaking and Debate, by George Jacob Holyoake, has just been published by Ginn & Co. (Boston, Mass.).——Gerhard's Sacred Meditations, translated from the Latin by the Rev. C. W. Heisler, A.M. (Lutheran Publication Society, Philadelphia), is a book of spiritual suggestion, meditative in spirit and form.

The Life of James McCosh is largely autobiographical, under the very intelligent editorship of Professor William M. Sloane. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)——The same remark may be made with reference to The Life and Letters of Charles Bulfinch, Architect, edited by his granddaughter, Ellen Susan Bulfinch. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.)——Mr. Henry S. Salt's Life of Henry David Thoreau (Charles Scribner's Sons) is, on the other hand, a narrative of the experience and work of the recluse of Walden Pond, with an estimate of his character and talent.

Very dainty in appearance and typography is the volume devoted to English Literary Criticism, which aims to sketch the development of criticism and of the critical method in England, and to illustrate each phase of that development by examples taken from the most representative writers. Mr. C. E. Vaughan furnishes an introduction. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)——The Albion edition of The Poetical Works of John Milton (Frederick Warne & Co., New York) presents in a very compact form a body of the noblest verse to be found in English literature. It contains an introductory memoir, notes, and a bibliography. The volume is rather thick and a little heavy, but, on the other hand, the type is very clear and comfortable to the eye.

Books Received

For the Week Ending June 12

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK

Crane, Stephen. Maggie. 75 cts.

JAMES CLARKE & CO., LONDON, ENG.

Proceedings of the First National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches, 1896.

WILLIAM E. DAVENPORT, BROOKLYN

Davenport, William E. Poetical Sermons.

THE EVANGELIST PRESS, NEW YORK

Dennis, Rev. James S., D.D. The Turkish Problem and the Status of Our Missionaries.

GINN & CO., BOSTON

Holyoake, George J. Public Speaking and Debate. $1.

HARPER & BROS., NEW YORK

Twain, Mark. A Connecticut Yankee in King Authur's Court. $1.75.
Payne, Will. Jerry the Dreamer. $1.25.
Honor Ormthwaite. By the Author of "Lady Jean's Vagaries." $1.
Bell, Lilian. The Under Side of Things. $1.25.
Hardy, Thomas. Wessex Tales. $1.50.

HENRY HOLT & CO., NEW YORK

Vachell, Horace A. The Quicksands of Pactolus. $1.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., BOSTON

Bulfinch, Charles. Life and Letters. With Other Family Papers. Edited by Ellen S. Bulfinch. $5.
Fiske, John. The War of Independence. 60 cts.

THE INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE OF Y. M. C. A., NEW YORK

Doggett, L. L. History of the Young Men's Christian Association. Vol. I. $1.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO., PHILADELPHIA

Winter, John Strange. The Truth-Tellers. 50 cts.
Buchanan, Robert. A Marriage by Capture. 75 cts.
Davis, Harriet R. In Sight of the Goddess. 75 cts.

MACMILLAN & CO., NEW YORK

Daudet, Alphonse. Kings in Exile. Translated by Laura Ensor and E. Bartow. $1.
Balzac, Honoré de. A Bachelor's Establishment. Translated by Clara Bell. $1.50.
Barlow, Jane. Mrs. Martin's Company, and Other Stories. 75 cts.
Witchell, Charles A. The Evolution of Bird-Song.
Carleton, William. Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry. $1.50.
Ottley, Robert L. The Doctrine of the Incarnation. 2 Vols. $3.50.
Arnold, Matthew, and John Morley. A Guide to English Literature and Essay on Gray; On the Study of Literature. 75 cts.

OPTIMUS PRINTING CO., NEW YORK

Arthur, T. S. Ten Nights in a Bar-Room. 25 cts.

GEORGE H. RICHMOND CO., NEW YORK

Kobbe, Gustav. My Rosary, and Other Poems.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, NEW YORK

The Life of James McCosh. Edited by William Milligan Sloane. $2.50.
Trumbull, H. Clay. The Threshold Covenant. $2.
Brownell, W. C. Newport. 75 cts.
The Works of Max Beerbohm. $1.25.
Bibliographica. Part IX. (Imported.) $2.
Sir John Vanbrugh. Edited by A. E. H. Swaen. (Imported.) $1.25.
Crawfurd, Oswald. Lyrical Verse. (Imported.) $1.25.
English Literary Criticism. With Introduction by C. E. Vaughan. (Imported.) $1.50.
Johnson, Samuel. Lives of the Poets. With Notes by Arthur Waugh. Vol. II. $2.50.
Salt, Henry S. Life of Henry David Thoreau. (Imported.) $1.

STONE & KIMBALL, CHICAGO

Pool, Maria Louise. In a Dike Shanty. $1.25.
Watson, William. The Purple East. 75 cts.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., NEW YORK

Milton, John. Poetical Works. $1.50.

JOHN D. WATTLES & CO., PHILADELPHIA

Trumbull, H. Clay. Teachers' Meetings: Their Necessity and Methods. 30 cts.

THE YOUNG CHURCHMAN CO., MILWAUKEE

Whipple, Rt. Rev. H. B., D.D. Unity and the Lambeth Declaration.

The Religious World

The Rev. W. B. Wright, D.D.

The Rev. William Burnet Wright, D.D., of Buffalo, whose portrait is at the head of this paragraph, and who contributes an article to the present issue of The Outlook on "The Higher Life of Buffalo," spent most of his ministerial career as pastor of the church in Boston which more recently has been known as the Berkeley Temple. He was the successor in that field of the late Dr. Dexter, of the "Congregationalist." For many years, until the nature of the neighborhood entirely changed, Dr. Wright remained pastor of that church. Later he was called to the First Church in New Britain, and from there was called to Buffalo. He is a most genial and delightful man, whose writings are widely known, and whose scholarly habit and methods adapt him for service among thinking people. His ministry in Buffalo has been singularly successful. He belongs to the class of men who emphasize realities more than theories; who believe in the continuous ministry of the Holy Spirit; and who have no care and no heart for controversies concerning things in infinity and eternity. Few men are better qualified to write concerning the bright side of any phase of our modern life than this Buffalo pastor.

Missions at Clifton Springs

Clifton Springs has come to be known as a center of missionary interest and enthusiasm. Every year a convention is held there in the interest of the foreign service. The one this year has been largely attended, there having been one hundred and thirty-three foreign missionaries present. They came from more than twenty countries, and from fifteen different denominations. It should be remembered that there are always many missionaries who are superannuated, or who are at home on vacations, or who have been obliged to give up their work on the foreign field, but who still retain their interest in the cause. This accounts for the large number present. Among the officers for the ensuing year are: President, the Rev. J. T. Gracey, D.D.; Vice-Presidents representing six denominations, the first one of whom is the venerable Dr. Cyrus Hamlin. The Executive Committee is from five different denominations. Among the proposals before the meeting was one for the establishment of a Convalescent Home for Missionaries in connection with Dr. Foster's Sanitarium. As we have studied the reports of these meetings it has seemed to us that undue emphasis was placed upon the comparatively small amount of money that is given by the churches for foreign missions. The fact is undoubtedly as stated in the discussions, but all inferences of this kind need to be modified by another fact, viz., that the amount given by Christian people for distinctively home and foreign missions is only a small part of that contributed by them for benevolent and religious purposes. The amounts raised for hospitals, children's homes, Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, social settlements, and various other forms of Christian service, are not considered when the comparatively small amount given for missions abroad is made prominent. The gifts for foreign missions might be largely increased, but we should prefer to see the inquiry at such gatherings turn in another direction. A far more vital question would be, How, by comity and co-operation among denominations, may the missionary cause be conducted more economically, and with less appearance of rivalry? Another subject which received merited attention was the large number of foreigners who are attracted to the United States by the desire of gain, and who make their appeals on the ground of their having come from the foreign field, and thus take large sums of money which should be given for missionary work. The churches are properly warned against these persons who trade on their Christianity. This annual convention at Clifton Springs does much to stimulate enthusiasm in the cause of foreign missions, which every year is becoming dearer to the American churches.

The Recall of Satolli

Cardinal Satolli has been relieved of his duties as Papal Ablegate in this country, and his successor has been appointed. The new official, who will soon arrive in the United States, is Monsignor Falconio, Titular Archbishop of Acerenja. Concerning the recall of Cardinal Satolli, Father Ducey, of New York, is reported to have said: "When a Delegate is made a Cardinal, he is rarely allowed to remain absent from Rome. Satolli leaves this country simply and purely because his mission is ended, and work awaits him in Rome as a member of the College of Cardinals." Other Catholic clergy are reported to have spoken in high terms of the work accomplished by the Cardinal. He is said to have been "a true apostle of peace," and to have entered with great interest into all the details of American life. One speaker said: "He became thoroughly familiar with everything, from the procedure in the Houses of Congress to the game of baseball." It is not impossible that Satolli may be the successor of Pope Leo, who has already reached the great age of eighty-six. In case Satolli is chosen, his period of service in this country will add largely to his prestige and his power.

Canadian Congregationalism

The Congregational Union of Ontario and Quebec adjourned at Montreal last week after an interesting series of meetings extending over six days. The attendance of representatives was not so large as usual, but this lack was more than made up by the Congregationalists of Montreal. An enjoyable feature of the Union was the presence of the Revs. Smith Baker, D.D., Boston, Edward Hawes, D.D., Burlington, Vt., and F. S. Fitch, D.D., Buffalo, N. Y., delegates from the National Council of the United States. The greetings of these brethren were cordially received, and their addresses highly appreciated. Another very interesting feature of the Union was the encouraging financial position of the Societies of the Churches. Instead of the usual cry of deficit, there was heard the cheering note of surplus, which was struck again and again. Particularly true was this of the Home Missionary Society, where a long-standing debt has been replaced by a substantial balance on hand in the treasury. The addresses at the public meeting in connection with this Society were given by the Revs. Robert Hay, Eaton, J. P. Gerrie, Toronto, and Hugh Pedley, Winnipeg, and a resolution was passed at a later date looking for co-operation with the Churches of the United States. In the general discussions arising out of the programme, special prominence was given to the need of religious effort on behalf of children and young people. The Chairman, Mr. S. P. Leet, a barrister of Montreal, made this the basis of an earnest appeal in the annual address from the chair on "A Neglected Privilege of the Churches." Dr. Fitch's address on "The Child Prophet" was a fitting emphasis to the utterances of Mr. Leet. A somewhat different note was struck in the annual sermon, on "The Larger Salvation," by the Rev. William Johnston, of Toronto, who made an able plea for the removal of effete forms and creeds from the Church, and the application of the Gospel to every side of life. With reference to matters of current history one found the following: A strong protest against interference with the educational affairs of Manitoba, emphatic resolutions looking to the prohibition of the liquor traffic, warm recognitions of the claims of labor, earnest calls for Sunday observance, and stirring recommendations for various aspects of prison reform. There is no doubt that the Union will have its due influence in the direction of public sentiment in connection with these matters. Nor should this brief report of the Union close without a reference to the very valuable stereopticon lecture on "Congregational Shrines," by the Rev. E. M. Hill, of Montreal, which formed a very acceptable conclusion to the meetings now over.

"Luxury and the Love of God"

The "Kingdom," published in Minneapolis, is one of the freshest and most enterprising papers that comes to our table. It wastes little space with ecclesiastical gossip, but bravely grapples with great subjects about which the people are anxious to know. Its latest symposium is on "Luxury and the Love of God," suggested by a paragraph in a sermon by Bishop Potter. A "Kingdom" editorial on the sermon was criticised by the "Churchman" and the Minneapolis "Journal," and their utterances led to the symposium. We have already commented on these articles. One sentence in Bishop Potter's sermon (which we printed at the time) is as follows: "The growth of wealth and of luxury, wicked, wasteful, and wanton, as before God I declare that luxury to be, has been matched, step by step, by a deepening and deadening poverty, which has left whole neighborhoods of people practically without hope and without aspiration." The "Churchman" believed the Bishop simply to be warning his prosperous hearers against forgetting their duties toward their less fortunate neighbors, and that he was not reiterating "the oft-repeated fallacy that the rich are growing richer and the poor poorer every year." The "Kingdom" publishes the editorials of the "Churchman" and Minneapolis "Journal," and other articles on the subject by President George A. Gates, of Iowa College; Professor John Bascom, of Williams; Professor R. T. Ely, of the University of Wisconsin; Archdeacon C. J. Wood, of Pennsylvania; Mr. Edwin D. Mead, of Boston; Henry D. Lloyd, of Chicago; the Hon. Ernest H. Crosby, of New York, and Dr. Brand, of Oberlin—all agreeing substantially with the position taken by the "Kingdom." President Gates's position is tersely stated in the phrase: "Not much luxury can hide under 'As I have loved you,' nor excuse itself in the presence of 'Not to be ministered unto, but to minister.'" Dr. Bascom concludes that "that expenditure is good, and only that, which the entire community truly shares." Archdeacon Wood thinks that Jesus taught a doctrine "strikingly near communism." Edwin D. Mead agrees with Bishop Potter, but differs from those who criticise the building of a new and splendid cathedral, because the cathedral will be for all the people. Mr. Lloyd says: "It is uneconomic, unbrotherly, and unethical for us as trustees to take wealth for ourselves out of the product all made and all should share." Mr. Crosby says: "Let us admit that wealth of the right kind is a good thing for the community. We cannot have too much in the way of artistic treasures, and everything that contributes to the beauty and usefulness of our lives is a distinct advantage to us all. It is not to the existence of such wealth . . . to which we object; it is to the monopoly of these things by a few." Dr. Brand says: "We may pursue self-culture and expend our wealth upon ourselves up to that point, and only to that point, where such expenditure fits us for the highest service to ourselves and to the cause of humanity." The whole subject is finely concluded by the editor of the "Kingdom," the Rev. H. W. Gleason. As we read the various articles in the symposium it seems to us that all agree in the opinion that the Christian rule for everything is, "As I have loved you." We may add that the application of that rule must be left to individuals. In differing circumstances it will result in different courses of conduct, and will apply quite as much to the way in which we judge one another as to how we spend our money.

Dr. Newman Hall

We made mention recently of the celebration of the eightieth birthday of the Rev. Newman Hall, D.D., of London. The reports of that event have now reached us, and from them we cull a few items of interest for our readers. Dr. Hall began his ministry in Hull in 1842. While a pastor in that city he published his little book entitled "Come to Jesus," which has had such an amazing circulation. At first but two thousand were printed, but over four million copies, in all, have been sold, and it has been printed in fifty different languages. He began his ministry in Surrey Chapel, London, in 1854. During our Civil War Dr. Hall was a stanch friend of the Union, and had great influence in holding the working classes to faith in the North as being the surest way to secure the emancipation of the slaves. Dr. Hall is one of the most genial of men, and still greatly enjoys outdoor exercise. He loves to visit Zermatt in Switzerland, and his favorite resort is the Riffel Alp Hotel, whose altitude is 7,000 feet. We well remember meeting him there two years ago, when he was seventy-eight years old. Twice in one week he climbed from the hotel to the top of the Gorner Grat, 3,500 feet. He said to the writer of this paragraph as he passed him on the climb, at an altitude of nearly 10,000 feet, "Tell Mrs. Hall I have not forgotten her, although I am so far above her." Dr. Hall has done many things well, but probably never anything better than the way in which he left his noble Church. He helped the people to find perhaps the best man in England for the place; then gave him his blessing, and quietly withdrew; and the work goes on. It is sometimes hard to say, "He must increase and I must decrease," but it often needs to be said, and happy that man who knows how to say it graciously and at the right time.

Dr. Daniel Bliss

Among the workers in the foreign field who are now visiting this country is the Rev. Daniel Bliss, D.D., President of the Protestant College at Beyrout, Syria. Dr. Bliss is accompanied by Mrs. Bliss, and they are at present making their home with their son, the Rev. Howard S. Bliss, pastor of the Christian Union Congregational Church at Upper Montclair, N. J. On Tuesday evening, June 16, the people of the Upper Montclair church tendered to Dr. Bliss a reception, which was a beautiful testimonial to their appreciation of the father of their pastor, and of the great work which he has done in Syria. Dr. Bliss has been for nearly if not quite forty years in Beyrout, and few men have served the Church and the kingdom of God with more fidelity. He still calls himself young, and expects after a few months in this country to return to his college in Syria. Such men and women as Dr. and Mrs. Bliss are an honor to the Church, and prove that the days of Christian heroism have by no means come to an end.

Universalist Testimony

At the Universalist Social Union, during the May anniversaries in Boston, Dr. Donald, of Trinity Church, Boston, and President Eliot, of Harvard, were invited guests, and bore witness together as follows. Dr. Donald is reported as saying. "The idea that lies back of Universalism is that salvation is not only possible but probable for all beings. So far I am a Universalist. We need the optimist; and universalism and optimism are so bound together that he who accepts the one must be in full sympathy with the other." President Eliot said: "The distinctive tenet of final universal salvation is unmistakably the goal toward which all modern thought tends." Certain facts that had come under his observation at the University pointed in the same direction. "Of those that pass through the curriculum a certain percentage show evil dispositions—some to an extreme degree. They show this in gambling, intemperance, and stealing; yet, as a rule, they recover. Even those guilty of stealing often make good lawyers, teachers, clergymen." This last created a sensation. The speaker added: "I know what I say, and I repeat it—good clergymen. The vices most difficult to conquer, the ill effects of which are hardest to throw off, are those which weaken the will-power, but the facts do not make such at all hopeless."

A New Society

We are all familiar with the letters "A. P. A.," which stand for the American Protective Association, which is generally regarded as existing for the purpose of antagonizing the influence of the Roman Catholics in the United States. It was natural that a society of that kind should be met by a society destined to oppose it, and consequently we now hear of one with the initials "A. O. U. C.," which stand for the American Order of United Catholics. It is already declared to have many members. It proposes to make itself felt not only in the creation of moral sentiment, but also in the various departments of government. The object of the Order is stated in the following words:

> To unite fraternally all practical Catholics of every profession, business, and occupation; to give all possible aid in its power to members of the organization by encouraging each other in business, and by assisting each other to obtain employment.
>
> To uphold and defend the Catholic faith, clergy, and institutions against naturalized foreigners, who, aided and abetted by a certain class of native Americans, have gained great strength and power in our Legislatures.

It is perhaps needless for us to say that we do not believe in such societies. They tend to controversy, and even to violence in time. It is possible that within a few years much the same condition may prevail here as between the Orangemen and Catholics in Ireland. Patriotism is not promoted on the one side, or the cause of religion on the other. But the days of human folly are not ended in the Church any more than in the State; and folly is the prerogative of no one nationality and no one Church.

Unitarians in Japan

American Unitarianism has one mission in Japan. It is under the direction of the Rev. Clay MacCauley. His report appears in the "Christian Register" of May 14, and in many respects has interested us exceedingly. What he says concerning the changes in the older religions of Japan is worthy of especial attention. He affirms that the old orders of religion have fallen into confusion; that no dominant forces appear either from the Shinto or Buddhist faith; that they are without vitality. He thinks, also, that Confucianism is helpless beyond restoration; that Buddhism alone possesses any power among the people, and that among the ignorant its power is dependent upon the persistence of superstition and reverence for things dear in the past. Among the educated classes, Buddhism has some influence because of the philosophy and ethics discovered in recent years by students in the Buddhism of India. He then says that there is a new Buddhism in Japan, which is a cult much in vogue among young men of the student class, and depends largely upon appeal to national and race prejudice, and its gratification of their needs "generated in subjection to the philosophy and science received from Occidental thinkers." Concerning the outlook for evangelical Christianity Mr. MacCauley has many misgivings. He thinks that the Japanese churches are in danger of disintegration, or on the verge of a transformation into something unlike what they were intended to be. Mr. MacCauley is a careful observer, and has unsurpassed opportunities for studying the problem. The difficulties he probably does not exaggerate, but we think he does exaggerate the danger of the transformation of the Christian churches in that land. Changes are going on there, but, in our judgment, they are not more rapid than in other parts of the world. They are a part of a "world movement," and not peculiar to one nation. With the closing part of Mr. MacCauley's report we are in hearty sympathy. "So long as we see this nation with idols shattered, . . . a nation confused and not growing spiritually, is it not our duty, to whom the way of safe advance for the soul has been opened and made clear, to do what we may to guide uncertain steps away from all that may cause them to falter?"

Brief Mention

Plymouth Sunday-School of Brooklyn has raised a subscription of $111.55 for the benefit of the Barnby Memorial Fund, which sum has been paid to Mr. Henry R. Elliott, the Treasurer.

The Home Club

The Consumers' League

The Consumers' League of New York is not relaxing its efforts to secure the best possible conditions for the women and girls employed in mercantile establishments. The bill known as the McAndrews Bill, which becomes a law September 1, is not satisfactory, and by no means represents the idea of the majority of the Consumers' League. The original bill was altered so radically as to retain hardly any of its original features. The impression seems to have gone forth that this bill secured for the women and girls of New York employed in the mercantile establishments fairer hours and better pay. This is not true. There is scarcely any improvement in the hours. The bill does protect children a little, but hardly more than the volunteer protection given by the best houses to-day in New York. The most serious defect in the bill is that it carries no provision for its own enforcement; because enforcement can be secured only upon complaint, and not as the result of inspection, and the difference between the two is radical: it is the difference between two civilizations. What is done now must be done by volunteer inspection, and volunteer inspection is always attended with more or less difficulty—principally more. The inspection now becomes largely a matter of courtesy on the part of the employer.

It is unfortunate that the public conception is that the rich are responsible for the conditions under which girls and women are employed. This is true only in a degree; and while the evils in the large and prominent houses in all of our large cities are many, the evils that affect the lives of women and girls employed in the smaller stores are infinitely greater. In all shopping districts that run in, through, or near the tenement-house regions, the conditions governing the lives of the women and girls employed are often uncivilized. Frequently girls are employed from eight o'clock in the morning until nine and half-past nine at night five nights in the week, and until half-past eleven on Saturday night. The sanitary conditions very often are abominable, and the girls have to submit to treatment that arouses the wrath and indignation of girls who have any sense of self-respect. The wages of these girls are rarely more than three dollars a week.

The people who patronize these stores are responsible for the conditions. The women of these neighborhoods have never trained themselves to do their shopping in the daytime, even when that is possible, and the evening hours are hours of misery to hundreds of girls behind the counters. The Consumers' League now proposes to enlarge its membership, and to familiarize itself with the conditions in what, for definiteness, we may term the mercantile establishments in the tenement-house regions. It proposes to begin an educational campaign among the women in these districts to create a sentiment in favor of early closing, of higher wages, of perfect sanitary conditions. The burdens imposed on girls standing behind counters are not imposed by the rich; they are imposed by the people who are compelled to buy closely, who are striving to make a fine appearance on a small income—that is, trying to live at the rate of five thousand dollars a year on a two-thousand-dollar income; and the betterment of the conditions in our large stores depends on the great middle class realizing their responsibility for the conditions that are tolerated in our mercantile establishments below the highest grade. There has been a great amount of wasted sympathy on this subject. There is hardly a busy woman who shops, even for the necessaries, who does not frequently find her time wasted and her patience tried by the incapacity of the girls behind the counters.

The efforts of the Consumers' League will be to develop higher standards of business activity and ability among the girls, realizing fully that it is the development of character on both sides of the counter that means a perfect adjustment of the conditions under which women and children must work in mercantile establishments as well as elsewhere.

Readers for Children

The Heart of Oak books, a series of graded readers designed for children, form a valuable collection of the best English poetry, rhyme, and prose. When it is stated that the series is edited by Charles Eliot Norton, comment is unnecessary. The editor states a generally accepted truth when he says that "a taste for good reading is an acquisition the worth of which is hardly to be overestimated." He would not find that all pedagogues agree with him in the latter half of his statement when he says: "The reading lesson should never be hard or dull; nor should it be made the occasion for instruction in any specific branch of knowledge." He has accomplished his ideal, for he has edited a series of readers that will lead the child "on by pleasure from step to step." The series is published by D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, Mass. The Longmans' Classics Series has been increased by the addition of The Rime of the Ancient Mariner, edited, with notes and introduction, by Herbert Bates, A.B. (45 cts.), (the introduction is a concise biography of Coleridge); As You Like It (60 cts.), with an introduction by Barrett Wendell, of Harvard College, and notes by Professor Phelps, of Yale (the introduction is a history of the play); A Midsummer Night's Dream (60 cts.), edited, with notes and introduction, by George Pierce Baker, of Harvard College; and The Merchant of Venice (60 cts.), edited by Francis B. Gummere, of Haverford College. The introduction in each of the Shakespearean plays is a history of the play, adding greatly to its value. The series is edited by George Rice Carpenter, of Columbia College, Professor of Rhetoric and English Composition. The Riverside Literature Series (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston) is enlarged by the addition of Gulliver's Travels, with a condensed life of Swift by Mr. Horace E. Scudder. The American Book Company have added to their Eclectic English Classics The Life of Samuel Johnson, The Rime of the Ancient Mariner, Conciliation with the American Colonies, Edmund Burke's speech delivered in the House of Commons in 1775; Revolt of the Tartars, or the Flight of the Kalmuck Khan, by De Quincey. Each of these books has a concise biography of the author; price, 20 cents each. Old Stories of the East (45 cts.), of the same series, is by James Baldwin. Why would not the Bible have supplied all that this book gives taken from that source? None of the stories has gained in simplicity or beauty by dilution. Ginn & Co., of Boston, have added The Natural History of Selborne and Selections from Epictetus to their Classics for Children.

Home Science and Public Education

The Regents of the State of New York have published a Syllabus on Home Science, a copy of which can be had on application to the Board of Regents, Albany, N. Y. Mrs. Ellen H. Richards writes of the scientific study of foods: "The prosperity of a nation depends on the health and morals of its citizens, and the health and morals of a people depend mainly on the food they eat and the homes they live in." This declaration receives the indorsement of every man and woman who is making a study of the conditions of society in America. The realization of this is forcing educators to give to home science the place it should have in the curriculum of the schools. The Syllabus issued by the Regents of the University of New York covers the subject of all food materials, with special reference to the modes of preparation and preservation; the detection of adulteration; geographical conditions; the source of all supplies. The investigations in animal food cover, of course, the animal products—butter, cheese, milk, etc.; the canning, preserving, and salting of foods, cold storage and drying, and the nutritive value of foods. The Syllabus includes also emergencies; home nursing and hygiene; the principles of sanitation and household economy; the arranging of work; public hygiene, which embodies protection against contagious diseases, and the laws for the inspection of milk, butter, and meat.

A Plea for the Living

Dear Outlook: Always, in coming out from the city through the vile outskirts to the beautiful, carefully tended cemeteries, I am moved to wonder why a city that provides with such care for the dead should do nothing for the living. I should like to ask the question, through your columns, of the people who might help to give breathing-places to these children of poverty. E. H. M.

The cemeteries in the vicinity of nearly all large cities are used, especially on Sunday, as parks. Carriages can be hired at the entrances, and stages that make the tours of the grounds are provided either by the cemetery authorities or private enterprise. The walks are usually liberally provided with settees, and the freedom of movement of visitors is a matter of social training.

We sometimes, in criticising the relation of public authorities to the working classes, look backward, not forward. Public authority is first what public sentiment makes it. We see this constantly. The mass of wage-earners need to be trained to standards that compel the authorities to recognize their needs. For instance, months and months ago, several buildings were torn down in a tenement-house region in New York to make room for a small park. The débris lay for months untouched. The people about were undisturbed. After its removal, leaving acres of reddish clay surface hideously barren, the people in the region made no protest, though this condition lasted for months. The protest against the delay came from people living miles away. If that park had been located among people of higher standards, they would have demanded immediate improvement; it is even doubtful if the authorities would have waited until a demand was made. The whole trend of life to-day is toward lessening the unnecessary burdens of poverty, toward securing that administration of public funds which will give to the dwellers in the tenement-house region their share of public benefits. The trend of life to-day is toward justice and righteousness.

Patriotic Societies

The Colonial Dames of the State of New York (incorporated as a branch of the National society of the Colonial Dames of America in April, 1893), may be said to be cultivating patriotism in New York. They have succeeded in securing the use of the Van Cortlandt Mansion in Van Cortlandt Park, New York, by act of legislature. The Dames will put this building in good repair, restoring the rooms to their original form as nearly as possible. They will gather together in these rooms articles and manuscripts that will represent, or rather illustrate, the various periods of colonial history. The Dames have already received a number of very valuable pieces of antique furniture, and copies and engravings of portraits of ancestors of the Dames have been presented by the members. In addition to this, the Colonial Dames have offered prizes for essays on different periods of history to the students in the Normal College and the children in the grammar grades of several of the schools in New York. They also propose the establishing of a reference library. They have the warm support of the public-spirited citizens of New York, who fully realize the need of just such an education and just such enthusiasm as the Colonial Dames of New York represent.

The Right Proportions

Bridget is an excellent cook, but, like most women of her profession, she is opinionated, and insists upon making all her dishes strictly according to her own recipes. Her mistress gives her very full swing, not only as to cooking, but as to the purchase of supplies. The other day her mistress said to her: "Bridget, the coffee you are giving us is very good. What kind is it?" "It's no koind at all, mum," said Bridget, "it's a mixter." "How do you mix it?" "I make it one-quarter Mocha and one-quarter Java and one-quarter Rio." "But that's only three quarters. What do you put in for the other quarter?" "I put in no other quarter at all, mum. That's where so many sphiles the coffee, mum—by putting in a foorth quarter."—New York Observer.

For the Little People

Meadow Folk

By Alix Thorn

Down in the delicate meadow grasses
  Golden heads gleam in the sunshine bright,
Nodding to every wind that passes
  From early morning to starry night.

See! Fresh white bonnets the bright heads cover,
  Wild little bonnets with stiff starched frills;
Robin and bluebird fly swiftly over,
  Dancing and singing run happy rills.

Who so gay as the folk in the meadow?
  All day they play with the butterflies,
Happy alike in shine or shadow,
  Under the arching summer skies.

And would you know my friends in the grasses,
  And find the place where they always stay?
Why, little lads and dainty lasses,
  'Tis a daisy field on a glad June day.

The Prize Competition

On the Little People's page, in the issue of May 23, The Outlook offered a prize for correct definitions of the following incorrect definitions:

"Climate is the combined space of heat and moisture."

"The solar system is situated in that part of the heavens called the milky way."

"The polar circle is parallel, running slanting round the earth."

"It is the wind's duty to refresh and cherish the earth."

"A volcano is the safety valve of an earthquake."

The different races of men were given as "Indians, negroes, whites, and French." Why is this wrong? And give an explanation of what is wrong about these sentences:

"Let us sing these lines in solemn silence."

"Look at the great cities of antiquity, where are they now? Why, some of them have perished so utterly that it is doubtful if they ever existed."

The Outlook asked that the competitors should show in their own language that they understood to be the meanings of the words "climate," "solar system," "polar circle," and "volcano." About four hundred answers were received. Some of these did not state the age of the writers, some had no addresses, and some gave only a part of the definitions. No one pointed out one mistake. Perhaps it was too much to expect of boys and girls of thirteen and fourteen even to discover the error. It is this: In the sentence, "It is the wind's duty to refresh and cherish the earth," not one of these four hundred boys or girls stated that the wind could not have a duty. There were more correct definitions of the word wind than of any of the other words. If you will look in the dictionary, you will see that duty is a moral quality, and the wind cannot have moral responsibilities. Even the two best definitions state what the wind can do and does do, but they do not state that the wind cannot have a duty to perform. Some of the answers were really essays on the wind, or on volcanoes, or on climate, but what The Outlook wanted was definitions, and that means expressing the meaning of the words given in the simplest and most direct language, and in the fewest possible words. One could almost see the puckered faces and the tightly clenched hands of some of the writers. The two successful competitors will each receive a book valued at $2, as it is not possible to decide which of these two is the better:

CORRECTIONS FOR PRIZE OFFER IN THE OUTLOOK OF MAY 23, 1896

1. Climate is the universal condition of heat or cold, moisture or dryness, of a country.

2. The solar system comprises the universe, and the rotation of planets around the sun.

3. The polar circle is an imaginary line separating the frigid from the temperate zones.

4. Wind is air in motion, and its function is to clear the atmosphere.

5. A volcano is a wonderful mountain, burning inside, with a hole at the top, sometimes throwing out red-hot cinders and melted stones called lava.

6. There are five races of men. They are the Caucasian, Mongolian, Negro, Indian, and the Malay.

"Let us sing these lines in solemn silence."

This sentence is wrong because we cannot sing in silence.

"Look at the great cities of antiquity, where are they now? Why, some of them have perished so utterly that it is doubtful if they ever existed."

This sentence is wrong because we cannot look at things that have gone from sight.

FRANCES L. LEONARD (age 13),
30 West Fifty-ninth Street, New York City.
May 29, 1896.

Climate is the condition of the air at any place, according to the temperature or moisture.

The sun, taken together with the planets and their satellites, or moons, and the comets that revolve around it (sun), are called the solar system.

A polar circle is an imaginary circle passing around the earth twenty-three and one-half degrees (23½°) from the pole it is nearest to. It is supposed to separate the Frigid Zone from the Temperate Zone.

The property of the wind is to restore the equal pressure of the air, to refresh the earth, and promote navigation.

A volcano is an opening in the crust of the earth, acting as a safety valve, relieving the earth of the undue pressure of gases and molten matter within.

The different races of men on the earth are the Caucasian or white race, the Mongolian or yellow race, the Malay or brown race, the Ethiopian or black race, and the Indian or red race.

"Let us sing these lines in solemn silence." Singing is expressing thought in musical tones to the ear; therefore you can sing solemnly but not in silence.

"Look at the great cities of antiquity, where are they now?" If the "great cities of antiquity" are not in existence, you cannot look at them.

"Why, some of them have perished so utterly that it is doubtful if they existed." If they never existed, they could not have perished.

CHARLES F. THOMPSON,
20 Cliff Street, New Rochelle, N. Y
13 years old.

The True Story of Mary and Her Little Lamb

Dear Outlook: Please allow a constant reader to correct a mistake in the issue of May 23, 1896. "Mary Willis" writes about "Mary and Her Little Lamb," and twice makes the statement that the original Mary is still alive and living in Massachusetts. Having lived all my lifetime on the same street where this Mary lived for many years and died in December, 1889, I feel it my duty to call your attention to the error, and to send a few additional facts that may be interesting to your readers. Mary E. Sawyer, afterwards Mrs. Columbus Tyler, was born in Sterling, a quiet place near Worcester, Mass. It was here that she grew up and went to school. The little new-born lamb, found almost dead, she nursed devotedly, sitting up all night to keep it warm. In the morning it could stand and swallow a little. Then it began to improve rapidly. It grew fast, and its fleece was of the finest and whitest. She would comb it every day, and tie the wool with bright ribbons. The lamb was almost her only playmate, and, not having many dolls, Mary used to dress up the lamb in pantalettes and a shawl. It was her brother Nate who suggested taking the lamb to school one day. They had hard work to get her over a high stone wall they had to climb, but finally succeeded. When the school-house was reached, the teacher had not arrived and but few scholars were there. Mary wondered what she should do with the lamb. They had high, boarded-up seats then, and Mary put the lamb under her seat, having put on her shawl—not the pantalettes, however—and the lamb lay down and kept very quiet. By and by Mary had to go out of the seat to recite and left the lamb all right, but in a moment there was a clatter, clatter on the floor, and she knew it was the pattering of the hoofs of her pet. She was greatly mortified. The teacher was Miss Polly Kimball, who was the mother of Mr. Loring, the circulating library man of Boston. She laughed outright and the children all giggled, but Mary felt too much ashamed to even smile. She led the lamb out of doors, and put her in a shed until she went home at noon. Visiting the school that forenoon was a young man named John Roulstone, a nephew of the Rev. Lemuel Capin, who was then settled in Sterling, and the son of Mary's dancing-master. He was fitting for college. He was greatly pleased at the school incident, and the next day he came across the fields on horseback, came to the school-house, and handed Mary a slip of paper containing three stanzas he had composed. Two stanzas have since been added by a Mrs. Townsend.

From the fleece sheared from this ewe Mary's mother knit two pairs of stockings, which Mary kept until she was about eighty years old. When the ladies of Boston were raising money for the preservation of the Old South Church, some ten or more years ago (Mary Willis says "the other day"), she contributed one pair of these stockings for the benefit of the fund. The yarn was raveled out, and small pieces attached to cards having her autograph, and these were sold for quite a sum, realizing about $100. Then Mary consented to raveling out the other pair of stockings, and went herself to the fair and sold the wool. All she kept was two little pieces pasted on cards.

Mary taught school in Fitchburg after leaving Sterling. She was afterwards married, and for thirty-five years held the position of matron of the McLean Insane Asylum at Somerville, Mass., where for forty years her husband was the steward of that institution. After leaving this place they built and occupied one of the finest residences in the city, and for many years were most highly esteemed as generous, noble, useful, public-spirited people. They left no children, and their estate they bequeathed to the First Unitarian Church for a parsonage.

S. E. K.

"Mary Willis" says that the Boston papers of a recent date are responsible for her errors.

Not Far Away

She was a dear little girl only three years old. She had got tired playing around her mother's kitchen, and so she wandered out of doors and was not missed for some time. Then how frightened her mother was! She told all the neighbors, and searching parties were made up, the surrounding woods thoroughly hunted over, men got into wagons and drove about the roads, stopping at every house to inquire for a little fair-haired girl, with a doll, who had gone away from home When all the people had scattered, and the houses about were quite deserted, in came the little girl with her hands full of flowers. She had been in a neighbor's yard two doors away. It is always safe to look for everything that is lost, even babies, near home.

Where They Were

Two kittens were born in a large warehouse. These kittens were very frolicsome, and became great favorites. One day the men employed could not find the two kittens. They hunted and hunted, but found no trace of them. About four weeks afterward it was necessary to tear away a part of a platform in front of the building. To the surprise of the workmen, under this platform was a rat-trap, and in the rat-trap were the two kittens. Their mother had found them and had nourished them all the time they were in the trap. They had grown so large that they were very much crowded in their tiny little wire house, from which the men soon liberated them.

The Elephant and the Giraffe

Said the elephant to the giraffe,
"Your neck is too long by one-half."
He replied, "Since your nose
Reaches down to your toes,
At others you'd better not laugh."

—St. Nicholas.

The Republican Platform

We give below in full the platform adopted by the Republican Convention at St. Louis last week:

The Republicans of the United States, assembled by their representatives in National Convention, appealing for the popular and historical justification of their claims to the matchless achievements of thirty years of Republican rule, earnestly and confidently address themselves to the awakened intelligence, experience, and conscience of their countrymen in the following declaration of facts and principles:

For the first time since the Civil War the American people have witnessed the calamitous consequences of full and unrestricted Democratic control of the Government. It has been a record of unparalled incapacity, dishonor, and disaster. In administrative management it has ruthlessly sacrificed indispensable revenue, entailed an unceasing deficit, eked out ordinary current expenses with borrowed money, piled up the public debt by $262,000,000 in time of peace, forced an adverse balance of trade, kept a perpetual menace hanging over the redemption fund, pawned American credit to alien syndicates, and reversed all the measures and results of successful Republican rule. In the broad effect of its policy it has precipitated panic, blighted industry and trade with prolonged depression, closed factories, reduced work and wages, halted enterprise, and crippled American production while stimulating foreign production for the American market. Every consideration of public safety and individual interest demands that the Government shall be rescued from the hands of those who have shown themselves incapable of conducting it without disaster at home and dishonor abroad, and shall be restored to the party which for thirty years administered it with unequaled success and prosperity. And in this connection we heartily indorse the wisdom, the patriotism, and the success of the Administration of President Harrison.

Tariff.—We renew and emphasize our allegiance to the policy of protection as the bulwark of American industrial independence, and the foundation of American development and prosperity. This true American policy taxes foreign products and encourages home industry; it puts the burden of revenue on foreign goods; it secures the American market for the American producer; it upholds the American standard of wages for the American workingman; it puts the factory by the side of the farm, and makes the American farmer less dependent on foreign demand and price; it diffuses general thrift, and founds the strength of all on the strength of each. In its reasonable application it is just, fair, and impartial, equally opposed to foreign control and domestic monopoly, to sectional discrimination and individual favoritism.

We denounce the present Democratic tariff as sectional, injurious to the public credit, and destructive to business enterprise. We demand such an equitable tariff on foreign imports which come into competition with American products as will not only furnish adequate revenue for the necessary expenses of the Government, but will protect American labor from degradation to the wage-level of other lands. We are not pledged to any particular schedules. The question of rates is a practical question, to be governed by the conditions of the time and of production; the ruling and uncompromising principle is the protection and development of American labor and industry. The country demands a right settlement, and then it wants rest.

Reciprocity.—We believe the repeal of the reciprocity arrangements negotiated by the last Republican Administration was a National calamity, and we demand their renewal and extension on such terms as will equalize our trade with other nations, remove the restrictions which now obstruct the sale of American products in the ports of other countries, and secure enlarged markets for the products of our farms, forests, and factories.

Protection and reciprocity are twin measures of Republican policy, and go hand in hand. Democratic rule has recklessly struck down both, and both must be re-established: protection for what we produce; free admission for the necessaries of life which we do not produce; reciprocal agreements of mutual interest which gain open markets for us in return for our open market to others. Protection builds up domestic industry and trade, and secures our own market for ourselves: reciprocity builds up foreign trade and finds an outlet for our surplus.

Sugar.—We condemn the present Administration for not keeping faith with the sugar-producers of this country. The Republican party favors such protection as will lead to the production on American soil of all the sugar which the American people use, and for which they pay other countries more than $100,000,000 annually.

Wool and Woolens.—To all our products—to those of the mine and the field, as well as those of the shop and factory—to hemp, to wool, the product of the great industry of sheep husbandry, as well as to the finished woolens of the mill, we promise the most ample protection.

Merchant Marine.—We favor restoring the early American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine, and the protection of our shipping in the foreign carrying trade, so that American ships—the product of American labor, employed in American ship-yards, sailing under the Stars and Stripes, and manned, officered, and owned by Americans—may regain the carrying of our foreign commerce.

Money.—The Republican party is unreservedly for sound money. It caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payments in 1879; since then every dollar has been as good as gold.

We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are therefore opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved. All our silver and paper currency must be maintained at parity with gold, and we favor all measures designed to maintain inviolably the obligations of the United States, and all our money, whether coin or paper, at the present standard, the standard of the most enlightened nations of the earth.

Pensions.—The veterans of the Union armies deserve and should receive fair treatment and generous recognition. Whenever practicable, they should be given the preference in the matter of employment, and they are entitled to the enactment of such laws as are best calculated to secure the fulfillment of the pledges made to them in the dark days of the country's peril. We denounce the practice in the Pension Bureau, so recklessly and unjustly carried on by the present Administration, of reducing pensions and arbitrarily dropping names from the rolls, as deserving the severest condemnation of the American people.

Foreign Relations.—Our foreign policy should be at all times firm, vigorous, and dignified, and all our interests in the Western Hemisphere carefully watched and guarded. The Hawaiian Islands should be controlled by the United States, and no foreign power should be permitted to interfere with them; the Nicaragua Canal should be built, owned, and operated by the United States; and by the purchase of the Danish Islands we should secure a proper and much-needed naval station in the West Indies.

Armenian Massacres.—The massacres in Armenia have aroused the deep sympathy and just indignation of the American people, and we believe that the United States should exercise all the influence it can properly exert to bring these atrocities to an end. In Turkey American residents have been exposed to the gravest dangers and American property destroyed. There and everywhere American citizens and American property must be absolutely protected at all hazards and at any cost.

Monroe Doctrine.—We reassert the Monroe Doctrine in its full extent, and we reaffirm the right of the United States to give the doctrine effect by responding to the appeals of any American State for friendly intervention in case of European encroachment. We have not interfered, and shall not interfere, with the existing possessions of any European power in this hemisphere, but those possessions must not on any pretext, be extended. We hopefully look forward to the eventual withdrawal of the European powers from this hemisphere, to the ultimate union of all of the English-speaking part of the continent by the free consent of its inhabitants.

Cuba.—From the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other American peoples to free themselves from European domination. We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

The Government of Spain having lost control of Cuba, and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the Government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

The Navy.—The peace and security of the Republic and the maintenance of its rightful influence

Only rounded spoonfuls are required, of Cleveland's

BAKING POWDER.

not heaping ones.

Feed

The nerves upon pure, rich blood and you need not fear the horrors of nervous prostration. Nerves are weak when they are improperly and insufficiently nourished. Pure blood is their proper food, and pure blood comes by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is thus the greatest and best nerve tonic. Opiates, coca, and sedative compounds deaden and stifle, but Hood's Sarsaparilla nourishes and builds up.

Hood's
Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills easy to buy, easy to take easy to operate. 25c.

among the nations of the earth demand a naval power commensurate with its position and responsibility. We therefore favor the continued enlargement of the navy, and a complete system of harbor and coast defenses.

Foreign Immigration.—For the protection of the equality of our American citizenship, and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced, and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

Civil Service.—The Civil Service Law was placed on the statute-book by the Republican party, which has always sustained it, and we renew our repeated declarations that it shall be thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable.

Free Ballot.—We demand that every citizen of the United States shall be allowed to cast one free and unrestricted ballot, and that such ballot shall be counted and returned as cast.

Lynchings.—We proclaim our unqualified condemnation of the uncivilized and barbarous practices, well known as lynching or killing of human beings, suspected or charged with crime, without process of law.

National Arbitration.—We favor the creation of a National Board of Arbitration to settle and adjust differences which may arise between employers and employed engaged in inter-State commerce.

Homesteads.—We believe in an immediate return to the free homestead policy of the Republican party, and urge the passage by Congress of the satisfactory free homestead measure which has already passed the House and is now pending in the Senate.

Territories.—We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States. All the Federal officers appointed for the Territories should be selected from bona-fide residents thereof, and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as practicable.

Alaska.—We believe the citizens of Alaska should have representation in the Congress of the United States, to the end that needful legislation may be intelligently enacted.

Temperance.—We sympathize with all wise and legitimate efforts to lessen and prevent the evils of intemperance and promote morality.

Rights of Women.—The Republican party is mindful of the rights and interests of women. Protection of American industries includes equal opportunities, equal pay for equal work, and protection to the home. We favor the admission of women to wider spheres of usefulness, and welcome their co-operation in rescuing the country from Democratic and Populistic mismanagement and misrule.

Such are the principles and policies of the Republican party. By those principles we will abide, and these policies we will put into execution. We ask for them the considerate judgment of the American people. Confident alike in the history of our great party and in the justice of our cause, we present our platform and our candidates in the full assurance that the election will bring victory to the Republican party, and prosperity to the people of the United States.

Notes and Queries

Kindly inform me on the following points: 1. Is Colonel Ingersoll a graduate of any college? If so, of which? 2. What is the legend of Phineus and the harpies? 3. Why was Shakespeare's "Henry V." considered treasonable? 4. I believe a member of the titled nobility in England may be elected as a member of the House of Commons, may he not? If so, is he, during the time for which he is elected, entitled to a seat in the House of Lords also? If not, is he entitled to a seat in the House of Lords after the expiration of his elected term?

A SUBSCRIBER.

1. He is not a college graduate. 2. Phineus was a blind soothsayer, who for cruelty to his sons was punished by the Harpies, winged monsters, who snatched his food away and polluted what they left of it. He gave the Argonauts directions for their voyage in quest of the golden fleece, and two of them, the winged sons of the North Wind, rewarded him by ridding him of the Harpies. 3. It was not. Perhaps you should have said "Richard II.," in which the King is deposed (Act IV., Scene 3). A Shakespearean scholar furnishes this note upon the subject: There was an earlier play (called "Henry IV.") in which Richard was deposed and killed on the stage. It was performed at a public theater, at the request of Sir Gilly Merick and other followers of Lord Essex, the afternoon before his insurrection. Merick gave forty shillings extra to Phillips to play it, as the play was old and would not draw. In Shakespeare's play the deposition scene was not printed till 1608. It was probably not acted, and was suppressed in the edition of 1597 because the Pope had published a bull against Elizabeth in 1596 exhorting rebellion. In 1599 Hayward was censured in the Star Chamber and imprisoned for publishing his "History of the First Year of Henry IV.," which is simply the deposition of Richard II. 4. Irish peers are eligible to the House of Commons, but English and Scotch peers are not. If a member of the House succeeds to a hereditary peerage, he is obliged to relinquish his seat in the House.

1. Ought a teacher to attend "summer schools"? Ought she not rather, after a term filled with hard and faithful work, to eschew "professional" subjects of all sorts, and spend her vacation in a complete rest from all such matters; in the expressive, if not elegant, language of Walt Whitman, "loafe, and invite her soul"? That has always been my theory and my practice. I read, I write, I walk, I drive, I lie in my hammock and look and listen, I enjoy the society of friends, I even think! (sometimes); in short, I do, as nearly as possible, nothing, with the utmost perseverance and success, for the whole two months! What may be the effect upon my brains I am not prepared to say; but upon my brain, I know it is excellent. Still, if you say I am wrong, I promise to reform. 2. Kindly name two or three of the best of John Burroughs's works—or are they all best? Are not he and Thoreau and Ruskin and Emerson and Lowell, and such writers, better educators than all the "summer schools"? 3. In one of Stevenson's books I find these sentences: "We sin, I dare not say by God's temptation, but I must say with his consent." "It is by our evil that God leads us into good." Is his idea correct, especially the part underscored by me?

IGNOTO.

1. The most of rest is found in following the line of least resistance. This varies with each person. You have found it as you describe. For some it lies in the inviting opportunity to supply a deficiency, or to realize an aspiration, by vacation study. The conscious need of each must give the law to each. 2. Among Mr. Burroughs's best-known books—they are all good—are "Wake-Robin," "Locusts and Wild Honey," "Birds and Bees," "Indoor Studies," "Fresh Fields," "Sharp Eyes," "Signs and Seasons." 3. The phrase may be misunderstood, but it is true if taken analogously to the care of a wise parent, who allows a foolish child to have his perverse way in anticipation of the correction which nothing but retributive experiences can make effective.

We have here in our city a liberal society called the Independent Congregational Church. A friend remarked to me recently that, inasmuch as they had no sympathy with or belief in what is understood by Orthodox Congregationalism, they had no right to the name, the retaining of which she was inclined to think not quite honest. I suggested that I thought the term Congregational in this case, as well as in all liberal churches, as Unitarian and Universalist, was used simply to indicate or express their method of church government. Please tell me if this is not true.

J.

You are correct. The word "Independent" is itself a term of discrimination. Orthodox Congregational churches are not independent, but associated. In New England, where some such churches became Unitarian many years ago, they retained their original names, as "the First" or "Second Congregational Church," and their right to the name is acknowledged. The term "Congregationalism" is descriptive of polity. If it is extended to more than this, it is merely by historical accident, which confers no intrinsic claim.

Can you inform me where I can obtain a copy of "Home Worship," prepared by the late Rev. J. P Thompson, D.D., and published in 1871 by J. R. Osgood & Co., Boston?

M. W. C.

A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York.

It is interesting to notice, in connection with the recent sermon of the Rev. Henry van Dyke on the historically divine Christ, that the words God and Christ are used interchangeably in old manuscripts of the New Testament. I quote from Tischendorf's Tauchnitz edition of the New Testament, Philippians iv., 7, English Testament, "And the peace of God;" Alexandrine manuscript reads, "Peace of God." Colossians iii., 15, English Testament, "The peace of God rule in your hearts;" Sinaitic, Vatican, and Alexandrine manuscripts, "The peace of Christ." Colossians iii., 16, English Testament, "Let the word of Christ;" Sinaitic, "The word of the Lord;" Alexandrine, "The word of God."

O. E. T. S

IN Making Cake and Bread the best results, the finest flavored, sweetest, lightest, and most wholesome foods, are obtained by the use of the Royal Baking Powder. A pure grape cream of tartar powder. Unlike other baking powders, Royal contains no alum, lime, or ammonia, and leaves no acid or alkali in the food.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

Solid Silverware

Tea Sets, Coffee Sets, Sugar and Cream Sets, Dinner Services, Dessert pieces, Forks, Spoons, and all other small wares,—every requisite for a perfectly appointed table.

THEODORE B. STARR
206 Fifth Ave., Madison Square,
New York.

Health Springs from the Cocoanut

Pure and Wholesome

describes the new article of food just being introduced and for your health's sake you should investigate our

Cocoanut Butter

it is a superior article of guaranteed purity to be used in place of butter, lard or compounds in cooking. Requires only one-half to two-thirds the quantity used of other shortening. Endorsed by physicians for purity and by bakers and chefs for its economic value. Sold by all grocers. Write for free book about it.

THE PURE FOOD PRODUCT CO.,
544-554 N. Water St. CHICAGO

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

Don't Leave Home

Without a supply of Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient, the common sense remedy for Sick Headache, Constipation and disordered stomach. Taken at the right time, it has prevented many attacks of serious illness. Should be in every household and carried by every traveler. Sold by druggists for 50 years.

"As You Like It"

The Presentations of June 12 and 13 at Smith College

The public has had abundant opportunity to become familiar with the idea of young women playing Greek tragedy and Shakespearean drama. The press has been uniformly interested and courteous in its comments. Even the non-play-going fathers and mothers have recovered somewhat from their first shock at the thought of girls taking time from Greek, Latin, mathematics, and science to learn the verses and gestures of playwrights and actors. Letters of remonstrance to the President and Faculty are more infrequent than they used to be. People are clearly getting used to the idea of a play as part of the Commencement programme once sacred to orations on liberty and duty. The present is, therefore, the time when the aims and accomplishment of such a performance should be the object of careful inquiry. Otherwise the history of the Commencement play will be one emphasizing its base uses rather than its noble ends.

First, then, the Smith College performance was the furthest possible remove from private theatricals. Its methods were those of serious study, its aims the embodiment of literary and æsthetic ideals.

Second, the performance was through its entire history so carefully related to college work that it made no disturbance in the term work of the other departments, and indeed would never have been known to be going on except for the friendly interest felt in it as a way of entertaining the college guests during Commencement week. The eighty-odd students concerned with the play either as actors or committee had almost without exception been interested in the work of the department of elocution, so that the play was a natural expression of their original and acquired taste.

Third, the choice of a play of Shakespeare was made under the belief that the excellent results attained by the class of 1895 in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" might be reached again. These results were felt to be desirable because in them the entertainment of guests and the very highest personal discipline seemed to be united. With the present senior class, Miss Lordella Peck, of the Department of Elocution, and Mr. Alfred Young, the trainer, agreed to add to the effort to render Shakespeare's lines intelligently a definite interest in the stage business as established by the best authorities. This was found to be most interesting, and to involve questions of far wider reach than at first thought would seem to be connected with stage business in its conventional acceptance.

The play was cut to make it suitable for modern presentation, and to make it shorter. The characters of Sir Oliver Martext and Dennis were omitted entirely. The order of the scenes was changed to produce a more immediately intelligible and coherent effect.

The costumes, with a few exceptions, were made under the direction of a committee of the class, and were based on Mr. Abbey's illustrations. Some of the tableaux were the exactest possible reproductions of his pictures, the most effective one being where Rosalind, Celia, and Touchstone sit dejectedly on a log.

The interpretation of character was not in the main intended to be heretical. But the play was pervaded by a fine humanity, delicacy, and culture, by no means prominent in the ordinary stage presentation.

The melancholy Jaques was intentionally varied from the romantic philosopher to the disillusioned libertine, and in the interests of this impression certain speeches, usually omitted, were retained; for example, "Why, who cries out in pride?" Every effort was made to prevent starring by careful attention to the by-play of crowds and attendants. The minor

[Continued on following page]

If you are Tired

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Dr. W. F. HINCKLEY, Waterbury, Conn., says: "It has served me a good purpose when given for mental and physical exhaustion; also as a drink in fevers."

Shines Silver Surprisingly

Electro-Silicon SILVER POLISH

Never Scratches
Never Wears

Leading Grocers sell it.

THE ELECTRO-SILICON CO.,
72 John St., New York.

The Sunday School Times will be sent direct to your own address —not in a package, but

Direct to You

—with its wealth of lesson-helps and special articles, every week until January 1, 1897, for about half-price,

50 Cents

By this special offer we make it easy for you to test the paper thoroughly. Now is the time!

If you mention this paper when sending your subscription, we will mail to you a free copy of Professor Riddle's "Outline Harmony of the Gospels" to fold within your Bible.

John D. Wattles & Co.,
1031 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Wheel That Leads

The Liberty is made right—It is the wheel you are sure of.

The Liberty Cycle Company
4 Warren Street, New York, N Y.

THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SOLE MAKERS OF THE "BLYMYER" BELLS
FOR CHURCH SCHOOL. FIRE ALARM &c
Catalogue with 2500 testimonials. Prices and terms FREE.

25 CTS PISO'S CURE FOR 25 CTS
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION

Duxbak is the name of the
S·H·& M·
REGISTERED TRADE MARK
BIAS
VELVETEEN
SKIRT BINDING
that is rainproof and sheds water. It wears—like the other S. H. & M.'s and does not turn gray like the cheap kinds. Put it on your traveling and sea-side gowns

If your dealer will not supply you we will.

Samples showing labels and materials mailed free.

"Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new 72 page book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, giving valuable points, mailed for 25c.

S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 599, N. Y. City.

Fastidious Men always insist upon having their shirts made of
Pride of the West
Muslin—"as fine as linen, as soft as silk." For sale by Leading Retailers and Men's Furnishers.

Right KIND OF Tires

FOR RACING
No. 75 Hartford Single Tubes—the standard racing tires, the kind Bald rode in 1895.

FOR PLEASURE
No. 80 Hartford Single-Tubes—the standard fast road tires, delightful, buoyant, comfortable.

Hartford SINGLE TUBE Tires

FOR SECURITY
No. 77 Hartford Single-Tubes—the standard tires for those who are willing to sacrifice a little speed for greater security from puncture. The ideal tire for tandems.

FOR ROUGH SERVICE
No. 70 Hartford Single-Tubes—the standard tires for rocky, hilly country.

THE HARTFORD RUBBER WORKS CO.
HARTFORD, CONN.
NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass.

"As You Like It"

[Continued from preceding page]

characters came into natural prominence, with the result of making the play more lifelike and less eccentric. The scenery emphasized the life of the woods rather than that of the court. It was beautiful, romantic, and suggestive. Old versions of the songs scattered through the play were used to heighten the dramatic impression. The music of Doctor Arne, Bishop, and Thomas Morley was transposed and arranged for four parts, and refrains from it used as recurring "motifs" in important entrances, exits, and crises. All these devices imperceptibly added to the unity of the play and prevented the presentation from falling apart into two or three rôles of exclusive interest.

The parts of Rosalind, Orlando, and Celia were, for obvious reasons, difficult. Rosalind has been so long a star part that it was felt almost presumptuous for any girl to undertake it. Miss Curr, however, succeeded beyond expectation. She had a distinct conception of the character, and played it with real control and finish. Orlando, in the acting of Miss Curtis, was one of the rare presentations of a man's part without a suspicion of disguise. Orlando was frank, charming, lovable, without a suggestion of the heavy lover of a stock company. Of Celia it need only be said that Miss Hills redeemed the part from its usual interpretation of a harmless foil to Rosalind by her intelligent appreciation and graceful moderation. As an ideal characterization Miss Dustin's Touchstone was really extraordinary. The Shakespearean fool has seldom had a finer rendering on any stage. Adam's lines were almost perfectly rendered for meter by Miss Hall, and a difficult part made interesting. The acting showed its real force in the pathetic and love scenes. The audience felt no inclination to laugh. A college audience is almost painfully alive to the suggestion of the ludicrous, but there was no occasion for it in this presentation of "As You Like It." The "business" became fine art without any obvious effort. To a few anxious and critical spectators this seemed the triumph of the play and the demonstration of the educational principle it was embodying. **

An Ounce of Prevention is cheaper than any quantity of cure. Don't give children narcotics or sedatives. They are unnecessary when the infant is properly nourished, as it will be if brought up on the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Paralysis,

partial or complete, locomotor-ataxia, epilepsy, all show a diseased or deficient condition of the brain, once considered incurable. We can show letters from hundreds of well-known physicians, telling of positive cures by

The Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant,

Freligh's Tonic

The phosphorus is what does it. Absolutely pure. Positively harmless. Can be taken for any length of time.

Regular bottle $1.00, 100 doses. All druggists. Sample by mail, 25 cts. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, formula, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Formula on Every Bottle.

In-com'para'ble

isn't an easy word to say, we must use it, however, for the virtues of

WHEATLET

... A Delicate ...
Whole-Wheat Food

without the objections of Oatmeal—does not overheat the blood or irritate the stomach. Healthfully and quickly prepared. Makes Muscle, Bone and Nerves. The right food for all. Ask your Grocer to let you read the wrapper—much that you ought to know on it.

Franklin Mills Co. Lockport, N. Y.

Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Ever ready, palatable hot or cold.
Choicest beans, juicy meat. Three sizes.
Send 6c for sample can.
VAN CAMP PACKING CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Complexion Powder

Is a necessity of the refined toilet in this climate. POZZONI's combines every element of beauty and purity.

It is universally known, and everywhere esteemed as the only Powder that will improve the complexion, eradicate tan, freckles and skin diseases.

For Sale Everywhere.

NEW BOOKS
PUBLISHED BY
Longmans, Green & Co.

THE MARRIAGE OF DIVORCED PERSONS IN CHURCH
Two Sermons Preached in St. Paul's Cathedral on February 16 and 23, 1896
By the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, B.D., Bishop of Stepney, Canon of St. Paul's. 12mo, 40 cents.

THE GOSPEL OF EXPERIENCE or, The Witness of Human Life to the Truth of Revelation. Being the Boyle Lectures for 1895
By the Rev. W. C. E. NEWBOLT, M.A., Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's Cathedral, Select Preacher before the University of Oxford, 1894–5, and Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Ely. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

THE ROMAN SEE IN THE EARLY CHURCH and Other Studies in Church History
By the Rev. WILLIAM BRIGHT, D.D., Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 490 pages, $2.50.

SECOND SERIES
SERMON SKETCHES
Taken from some of the Sunday Lessons throughout the Church Year
By the Rev. W. H. HUTCHINGS, M.A., Canon of York, Rector of Kirby Misperton, and Rural Dean. Crown 8vo, 332 pages, $1.75.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
91 and 93 Fifth Ave., New York

A NOTABLE SUCCESS

MONEY
AND BANKING

By HORACE WHITE

Cloth. 488 pages. Illustrated. Price, $1.50.

Professor WILLIAM G. SUMNER,
Professor of Political and Social Science in Yale University:

"I have read Mr. White's book on 'Money.' I am astonished that any one should have been able to put so much history and theory into so compact a presentation. The book meets in a most admirable manner the greatest literary need of the time."

Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.
May be ordered of all booksellers.

GINN & COMPANY
PUBLISHERS
Boston New York Chicago Atlanta

JULY NUMBER HARPER'S NOW READY

IMPORTANT ARTICLES

GENERAL WASHINGTON
and the period of the Revolution. By WOODROW WILSON.
Illustrated by HOWARD PYLE.

BY HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE
A piquant description of ENGLISH ELECTIONS

BY LAURENCE HUTTON
LITERARY LANDMARKS OF VENICE
Illustrated by F. V. DU MOND.

An illustrated paper on the distinctive characteristics of
OHIO
By President CHARLES F. THWING, of the Western Reserve University.

GOOD STORIES

LANGDON ELWYN MITCHELL — TWO MORMONS FROM MUDDLETY
The opening chapters of a novelette.
Illustrated by GILBERT GAUL.

W. E. NORRIS — THE DOWAGER'S COMPANION
A story of English fashionable life.

OCTAVE THANET — THE CABINET ORGAN
A short story of the Middle West.
Illustrated by CLIFFORD CARLETON.

JULIAN RALPH — THE LOVE-LETTERS OF SUPERFINE GOLD
A Chinese romance.
Illustrated by C. D. WELDON.

E. A. ALEXANDER — A FOOL TO FAME
A humorous story of American artist life abroad.
Pictures by JOHN W. ALEXANDER.

JOHN KENDRICK BANGS — Conclusion of A REBELLIOUS HEROINE
A humorous romance.
Illustrated by W. T. SMEDLEY.

MAGAZINE

A GREAT BOOK FOR A GREAT PURPOSE!
ALL OF THE BEST WRITERS ARE REPRESENTED.

UPLIFTING SONGS
NEW AND OLD
FOR PRAISE · AND · REVIVAL MEETINGS AND SABBATH SCHOOLS
EDITED BY
C. C. CASE AND J. R. MURRAY
WITH A NUMBER OF HERETOFORE UNPUBLISHED GOSPEL SONGS BY GEO. F. ROOT.
Price 35¢ post paid.

"Songs that uplift and encourage, are mighty allies for those that labor in the Master's cause."
THE BOOK CONTAINS 224 PAGES OF THE VERY BEST MATERIAL.
Price, 35 cents. Specimen Pages Free.
PUBLISHED BY THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY,
CINCINNATI. NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

The Bookman

JULY NUMBER

CONTAINS:

New points in the Life of Goethe, by Alice Zimmern; Zola on Literary Property, Louise Chandler Moulton on Morse's "Life of Oliver Wendell Holmes."

Edmund Clarence Stedman, a review by Hamilton Wright Mabie.

A Story by Ian Maclaren.

Henry C. Bunner, by Laurence Hutton.

Hon. Whitelaw Reid on "Fonetik Refawrm."

Portraits of Oliver Wendell Holmes, H. C. Bunner, Edmund Clarence Stedman, W. E. Gladstone, Robert Browning, Zola, etc.

Reviews of New Books by Hamilton W. Mabie, Stephen Crane, Henry Fuller, Eugene Field, Marion Crawford, J. S. of Dale, etc., etc., etc.

London Letter from Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll.

Paris Letter by Robert H. Sherard.

Poetry by Robert Cameron Rogers, Harry Thurston Peck, Philip Becker Goetz, etc., etc.

Some Recent Educational Publications.

Among the Libraries.

For sale on all news-stands. Single copies 20 cents. Annual subscriptions $2.00. Readers of The Outlook should send for a sample number. Address

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY
151 Fifth Avenue, Corner 21st Street
NEW YORK CITY

The Westminster Series of S. S. Lesson Helps

Edited by
Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D.

are the best for the price, and are not excelled by any others. Send for sample set, and see for yourself.

Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath-School Work
Philadelphia, Pa.

THE CONTINENT OF AMERICA
By John Boyd Thacher

(Just issued) is an important historical work relating to the discovery and naming of America. It contains many facsimile reproductions of heretofore inaccessible rarities, including a series of fourteen maps showing geographical knowledge of America from 1478 to 1570.

Only 250 copies elegantly printed on finest paper. $25.00.

For full descriptive circular address
WILLIAM EVARTS BENJAMIN, Publisher,
10 West 22d St., New York City.

FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Gospel Hymns, 1 to 6, for Devotional Meetings. Excelsior Music Edition, 739 Hymns, $75 per 100.
Gospel Choir No. 2. $40 per 100.
Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School. $30 per 100.
Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St. New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago

Beecher Books

For anything by or about HENRY WARD BEECHER, send to his long-time Publishers,

FORDS, HOWARD & HULBERT, 47 E. 10th St., New York City.

Three Lovers of Literature

Here, says "The Bookman," are three delightful anecdotes, all of them strictly true, that cast a somewhat lurid light upon the literary culture of East, West, and South, respectively. The scene of the first is laid in Providence, R. I., where a young lady was asked the other day by her uncle to make some purchases for him, of which he gave her a written list. The first item was "Scott's Emulsion," and after glancing at it the intelligent young woman made straight for a certain large book-shop, where she was received by an equally intelligent salesman.

"I want a copy of Scott's Emulsion," said she, casually.

"Scott's what?" said the clerk.

"Scott's Emulsion," replied the maiden.

"Oh, yes," was the answer. "Well, you see, we don't sell Scott's works except in complete sets."

The scene of the second occurrence is in a thriving city of the West, where a Southern littérateur of distinction had just delivered a long and critical lecture on Matthew Arnold to a fashionable audience. A friend of the lecturer, while passing out of the hall, overheard the following conversation between two ladies:

"That was a pretty good lecture, on the whole; but who was this Matthew Arnold, anyway?"

"Oh, I don't know. I haven't time to keep up with all these new Southern writers!"

The last incident occurred in a university town in one of the Southern States. A reading club had been organized, each member of which was required to prepare a paper on some designated literary masterpiece. One member, an Episcopal clergyman, was asked to take for his subject Sir Thomas Malory's "Morte d'Arthur." Immediately after the meeting he sought the study of a literary friend.

"What is this 'Morte d'Arthur' that they've given me?" he queried, anxiously. "Of course, I've always known that Mallory edits 'The Churchman,' but I never heard before that he'd written a book!"

—Olive Thorne Miller has just ended a most successful course of bird talks, accompanied by field classes, in Pittsfield, Mass., under the auspices of the Kindergarten Association, which netted a handsome sum to carry on its work.

A New Book by

Hamilton W. Mabie

ESSAYS ON NATURE
AND CULTURE

A series of essays by HAMILTON W. MABIE. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25. (Just published.)

OTHER BOOKS BY MR. MABIE

My Study Fire. First Series. My Study Fire. Second Series. Under the Trees and Elsewhere. Short Studies in Literature. Essays in Literary Interpretation.

New Editions, each with three illustrations in photogravure, in dainty bindings, 16mo, cloth, gilt tops, per volume, $1.50.

Readers of "The Outlook" are invited to send for a specimen number of "The Bookman," a monthly illustrated literary magazine.

DODD, MEAD & CO.
Fifth Ave. & 21st St., N. Y.

Books of Great Interest
BY William Burnet Wright, D.D.

Ancient Cities

From the Dawn to the Daylight. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

"An exceedingly interesting volume giving brief and excellent sketches of Nineveh, Babylon, Memphis, Alexandria, Petra, Damascus, Tyre, Athens, Rome, Samaria, Susa, Jerusalem the city of the Pharisees, and the New Jerusalem. A great deal of information is gathered in these pages and put in a most readable way."—Hartford Courant.

"To the general reader this book cannot fail to be intensely interesting. The amount of recondite and freshly discovered information he has managed to convey to his pages is remarkable."—Scottish Review.

The World to Come

Sermons, with a Lecture on Christmas. 16mo, $1.25.

"A unique collection. . . . There is in every part force, insight, and bold originality, combined with plenty of heart. The Christmas address which ends the series is a bright and graceful working up of the voluminous Christmas legendary histories interspersed with pithy and pointed remark and personal recollection, the last of which forms the delightful close both of the address and the volume."—The Independent, New York.

Master and Men:

The Sermon on the Mountain practiced on the Plain. 16mo, $1.25.

"It is an honest endeavor to understand the words of Jesus in the face of the problems and perplexities that meet the student of Christianity as it presents itself to-day,—an earnest, helpful call to nobler living."—Christian Register, Boston.

"A strong, able, scholarly, attractive presentation of the truths proclaimed in the beatitudes, as applied to the lives men are living on earth to-day."—Public Opinion.

"Strong, clearly reasoned, pungent, and often eloquent."—Boston Beacon.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by
HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston
11 EAST 17TH STREET, NEW YORK

D. Appleton & Co.'s New Books

Maggie: A Girl of the Streets

By STEPHEN CRANE, author of "The Red Badge of Courage," etc. 12mo. Cloth, uniform with "The Red Badge of Courage," 75 cents.

In this book the author pictures certain realities of city life, and he has not contented himself with a search for humorous material or with superficial aspects. His story lives, and its actuality cannot fail to produce a deep impression and to point a moral which many a thoughtful reader will apply.

The Red Badge of Courage

An Episode of the American Civil War. By STEPHEN CRANE. Tenth Edition. 12mo. Cloth, $1.00.

"Never before have we had the seamy side of glorious war so well depicted. . . . The rank and file has its historian at last, and we have had nothing finer."—Chicago Evening Post.

The Riddle Ring

By JUSTIN McCARTHY, author of "Red Diamonds," "A Fair Saxon," etc. No. 195, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

Mr. McCarthy's stirring and picturesque story will prove one of the most entertaining of the summer books.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO.
72 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

The Business World

The Week The effect of the St. Louis Convention and its platform on the stock market was less noticeable than many had anticipated, but as the results had been practically certain for a week or more this is not surprising. The course of prices of stocks was upward until the middle of the week, when a cessation of the foreign buying which had been a favorable feature produced a check and some reaction. On Friday a recovery to some extent followed, but the last days of the week were very dull and the amount of business small. The loan market in money was slightly more active, but rates remained practically unchanged. In general trade matters the beginning of the dull season was evidently at hand. There was certainly no improvement in the industrial situation. Prices were lower for iron and steel, lumber, wheat, sugar, lard, and some other staples, while pork, cotton, and petroleum were higher, and flour, coffee, leather, and oats remain about the same. The exports of the week were 3,020,000 bushels—a slight increase over those of the previous week and of the same week last year. "Bradstreet's" reports 265 failures, as compared with 234 the previous week and 231 in the same week of last year. An interesting feature in the industrial situation is related to the cotton crop, which seems likely to be of only moderate dimensions this year, while the supply of unsold cotton on hand is rapidly diminishing. The "Financial Chronicle" says:

> The visible supply of cotton of all kinds in the world decreased 102,000 bales last week, and now stands at 2,280,000 bales. This amount is 1,156,000 less than last year at this time, is 705,000 bales less than two years ago, and shows a decrease of 798,000 from the supply of three years ago. The total amount of American cotton in the world lost 103,000 bales during the week, and is now down to 1,814,000 bales, or 1,215,000 bales smaller than it was at this time last year. The total available supply of cotton in this country was reduced 22,000 bales during the week. Port and interior stocks here are now down to 390,000 bales, against 523,000 bales last year at this time. The demand for this scant supply keeps well up to the level of the most prosperous years of the cotton-manufacturing era.

Anthracite Coal An extremely important and elaborate series of articles on anthracite coal has been published in the "Bond Record" of this city. They have been prepared by Mr. William Griffith, who has collected a great amount of information, and has with much skill summarized and tabulated the results. The maps and diagram accompanying the articles present the striking facts in the history of anthracite coal mining in a graphic way. While the articles include in their scope the history of the discovery of anthracite and its early workings, the chief value lies in the estimates of the probable future supply of the different regions. The final result of the estimates gives the total anthracite tonnage supply of the future as 5,073,786,750 tons. The author states that one hundred and nine years represents the life of the anthracite industry on the basis of the shipments made in 1895. The future tonnage of the anthracite region would completely fill an ordinary city street sixty feet in width to a depth of sixty feet, or say to the tops of the fifth-story windows, for a distance of 8,800 miles. Our readers will be interested in the following conclusions in regard to the capacity and future of the Wyoming and Lehigh regions comparatively:

> The largest proportion of the annual increase of tonnage has been furnished by the Wyoming region. The Lehigh and Schuylkill regions in 1876 jointly supplied 54.47 per cent. of the tonnage for that year, and the Northern field 45.53 per cent.; but the percentage of annual output has been gradually decreasing in the former and increasing in the latter region, until in 1894 Lehigh and Schuylkill jointly furnished 45.05 per cent. and the Wyoming 54.95 per cent. of the year's output. In other words, the Wyoming region has been increasing its output at the rate of about 800,000 tons or more per year, while the other regions combined have increased but little more than about one-half this amount. In order to maintain this pace in the Wyoming field, it would be necessary to construct, equip, and develop to full producing capacity about six large modern collieries of average capacity per year, without suffering any diminution of output from the plants already in existence. With our knowledge of existing conditions, the continuance of such a pace seems well-nigh impossible. We should rather say that the region is nearing the point of maximum output, and the increase of tonnage must soon begin to diminish.
>
> The present annual capacity of the anthracite region, working 300 days per year, is about 67,000,000 tons, while the market will take but 46,000,000, or capacity 21,000,000 tons ahead of annual consumption—a situation of affairs which requires shrewd and careful management to maintain a profitable business. How long this condition can endure depends on the market and the manner in which the industry is handled by those in control. With the present rate of increase of annual consumption it ought not to continue many years, for the Wyoming and Lehigh regions, which together yield about 70 per cent. of the annual tonnage, seem to be nearing their maximum output (the Hazleton district of the Lehigh region having probably already reached this point).

Sugar from Beets The immense sales of beet-sugar in Germany and throughout Europe are causing greater and greater interest in this manufacture in this country. The industry has been growing for some years rather slowly, and in spite of a prejudice against it in most farmers' minds. We quote some interesting facts collated by Mr. G. E. Walsh for the "Country Gentleman:"

> The wide extent of territory over which this crop can be made to succeed gives some assurance for the future that sugar may become one of the leading products of the United States. Hundreds of tests by the State experiment stations have demonstrated the fact that the best sugar-beets can be raised in this country, and that the crop can be made profitable both to the farmers who raise the beets and to the sugar-refiners who convert the roots into the commercial article. Germany began the manufacture of sugar from beets that yielded only 5 per cent. of sugar, and, by selection and long years of careful calculation, the percentage of saccharine matter in the beets was raised to 12 and 14; but here in our country beets yielding from 14 to 16 per cent. are raised without special selection or culture.
>
> We pay annually to foreign countries for the sugar consumed in this country about $150,000,000, and should this vast sum be saved by American farmers raising enough sugar for home consumption, the results would be most gratifying. The world's sugar crop for 1894 surpassed that of any other year in the history of the industry, but the increase was the greatest in beet-sugar. The Germans in particular have greatly increased the supply of beet-sugar, and they have succeeded so well in their undertaking that cane-sugar is rapidly being crowded for the supremacy.
>
> The building of a beet-sugar factory is an expensive undertaking, and it has required considerable practical demonstration of the wisdom of such investments to induce capitalists to put their money into them. A good factory costs all the way from two to four hundred thousand dollars, according to its capacity; and in addition to this a guarantee of sufficient raw material to keep the factory going must be obtained. The farmer and the capitalist must work together in order to produce beet-sugar. Unless the factory is built for extracting the sugar from the beets, there is no market for the products of the farmers; but, on the other hand, the best-equipped factory in the world is handicapped unless a specified acreage of sugar-beets is guaranteed. The cost to raise a ton of beets is from $2.50 to $4, and the average yield is from ten to twenty tons to the acre. Factories pay $5 per ton for good sugar-beets, a trifle more or less if the beets vary in their sugar contents. The profits from raising the beets can thus be readily figured out, but, as in all other farming, the actual amount made will depend after all upon the methods and economy of the farmers. The difference between ten and twenty tons' yield to the acre illustrates the varying results obtained by growers—a difference usually between good and bad farming.

—Sardou's hobby is building himself houses. In this way he delights in spending his wealth. On Mount Boron, on the outskirts of Nice, stands a huge erection of stone, dwarfing the surrounding villas, which is merely the foundation of a palatial residence which the eminent dramatist commenced, and after an expenditure of some $200,000 was prevented from completing on the ground that the structure would interfere with the outlook of the fort perched on the hill behind.

FINANCIAL

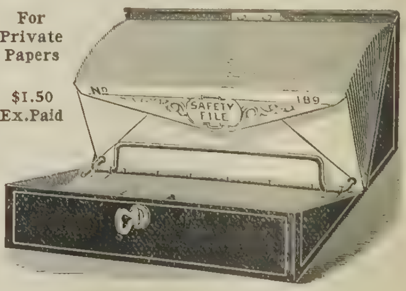
AMERICAN FIRE
INSURANCE COMPANY
Office, Company's Building,
308 & 310
Walnut St.,
Philadelphia

YOU SELL | WE BUY
Do you want to sell a WESTERN MORTGAGE or Western Land—avoid foreclosure costs—stop sending good money after bad—get a good 5 per cent. investment instead? State exact location, condition of title, and your lowest price. Over $2,000,000 in Western securities successfully handled by the present management of this corporation. THE BOSTON REALTY, INDEMNITY AND TRUST CO., 33 Equitable Building, Boston. Send for our Bond List.

SAFE INVESTMENTS
GOOD AS GOVERNMENT BONDS—
DOUBLE THE RATE
5% 6% 7%
Made in strictly first-class Real Estate Mortgages, State, County, City, and School Warrants and Bonds, with a view to absolute security and prompt interest payments. Best references Correspondence solicited.
JOHN P. DORR & CO., Investment Brokers
Seattle, Washington

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York
Formerly New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co.
Mutual Life Building
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
Capital, - - - $2,000,000
Surplus, - - - - $2,000,000
ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS, AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.
INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.
WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.
DIRECTORS
Samuel D. Babcock,
George F. Baker,
George S. Bowdoin,
Frederic Cromwell,
Walter R. Gillette,
Robert Goelet,
G. G. Haven,
Oliver Harriman,
R. Somers Hayes,
Charles R. Henderson,
Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
Augustus D. Juilliard,
James N. Jarvie,
Richard A. McCurdy,
Walter G. Oakman,
Alexander E. Orr,
Henry H. Rogers,
Henry W. Smith,
H. McK. Twombly,
Frederick W. Vanderbi
William C. Whitney.

SAFETY DOCUMENT FILE
For Private Papers
$1.50 Ex.Paid



Send for descriptive circular.
A.C. BARLER MFG. CO. 103 Lake St. Chicago

Of course it's imitated—anything good always is—that's endorsement, not a pleasant kind, but still endorsement. HIRES Rootbeer is imitated.
Made only by The Charles E. Hires Co., Philadelphia. A 25c. package makes 5 gallons. Sold everywhere.

THOSE answering advertisements appearing in The Outlook will confer a favor upon the advertiser as well as the publisher by mentioning this publication.

Presbyterian Assembly of Canada

In the report of the Presbyterian Assembly of Canada which appeared in The Outlook last year, figures were given showing the numerical and financial strength of the Church in the Dominion. It will not be necessary to repeat in detail the figures presented at the Assembly just concluded at Toronto. In numbers there has been a noticeable increase of seventy-three churches and stations and 8,601 communicants, while financial matters have in some departments shown a serious falling off, and in others a gratifying increase. The annual sermon by the retiring Moderator, the Rev. Dr. Robertson, Superintendent of Missions in the Northwest, was from Acts i., 8, and proved to be an earnest plea for zeal in home missionary effort. This work the preacher viewed under the twofold aspect of help for the weaker churches and care of neglected communities. Overlapping by the different denominations was deeply regretted, and the contention made that Presbyterians were less guilty of offending than others, while in many cases it could not be avoided, since they were preaching the Gospel in seven different languages. The decline of family religion, the large withdrawal of men from the prayer-meeting, and the increasing number of non-attendants at church services among moral and respectable people, were greatly lamented, and suggestions made for the removal of these causes of regret. With reference to the home work of the churches the speaker was sanguine. In twenty years two hundred missions and stations had become churches, while all along the line there was reported a deepening and broadening of spiritual life and activity. A good deal of time was given to the discussion of reports on this work, so ably introduced by Dr. Robertson, when it was found that the contributions amounted to $65,152, or an increase of $1,449 over those of last year. Nor was foreign mission work put in the background by these considerations of the home field. At the public meeting held in Cook's church, the large auditorium, capable of seating over 2,000 people, was well filled, when encouraging reports were received from different fields, and stirring addresses delivered by missionaries and others. The decrease in contributions for this work from those of last year amounted to nearly $3,000, while the total contributions to the different schemes of the Church were found to be $15,946 less than those of the year before. Educational matters, too, were prominent in the discussions of the Assembly. The six colleges reported large attendance of students and good work, but in some cases heavy financial responsibilities were shown. The total contributions from the churches were $8,744 short of the previous year, so that in the case of two or three of the colleges the deficits have become formidable amounts. Still, in a denomination possessing so much wealth these deficiencies should be easily met. Knox College, Toronto, received the appointment of two new professors, viz., the Rev. George L. Robinson, Roxbury Church, Boston, to the chair of Old Testament Literature and Exegesis, and the Rev. James Ballantyne, Knox Church, Ottawa, to that of Apologetics and Church History. An overture from the Owen Sound Presbytery suggesting that the entrance of ministers from other churches excepting those of the Presbyterian churches of Great Britain be made more rigid was received, and referred to a special committee. The Manitoba school question was again before the Assembly, and a strong resolution introduced by Principals Caven, of Toronto, and King, of Winnipeg, protesting against interference, was almost unanimously adopted. The first Committee on Christian Endeavor, appointed last year, presented a very encouraging report, showing that $26,911 had been raised, of which amount only $5,821 was spent on the societies. Over against this amount is placed $74,841, the contributions of the Sunday-schools, while the churches show an increase of $23,918 for strictly congregational purposes. Altogether the Assembly shows a year of active work on the part of the Presbyterian Church in the Dominion of Canada for the extension of the kingdom of Christ.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS.CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

MONEY IS MADE by saving it, and there is no better way to save it than in preserving your buildings by having them well painted with Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil. They cannot be well painted with anything else. To be sure of getting examine the brand (see list genuine brands). For colors use NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors; they are the best and most permanent; prepared expressly for tinting Pure White Lead.

Pure White Lead

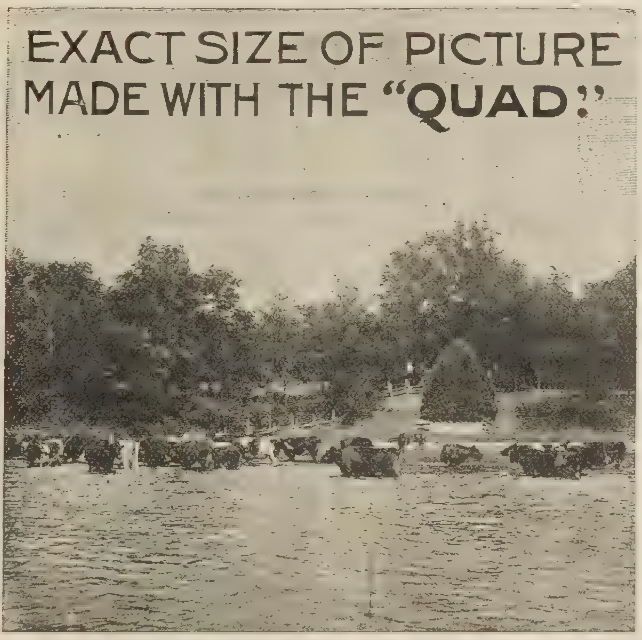
Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

A Quad Your Best Outing Companion



THE ONLY PRACTICAL CAMERA FOR $5.00

It does the work of other Cameras costing two and three times as much, and a novice can operate it.

Size of Camera 4⅝ x 4⅝ x 6 inches. Can be loaded and unloaded in daylight.

It is the only Camera using the new Quadruplex Plate Holder.

EVERY "QUAD" Is Fully Guaranteed

Ask your Dealer for it, or send us two 1-cent stamps for illustrated catalogue and sample of work.

CLOSE & CONE, 126 State St., Chicago, Ill.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

In Uræmia after Typhoid Fever

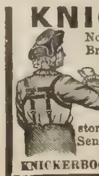
Dr. B. F. HOPKINS, of the Warm Springs, Va., Member Medical Society of Virginia:

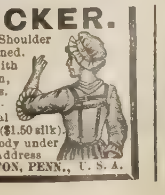
"Miss C——, 20 years of age, was prostrated by a severe attack of Typhoid Fever, which was followed by Uræmia developing itself at the expiration of two months. The attendant symptoms were such as to excite serious apprehension, and proved wholly unamenable to the treatment indicated in the case; the patient grew gradually worse, until I regarded her condition as hopeless. At this time a friend of the young lady suggested the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER. Satisfied that no injury could result from its use, I gladly adopted the suggestion. The result was a matter of equal gratification and astonishment. Under the influence of the Water the kidneys promptly resumed a healthy action, the drowsiness disappeared, and in two weeks the patient was up and walking about the house, which she had not been able to do before for several months, and her improvement continued until she was in usual health."

This Water is for sale by druggists and grocers generally, or in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00, f. o. b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent free to any address. Springs open for guests from June 15th to October 1st. Address

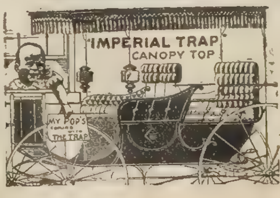
Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va., on the Atlantic and Danville Railroad

KNICKERBOCKER.





No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address
KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.



MORRIS WOODHULL
Factory, DAYTON, O.
N. Y. Store, 366 Canal St.
Largest Variety Traps, Surreys, etc.
Send for Catalogue.
High grade only
"Imperial" the latest.

The Outlook

A Family Paper

New Series of The Christian Union

Copyright, 1896, by The Outlook Company.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post-Office.

The Outlook is a weekly Family Paper, containing this week sixty-eight pages. The subscription price is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance.

Postage is Prepaid by the publishers for all subscriptions in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. For all other countries in the Postal Union add $1.56 for postage.

Changes of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given. The notice should be sent one week before the change is to take effect.

Discontinuances.—If a subscriber wishes his copy of the paper discontinued at the expiration of his subscription, notice to that effect should be sent. Otherwise it is assumed that a continuance of the subscription is desired.

How to Remit.—Remittances should be sent by Check, Draft, Express-Order, or Money-Order payable to order of THE OUTLOOK COMPANY. Cash should be sent in Registered Letter.

Letters should be addressed:
THE OUTLOOK,
Clinton Hall, Astor Place,
New York.

Contents for 27 June, 1896

EDITORIAL:

The Republican Convention 1175
The Nominees 1175
The Democratic Campaign 1175
Mr. Whitney's Statement 1176
A Temperance Law Decision 1176
"Assisted" Voters 1176
College Commencements 1177
Foreign Affairs 1177
French Universities 1178
Benjamin H. Bristow 1178
Mrs. Mary B. Claflin 1178
The Republican Platform 1179
International Arbitration 1180
Growth Through Experience 1180

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES:

The Republican National Convention 1182
Frances E. Willard 1184
By Lady Henry Somerset
Colonel Waring's "White Angels" 1191
By W. W. Ellsworth
Buffalo, the City of Homes 1195
By the Rev. W. B. Wright
A Friend of Letters: Alexander Macmillan 1200
By Hamilton W. Mabie
Kate Carnegie. Chapters XIII., XIV 1202
By Ian Maclaren
The Bible as Literature 1207
By Washington Gladden

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:

The Rev. W. B. Wright 1212
Missions at Clifton Springs 1212
Recall of Satolli 1212
Canadian Congregationalism 1212
"Luxury and the Love of God" 1212
Universalist Testimony 1213
Unitarians in Japan 1213

BOOKS AND AUTHORS:

The Reign of Law (Duke of Argyll) 1209
The Council of Trent (Froude) 1209
New Books 1211

ABOUT PEOPLE

NOTES AND QUERIES

THE

HANDY BINDER

for The Outlook, made to hold compactly and conveniently twenty-six numbers, will be sent by mail on receipt of sixty cents.

THE OUTLOOK CO. - NEW YORK

A Drink That Satisfies . .

Do you realize that you can make a delightful summer beverage from . . . .

"IDEAL"
Root Beer or Lemonade
Tablets

Add one "IDEAL" tablet to a glass of water and sweeten to the taste, no preparation necessary. QUICK and REFRESHING.

ASK YOUR DRUGGIST FOR THEM

or send us 12 cents for a sample bottle.

Prepared solely by BILLINGS, CLAPP & CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Trigestia

for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Headache, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach

IN this preparation the Pepsin used is concentrated, and of the highest digestive power. The Bismuth is the purest the market affords. The Nux Vomica is the best English extract. The efficacy of this combination lies in its triple effect—that of the actual solvent action of the Pepsin on all articles of food, the prevention of fermentation and formation of gases by the Bismuth, and the stimulant effect of the Nux Vomica (which is undoubtedly the best known tonic for nervous dyspepsia) on the secretion of the digestive fluids.

WILL RESTORE ROSY CHEEKS, ELASTIC STEP, AND HAPPY SPIRITS

Price, 25 and 50 Cents per Bottle, postpaid

A. J. DITMAN, Chemist, - - 2 Barclay Street, NEW YORK

Sozodont
FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH

Delightfully Fragrant and Refreshing-
A Favorite with Connoisseurs
For Half-a-Century

A sample by mail if you send three cents for postage and mention this publication Address the Proprietors of SOZODONT, HALL & RUCKEL, Wholesale Druggists, New York City.

Pretty Cottages

require pretty coloring. The soft, velvety browns, greens, and grays of keep them in harmony with the bark, the mosses, and the rocks—nature's tints. A glaze of paint cannot do this, nor does it preserve the wood; while "wood treated with (Creosote) is not subject to dry rot or other decay."—Century Dictionary.

Cabot's Creosote Shingle Stains

23 Stained Cedar Samples, with Color Studies of Houses, sent on request.

SAMUEL CABOT, 81 Kilby St., Boston, Mass.
Agents at all Central Points

House Furnishing

COOKING UTENSILS, CUTLERY, CROCKERY, FINE CHINA AND GLASS, EDDY REFRIGERATORS.
WATER FILTERS AND COOLERS
CEDAR AND CAMPHORWOOD CHEST

LEWIS & CONGER

130 and 132 West 42d St., N. Y.

BRIDGES and ROOFS

need be painted but once in 20 years, if first painted with DIXON'S Silica Graphite PAINT.
JOS. DIXON CRUCIBLE CO., Jersey City, N. J.

About People

—It is said of Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the noted teetotaler, that he was once disconcerted at a political meeting. "I must tell you," he shouted with emphasis, "that I am a party man." Shrill voice: "Yes, a tea party man."

—International literary fame is a peculiar thing; here is the Paris "Daily Messenger" saying: "Julia Ward Howe is a veteran in the cause of liberty. She made her fame by the publication of that well-known anti-slavery book, 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'"

—Ex-King Francis I. of Naples having left some property in England, his will was proved in that country. It closes with these words: "I thank all those who have been good to me, pardon those who have harmed me, and ask pardon of those whom I have done harm to."

—Bismarck is very fond of plovers' eggs, and his admirers often send him baskets of them. Once he wrote to a friend: "I have received for my birthday a hundred plover eggs and a symphony. I do not hesitate to declare that I would have been less pleased had I received a hundred symphonies and one egg."

—Mrs. Stannard, the author of "Bootles's Baby," was once introduced to Sir Morell Mackenzie at a London entertainment by her writing name of "John Strange Winter." The doctor, who did not keep up with current fiction, looked somewhat dazed, and repeated the name wonderingly, whereupon the author remarked: "Oh, yes, I'm Bootles's Baby." Sir Morell retreated, marveling still more, and, drawing a friend aside, confided to him that "he had just met a poor demented lady, who was introduced as a man and thought herself a baby."

—A striking story is told by Darwin in the life of his grandfather, Dr. Darwin, of Shrewsbury. One day a patient entered the consulting-room of a London physician and detailed the symptoms of his illness. It was an obscure and difficult case, of a kind that was only imperfectly understood, and the London doctor confessed himself fairly puzzled. He could only state that the patient was in a most perilous state. "There is but one man in England who understands the disease," said the London doctor, "and you should go and consult him. It is Dr. Darwin, of Shrewsbury." "Alas!" was the answer, "I am that Dr. Darwin."

—According to a writer in the "Kraj," a Polish paper published in St. Petersburg, Count Tolstoï is a descendant of a German family which went to Russia in the fifteenth century. The original name was Dick, meaning fat, which was translated into its Russian equivalent Tolstoj. Tolstoï's mother died when he was only two years old. When he entered the university his chosen field was Oriental languages, but he neglected his studies and led such a life of dissipation that he failed to pass his examinations. Subsequently he studied law, and then entered the army. During a war in the Caucasus the idea came to him of devoting himself to literature, and it was Tourguéneff who confirmed him in this determination.

—The Cracow "Wzek" relates the following Tolstoï anecdote: The novelist, whose dress does not usually betray his aristocratic rank, saw a Moscow policeman take a drunken peasant to the station. The "copper" did not handle his charge very gently, and Tolstoï addressed him: "Can you read?" he asked. "Sure," answered the policeman. "Have you ever read the Gospels?" "I have." "Then you ought to know that it is wrong to hurt your fellow-man." The guardian of the peace looked his shabby interrogator all over, and began to catechize him: "Can you read?" "I can." "Have you ever read the instructions for the police?" "I have not." "Well, you had better do that before you ask so many questions!"

—A New York etcher, an exchange tells us, recently set himself to the task of etching a portrait of Andrew Lang, the English poet. He ordered a photograph of his subject from a dealer. When it arrived he made an elaborate etching, of which an art-dealer bought copies. Lang is a man of about forty years of age, with a long, slender face and a drooping mustache. The etching was of a man nearly fifty years of age, with a round face and full beard. Some one who knew Lang saw the picture, and declared that his friend must have grown that beard very quickly, and, if the picture was correct, he had become remarkably fat. The dealer began an investigation, and found that the photograph importer had sent the etcher a picture of Sir Andrew Long, a prominent importer of Glasgow, and a jolly gentleman, who laughed heartily when he heard of the mistake. The artist has promised to etch another portrait. Meanwhile some American bibliophiles have decorated their libraries with pictures of the Scotch importer.

The Armenian Fund

Previously acknowledged	$7,391 69
J. J. C., Fulton, N. Y	5 00
J. S. A., Philadelphia, Pa	25 00
C	2 00
Vancouver Y. M. C. A., per G. A. C	2 50
Mrs. S. S. B., Camden, N. J	5 00
Elmira, N. Y	1 00
Tokio, Japan	3 00
Collection in Public Schools, Fairmont, Minn	2 30
Galway, N. Y	10 00
Total	$7,447 49

BE EASY!

Use

Sunlight Soap

Easiest Soap in the World.
It does all the work; you
Don't have to Rub or Scrub.
Saves your clothes wonderfully too,
It's So Pure.

Lever Bros., Ltd., Hudson and Harrison Sts., N.Y

The Sun Shines.

We all know that. And there's another thing that's just as certain, viz.: that with Pearline you have the easiest, the safest, the quickest, the most economical washing and cleaning. Look at the millions of women who are using Pearline. Look at the hundreds of millions of packages that have been used. What further evidence do you want? If Pearline were not just what we say it is, don't you suppose that the air would be filled with complaints? 486

Millions NOW USE Pearline

PICTURE TAKING IS EASY

With a BULLS-EYE Camera

No Dark Room is required as it uses light-proof film cartridges and can be loaded in daylight. Complete illustrated manual, free, with every instrument.

LIGHTEST, SIMPLEST.
$8.00 and $12.00.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.
Booklet Free. Rochester, N. Y.

Through the Sweltering Heat of June, July, and August every garment should be of the lightest and coolest texture.

$1.00 POSTPAID

Why Wear the Warm Winter Corset?

Why not change for a cool waist, made of light and airy summer nets? So much easier than the corset. Does not fatigue, does not constrict the body; does not impair the health, but does lend a grace and beuuty to the figure impossible to obtain with a corset. Unsurpassed for Cycling, Rowing, Tennis, or Gymnasium, because all natural motions of the body are not restricted. Ask your dealer for the

GENUINE

Jackson Favorite Waist

TAKE NO OTHER!

Made in Drab, White, Gold and Black Sateen, and White Summer Net.—Clasp or Button Front.—Extra Long Waist. Sent postpaid on receipt of One Dollar. Address

CORONET CORSET CO.
JACKSON, MICH.

STAMPED STEEL CEILINGS

DECORATIVE, DURABLE, AND BEST

for Dwellings, Churches, or Business Houses. Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue.

H. S. NORTHROP, 29 Cherry St., N.Y.

EDUCATIONAL

New York City

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established 1855. 3 East 14th St., N. Y.

The Misses Ely's School for Girls
RIVERSIDE DRIVE
85th and 86th Streets, New York

CLASSICAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Edith H. Gregory, Elizabeth P. Getty, Principals.
Resident pupils. 2034 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S

Boarding and Day School for Girls, 15 West 86th Street, New York City. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and Chaperonage for special students.

Miss Peebles and Miss Thompson's Boarding and Day School for Girls
30, 32, and 34 East 57th St., New York
Special students admitted.

VICE-PRINCIPAL, twenty years in a large private school in New York City, seeks position of trust; library, school, or any other institution. Address
Mrs. ALBERT W. BERG, 356 W. 20th St., N. Y.

California

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont, Cal.—Full College courses leading to degrees of B.A., B.L., B.S. Degrees recognized by University of California and other similar graduate schools. Thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. An Academic course. Preparatory school preparing for all institutions connected with the College. Address C. G. BALDWIN, President.

Connecticut

Brookfield Center. Fairfield Co., Conn.
The Curtis School for Young Boys
A strong life in school and out, full of normal activities and healthy conditions. A clean moral atmosphere, a loyalty, a high purpose—full of help for your boy's manhood. Home life; single rooms. $500. 22d year. A book full of suggestion. FREDERICK S CURTIS.

The Housatonic Valley Institute Cornwall Conn.
Among the Berkshire Hills of Northwestern Connecticut. Home School for boys. Classical, Scientific, Business, Preparatory Courses. Thirteenth year.
H. B. MacFarland, S. B., L. W. Arnold, A. B., Principals.

The Misses Stowe Principals of the HOMESTEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Greenwich, Ct. A Family School for 12 Girls.

Woodside Seminary Terms, $500 to $700. City advantages for culture and study. Rural surroundings.
Miss SARA J. SMITH, Principal, Hartford, Conn.

HARTFORD THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
63d Year Opens October 7, 1896.
Unexcelled Advantages for College Graduates.
HARTFORD, CONN.

THE Hotchkiss School
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
Prepares for the best colleges and scientific schools. The next year will begin Sept. 16, 1896.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

MISS AIKEN'S BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. Daily drill in Miss Aiken's method. Prepares for college. For terms and circular apply to Principal Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER SCOVILLE DEVAN, Stamford, Conn.

STAMFORD, CONN.
MISS LOW'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Miss Low and Miss Heywood, Principals.

SCHOOL FOR BOYS—Summer Session
MARK PITMAN, A.M., Principal
Wallingford, Conn.
References:
Hon. Wm. G. Choate, New York.
Rev. Edward Everett Hale, D.D., Boston.
Dr. Francis Bacon, New Haven.
Hon. Nathaniel Shipman, Hartford.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE Windsor, Conn.
A Home School for Girls of all ages. Refers to the Board of Examiners of five colleges as to the thoroughness of its instruction, and to its patrons for the care of the health and morals of its pupils. Terms, $350 to $500. For circulars address Miss J. S. WILLIAMS, Prin.

District of Columbia

Chevy Chase French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies.—Half an hour from Washington, D. C., by electric cars. French the Language of the house. Reopens October 1, 1896. Address Mlle. Léa Bouligny, P. O. Station E, Washington, D. C.

France

FRANCE, Paris.—St. Margaret's Church School. A French and American School for Girls. French the language of the household. Autumn term opens October 1. Terms, $1,000 a year. Address Miss Julia H. C. Acly, 50 Avenue d'Jéna.

A teacher will conduct pupils from New York to Paris in September. Address, until Sept. 1, Miss Mary Davy, care Finch Van Slyck & Young, St. Paul, Minn

Germany

GERMANY, BERLIN Kleiststrasse, 26. Fräulein Lange's school for young ladies offers the best opportunities in languages, music, art, literature, and home culture. Also Normal course. Beautiful and healthful location. Students enter any time. Best American references.

Illinois

Rockford College for Women
Fall Term Opens Wed., Sept. 16, 1896
Classical and Science Courses. Excellent Preparatory School. Specially organized departments of Music and Art. Well-equipped Laboratories. Fine Gymnasium. Resident physician. Memorial Hall enables students to reduce expenses. For catalogues address PHEBE T. SUTLIFF, Principal, Rockford, Illinois. Lock Box 9.

Massachusetts

OAK GROVE HOME SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Amherst, Mass. Reopens September 23d, 1896. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley.
Miss VRYLING WILDER BUFFUM, A.B., Principal

Mount Doma Home School for Girls
Prepares for college. Send for circular.
Rev. E. C. WINSLOW, A.M., Amherst, Mass.

AMHERST, MASS.
Mrs. W. F. Stearns's Home School for Young Ladies. Reopens Sept. 22, 1896.

Auburndale, Mass. (10 miles from Boston)
Lasell Seminary FOR Young Women
suggests to parents seeking a good school consideration of the following points in its methods:

1st. Its special care of health.

Resident Nurse supervising work, diet, and exercise; abundant food in good variety, and well cooked; early and long sleep, a fine gymnasium, furnished by Dr. Sargent of Harvard; bowling-alley and swimming-bath; no regular or foreknown examinations, etc.

2d. Its broadly planned course of study.

Boston proximity both necessitates and helps to furnish the best of teachers, including many specialists; with one hundred and twenty pupils, a faculty of thirty. Four years' course; in some things equal to college work; in others, planned rather for home and womanly life. Two studies required and two to be chosen from a list of eight or ten electives. One preparatory year. Special students admitted if eighteen years or over, or graduates of high schools.

3d. Its homelike air and character.

Training in self-government; limited number (many declined every fall for lack of room), personal oversight in habits, manners, care of person, room, etc.; comforts not stinted.

4th. Its handiwork and other unusual departments.

Pioneer school in scientific teaching of Cooking, Millinery, Dress-Cutting, Business Law for Women, Home Sanitation, Swimming.

Regular expense for school year, $500. For illustrated catalogue address (mentioning The Outlook),
C. G. BRAGDON, Principal.

There are but few good musical institutions. The largest, best, and most successful in America is the New England Conservatory of Music, Oratory and Languages at Boston, Mass. Comprehensive in plan, moderate in price, thorough in practice, and famous for results.

Carl Fælten, Musical Director. Frank W. Hale, Gen. Mgr. Send for Prospectus.

Manual Training

FREE COURSES for TEACHERS, fitting for both Grammar and High School Work at the SLOYD TRAINING SCHOOL, established by Mrs. Quincy A. Shaw, in Boston.
Time for each course, October 1st to June 1st.
Address GUSTAV LARSSON, Principal
39 North Bennet St. - - - Boston, Mass.

Massachusetts

Boston University Law School
New Hall, Ashburton Place,
Opens Oct. 7. Boston, Mass.

18 Newbury St., Boston, Mass.
Miss Frances V. Emerson
Successor to Miss Abby H. Johnson. School for Girls. College Preparatory. Regular and advanced Courses.

THE CAMBRIDGE SCHOOL A select, private school for girls. Best preparation for college. Many courses not leading to college. Comforts of home. Mr. ARTHUR GILMAN is the Director, Cambridge, Mass.

PROSPECT HILL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
GREENFIELD, MASS.
A thorough education with good home influence.
Established 1869.
Miss Ida F. Foster, Miss Caroline R. Clark, Principals.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD SUMMER INSTITUTE, Cottage City, Mass. Nineteenth year begins July 13, 1896. Send for 80-page circular.
WILLIAM A. MOWRY, Pres., Hyde Park, Mass.

LOWELL, MASS. ROGERS HALL
A Home School for Girls and Young Women. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley. Reopens October first. Terms, $750. References: Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Mrs. Frederic T. Greenhalge. For further particulars address Mrs. E. P. UNDERHILL, M.A., Principal.

MONTVALE, MASS.
Ashley Hall Home School for Young Ladies. Ten miles from Boston. Music, Art, and Languages. Thorough preparation for College.
Miss WHITTEMORE, Principal, Montvale, Mass.

WALNUT HILL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Natick, Mass. Two miles from Wellesley, seventeen miles from Boston. Certificate admits to Wellesley and other Colleges.
MISS CHARLOTTE H. CONANT, MISS FLORENCE BIGELOW, Principals.

KINDERGARTEN NORMAL
DEP'T OF THE Industrial Institute
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Two years' course. Send for catalogue.

Announcement

DURING the Summer of 1896, instruction in all the subjects necessary for admission to the best colleges and scientific schools will be given at Cotuit, Massachusetts, under the direction of Principal Charles E. Fish. The courses of instruction are for the benefit of four classes of Students:

1. Candidates who have received conditions at the entrance examinations.
2. Candidates who have postponed examinations until September.
3. Students in Secondary Schools, who, by reason of illness or other cause, have deficiencies to make up.
4. Students in Secondary Schools who wish to anticipate studies and save time in the preparation for college.

For descriptive circular address
CHARLES E. FISH, Principal,
The Waban School, Waban, Mass.

QUINCY MANSION
The Quincy Mansion School for Girls
Will open at Quincy, Sept. 23. Regular Courses; experienced teachers; special attention paid to vocal and instrumental music; certificate admits to college; new school building; class-rooms on first floor; stairs few and easy; beautiful grounds—four acres; view of Boston, the harbor, and Massachusetts Bay; rooms high and light; fire-places; steam heat; electric lights; open plumbing; 13 min. ride from Boston. Send for prospectus to Dr. HORACE MANN WILLARD, Wollaston, Mass.

Miss Kimball's School for Girls Worcester, Mass.
Thorough preparation for College. Intermediate, Academic, and Special Courses. Send for Illustrated Circular.

EASTERN ❧ TEACHERS' ❧ AGENCY Miss E. F. FOSTER, Manager
50 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS. - Telephone, Boston, 775-2.
Teachers furnished for all grades of public and private schools. Specialists in any desired branches. Tutors and Governesses.

Massachusetts

HIGHLAND MILITARY ACADEMY, Worcester ("The Academic City"), Mass. 41st year. Best preparation for College, Professional or Business Life. Healthful location. Careful selection and supervision of students. Small Classes.
JOSEPH ALDEN SHAW, A.M., Head Master.

WORCESTER ACADEMY Prepares boys for any College or Scientific School. Buildings new with every modern improvement of School-House, Dormitories, Dining-Hall, Gymnasium, and Infirmary with trained nurse. Playground and oval unexcelled. 63d year begins Sept. 9, 1896.
D. W. ABERCROMBIE, A.M., Prin., Worcester, Mass.

Worcester Polytechnic Institute Worcester, Mass.
Courses of Study in Mechanical, Civil, and Electrical Engineering, and Chemistry. 158-Page Catalogue, showing appointments secured by graduates, mailed free. Expenses low. 29th year. T. C. MENDENHALL, President.

Michigan

University of Michigan
SUMMER SCHOOL
June 29 till August 7

Nineteen departments (including Law). Seventy courses offered. For full information apply to the Secretary of the University, JAMES H. WADE, Ann Arbor, Mich.

New Hampshire

The Fletcher Prize of $500

The Trustees of Dartmouth College offer the above prize, according to the will of the Hon. Richard Fletcher, for the best essay calculated to counteract the present tendency to a "Fatal Conformity to the World."

Subject for 1896, "Should any restrictions, legal or moral, be placed upon the accumulation of wealth?"

No essay to be less than 200 pages or more than 250 pages of 270 words each. Copy to be typewritten and to be in hand on Dec. 20, 1896.

Circular containing further particulars forwarded if desired.
WILLIAM J. TUCKER,
President of Dartmouth College.
Hanover, N. H., June 1, 1896.

The Phillips Exeter Academy
The 114th year begins September 16th, 1896. Eighty Scholarships awarded to students of high standing. For illustrated Catalogue address
HARLAN P. AMEN, Principal, Exeter, N. H.

COLBY ACADEMY, New London, N. H.
$200 to $250 a Year. Co-educational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, PRESIDENT.

New Jersey

The healthfulness of the location of the

Bordentown (N. J.)
Female College

is proverbial. It occupies a commanding site on a bluff of the Delaware river, sixty feet high.

If the school plans for your daughter are not yet made we would like to send you our catalogue, which will explain fully how we give our girls health and education in a real home. Entirely refitted and refurnished during the past year.

REV. J. W. BLAISDELL, President.
FREDERICK T. SHULTZ, A. M., Head Master.

BORDENTOWN MILITARY INSTITUTE
Bordentown, N. J.
Prepares for Colleges and Government Academies. Music; Military Training; Government, a combination of parental and military. No compromise on tobacco, liquor, or hazing. Rev. T. H. LANDON, A.M., Prin. Capt. T. D. LANDON, Com'd't.

PEDDIE INSTITUTE Hightstown, N. J. Prepares for College, Teaching, Business. Courses in German, French, Music, Art. Both sexes. 29th year opens Sept. 9th.
Address Rev. JOSEPH E. PERRY, Ph.D., Prin.

The Misses Anable's English, French, and German Boarding and Day School
NEW BRUNSWICK, NEW JERSEY
College Preparation, Art, and Music. Apply for circulars.

New Jersey

SUMMIT, N. J. Near New York
The Kent Place School for Girls
Principal, Mrs. Sarah Woodman Paul, late of Wellesley College. Modern methods. College preparation. Home comforts for boarding pupils.
HAMILTON W. MABIE, President.

New York

Wells College for the higher education of young women.
The catalogue gives full information about entrance requirements, courses of study, scholarships, expenses, etc., and will be mailed upon application to WILLIAM E. WATERS, Ph.D., President, Aurora, N. Y.

284 Delaware Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.
BUFFALO SEMINARY
The forty-sixth year. For circulars address
Mrs. C. F. HARTT, Principal.

The Lady Jane Grey School
Binghamton, N. Y.—Home School for Young Ladies and Little Girls. Address Mrs. JANE GREY HYDE.

New York Military Academy
CORNWALL-ON-HUDSON
For boarding cadets only. Distinctively military in organization and discipline. Located on the Hudson River four miles from West Point, in a region famous for its beauty and healthfulness. For catalogue address
S. C. JONES, C.E., Superintendent.

MISS BENNETT'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y. Opens Sept. 23d. 1896. An exceptional school with the most desirable school features, 20 miles from New York. Refers to Charles Dudley Warner, &c. Apply to the Principals,
Miss MAY F. BENNETT, Miss ELEANOR W. ROSE.

ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL
MANLIUS, N. Y.
Next term begins September 16th, 1896.
Apply to WM. VERBECK.

NEW YORK, Newburgh.
The Misses Mackie's School for Girls
Academic and College-Preparatory. Special advantages in Art and Music. Certificate admits to Vassar and Wellesley.
One and a half hours from New York.

The Peekskill Military Academy
Peekskill, N. Y.—63d year. Send for illustrated catalogue. Col. LOUIS H. ORLEMAN, Prin.

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL
For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation. SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y

RIVERVIEW ACADEMY
61st year. Prepares thoroughly for college, the Government Academies, and Business. U. S. Army officer detailed at Riverview by Secretary of War.
JOSEPH B. BISBEE, A.M., Principal, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Mount Pleasant Military Academy
A high-grade school for boys. Fits for college and for business. 82d year. Library of 12,000 volumes. Summer session. Reference: Hon. JOSEPH H. CHOATE. Send for catalogue. CHARLES F. BRUSIE, A.M., ARTHUR T. EMORY, A.B., Principals. Sing Sing-on-Hudson.

BERKELEY ACADEMY RAMAPO MOUNTAINS
Summer session; real home life; one hour out; co-educational; $250 per year. Rev. J. Cameron, M.A., Suffern, N.Y.

IRVING INSTITUTE FOR BOYS
Tarrytown-on-Hudson, N. Y. 25 miles from N. Y. City. 41st year begins in September. Summer term.
J. M. FURMAN, A.M., Principal.

TROY, N. Y.
EMMA WILLARD SCHOOL
Preparation for all colleges open to women; four years academic course; graduate courses; departments of music and art. 83d year opens Sept. 23, 1896.
MARY ALICE KNOX, Principal.

Ohio

1020 Prospect Street, Cleveland, Ohio
Miss Mittleberger's School for Girls
Prepares for all Colleges open to women.
Fall term begins September 23.

Oberlin Theological Seminary 62d year opens Sept. 23d, with special advantages in the College and the Conservatory of Music. E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec.

Ohio

OXFORD, OHIO
THE WESTERN A College and Seminary for Women
Miss LEILA S. MCKEE, Ph.D., President. Forty-second year opens Sept. 9, 1896. Superior advantages for thorough Christian culture. Terms, $250 per year.

Lake Erie Seminary for Young Women
PAINESVILLE, O.
Thirty-eighth year opens Sept. 16. A new building for laboratories and lecture-rooms.
For circulars address Miss EVANS, Principal.

Pennsylvania

Miss Baldwin's School FOR GIRLS
BRYN MAWR, PA.
Miss FLORENCE BALDWIN, Principal. Preparatory to Bryn Mawr College. Within five years more than fifty pupils have entered Bryn Mawr College from this school. Certificate admits to Smith, Vassar, and Wellesley. Diploma given in both General and College Preparatory Courses. Fine fire-proof stone building. 25 acres beautiful grounds. For circular address the Secretary.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
Opens Sept. 30. Established in 1850. Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. For circular, apply to Principals, FRANCES E. BENNETT, SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Ogontz School P.O., Pa.

1350 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Anable's Boarding & Day School
FOR YOUNG LADIES. Estab. in 1848. Circular on application.

WALNUT LANE SCHOOL
Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.
Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies. Reopens Sept. 23d. Academic and College Preparatory courses.
Mrs. T. B. RICHARDS, Prin.
Miss S. L. TRACY, A.M., Associate.

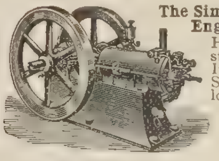
PHILADELPHIA SEMINARY
1325 N. Broad St., Phila. College preparatory. Languages, Art, Music, etc. 26th year. For circular address REBECCA E. JUDKINS, Principal.

Miss Gordon's French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies and Little Girls
4110 and 4112 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Virginia

ROANOKE COLLEGE, SALEM, VA.
Courses for Degrees, with Electives. Large Library. Working Laboratory. Beautiful, healthful mountain location. Good morals. Very moderate expenses. Catalogue, with views, free. Address THE PRESIDENT.

THE CHICAGO GAS AND GASOLINE ENGINE



The Simplest Gas and Gasoline Engine on the Market.
Has no equal for absolute, steady speed and durability. It is a dwarf in size, but a Samson in strength. Catalogue sent on application.
MANUFACTURED BY
J. J. NORMAN CO.
64 and 66 So. Clinton St.,
Chicago, Ill.

FREE Cut this out and send to-day for free catalogue. $2.75 buys natural finish Baby Carriage with plated steel wheels, axle, springs, one piece bent handle. 3 years guarantee. Carriages sent on 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL. BUY FROM FACTORY & SAVE DEALERS' PROFITS. OXFORD MDSE. CO., 340 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

REX BRAND
Extract of BEEF FLAVOR
Sample, 4 cents. Book free.
CUDAHY - - SO. OMAHA

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE. Pure, Delicious Flavor. Mix with boiling milk or water, and it's made.
Stephen F. Whitman & Son, Philadelphia.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Want advertisements of thirty words or less will be published under this heading at one dollar a week. Four cents a week is charged for each word in excess of thirty.

SUBURBAN HOMES can be bought direct from owners at an advantage to the buyers; also first-class plots for investment. Address GRANDVIEW LAND COMPANY, 354 Fourth Avenue, New York.

SCOTCH GENTLEMAN of good social position abroad desires care of two or three gentlemen's sons to travel Europe (by team or cars). Address ALPHA, Tryon, N. C.

AN EDUCATED WOMAN desires a position as house mistress, chaperon, matron, or traveling companion. Experienced and capable. A. H., No. 1,433, care The Outlook.

Recreation Department

It will give The Outlook Company much pleasure to assist you in planning your

Summer Outing

if you will write stating fully what you desire. No charge is made for this service.

Suggestions for planning a vacation or a trip anywhere in the world; printed information, if issued, concerning any Transportation Line, any Tour, any Hotel, or any Pleasure or Health Resort in any part of the world, will be sent on request, without charge, to any Outlook reader.
Address Recreation Department, The Outlook, 13 Astor Place, New York.

For Summer Tourists

The summer excursion book issued by the Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western Railroad places before its readers a guide to the most picturesque and diversified summer resorts of three States—New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and New York. From so fashionable a resort as Richfield Springs down to so fashionably unfashionable a resort as Schooley's Mountain, each place whose charms have created a demand for summer accommodation is presented historically, geographically, topographically, and socially; illustrations and maps, of course. A special feature of this book is a complete list of towns, with rates, that can be used in connection with tickets via the Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western. The price of this book is the cost of the postage, six cents, to those mentioning The Outlook. Address W. F. Holwill, G.P.A., 26 Exchange Place, N. Y.

Opening of the Mountain House, Cresson Springs, and Stopping of all Express Trains at Cresson

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company announces that on and after Thursday, June 25, 1896, all trains will stop at Cresson. The Pennsylvania Limited will stop only when there are passengers to get on or off at that point. The Mountain House will be opened on that day.

Commencing the same day, observation cars will be attached to the Pacific Express west and the Day Express east for the trip over the mountains.

Nova Scotia

is drawing to its hospitable shores a larger number of tourists every year. This is on account of its healthful climate. beautiful scenery, and historical associations. The "Land of Evangeline" is famous the world over. The "Flying Bluenose" train is second to none in America. The "Prince Rupert," plying between St. John, N. B., and Digby, N. S., is the fastest steamer on the eastern seaboard. Write to the undersigned for illustrated guide-book entitled "The Land of Evangeline and Gateways Thither," which are mailed free. J. F. Masters, Agent Dominion Atlantic Railway, 228 Washington St., Boston.

Providence Line

From New York for Boston, Worcester, the North and East. The Connecticut and Massachusetts leave New Pier 36, N. R., one block above Canal St., at 5:30 P.M., daily, except Sunday. Full night's rest; shortest rail ride. Fine orchestra on each steamer. STONINGTON LINE, for Narragansett Pier and Watch Hill. Steamers leave New York at 6 P.M.

IF YOU ARE GOING TO TRAVEL with every comfort and convenience, securing advantages not found in a Letter of Credit, try the

Cheque Bank Cheques

£

They take the place of cash all over the world, and no experienced traveler goes abroad without them. Send for illustrated pamphlet telling you all about their many advantages, to agency of

The U. S. Cheque Bank, Ltd.

FREDERICK W. PERRY, Manager,
40 & 45 Wall St., N. Y.
Agents wanted in every city.

TRAVELERS' R. R. GUIDE Formerly Appletons'. R. R. Maps and Time-Tables. Conveniently Indexed. Monthly—25 cents. 24 Park Place, N. Y.

EUROPE

EUROPE, 1896 11th SEASON

38 Days, all expenses............ $175
66 " " "............ $400

Circulars upon application.
ELIAS BROOKINGS, 54 Madison Ave., Springfield, Mass.

SWITZERLAND—ITALY Four young ladies may pass autumn in Switzerland with chaperon; splendid advantages for French; horseback riding; bicycle and other excursions; vintage season in old château near Geneva. Three months, $200.00. Winter tour in Italy. References. Address Miss H. M. BARBOUR, Neuchatel, Switzerland.

Europe

International Navigation Company's Lines

SAILING EVERY WEDNESDAY
From Piers 14 and 15, North River, New York (foot of Fulton St.)

AMERICAN LINE

NEW YORK—SOUTHAMPTON (London—Paris)

Ohio..Sat.	June 27, 10 A.M.	St Louis...	Aug. 12, 10 A.M.
St Paul	July 1, 10 A.M.	St Paul....	Aug. 19, 10 A.M.
Paris..(Sat.)	July 4, 10 A.M.	Paris....	Aug. 26, 10 A.M.
New York..	July 8, 10 A.M.	NewYork(Sat.)	Aug.29,10AM
St Louis...	July 15, 10 A.M.	St Louis....	Sept. 2, 10 A.M.
St Paul...	July 22, 10 A.M.	St Paul....	Sept. 9, 10 A.M.
New York..	July 29, 10 A.M.	Paris.....	Sept. 16, 10 A.M.
Paris......	Aug. 5, 10 A.M.	NewYork(Sat.)	Sep.19,10AM

RED STAR LINE

NEW YORK—ANTWERP

Kensington..	July 1, 2 P.M.	Friesland..	Aug. 5, 12 noon
Westernland,	July 8, 12 noon	Kensington,	Aug. 12, 12 noon
Southwark,	July 15, 1:30 P.M.	Westernl'nd,	Aug. 19, 12noon
Berlin......	July 22, 12 noon	Southwark,	Aug. 26, 12noon
Noordland,	July 29, 12 noon	Noordland,	Sept. 2, 12 noon

INTERNATIONAL NAVIGATION COMPANY
6 Bowling Green, New York
305-307 Walnut St., Philadelphia.
143 La Salle St., Chicago.
609 Market St. (Grand Hotel Bldg.), San Francisco.

Prince of Wales Lake Hotel

GRASMERE, ENGLAND
ENGLISH LAKES
HOME AND BURIAL PLACE OF THE POET WORDSWORTH
Strongly Recommended by Dr. Lyman Abbott

3 hours from Liverpool, 4 from Chester, 7 from London, 4 from Edinburgh or Glasgow. Most central for breaking journey going or returning from Scotland. Send to the Recreation Department for further information.

European Summer Resort

INNSBRUCK, TYROL, AUSTRIA
1,900 feet above the sea, with, dry, bracing climate; center for Coaching Trips and Excursions of all kinds; fine university, hospital, &c.

HOTEL TIROL (Open all the year.) Large, airy, sunny rooms, well furnished; superior cuisine; modern conveniences. Best references. Illustrated pamphlets on application. CARL LANDSEE, Prop'r.

Hotel Mont-Fleuri

TERRITET MONTREUX
LAKE OF GENEVA
600 Meters Above the Sea

First-class Hotel; most delightful and healthy situation; splendid view over the lake and the Alps; highly recommended to American families; summer and winter residence; lift, electric lights; moderate terms; omnibus at station Territet.
Circulars of The Outlook.

Munich, Germany

"Bayerischer Hof" (BAVARIA) Most fashionable Hotel
250 ROOMS & SALOONS
Electric Light, Lift, etc. Moderate terms.
Prop're, TH. SEIF^{we}. Director, H. SCHLENK.

HOLLAND

AMSTERDAM

AMSTEL HOTEL The largest hotel in Amsterdam. Strongly recommended to families. Every moderate comfort. Moderate prices

Europe

Lake of Como, Italy

GRAND HOTEL BELLAGIO

AND DEPENDANCE

HOTEL VILLA SERBELLONI

One of the finest Hotels in Europe. The most beautiful site on the Italian Lakes. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Electric light. Telegraph in the hotel. L. BREITSCHMID, P.

LUCERNE, SWITZERLAND

Hotel d'Angleterre First class; lift; finest situation in Lucerne; arrangement de pension; prices moderate; opens April 1st. F. HEFFEN, Prop.

INTERLAKEN, SWITZERLAND

Hotel AND Pension St. George

Situated directly on the main promenade, opposite the park and the mountains. Cable-cars connect with steamboats and railroads. Highly recommended. C. LICHTENBERGER.

CROWN HOTEL

Scarborough, Eng.

Occupying the finest position in this beautiful seaside resort. Electric lights and bells throughout. Continental entrance lounge newly added. Terms on application. DOUGLAS GORDON (late of the Gordon Hotels, Lim.).

Stratford-on-Avon, England Golden Lion Hotel

This favorite Inn was known in Shakespeare's time as "Ye Peacocke Inn," 1613. JOHN FRY, Prop.

TRAVEL

"Where Times are Prosperous"

SPEND YOUR SUMMER VACATION IN THE

Rocky Mountains

TAKE THE...

ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

To Denver,
Colorado Springs, or Pueblo.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO COLORADO SPRINGS, MANITOU AND PIKES' PEAK

4 HOURS QUICKER TIME TO CRIPPLE CREEK which should be included in your trip, and an investigation of the resources of this place may well repay your visit.

Tourist Dictionary ...Sent Free... Apply for it.

Address JOHN SEBASTIAN,
Gen'l Pass. Agent,
CHICAGO.

RAMSDELL LINE

Steamers leave Pier 24 N. R., foot Franklin St., for Cranston's, West Point, Cold Spring, Cornwall, Fishkill Landing, and Newburg, week days, 5 P.M.; Sunday, 9 A.M.; 132d St. & N. R. 9:25 A.M. Returning leave Newburg daily 7 P.M. U. S. Hotel at Newburg landing. Dinner 50 cents

Travel

THE PERFECT SUMMER LAND

Ever summered in Nova Scotia? It's ideal—cool, healthful, beautiful in scenery, romantic in history, perfect for cycling, boating, bathing, and fishing. And a charming 17-hour sail, at a $5.00 fare ($9.00 for the round trip) takes you to from Boston, on the "Yarmouth," the finest and fastest coasting steamer that leaves Boston Harbor.

NOVA SCOTIA

It sails from Lewis Wharf Tuesday and Friday, at noon, and next morning you breakfast at Yarmouth, the Gateway of Nova Scotia. from which you can reach the beautiful Annapolis Valley, the famous Evangeline country, or the wonderful South Shore. "Beautiful Nova Scotia," a brand-new, finely illustrated book by a Boston writer, tells all about it.

Send ten cents postage for it or write for free folder to
J. F. SPINNEY, Agent
YARMOUTH STEAMSHIP CO.
43 Lewis Wharf, Boston, Mass.

LOW PRICES FOR BOARD in Attractive Summer Homes.—Write the Maine Central R.R., Pass. Dept., Portland, Maine. Full summer service in effect June 21st to White Mountains, Bar Harbor, Rangeley Lakes, Moosehead Lake, St. Andrews. Guide-books, folders, and full information on application.

SUMMER HOMES IN VERMONT AND ON THE SHORES OF LAKE CHAMPLAIN

A NEW illustrated book, describing this unequaled summer resort section, offering the BEST TABLE BOARD, hospitable people, outdoor pleasures, fishing, boating, or perfect rest. Climate and scenery unsurpassed. Prices from $5 per week upwards.

Mailed free, on receipt five cents postage, on application to

A. W. ECCLESTONE, or S. W. CUMMINGS,
S.P.A., 353 Broadway, New York. G.P.A., St. Albans, Vt.

SUMMER HOMES

in the southern Berkshire and Litchfield Hills, along the Philadelphia, Reading, and New England Railroad. Handsomely illustrated book of 184 pages, giving full information, free at New England News Bureau, 3 Park Place; 13 Astor Place, New York, and offices of Dodd's or Westcott Express Companies in New York or Brooklyn; also at the Eagle Information Bureau or 4 Court St., Brooklyn, or will be mailed on receipt of 6 cents postage to

W. J. MARTIN,
General Passenger Agent, Hartford, Conn.

SUMMER COTTAGES

For Rent at Grove Beach, Conn.

A Fully Furnished Cottage
Address NELLY B. WRIGHT, Clinton, Conn.

TO RENT—On the ocean, at Wainscott, East Hampton, L.I., summer cottage, fully furnished; 14 rooms; bath-houses on ocean; pier on lake; surf-bathing, rowing, sailing, golf and tennis on place. Address
Mrs. W. D. WHITNEY, New Haven, Conn.

LITTLEJOHN'S ISLAND CASCO BAY, MAINE

One hour from Portland
Well-furnished cottage of seven rooms to rent for $125. Address Mrs. R. M. SMITH, Williamsburgh, Virginia.

MT. DESERT—Seal Harbor.—Furnished houses for $175, $250, $350. Hot-water bath in second story. W. M. GRISWOLD, Cambridge, Mass

SUNSET PARK Haines Falls, Catskills.

—Most accessible, beautiful, select, coolest. Cottages and Sites for Sale. Walton Van Loan says: "Sunset is finest Park in Catskills." All improvements, pleasant rooms, excellent board, reasonable rates at Sunset Park's Inn.

LAKE GEORGE

To rent, house at "The Hamlet," Hulett's Landing, occupied by owner until this year. On edge of lake; 10 rooms; finely furnished; boats; bathing house; tent, etc., just as used by family. Rent moderate. Inquire of SALTER STORRS CLARK, 58 William St., N.Y.City.

BRIGHTSIDE-ON-RAQUETTE.—A cottage to lease for the season. Thoroughly furnished and supplied with wood, ice, spring water, vegetable garden, rowboats, etc. Price and particulars of
I. O. A. BRYERE, Manager, Raquette Lake, N. Y.

SUMMER CAMPS

An Adirondack Club

furnishing to its members and their families a pleasant summer home in the best hunting and fishing region at very moderate expense, wishes a few more members. Address
THE IRONDEQUOIT CLUB,
Care Recreation Department, The Outlook.

Summer Camps

CAMP ACADIA, for Boys Lake Winnipesaukee, N. H.

Best of references. Finest advantages on the whole lake. Athletics and mountain excursions a specialty. Study optional. Illustrated circular free. Address Rev. J. L. QUIMBY, Gardiner, Me.

ADIRONDACK CAMP.—Camp for six boys on Saranac Lake, July and August. Instruction in Natural History. TRUMAN ABBE (Harvard, '95), (Student of Medicine), 389 West End Ave., N. Y.

ADIRONDACKS! CAMP CEDAR!! A Summer School for boys. July 1st to Sept. 9th. Study optional. Address
E. D. MONTANYÉ, Trenton, N. J.

CAMP "HOOKY," White Mountains.—$4 a week. No Lessons. No Rules. No Nothing, except a good camp, good food, good fishing, and lots of fun. Address Rev. J. E. JOHNSON, N. Woodstock, N. H.

HOTELS AND RESORTS

Canada

ACADIA HOTEL

TRACADIE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND
Unrivaled as a health and pleasure resort. Boating, fishing, and surf-bathing. House opens June 15. Send for circulars. J. C. HALL, Manager.

Colorado

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.: The Antlers

Illustrated book, describing Colorado Springs, sent on request by E. BARNETT, Proprietor.

Connecticut

CREST VIEW SANITARIUM GREENWICH, CT.

Enlarged, improved, first-class in all respects; home comforts. H. M. HITCHCOCK, M.D.

CHELSEA INN and COTTAGES

Hampton Hill, Conn., Windham Co. Location on one of the highest and most picturesque hill-tops in the State; connecting farm supplies fresh vegetables, milk and cream; all kinds of berries; a great variety of wild flowers. Cottages to rent in part or entire; rates from $8 to $12 per week. Parties seeking a cool, quiet, healthful and restful place in the country, write for circular.
F. E. WHITTAKER.

Pequot House and Cottages

NEW LONDON, CONN.
NOW OPEN

"A delightful combination of seashore and country life at the Pequot."

A number of furnished cottages, with hotel service and board, to let for the season.

For terms and circulars address
BLANCHARD & HAGER

WEANTINAUG INN

New Milford, Conn.
Under new management. Accommodations for coaching parties. OSCAR FLORENCE, Manager.

RIDGEFIELD, CONN.

Cottage near first-class hotel (75 guests). Photographs and information at NEW ENGLAND RESORT ASSOCIATION, 3 Park Place, New York.

Maine

BAR HARBOR, MAINE RODICK HOUSE

300 rooms. Rates, $2 to $4 per day. Season rates on application. ALBERT W. BEE, Lessee and Manager.

Ty'n=y=Coed

CAMPOBELLO ISLAND— PASSAMAQUODDY BAY

Beautiful scenery; gigantic cliffs; delightful drives; golf links. For rates, circulars, etc., address
JOHN A. SHERLOCK, Eastport, Maine.

"THE BAY VIEW" Ferry Beach, Bay View,

Saco, Me.—A unique summer resort; seashore and country combined. Pure spring water; perfect drainage; accommodates 200. Send for illustrated booklet.
Mrs. E. MANSON & SON, Owners and Managers.

AN ENCHANTED ISLE

HOTEL MADOCKAWANDO and Annex
on Heron Isle the Enchanted, will open June 20th. For circulars address E. ROGERS, Heron Island, Maine.

Maine

Eagle Rock House Kennebunk Beach, Maine

On elevated ground. Spacious verandas. Table first-class. Open June 10. Apply to J. D. WELLS, Mgr.

PARKER HOUSE

KENNEBUNKPORT, MAINE
CHARLES S. PATTEN - - - - - - - Proprietor
Send for illustrated booklet

THE POCAHONTAS

Gerrish Island,
Kittery Point, Me.
H. A. COBB,
Manager.

Superbly located upon ocean. Beautiful woods close at hand. Every summer pastime. Finely situated shore land for sale. Furnished cottages to rent.

GROVE HOUSE

$5 a week; first-class; 2 steam launches free; large lake; boats; bathing; fishing; woods; plenty berries, milk, cream, and eggs; circular. COLLINS, Maranacook, Me.

THE LOOKOUT

(ON ISRAEL'S HEAD)
New house; very high; large rooms with grand ocean and country views; fine beach and picturesque cliffs.
GEO. H. LITTLEFIELD, Ogunquit, Me.

OGUNQUIT, ME.—House near the ocean. Good fishing and boating close at hand. Rooms large and well furnished. Plenty of fresh milk and vegetables. Terms, $1.00 per day. Mrs. D. W. PERKINS.

THE BEECHES PARIS HILL, ME.

For Recreation and Health. Electricity, Massage, the Rest Cure. Send for circular. C. F. HAMMOND, M.D

POPHAM BEACH, MAINE THE ROCKLEDGE

FINEST VIEW ON THE ATLANTIC COAST
A thoroughly modern first-class hotel. Excellent Cuisine, fine Orchestra, perfect drainage, grand beach and surf bathing. No hay fever. Rates reasonable. Address
J. D. FORSYTH, Mgr.

THE HIGH ROCK OGUNQUIT, ME.

The leading house. Good location; good beach; boating, bathing, fishing, and pine woods. J. H. Littlefield.

SEASIDE INN

SEAL HARBOR, Mt. Desert Island, Me.
Opens June 10. Send for ill. booklet and rates.
A. & J. CLEMENT.

SUMMIT HOUSE SOUTH BRISTOL, MAINE

and Brambletye Cottage. Beautifully located. A delightful summer home. Open June 15 to Sept. 30. Send for circular. N. W. GAMAGE & SON, Propr's.

PASSACONAWAY INN

NOW OPEN
GILLIS & MURRAY, MANAGERS
York Cliffs, Maine, and 71 Broadway, New York.

Massachusetts

Powder Point Hall

and Cottages, DUXBURY, MASS.
Good boating, bathing, and shade-trees. Illustrated circular. "The Pilgrim Town of Duxbury."

Hill's Mansion House Easthampton Mass.

First-class in all its appointments. Send for descriptive circular to WILLIAM HILL, Manager.

THE SURFSIDE

GLOUCESTER, MASS.
F. H. SAWYER, Proprietor
Situated on a beautiful beach; grand harbor and ocean view; picturesque scenery; good bathing, boating, fishing, and delightful drives; excellent cuisine; luxurious beds; perfect drainage; will reopen about June 1st. Everything new and clean. Send for circular.

HOTEL TUDOR Nahant, Mass.

OPEN JUNE TO OCTOBER
A hotel strictly of the First Class.
WILLIAM CATTO, Proprietor.

(For other advertisements in this department see following pages.)

Massachusetts

BERKSHIRE HILLS

PECK'S INN

VAN DEUSENVILLE STATION, N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., BERKSHIRE DIVISION
SEASON, JUNE 1 TO NOV. 1. Address for terms, &c.,
PECK'S INN, Great Barrington, Mass.

Marblehead Rockmere Point COVE COTTAGES

Will open Ninth Season. For health, pure air, fine views, unequaled. Prominent headland; grounds and beach for bathing, boating, and fishing private for our guests. Special rates for June. Address J. R. GILES.

THE ISLAND OF NANTUCKET

30 Miles at Sea

If you would stay at the leading hotel, it will be

THE SPRINGFIELD

Send for a copy of our illustrated pamphlet, "On Summer Seas," which gives full information.

C. H. MOWRY, Proprietor

VERANDA HOUSE ISLAND OF NANTUCKET

Will open June 15th. High, healthful; fine ocean views. Pleasant, homelike house, accommodating about 100 guests. Mrs. S. G. DAVENPORT.

CAPE COD

AWAY OUT TO SEA
Write to Highland House, North Truro, Mass.

FIFTEEN MILES FROM LAND
Minot's Light can be seen from the piazzas of

THE PRESCOTT

on King's Beach. A charming ocean view. Hotel Prescott is now open and ready for guests. Circulars of Mrs. F. H. GOULD, Lynn, Mass.

By the Sea The Magnolia Magnolia, Mass.

One hour from Boston on the North Shore. Sea and country pleasures. All improvements. Accommodates 300. Book and rates of H. W. PRIEST, Proprietor.

PERU, BERKSHIRE CO., MASS.

MAPLE GROVE FARM Among the Berkshires

Now open for boarders. C. M. HATHEWAY.

Turks Head Inn

ROCKPORT, MASS.

Extreme point of Cape Ann, overlooking Thatcher's Island. Fine sea views and bathing beach. Will open for the season in June. For plans and circulars address J. F. HARVEY, The Ericson, 373 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston.

Ocean House Swampscott

MASS.—Opens June 25th under the management of MEAD & BROOKS. For booklet and full information, address Mead & Brooks, Proprietors, Swampscott, Mass.

BERKSHIRE HILLS

THE GREYLOCK

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.

The best hotel, and the most beautiful village, in the Berkshires. Open May 15th. For circulars or rates address SEISER AND VINING. Proprietors.

NEW MARLBORO INN

BERKSHIRE HILLS, MASS.
1,500 feet above the sea. Rates to suit the times.
G. FARINTOSH

Portable Camping Houses

Just the thing for summer use, and easily handled. For camps, clubs, boat houses. We make them all sizes, styles, and prices. If you are interested, write us and mention The Outlook for our illustrated catalogue.

We make all kinds of Frame Houses, large or small, Club Houses, Churches, Chapels, Cottages, &c.

AMERICAN PATENT PORTABLE HOUSE MFG. CO.
CORONA, N. Y.
Near NEW YORK CITY, U.S.A.

New Hampshire

BARTLETT, N. H.

CAVE MOUNTAIN HOUSE

Very pleasantly located, right in the heart of White Mountains; within 12 miles of the famous Willey Slide, 15 miles of the Notch, and an easy day's trip to Mt. Washington; all modern improvements; accommodates 75; $7 to $12 per week; reduced rates for families remaining the full season. E. A. STEVENS, Bartlett, N. H.

The GRAMERCY THE WHITE MTS. BETHLEHEM, N.H.

1,600 feet above sea-level. Delightful summer home for families. Send for booklet. E. STIMPSON.

THE UPLANDS

AND COTTAGES, BETHLEHEM, N. H.
Located on the highest point in town; wide lawns thorough heating for late guests; accommodates 150. Send for guide to Bethlehem. F. H. ABBOTT, Prop.

An Ideal Mountain Resort

Jerusalem Spring House

CANAAN, N. H.

Terms moderate. Special rates for June, Sept., and Oct. Jerusalem Spring Water challenges the world for its medicinal qualities, purity, and excellence. D. H. MAYNARD.

SENTER HOUSE

Centre Harbor, N. H.

On beautiful Lake Winnipesaukee. A modern hotel well equipped. Excellent cuisine. Location offers all advantages of both mountain and lake. Fine bass fishing. Pure water supply from Belknap Spring; temperature of water, 44°. Write for illustrated booklet.
A. W. EAGER, Manager.

Forest Hills Hotel

and Cottages

HEART OF THE WHITE MTS.

Golf link, wheel track, casino. Up to date in every respect. MAY TO NOVEMBER.
J. W. DUDLEY & CO., Proprietors,
Franconia, N. H.

INTERVALE, N. H. BELLEVUE HOUSE

Open June 1. Fine views of the mountains. A pretty booklet is sent free. J. A. BARNES' SONS.

Jackson, White Mountains, N. H.

The Iron Mountain House

Will open June 1. Special rates until July 15. Send for illustrated circular. W. A. MESERVE.

New Hampshire

HIGHLAND HOUSE

JEFFERSON HIGHLANDS, N. H.
Is now open. Fine location; large and pleasant rooms; table supplied with cream and berries from large farm connected. Send for circulars, with plan of rooms, etc.
J. L. POTTLE, Prop.

PLINY RANGE HOUSE

WHITE MOUNTAINS
GEO. W. CRAWFORD & SON, Jefferson Highland, N. H.

Summer Home

For delightfully located farm house, accommodating thirty guests, address SPOONER HILL HOUSE, Sugar Hill, N. H.

The Grand Mont Vernon, N. H.

1,100 feet above the sea. Season June 25 to Oct. 1
HARRY A. EDGERLY, Proprietor
220 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.

White Mountains

CRAWFORD HOUSE Opens June 29.
SUMMIT HOUSE Opens June 29.
FABYAN HOUSE Now Open.
TWIN MT. HOUSE Opens June 20.
BARRON, MERRILL & BARRON
O. G. Barron, C. H. Merrill, W. A. Barron
Inquire of H. W. MERRILL, 33 Union Square, N. Y.

PROFILE HOUSE AND COTTAGES

WHITE MOUNTAINS, N. H.
OPENS JUNE 29. CLOSES OCTOBER 1.
Address Hotel Vendôme, Boston, or Profile House N. H. TAFT & GREENLEAF.

WHITE MTS.

THE NEW MT. PLEASANT HOUSE

OPENS JULY 1st. The new cottage now open, with single and double rooms at low rates. Parlor-cars from New York through by daylight. ANDERSON & PRICE, Mgrs.; also of Hotel Ormond, Florida.

TEACHERS' CAMPS, White Mountains.—One vacancy; 2 rooms; ladies or gentlemen. Rent of Camp, $10 monthly. "Supplies," $2 a week per person. Reference. Rev. J. E. JOHNSON, N. Woodstock, N.H.

New Jersey

THE FENIMORE

One and a half blocks from ocean; capacity 200. For circulars address THOS. NOBLE, Asbury Park, N. J.

ASBURY PARK, N. J.

COLEMAN HOUSE

Directly on the beach. Opens June 25. New passenger elevator. For rates, diagrams, and information address A. P. MARGETTS, Chief Clerk, Asbury Park, N. J., or F. H. SCHOFIELD, 1 Madison Av., N.Y. City.

New Jersey

THE IRVINGTON

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A cheerful, homelike hotel on the Beach; excellent table; reasonable terms. CHAMBERS & HOOPES.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

THE SHELBURNE

On the Ocean Beach

Open throughout the year. Every convenience, including hot and cold sea-water baths, passenger elevator, etc. J. D. SOUTHWICK, Manager.

BERNARDSVILLE, N. J.

SOMERSET INN

AND COTTAGES Open June 3d

35 miles from New York, on the D., L. and W. R. R., in the Highlands of New Jersey, via Barclay or Christopher St. Ferry. GEO. W. TUTTLE, Manager.

SEA SHORE COTTAGE, LONG BRANCH.—Excellent accommodation, directly on the beach, for self-supporting women Terms, $4.50 a week. Apply, from 11-1 or 7-9 P.M., 18 E. 16th St., N. Y. City.

ON THE OCEAN FRONT!

"The Paradise of Watering Places"

SEVEN MILES BELOW LONG BRANCH

MONMOUTH HOUSE

Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open from June 20 to October.

BENJAMIN H. YARD, Proprietor.

Write for descriptive pamphlet, containing terms and information, New York Office, "Scofield's," Metropolitan Building, Madison Square.

WILBURTON-BY-THE-SEA

SPRING LAKE, N. J.

OPENS FOR THE SEASON ON JUNE 13TH.

R. K. LETCHWORTH.

ESSEX AND SUSSEX

Situated directly on the Beach.

SPRING LAKE BEACH, NEW JERSEY

Open June 1st to October 1st.

EVERETT HOUSE TUCKERTON, N. J. Now open. Sailing and fishing. For terms address GEO. O. ADAMS.

New York City

Good Living—

good beds—good service—scrupulous cleanliness — quiet — central location. These are a few of the good points of the

Westminster Hotel

cor. 16th Street and Irving Place, one block east of Union Square, New York

American Plan; $3.50 per day and up

4th ave. cars to and from Grand Central Depot, one block away; Broadway cable, two blocks.

New York

COTTAGE life at the seaside near New York, in refined, exclusive house. Sanitary plumbing, broad piazzas, lawns, fine fishing, bathing, tennis, boating. Liberal home table. References exchanged. Address A. G. M., No. 1,469, The Outlook.

Heart of the Adirondacks

ADIRONDACK LODGE

Location perfect—a cool and delightful combination of lake, forest, and mountain. Cuisine and accommodations of the best. Beautiful shady walks; mountain-climbing, &c. Address New York Agency, 147 West 88th St.

BLUE MOUNTAIN HOUSE

Adirondacks, Blue Mountain Lake (Ham. Co.), N. Y.

2,000 feet above the sea. Finest views in Adirondacks. Write for circulars. TYLER M. MERWIN, Prop.

The Algonquin and Cottages

ADIRONDACK MOUNTAINS

Situation commands magnificent scenery on Lower Saranac Lake. Recent improvements include electric lighting. Open June 1st. Pamphlet and terms on application. JOHN HARDING, Algonquin, N. Y.

CATSKILL MOUNTAIN HOUSE

Open June 20. 3½ Hours from New York.

CATSKILL MOUNTAIN HOUSE Co., Catskill, N. Y.

THE BANNER HOUSE

Chateaugay Lake, N.Y. J. S. KIRBY, Prop'r.

A HOUSE BUILT IN A DAY

The DUCKER PATENT PORTABLE HOUSES are practical, strong, and durable, being made of thoroughly seasoned and carefully selected materials.

We make them for the seashore, lake, and mountains, hotel annexes, boating, camping, bathing, and club houses, lawn pavilions, stables, bowling-alleys, etc.

All kinds of Portable Houses, from $50 up—suitable for outing purposes—delivered quickly and set up in a day.

SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE F

DUCKER PORTABLE HOUSE CO. 26 Cortlandt St., New York

New York

BREEZE HILL CORNWALL, N.Y.—High location; magnificent view of Hudson River and mountains; large, airy rooms; drives unsurpassed; 54 miles from New York; terms, $5 to $10. Mrs. M. E. SUTHERLAND.

CHATEAUGAY CHASM HOUSE

CHATEAUGAY, N. Y.—Rates, $8 to $15. Open June 1. For pamphlet address GEO. H. CRAPON.

MT. MEENAHGA

OPENS JUNE 2d

A Summer Home, with SIX COTTAGES CONNECTING. 100 miles from New York. 1,500 ft. above sea-level. In the midst of great natural beauty. Pure water: dry, exhilarating air; electric bells; gas; steam heat and wood fires. Peculiarly attractive in June. For circulars and rates address U. E. TERWILLIGER, Ellenville, N. Y.

GLEASON SANITARIUM

ELMIRA, N. Y.

1852 (Formerly Elmira Water Cure) 1896

REST AND RECREATION

GUESTS RECEIVED WITH OR WITHOUT MEDICAL ATTENTION

Pure Spring Water; Good Table; Fine Views; Pure Air. All forms of Baths, Electricity, and Massage. All modern improvements. Under the care of medical graduates of long experience. Send for illustrated Booklet.

GREYLOCH HALL

FAR ROCKAWAY, LONG ISLAND, N. Y.

Information on application. Mrs. R. MOTT, Propr.

THE HOFFORT COTTAGES

FISHERS ISLAND, N. Y.

via New London, Conn., are the ideal summer resort; average temperature, 10 degrees below mainland. Modern improvements. For particulars write to J. P. HOFFORT.

THE CARL MYERS BALLOON FARM, Frankfort, N. Y. Elegant country mansion; city conveniences; gas, best plumbing, 7 baths, spacious grounds, airy verandas, fine views; no home similarly equipped open to the public. Circulars.

BAY VIEW HOUSE, Lake George.—Beautiful, healthy location. Large rooms. Rates, $5 to $7 per week. Photo at Outlook office. Address
E. PEABODY, Gull Bay, Lake George, N. Y.

New York

The Highland House

GARRISON-ON-HUDSON, N.Y.

Directly opposite West Point, 50 miles, 1¼ hours from New York City. A select family hotel. Pure mountain air; purest spring water; sanitary arrangements modern and perfect. Excellent table a specialty. Tennis, croquet, bowling, beautiful drives, fine wheeling. Open in May. Write for booklet. J. W. & G. W. GARRISON.

GLEN LAKE HOUSE

FAMILY HOTEL. TERMS REASONABLE

Dry mountain air; beautiful scenery; fishing; boating; all amusements.

E. BIRDSALL, Mgr. S. T. BIRDSALL, Prop.

Glen Lake, Warren Co., N. Y.

LAKE GEORGE—Hulett's

The most picturesque part of the Lake. Good table; boating, bathing, fishing; country attractions. Rates are moderate and there is plenty to do. For illustrated book address H. W. BUCKELL, Hulett's Landing, N. Y.

CATSKILL MOUNTAINS

THE ARLINGTON

Now open. Beautiful location; very large rooms; hot and cold water on each floor; sanitary system perfect. Address G. W. SHOEMAKER, Hunter, Greene Co., N. Y.

TREMBLEAU HALL

LAKE CHAMPLAIN, Port Kent, N. Y. Open June first. 'Bus meets all boats and trains. Write for illustrated booklet. FARRELL & ADGATE.

THE GEM OF THE ADIRONDACKS

LAKE DUANE

Beautiful scenery; good fishing and boating; pure running spring water throughout the house; bath-rooms, steam heat, old-time fireplace, and all conveniences. Fine drives. A quiet and restful retreat in the woods and mountains. Terms moderate. For full particulars and circulars write to W. J. AYERS & SON,
Hotel Ayers, Lake Duane, Franklin Co., N. Y.

EASTMAN VILLA, Vineyard Point Dock.—Healthful; comfortable; beautiful. Late handsome headquarters of the Harvard crews. For description and terms apply to Outlook or Z. M. TERWILLIGER, Highland, N. Y.

"MORE BEAUTIFUL THAN THE BAY OF NAPLES"

This is what Washington Irving said of Huntington Bay

LOCUST LODGE. Cottages Attached

Now open. Special Prices for June.

Address NELSON MAY, Huntington (L. I.), N. Y.

WILLEY HOUSE

IN THE ADIRONDACKS

2,000 ft. above sea-level. For illustrated circular address HARVEY WILLEY, Keene, N. Y.

Adirondack House

KEENE VALLEY, N. Y.

S. KELLEY, Prop'r. Illustrated Booklet on application.

(For other advertisements in this department see following pages.)

New York

ESTES HOUSE, Adirondacks

Booklet sent on application to J. H. ESTES, Prop., Keene Valley, Essex Co. N. Y.

KEENE VALLEY, N. Y. TAHAWUS HOUSE. Nearest Hotel to summit of Mount Marcy. In immediate vicinity of fine hunting and fishing. GEO. W. EGGLEFIELD.

FLUME COTTAGE, Keene Valley, N. Y.—Heart of Ad'k Mts.; site superior to all others; magnificent views; very healthful; walks and drives; abundant shade delicious water; excellent table; illus. circ.; $8 and $9.

FERNWOOD At head of Lake George, N. Y. A resort of exceptional excellence at moderate rates; an ideal place for parties wishing to economize in their expenditures. Illustrated books free.

ADIRONDACKS

HOTEL CHILDWOLD

AND COTTAGES

On LAKE MASSAWEPIE

For illustrated pamphlet and general particulars address New York office, 626 Tract Building, 150 Nassau St. WM. F. INGOLD, Manager.

"COMFORT AND EXCELLENCE IN EVERY DETAIL"

UNDER=CLIFF

Lake Placid, Adirondacks

Only a few rooms and one small cottage unengaged.
Opens June 25th; closes about September 25th.
A refined patronage. Perfect sanitation.
A family resort. Make application at once.
Circulars and information of The Outlook.

WOOLSEY HOUSE

LIVINGSTON MANOR, SULL. CO., N. Y.

1,500 feet above the sea. Accommodates seventy-five.
JOHN W. BUSSEY, Prop'r.

ADIRONDACKS

The Chateaugay

At Upper Chateaugay Lake

Magnificent location. Modern house. Reasonable rates. All outdoor sports. No hay-fever. For terms, etc., address C. W. BACKUS, Merrill, N. Y.

SUMMER BOARD—25 minutes, Harlem or N. H. R.R., with small private family. First-class table and service; large, fine rooms; shady lawns; fruits, vegetables, cream, and eggs from own place.
M. ALLEN, 138 West 4th St., Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

W. C. T. U. Ocean House

POINT O' WOODS, L. I., N. Y.

A restful summer home on the Great South Beach, between the Bay and the Ocean. 40 miles from N. Y. Fine fishing, boating, surf and still-water bathing. Terms moderate. Open July 1st.

Mizzen Top Hotel

Quaker Hill, Dutchess Co., N. Y.

Two hours from New York, by Harlem R.R. A first-class family hotel. Opens June 20. 1,200 feet elevation.
N. S. HOWE, - - - - - Proprietor
Post-Office and R.R. Station, Pawling, N. Y.

AFTER July 1st first-class board can be obtained at a very pleasant farm-house. Beautiful lake and mountain scenery, pleasant rooms, broad piazza, large lawn, pine groves near house, pure water, delightful drives. One mile from D. & H. R.R. Station. Number limited. For terms, etc., address R. P. MOORE, Peru, New York.

THE INN AT HIGH POINT

A high-altitude mountain resort. Elevation, 1,960 feet. No malaria, no mosquitoes. Good air, good food, pure water. New hotel, modern sanitary appliances, gas, water. Boating, fishing, livery, orchestra, etc.
CHAS. ST. JOHN, Port Jervis, N. Y.

FERNWOOD HALL LAKE OZONIA

One of the most healthful and beautiful Homes in the Adirondacks. Send for Booklet.
FREDERIC M. HEATH, Owner, Potsdam, N. Y

RICHFIELD SPRINGS, N. Y.

Twenty-Second Season

Spring House and Baths

OPEN JUNE 20th TO OCTOBER
T. R. PROCTOR.

The Adirondack Inn SCHROON LAKE, N. Y.

"THE COOLEST PLACE IN TOWN." NO BAR.
PROP'S, A. E. & A. R. ROGERS.

WALTER'S SANITARIUM

Walter's Park, Wernersville, Pa.

In the mountains of Pennsylvania, 1,000 feet above tidewater, only two hours from Philadelphia, 4¼ hours from New York. The most beautiful of locations. No Malaria, Mosquitoes, or Dew. Air, Water, and Scenery unexcelled in Europe or America. Buildings of mountain granite. Electric Light and Bells, Hydraulic Elevator, Steam Heat and Open Grates, Sun Parlor, Livery, Dairy; Baths, Massage, Swedish Movements, Electricity, Oxygen. Physicians of 25 years' experience. Billiards, Pool, Lawn Tennis, Bowling, Croquet. Circulars free.

Be sure to address correctly, WALTER'S,
Always, WALTER'S SANITARIUM, Walter's Park, or Wernersville, Pa.

Eagles Mere Pennsylvania

EAGLES MERE CHAUTAUQUA

AUGUST 4-31

A very attractive programme is offered. Eagles Mere rests upon the crest of the Alleghanies, 2,200 ft. above tide-water, the crowning glory of a region famed in song and rich in story. Fine boating and bathing. The visitor at Chautauqua is offered: Excellent and varied opportunities for study; contact with enthusiastic teachers; latest and best methods in educational work; practical exercises of a novel and attractive kind; a brilliant and entertaining general programme; opportunities to hear the leading men of the day. He may pay little or much for these privileges and still find them cheap. He can have just what he wants, and at one of the most desirable mountain resorts in America. Send for illustrated book and full information to B. HARVEY WELCH, G.M., Eagles Mere Railroad Co., Hughesville, Pa.

New York

Dr. Strong's Sanitarium

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

For health or pleasure. The appointments of a first-class Hotel. Elevator, electric bells, sun-parlor, and promenade on the roof. Suites of rooms with baths. Massage, Electricity, all baths and health appliances. New Turkish, Russian, and Natural Sulphur-Water baths. Dry tonic air, Saratoga water, croquet, lawn-tennis, etc. Open all the year. Send for illustrated circular.

Summer Rest Saratoga Springs

Open June 10th.
Good table. Moderate rates. M. E. MORSE, Prop.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

UNITED STATES HOTEL

SEASON OF 1896
Open from June 15 to October 1
SPECIAL RATES FOR JUNE, JULY, AND SEPTEMBER
For rates and other particulars apply to TOMPKINS, GAGE & PERRY

ADIRONDACK MOUNTAINS

Leland House and Cottages

SCHROON LAKE, N. Y.

This popular resort will open June 24. Baseball grounds, fine tennis-courts, bathing, boating, bass and trout fishing.
C. T LELAND, Manager.

New York

Cayuga Lake House

SHELDRAKE, N. Y.

No Mosquitoes; No Dampness; No Malaria.

Curative Sulphur Springs; electric lights; elevator; orchestra; 200-acre farm; good bicycling. For illustrated pamphlet address DUDLEY S. PHINNY, Proprietor.

CHURCHILL HALL

STAMFORD, N. Y.

Healthful, Homelike, Attractive. Send for descriptive and illustrated circular with opinions of Henry Ward Beecher and Dr. Lyman Abbott.
S. E. CHURCHILL, M.D., Stamford, N. Y.

STAMFORD IN THE CATSKILLS GREENHURST

First class in all respects, recently enlarged and improved. Open grate fires. Bath-rooms and closets. Sanitary connection with village sewer. Terms reasonable. For circulars and all particulars address E. E. VAN DYKE.

"THE CATSKILLS"

The Greycourt Inn

STAMFORD, N. Y.

Electricity. Send for circular. S. J. BROWN.

INGLESIDE

STAMFORD, N. Y.

Now open. For rates address E. O. COVEL.

New York

Windlemere Tarrytown-on-Hudson, N.Y. Magnificent scenery; beautiful drives; shade, lawns, piazzas, sun-parlor. Commutation, 11 cts. each way. Address as above.

NEPTUNE BRINE BATHS

For Rheumatism, Gout, and Nervous Diseases

The Glen Springs

A Sanatorium for those Seeking Health and Rest

A medical staff experienced in the use of the Waters. All approved therapeutic appliances and modern improvements. ALL FORMS OF BATHS.

VALUABLE MINERAL SPRINGS

NEPTUNE SPRING is a 67 per cent. Brine, containing the largest amount of Chloride of Calcium of any Spring in the world. Location overlooks thirty miles of Seneca Lake. Send for illustrated pamphlet.

WM. E. LEFFINGWELL, Manager, Watkins, N.Y

SOPER HOUSE, Windham, N.Y.

Delightfully situated in the heart of the Catskills. Large lawn, beautifully shaded; broad piazzas; short drive from the grandest view in the State. Guests taken to churches free. Cuisine excellent.

THOMPSON HOUSE

WINDHAM, N. Y.—Photographs of house and surroundings sent on application. IRA THOMPSON, Prop.

RIVER VIEW HOUSE. No. 137 in Summer Album, is now open for summer guests. Circulars and photo at Outlook Office, 13 Astor Place, N. Y. City. Martin Merritt, Proprietor, Woodbourne, Sull. Co., N.Y.

IN THE LAND OF PEACE

The Ontio, Unadilla, N. Y.

THOUSAND ISLANDS

Among America's most charming resorts; the NEW COLUMBIAN HOTEL, at 1,000 Island Park, N. Y., and the HOTEL WESTMINSTER, Westminster Park, Alexandria Bay, N. Y.; great family hotels, modern and first-class; charges moderate. Send for descriptive pamphlet and terms.

H. F. INGLEHART & SON, Proprietors

THE SANITARIUM

UNION SPRINGS, ON CAYUGA LAKE, N. Y. An Ideal Place for health, rest, or recreation. Pure air and water. Baths, electricity, massage. Airy rooms and generous table. Boating and fishing. Write for circular. Dr. FRANKLIN D. PIERCE, Supt.

THOUSAND ISLANDS

THE FRONTENAC

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

This favorite Hotel of the 1,000 Islands offers every advantage for health, rest, recreation, and pleasure. Address E. D. DICKINSON, Manager, Frontenac, Jefferson Co., N. Y.

CEDAR GROVE COTTAGE, on Lake Champlain, 5 miles south of Hotel Champlain. Large rooms, broad piazzas, fine walks and drives, boating, bathing, and fishing. Circulars. W. H. REED, Valcour, N. Y.

Wawbeek Lodge

ADIRONDACKS

THE HOTEL WAWBEEK AND COTTAGES
open July 1 to October 1.
UPPER SARANAC LAKE
Unsurpassed in location and appointments
SELECT PATRONAGE
Guides, Rowboats, Naphtha Launch
Carriage and Saddle Horses
URIAH WELCH, Mgr.

Address Wawbeek P. O., Franklin Co., N. Y., or Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York.

CATSKILLS.—Location unsurpassed. Terms $5.00 and upwards per week. Good accommodations, good table, good roads for cycling. Accommodation for 100. Descriptive circulars. COE'S HOTEL, Windham, N. Y.

Oregon

PORTLAND, OR.—THE PORTLAND. One of the most complete and elegant hotels in this country; American plan; $3.00 per day and upward.

W. H. BARMORE, Manager.

The New Mathewson

Narragansett Pier, R. I.

OPENS JUNE 20th

Send for circulars and terms to 260 Fourth Ave., N. Y., or F. H. SCOFIELD, Metropolitan Bldg., Madison Square, New York.

Water Gap Sanitarium

Pennsylvania

THE GLENWOOD

DELAWARE WATER GAP, Pa.

Capacity 200. A popular and healthy mountain resort high, cool, and delightful; large shady grounds; fine driving, boating, bathing, and fishing; [illegible] rooms; fine table and best service; rates moderate. Open May. SEND FOR CIRCULAR. JOHNSON BROS.

Mountain House
Delaware Water Gap, Pa.

Twenty-sixth season. A comfortable, attractively located, popular house at this well-known resort. Send for circular. Mrs. THEO. HAUSER & SON

WATER GAP HOUSE

DELAWARE WATER GAP, PA.

Situated in the Blue Ridge in northern Pennsylvania. 2½ hours from New York by D. L. & W. R. R. Healthful and beautiful. Opens June 10. L. W. BRODHEAD

Glen Summit Hotel

GLEN SUMMIT, PA.

OPEN JUNE 20. On L. V. R. R., four and one-half hours from New York. 2,000 feet elevation. [illegible] driving and bicycling, and all other amusements. First-class orchestra, steam heat, elevator, rooms en suite, private bath. W. H. [illegible], Manager. For booklets and other information apply to [illegible] Schofield, Metropolitan Building, Madison Square, N. Y.

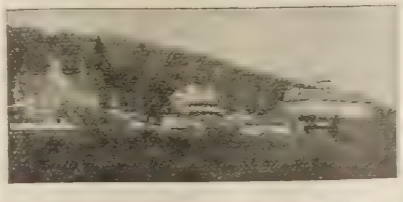
MOUNTAIN SUNSET HOUSE

WERNERSVILLE, PA.

First-class family place. 4 hrs. from New York City. 1 hr. from Phila. Delightful climate; fine dry air; pure water; cool nights. Booklet free.

Grand View Sanitarium

WERNERSVILLE, PA.



Unequaled as a four-season sanitarium. Dry and bracing mountain air. Dew unknown. Send for illustrated pamphlet. Drs. WENRICH & DEPPEN

Rhode Island

WATCH HILL, R. I.

Plimpton Hotel and Annexes

OPEN SATURDAY, JUNE 20

under entirely new management. A comfortable seaside home at very reasonable rates. For circulars and other information address ALFRED S. AMER.

Rhode Island

THE MASSASOIT

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I.

Now open. Terms reasonable. J. BABCOCK.

Tennessee

MT. NEBO SPRINGS CHILHOWEE MTS.

Altitude, 2,500 ft.; iron water; no dew; no liquors. Circulars A. A. WILSON, Gamble, Tennessee.

Vermont

POWERS HOUSE CLARENDON VT.

Summer home. Write for descriptive pamphlet.
R. F. POWERS, Propr.

CLARENDON HOUSE AND COTTAGES

Clarendon Springs, Vt.

Send for circular. GEO. M. FLETCHER, Prop'r.

The Montvert

Middletown Springs, Vermont

Celebrated for its magnificent scenery, bracing air, fine drives and Mineral Springs which possess medicinal and healing properties which have made them famous worldwide. [illegible] feet above the sea, its elevated position ensures a dry atmosphere in which malaria is unknown, and where sufferers from hay fever obtain immediate relief. Accommodations for [illegible]. Appointments, cuisine, and service of the highest order. Send for pamphlet, terms, etc.

E. W. EAGER, Manager

THE HANOVER, 2 E. 15th St., New York City

CRESCENT VALLEY HOUSE

Pawlet, Vt. Finest Family Resort in Vermont Green Mountains. Fine roads for wheelmen. Prices right. For circulars, C. B. HALL.

The Green Mountain Lodge

WATERBURY CENTER, VT. A charming resort, quiet and homelike. Delightful mountain scenery. [illegible] Prices from $4 to $[illegible] per week. [illegible] Circular free to any address. F. W. KEELER, Manager.

ARCADIA RETREAT

In the Green Mts.

An ideal place for rest and recreation. Beautiful scenery; pure air, pure water; fishing and boating. [illegible] J. N. Parker, West Burke, Vt.

Virginia

HOTEL ALPHIN Hot Springs, Bath County, Virginia. Three hundred yards from the Homestead Bath House. All modern improvements. [illegible] remains open the entire year. Address L. C. ALPHIN, Proprietor.

West Virginia

Old Sweet Springs

SWEET SPRINGS, W. VA.

Open May 15th, 1896. The most [illegible] and beautiful of all mountain resorts; all kinds of amusements; first-class in every respect; rates to suit the times. For descriptive circular, etc., address A. E. WHITE, Mgr.

FREE Outing Clothing Book, beautifully illustrated. Shows 150 Styles. Only book on fashionable Outing Clothing issued. Send 2c. stamp for Book. WHITE DUCK TROUSERS by mail, post prepaid, $1.50. Send leg and waist measure; allow for 1-inch roll at bottom. Description: Our trousers are made of extra quality Duck in the best manner; side, watch, and hip pockets; felled seams; wide hem on bottom and straps in waistband for belt. All hand-finished. Buy direct and save retailers' profits. H. S. LOMBARD, Outfitter, 22, 24, 26 Merchants Row, Boston, Mass

INDEX TO VOLUME LIII.

January 4 to June 27, 1896

Nos. 1 to 26, Inclusive

Regular departments not included in the Index are: The Spectator, Notes and Queries, Literary Notes, For the Little People, The Home Club, About People, Necrology, The Business World, and Correspondence.

EDITORIAL: PAGE

[The titles of editorials (as distinct from editorial paragraphs) are prefixed by an asterisk.]

Abbott, Austin 734
*After Easter 658
*Agnosticism, The Truth in 546
Agriculture and Co-operation in England 1138
Agriculture, Work of City Unemployed in 618
Alaskan Boundary, The 48
*"American Dislike for England" 278
*Americanism, True 697
Andover, Mass., Anniversary of 971
Anti-Jewish Agitator, An 695
Anti-Semitic Movement 842
Arbitration, International: 197, 275, 381, 443, 468, 617, 927
  *Arbitration Conference, The 806
  English Sentiment 542, 1177
  *Is Arbitration Practicable? 425
  Mohonk Conference 1096
  *Phelps, Professor, on 1180
  Philadelphia Conference 382
  Roman Catholic Appeal for 654
  *War or Law? 198, 279, 466
Armenian Question (see also Turkish Affairs) 7, 616
  Episcopal Church's Action 276
  *Historical Precedent, A 130
  In the Senate 193, 233
  Sassun Massacre 233
  *What Can We Do? 89
Art and Philistinism 1136
*"Art of Living Together, The" 1061
Ashanti, Subjugation of 198
*Atlanta Exposition, The 52
*"Au Large" 973
Austin Alfred, Poet Laureate 49
Austrian Finances 542
Austrian Succession, The 1098
Barnard College 196, 734, 883
*Barnby, Joseph 237
Bayard, Ambassador, Criticisms on 543
Behring Sea Claims 126
*Best Always, The 699
Bimetallism (see also Free Coinage):
  As a Political Issue 274
  Boards of Trade, Declarations of Concerning 273
  English Conservatism Regarding 542
  Parties, Three, in Favor of 314
  Western Enthusiasm for 970
*Bond Issue, The 50
Bowen, Henry C 385
Bristow, Benjamin H 1178
Bulgarian Affairs 424
Bunner, H. C 970
*Call Out the Reserves 547
Canadian Affairs:
  Disruption of Cabinet 86
  General Elections 972
  Manitoba Elections 127
  Manitoba Legislature 276, 616
Children's Street-Cleaning Leagues 465
*Christlike Attitude, The 847
Church Entertainments, Demoralizing 88, 504
Civil Service Reform:
  In New York State 464, 733
  *Triumph of 658
  Veteran Preference Act in Massachusetts 882
  Violation of by Administration 969
Claflin, Mary B 1178
*Clark, Nathaniel Green 50
Columbia University 844
Congress:
  Bankruptcy Bill 842
  Bond Issue Investigation 882
  Financial Legislation 9, 48
  Free Coinage vs. Tariff Bill 273, 314
  Immigration, Restriction of 803
  Monroe Doctrine 125
  Personal Conduct, Low Standards of 802
  Record of Fifty-fourth 1135
  River and Harbor Bill 923, 1055, 1095
  Rules of House and Senate 86
  Senators, Election of 128
  Tillman's Maiden Speech 234
*Congressmen, The Duty of 928
*Contributors, Hints to Some 545
Co-operative Union in England 1138
*Courage, Grounds for 317
*Cowardice and "Bunkum" 465
Crete, Island of 1098, 1137
*Crimes of Good Men, The 846
Cuban Affairs 8, 127, 234, 421, 654
  International Law, Principles of 543
  President's Duty Concerning Resolutions 693
  Resolutions in Congress 421, 462, 501
*Cure Better than Prevention 845
*Death Interpreted by Easter 619
Deborah Nursery of New York City 695
Diplomatic Service, The 274
Dunraven, Lord, and the Defender 236
*Dyke, Dr. van, Lectures on Preaching 1060
*Economic Fallacy, An 1059
Education:
  Barnard College 196, 734, 883
  Bills in New York State Legislature 274
  Colleges, Growth of, etc 1177
  Compromise School Bill 544, 656, 805
  *Educational Bill, The English 808
  *England, Educational Question in 239, 926
  French Universities and American Students 1178
  *Healthful Progress 200
  Inadequate School Facilities in N. Y. Cities 316

EDITORIAL.—Continued. PAGE

  Indians, Denominational Schools for 383, 924
  Jasper, Supt., and N. Y. City Schools 1136
  Manitoba School Question 8, 277, 616
  *New York City, School Matters in 1140
  New York City's School System 196
  N. Y. City Supt. of Education 883, 925, 1059
  Pavey Bill 464
  *Poor Man and the Schools, The 620
  Teachers, Professional Training of 926
  Wisconsin State University, Criticism of 10
  Women Admitted to Hungarian Universities 88
  Women at Oxford and Cambridge 617
English Affairs:
  Arbitration, Favorable Sentiment toward 381
  Budget, Favorable Showing of the 735
  Chamberlain and Protection 1137
  Chamberlain and South Africa 313
  Conservative Programme, The 424
  Consuls' Report on Armenian Massacres 233
  Dongola Expedition 461, 541, 1177
  Education Bill 927
  England and Her Rivals in Africa 615
  English Newspapers and America 125
  Home Rule, Abandonment of 971
  Lord Salisbury's Speech 233
  Poet Laureate, The New 49
  Queen's Speech and Opening of Parliament 313
  Strained Relations with Germany 85
Europe, Changes in Diplomatic Situation in 615, 653
Ewing, General Thomas 195
*Excise Law, The Enforcement of the 387
*Experience, Growth through 1180
*Extemporaneous Preaching, Concerning 1101
*Extempore Speaking, Concerning 1139
Farm Products, Decline in Money Value of 805 Finances, The National:
  Anti-Bond Bill, The 1095
  Bankruptcy Bill 842
  Bond Bill, The 48, 194, 234
  *Bond Issue, The 50, 127, 273
  Currency, Amount of 273
  Premium on Gold 47
  Revenue Bill 9
  Senator Sherman's Speech 48
*Flitting 975
*Foreign Missions ("The Japanese Report") 199
Forestry, Legislation Concerning 10
*Foundation of Home Life, The 467
Free Coinage:
  Adopted by Democratic Conventions 1095
  Defeated in Republican Conventions 613
  In Various Conventions 694
  Kentucky 503, 1095
  Louisiana 543
  President Cleveland's Letter 1175
French Affairs:
  Another Ministerial Crisis 653
  Bourbon Pretender, The 1097
  Bourgeois Ministry 314, 801
  Colonization Policy 1178
  Crisis Postponed, Governmental 381
  Income Tax 973
  Méline Ministry 841, 1138
  World's Fair, Projected 736
*From the Center 975
Gas, Cheap, in Massachusetts 1137
German Affairs:
  Dueling in Germany 802
  Hostile Feeling Towards England 85
  Women, Changed Position of 382
*Gladstone, A New Life of 657
*Greater New York Bill, The (see also N. Y. State) 386 Great Opportunity, A 974
Greece:
  American School in 277
  Olympian Games, Revival of 696
  Tricoupis, Death of M 696
*Green, Dr. William Henry 845
*Greer, David H 11
*Gymnastics and Ascetics 467
*Healthful Progress 200
*Hem of the Garment, The 739
*Heresy Trial, A Beneficent 619
Hirsch, Baron de 801
Homes for Workingmen 884
*Homicide, The Increase of 739
*Hopeful Signs 130
Hughes, Thomas 544
Hungarian National Millennium 842
Immigration, Restriction of 383, 654, 970
Indians and Jobbery in Congress 804
Indians, Sectarian Instruction of 383
Indians, Unsectarian Education of 803
*Individuality, Distinctness of 736
*International Supreme Court, An 386
Inter-State Commerce Commission and Court Decisions 1135
Inter-State Commerce Law Revitalized 613
Italian Affairs:
  Abyssinian Defeat, The 461, 501, 972
  Child Slaves in Sulphur Mines 617
  Rudini Ministry in Office 501
  Rudini, The Marquis di 653
Japanese Affairs:
  *Are Foreign Missionaries Frauds? Rev. A. H. Bradford 91
  *Financial Outlook 1099
  Japan and Russia 615
  *Japanese Report, The 199

EDITORIAL.—Continued. PAGE

  Opening of Parliament 9
Journalism and Prize-Fighting 424
Labor:
  Bishop Potter's Decision in Lithographers' Strike 925
  *Economic Fallacy, An 1059
  Factory Inspectors' Report 315
  Illinois Factory Law and the Courts 503
  Reductions in Wages 277
  Street-Car Strike in Milwaukee 1057
  Women, College-bred, Earnings of 503
*Law or War? 466
Leighton, Lord 196
*Lenten Thought, A 427, 506
*Lesson for the Day, A 12
Libraries, Public, in U. S 618
Library, New York Public 614, 734, 1099
Louisiana, Election Frauds in 694, 804, 925
*Luxury, What is 1061
Lynchings in 1895 194
Macmillan, Alexander 197
Manitoba (see also Canadian Affairs) 8
Mann, Horace 844
Market Playgrounds 10
*Measure of Citizenship, The 13
*Message of Christianity, The 887
Methodist General Conference 844, 884
Mexico, Abolition of Inter-State Tariffs in 927
Millais, Sir John Everett 381
Mississippi, Three Creditable Actions in 383
Morton, Governor, as a Presidential Candidate 48
Morton, Secretary, and Distribution of Seeds 315
Municipal Affairs:
  City Lodging-Houses 926
  Detroit's Street Railways 87
  Gas, Cheap 1137
  Municipal Baths 926
  Municipal Progress 295, 522, 715
  Rapid Transit Vetoed by the Courts 970
  Street Railways, Report of Investigating Committee 384
Music, Funds for Advancement of in N. Y. City 884
Nansen's Expedition 317
*National Honor 466
Naval Appropriations 613
*News! 427
*News and Fiction 388
*News-Gathering in America 1139
New York City:
  Children's Dancing in the Streets 11
  Greater New York 129, 278, 463, 614, 843, 883
  Greater New York Commission 1136
  Lofty Buildings Condemned 236
  Police Administration, The Present 544
  Police Lodging-Rooms, Abolition of 235
  Primary Elections, Frauds at Republican 235
  Rapid Transit 1057
  Voters, Illiterate 1176
New York State:
  Governor Morton and Machine Politics 129
  Governor Morton's Message 48
  Greater New York Bill 695, 805, 843, 883
Niagara Reservation, The 504, 695
*Opportunity, Inspiration of the 91
Oregon, Elections in 1096
Pacific Cable 385
Parkes, Sir Henry 801
Peace, Meeting in Cooper Union in Favor of 423
*Peace of God, The 131
Persia and Russia 973
Persia, Assassination of Shah of 842
*Pertinent Illustration, A 929
*Plagiarism, Concerning 699
Platt, Thomas, and Greater New York 843 Politics, National:
  Cleveland's (President) Statement 1175
  Conventions in Michigan and Illinois 843
  Democratic State Conventions 881, 969, 1056, 1135
  Republican Candidates 502, 881, 1175
  Republican National Convention 1135, 1175
  *Republican Platform, The 1179
  Republican State Conventions 655, 733, 803, 923
  Whitney's (W. C.) Letter 1176
*Politics, The Church in 807
Poor, Condition of the, in New York City 464
Postal Rates and Newspapers 423
*Prejudice, An Unreasonable 51
Presbyterian General Assembly 971, 1059, 1100
Prohibition Party and the Financial Issue 463
Prohibition Party Convention 1056
*Promise in Law, The 239
Property, Distribution of in United States 49
*Prophecy of Aspiration, The 808
Proportional Representation 1059
Prostitution, Licensing of 656
*Publicity, The Passion for 737
*Put Yourself in His Place 507
*Questioning, Too Much 885 Railways:
  Detroit's Cheap Fares 87
  Joint Traffic Association 11, 805
  Negroes, Rights of; Supreme Court Decision 924
  Pacific Railroad Matters in Congress 462, 803
  Street-Car Fares in New York 384
  Street-Car Strike in Milwaukee 1057
*Raines Bill, The (see also Temperance) 506
*Records and Pledges 927
*Reform Accomplished, A 885
*Returning Reason 505
River and Harbor Bill, The 654

EDITORIAL.—Continued. PAGE
Röntgen, Professor, and the X Rays...... 237, 316
Russian Affairs:
  Czar, Conservative Policy of.............. 1137
  Czar, Coronation of........... 926, 971, 1059, 1177
  Russia and Bulgaria........................ 736
  Russia, Japan, and Korea.................. 735
  Turkey and Russia........................... 198
Russian Literature, Decadence of............ 382
St. Louis, The Tornado at.................... 1055
*Saleswomen and the Factory Law.......... 426
Salvation Army, The..................... *317, 656
  Mass-Meeting to Protest against Ballington Booth's Transferral...................... 236
  *Salvation Army Schism, The.............. 698
  *Salvation Army Troubles, The............ 425
Say, Jean Baptiste Léon........................ 802
Schumann, Clara Wieck....................... 973
Senators, Popular Election of............ 543, 1136
Siam Dispute Settled.......................... 275
Simon, Jules François........................ 1098
South African Republic:
  American Prisoners........................ 276
  Arrest of Uitlanders....................... 85
  English Feeling towards.................. 1097
  German Sympathy.......................... 46
  In English Parliament...................... 884
  Jameson's Raid............................ 45
  Matabele Revolt............................ 736
  Orange Free State.......................... 126
  Sentence of Reform Committee......... 841, 972
Spain and the Competitor Incident........... 882
Spain, Elections in............................ 735
*Speakers, Suggestions to............... 506, 1139
Speculation by Religious Organizations..... 1059
States, Admission of New.................. 693, 733
Sugar Bounty, Decision of Supreme Court... 970 Tariff, The:
  Bounties on Farm Products.................. 88
  Tariff Bill Defeated........................ 422
Taxation:
  Income Tax in France...................... 973
  In Italy...................................... 617
*Teacher in America, The..................... 659 Temperance:
  Anti-Saloon Sentiment in the South........ 10
  Legislation in Various States........... 128, 423
  Nicholson Law in Indiana.................. 1176
  Raines Bill........... 194, 235, 384, 423, 505, 614
  Raines Bill, Provisions of.................. 87
  Raines Law, Effect of...................... 655
  Raines Law, Interpretation of.............. 694
  Setback in England......................... 424
  Temperance Instruction in Public Schools. 195
*Temptation, A Constant....................... 388
Thomas, Theodore............................. 618
Tillman, Senator, and President Cleveland.. 234
Tornadoes in the West....................... 1055
*Treasure, A Hidden.......................... 886
Triple Alliance, The.......................... 885
*Truth for the Times, A...................... 318
*Turkey, American Interests in.............. 697
Turkish Affairs:
  America's Duty............................. 48
  American Missionary Expelled............. 696
  Armenia, Situation in...................... 7
*Ultimate Test, The........................... 239
*Unconscious Imposers....................... 1100
Union Theological Seminary.................. 806
Utah, Proposed Admission to Union of...... 693
Vacation Fund, The Outlook's...... 929, 1141, 1181
Venezuelan Question.......................... 7, 8
  Bernay's (Prof.) Opinion on................ 313
  British Blue Book on....................... 461
  English Sentiment.......................... 47
  In the Senate............................... 193
  *Lesson for the Day, A..................... 12
  Venezuelan Commission, The............. 46, 86
  *Way Out, The............................. 90
Verlaine, Paul................................ 86
* What Can We Do?........................... 89
* What the Public Wants...................... 846
Waring, Colonel, and New York's Streets.... 1057
Waring, Colonel, on "Market Playgrounds" 10
* War or Law?................................. 198
Woman Suffrage in California............... 655
Women, Earnings of College-bred............ 503
Yale Lectures, Dr. van Dyke's............... 886

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES:
Abner Kent's Vest.... .:. .Priscilla Leonard 100
American History, How to Study. Prof. A. B. Hart 246
Anglo-Saxon Supremacy..Rev. G. S. Payson 474
Atlanta to the Sea. W. J. Abbot:
  I.—Atlanta and Macon........................ 151
  II.—Central Georgia and Savannah........ 338
  III.—Charleston............................. 569
Arabian Nights Stories......Helen M. North 289
Arbitration, International.................... 809
Armenia, Aid for.............................. 93
Armenian Massacres, Why Sultan is Responsible for.....................An Armenian 283
Austin, Alfred: The New Poet Laureate. H. W. Mabie 148
Barton, Clara, and the Red Cross. Myrtis W. Barton 141
Baths and Laundries, Public...Rob't Donald 285
Bible and the Child, The:
  Very Rev. F. W. Farrar, D.D............. 508
  Very Rev. W. H. Fremantle............... 814
  Rev. R. F. Horton......................... 702
  Washington Gladden....................... 1207
Bicycling for Women. L. Dickinson, M.D. 550, 751
Booth, General William...George S. Railton 324
Boston, The Higher Life of.. ....E. E. Hale 554
Broad View, The............Lucy E. Keeler 753
Broadway, The Real...Henrietta S. Lathrop 996
Buddhism, Glimpses of. Rev. A. H. Bradford, D.D. 853
Buffalo, The City of Homes. Rev. W. B. Wright 1195
Business Meeting, A..........Mary C. Baird 95
Camping...................James Hammond 1148
Change, The Law of.....Rev. T. K. Beecher 817
Children as Gardeners....Martha C. Rankin 934
Children's Literature......Martha S. Holden 667
Children's Play and Playmates. Alice H. Putnam 1108
Chicago, the Higher Life of.....M. E. Stone 326

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES.—Continued. PAGE
Christmas in Pastor Wagner's Sunday-School. Grace King 513
Church Centers.................. Kate Bond 707
Church, Living by the......T. W. Higginson 395
Cincinnati Music Festivals, The. H. E. Krehbiel 740
City Government in the United States, The Problem of............... ... ...Seth Low 624
"Clover Villa"...........Mrs. M. B. Wright 203
College Boy's Room, The ....A Mother 16
Darkness of the Dumpling Light, The. Sophie Swett 398
Deborah's Teapot.........Virginia W. Cloud 707
Decoration, The Principles of. Candace Wheeler 284
Delegation from Pie Alley. ....John P. True 206
Delinquent, Defective, and Dependent Classes in the U. S.:
  I.—Delinquents...............F. W. Hewes 428
Education, The Unity of.......N. M. Butler 94
English in American Universities........... 1104
Excision and Comprehension. Rev. Rollin A. Sawyer 434
Eyes—"The Bad-Eye Factory." Dr. E. W. Scripture 393
Fishes, Nest-Building........Charles Holder 668
Flower Party, A...........Minnie A. Barney 1109
Football at Home.........George H. Westley 515
Foreign Missions, The Necessity and the Needs of......Rev. Henry van Dyke, D.D. 201
Game of A B C, The.......Martha B. Banks 709
Guidance of the Inner Light. Rev. John Watson 25
Harnack, Adolf: A Sketch..Elbert F. Baldwin 568
Highroad and Garden.......... ....Bliss Perry 435
Holmes, Oliver Wendell, Letter by........... 1107
Home and School.......Helen Dawes Brown 933
Housekeeping in Turkey..Agnes B. Ormsbee 60
How Shall We Educate Our Girls? Helen Brown 431
Indian Child Life, Glimpses of. Alice C. Fletcher 891
Indian Life, The Aboriginal. Alice C. Fletcher 473
Indians' Difficulties, The Allotted. Alice C. Fletcher 660
Jack the Giant-Killer........Helen M. North 247
Kate Carnegie........... ......Ian Maclaren 156, 341, 573, 765, 1002, 1202
Kentucky, A Summer Outing in.. J. C. Cady 56
Labor and Capital, Some Rights and Wrongs of...............An Employer of Labor 700, 851
Leap-Year Februarys..........G. H. Westley 246
Leonard Bradley and the Wolves. Virginia W. Cloud 166
Literature for Five-Year-Olds..Kate M. Cone 205
Living Batteries..................C. F. Holder 21
Loaning Pictures.............Mary S. Cutler 553
Luther, Martin, Life of. Rev. James M. Whiton, Ph.D. 567
Macmillan, Alexander..........H. W. Mabie 1200
Marriage of an Egyptian Princess. Laura B. Starr 855
Meanest Boy in School........Mabel Gifford 18
Mormons, Self-Government by the. E. Young 1067
Mountains and Mountain-Climbing. E. K. Alden 17
Municipal Dwellings for Artisans. Robert Donald 245
Municipal League Convention. Staff Correspondent 888
Music, The Practical Essentials for Good Church .... .Dr. Henry G. Hanchett 392
Music, What is "Good".....H. G. Hanchett 287
My Retinue..................Sara E. Wiltse 1105
New Orleans...................................... 548
New Orleans, The Higher Life of. Grace King 754
New Philanthropy, A.....Frank A. Hutchins 752
New York City, Higher Life of..Albert Shaw 132
Noteworthy Gatherings for the Next Half-Year....................................... 1007
Old Sock Savings-Bank for Ministers, The. Rev. Uriah Xerxes Buttles, D.D. 1147
Old-Time "Fourth," The....Frank W. Crane 1145
Olympic Games, The..Miss Maynard Butler 993
Ottoman Empire, Creeds of the. Rev. S. T. Willis 53
Penzance, A Visit to...Arthur Reed Kimball 561
Photography on the Heights:
  Photographing in the High Alps. Marie Gozzaldi 986
  Photography on the Greenland Ice-Cap. R. E. Peary, U. S. N. 987
  With the Mazama Club on Mount Adams. W. D. Lyman 989
Poetry:
  Barrens, The..............W. W. Campbell 1149
  Dial of Time.......... .Clarence Hawkes 668
  Dickinson, Emily, Three Poems by........ 141
  Easter ....F. D. Sherman 609
  Easter... ....Esther A. Clark 627
  Hospital Prayer, A.........Jane E. Watton 205
  Hymn of Comfort, A...Rev. J. W. Chadwick 896
  Lesson of the Spring, The. Priscilla Leonard 891
  Making of Men, The..Rev. J. W. Chadwick 417
  May-Lure.................Richard Burton 877
  Mother's Work..............Mary F. Butts 666
  Muse, The..................F. D. Sherman 1069
  Mutation.................Priscilla Leonard 282
  Prayer, A....................Mary F. Butts 572
  Quiet Place within My Heart...A..H. W. D. 430
  Realism..................Priscilla Leonard 563
  Rosalind............. ...... W. C. Husted 1149
  Rose Shadows............Alice W. Rollins 435
  St. Michael the Weigher..James R. Lowell 750
  Spring's Prophet..................... A. W. 629
  Sunset..................Mary Laura Mason 744
  Wood-Folk Lore..............Bliss Carman 17
Poetry of Childhood, The..Rebecca P. Reed 856
Poor in Cities, Housing of the..Robt. Donald 204
Prayer as an Offensive Weapon. Rev. H. L. Wayland, D.D. 662
Prescott, William Hickling....Kenyon West 745
Prophets of the Christian Faith:
  III.—Clement of Alexandria. Rev. Marcus Dods, D.D. 14
  IV.—St. Augustine as a Prophet. Rev. A. C. McGiffert 243
  V.—John Wycliffe. Very Rev. W. H. Fremantle, D.D. 470

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES.—Continued. PAGE
  VI.—Martin Luther.........Adolf Harnack 564
  VII.—Wesley, John. Very Rev. F. W. Farrar, D.D. 761
  VIII.—Jonathan Edwards. Rev. A. M. Fairbairn, D.D. 930
Public Schools and the Trustee System. L. W. Betts 430
Raconteur, A...................Ian Maclaren 1066
Recollections of My Boyhood, Jno. Burroughs 332
Rembrandt....................E. F. Baldwin 146
Republican National Convention, The...... 1182
Revolutions, Unconscious. Col. T. W. Higginson 889
Russian Church, The......Isabel F. Hapgood 1142
Salvation Army, The. Rev. J. M. Whiton, Ph.D. 320
Sand and the Children........Nora A. Smith 476
School Visiting, The Ethics of. Hilda Johnson 857
Science of Not, The.........Alice W. Rollins 59
Sea Mosses..................Eugenia Pruden 1149
Self-Activity, The Value of. Abby H. Stewart 857
Shaw, Albert.................................... 139
Shop-Girls, London...........O. M. E. Rowe 397
Single-Tax Campaign in Delaware. Priscilla Leonard 666
Speakers Who Tire Us...Marshal H. Bright 510
Stone, Melville E.: A Sketch................ 331
Tastoanes, How We Saw the....Fred'k Starr 96
Taxation Frauds in Chicago..Wm. E. Lewis 816
Ten Per Cent. of Travel, The..C. B. Le Row 629
"Three Wishes"................H. H. Moore 938
Thrilling Moments:
  Adventure in New Mexico, An. Charles F. Lummis 980
  Arizona Thrill, An...........Kirk Munroe 985
  Between Sharks and Breakers. Poultney Bigelow 983
  Between the Pony and the Buffalo. Thomas W. Knox 984
  Close Shave at Sea, A.....Joseph H. Sears 978
  Crocodile at Home, The...Chas. L. Norton 982
  Fisher's Crisis, A..........Henry van Dyke 976
  In the Utes' Country......Ernest Ingersoll 984
  Matterhorn, On the. Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D. 977
  War Experience, A......Gen. A. W. Greely 978
  Winning a Football Goal.....Walter Camp 980
Tools, How Shall a Boy be Introduced to? C. A. Bennett 155
To the Manner Born..........Fanny G. Ford 1107 Training of Girls under Sixteen. N. M. Butler 626
Training of Teachers, The University Professional..................Edward R. Shaw 932
Tramping..................James Hammond 513
Transvaal, The Situation in the. Charles Leonard 621
Travelers' Club, Our.........Lucy A. Martin 744
Turkey, The Responsibility of the United States as Regards....Rev. N. Smyth, D.D. 201
Turks and Armenians, The....E. F. Baldwin 241
Twelfth Night... ...Mrs. Burton Kingsland 16
Vacation Fund, The Outlook's.......... 812
Vital Selection..................H. W. Mabie 661
Waring's (Colonel) "White Angels." W. W. Ellsworth 1191
Whipping-Post in Delaware. Priscilla Leonard 55
Willard, Frances.. ...Lady Henry Somerset 1184
Winnie: A Story for Girls...Mrs. L. Robbins 514
Women and Public Affairs..Lillian W. Betts 396
Women and Public Education...L. W. Betts 512
Women's Degrees at Oxford and Cambridge. Norman H. Smith 623
Work and Play.................H. W. Mabie 703
Workshop, The Home.........C. A. Bennett 287
Yacht, How to Build a Miniature. W. J. Henderson 437

SERMONS:
Christ and the Social Order...Lyman Abbott 23
Christianity and Democracy..Lyman Abbott 97
Christ's Teachings on Social Topics. Lyman Abbott:
  I.—Christianity and Communism.......... 209
  II.—Christianity and Socialism............ 249
  III.—War or Peace.......................... 280
  IV.—The Labor War........................ 346
  V.—The Enemies of the Social Order...... 389
  VI.—The Social Evil. 432
  VII.—Marriage and Divorce. 477
  VIII.—Christ's Law of Service............ 627
  IX.—Christ's Standard of Values.......... 663
  X.—The Brotherhood of Man.............. 704
Gospel for an Age of Doubt. Rev. Henry van Dyke:
  I.—An Age of Doubt....................... 848
  II.—The Gospel of a Person............... 893
  III.—The Unveiling of the Father..... 935
  IV.—The Human Life of God.............. 1062
Lessons of Liberty.... ....Lyman Abbott 1102

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:
Adams, Rev. Myron............................ 165
Alden, Dr., Death of 860
American Board, The Debt of the........... 404
American Missionary Association........... 516
Andover, Commencement at.................. 1150
Andover Theological Seminary.............. 516
Anglican Church and Other Churches, The.. 351
Arbitration, English Churches and.......... 711
Armenia and the Evanglical Alliance........ 631
Armenia and the Sultan 106
Atlanta University, Conference at........... 1110
Australia, Forward Movement in............ 775
Baptist Anniversaries........................ 1010
Baptist Temple, The, Philadelphia.......... 349
Baptist Union of England, The.............. 944
Beach, Dr. David N.......................... 441
Beecher, Rev. Thomas K..................... 252
Berkeley Temple.............................. 899
Bible Study, Prizes for. 517
"Book-Room Frauds," The................... 860
Booth, Commander, Statement of............ 441
Booth, General, and the Salvation Army.... 516
Booth, Mr. and Mrs. Ballington, New Work of 480
Booth, Recall of Commander................. 165
Brooklyn, A New Parish House in........... 710
Building Up a Down-Town Church.......... 580
California Chinese Mission................... 516
Chambers, Rev. Talbot W................... 293
Charities and Correction, Nat'l Conference of 1151

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.—Continued. PAGE
Children's School of Ethics ... 253
Christian Endeavor Society and Presbyterians 106
"Christian Register," The ... 861
Christian Union, Another Step in ... 860
Christian Unity ... 822
Church and the Nation, The ... 672
Church Army in America ... 899, 1150
Church House, The, in London ... 442
Church Saloon, A ... 63
College Settlements ... 29
Conference, A Noteworthy ... 774
Congregational Churches of New York ... 1010
Congregational Church Union ... 632
Congregational Home Missionary Society ... 1111
Congregational Union of England ... 1010
Congregationalism, Canadian ... 1212
Cook, Joseph ... 62
Council of Seventy, The ... 632
Cuyler's (Dr.) Fiftieth Anniversary ... 672
Dale, Dr., The Successor of ... 442
DeForest, Rev. H. S ... 253
Deputation, A New ... 673
Disciples, Educational Conference of the ... 860
Divorce Reform League ... 404
Doshisha, Changes in the ... 1011
Ecob, J. H ... 28, 106
Evangelical Alliance ... 28
Every-Day Church, The ... 517
Free Church Congress, The ... 631
Furness, Rev. Dr. William H ... 252
Gambling Habit in Great Britain, The ... 581
General Assembly, The ... 1010
General Conference at Cleveland ... 860
Germany, The Religious Situation in ... 405
Gladstone's Letter to the Pope ... 1151
Governors and Religion ... 580
Grace Church, New York ... 294
Heresy Trial, A Valuable ... 630
Herrick, Dr ... 774
Horne, The Rev. C. Silvester ... 823
Hurndall, Rev. Evans ... 253
Japan:
  Deputation to, and Kumi-ai Churches .. 164, 293
  Difficulties of Missionaries in ... 350
  Religious Outlook in .... Rev. D. C. Greene 162
  Report of Deputation to ... 212
  Return of Deputation from ... 62
  Y. M. C. A. in ... 253
Kenrick, Archbishop ... 481
King's Daughters, The ... 710
Korea, Missionaries in ... 516
Leipsic, The American Chapel in ... 674
Lutheran Synod, The ... 404
Maclaren, Dr., Jubilee of ... 944
Maclaren, Ian, on War ... 405
Magoun, Dr. George F ... 405
Manhattan and Brooklyn Conferences ... 822
Manning, Cardinal, Life of ... 405
Men's Club, A ... 28
Methodism in England, Decrease of ... 944
Methodism, The Growth of ... 481
Methodist Church, Time-Limit in ... 350
Methodist General Conference, The. 897, 942, 1011, 1072
Mills, B. Fay, and His Work ... 672
Ministerial Relief ... 1071
Missionary Societies, The Debts of the ... 481
Missions and Theological Seminaries ... 516
Missions, Young Men and ... 480
Negro Problem, The ... 861
New Jersey Association, The ... 822
Open-Air Preaching ... 1010
Organists, American Guild of ... 1110
Parkhurst, Dr., and Mr. Dole ... 631
Persia, What Has Been Done in ... 898
Pierson, Dr., The Immersion of ... 350
Potter, Bishop, on the Growth of Luxury ... 350
Presbyterian General Assembly ... 1071
Presbyterian Mission Rally in New York ... 480
Primate of All Ireland, The New ... 674
Princely Knights of Character Castle ... 581
Princeton Jubilee, The ... 898
Pulpit Exchanges ... 441
Race Question in Florida, The ... 860
Railway Literary Union ... 214
Reid, Gilbert, Mission to Educated Chinese. 1151
Roman Catholics in U. S., Statistics of ... 442
Russia, Persecution in ... 517
Salvation Army Controversy, The ... 822
Salvation Army in India ... 710
Salvation Army, The Crisis in the ... 404
Salvation Army, The Division in the ... 710
Satolli, Cardinal, Recall of ... 1212
Satterlee, Bishop ... 631
Sermons, The Length of ... 673
Shah, Death of, and Missions in Persia ... 898

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.—Continued. PAGE
Smith, Judson ... 106
Smith, Prof. George Adam ... 673
Smith, Prof. H. P., and the Cincinnati Presbytery ... 774
Smyth, President E. C ... 1150
Social Reform, The Church and ... 481
Stimson, Dr., and the Broadway Tabernacle. 672
Stimson, Dr., In Honor of ... 899
Storrs, Dr. R. S., on Long Pastorates ... 252
Sunday-School, Reform of the ... 581
Tolstoï, Count. Doctrine of ... 711
Tremont Temple, The New ... 899
Turkey, Americans in ... 62
Union Settlement, The ... 404
Union Theological Seminary ... 28
Unitarian Association ... 1070
Unitarians, City Missions Among ... 861
United Work in New York ... 580
Vrooman, Mr., The Case of ... 943
Whittier House, The ... 943
Williams, T. C., Resignation of ... 632
Wright, Rev. W. B ... 1212
Year-Books, Church ... 441
Young Women's Christian Association, The. 580

BOOKS AND AUTHORS:
Æsthetic Principles (Marshall) ... 518
A Few Memories (Anderson) ... 939
Age of Hildebrand, The (Vincent) ... 634
Alaska (Bruce) ... 520
Allan Ramsay (Smeaton) ... 821
American University, The ... 580
Anima Poetæ (Coleridge) ... 770
Australasian Colonies, History of ... 402
Barnard, C. F. (Tiffany) ... 292
Barras, The Memoirs of ... 821
Bayard Taylor (Smyth) ... 482
Belief, Philosophy of (Argyll) ... 1209
Bible in Spain (Borrow) ... 820
Biology, General (Sedgwick and Wilson) ... 353
Bismarck, Life of (Lowe) ... 352
Books and Their Makers (Putnam) ... 1113
British Freewomen (Stopes) ... 900
British Policy, The Growth of (Seeley) ... 482
Brotherhood of Man (Kidd) ... 713
Browning and the Christian Faith (Berdoe). 670
Butler, Joseph, Complete Works of ... 633
Catholic Socialism (Nitti) ... 26
Chautauqua Literature Series ... 291
China, Forty Years in (Graves) ... 64
Christ, Great Charter of ... 1210
Christ, Creation Centered in (Guinness) ... 1154
Christ's Idea of the Supernatural (Denison). 1113
Church Harmonies New and Old ... 401
Civic Christianity (Prall) ... 353
Comte, Mill, and Spencer (Watson) ... 439
Constant, First Valet of the Emperor, Memoirs of ... 439
Constitutional History of the House of Lords (Pike) ... 900
Cooper, James Fenimore, Works of ... 634
Dartmoor Forest (Rowe) ... 670
Daudet's Works ... 901
Death, A Study of (Alden) ... 401
Dogma, History of (Harnack) ... 771
Economic History of Virginia (Bruce) ... 862
Eliot, George, Works of ... 439
Encyclopædia Britannica, Guide to Systematic Readings in the (Baldwin) ... 583
English in American Universities ... 1104
Episcopal Church in the U. S. (Tiffany) ... 482
Essays on Nature and Culture (Mabie) ... 1074
Essentials of Logic (Bosanquet) ... 402
Ethical Movement, An (Sheldon) ... 901
Expansion of Religion, The (Donald) ... 939 Fiction:
  Adam Johnstone's Son (Crawford) ... 863
  All Men are Liars (Hocking) ... 161
  Brown Squire, The (Baring-Gould) ... 772
  Cleg Kelly (Crockett) ... 863
  Comedies of Courtship (Hope) ... 519
  Corruption (White) ... 161
  Courtship of Morrice Buckler, The (Mason) 771
  Damnation of Theron Ware (Frederic) ... 862
  Day of Their Wedding, The (Howells) ... 440
  Exploits of Brigadier Gerard (Doyle) ... 940
  Fortune, A Bid for (Boothby) ... 255
  Gathering Clouds (Farrar) ... 161
  Gentleman's Gentleman, A (Pemberton) ... 863
  Hard Woman, A (Hunt) ... 161
  House-Boat on the Styx (Bangs) ... 27
  Iralie's Bushranger (Hornung) ... 519
  John Darker (Lee) ... 161
  Lady of Quality, A (Burnett) ... 519
  Lilith (Macdonald) ... 161
  Man who Became a Savage, The (Hornaday) 634

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.—Continued. PAGE
  One who Looked On, The (Montrésor) ... 511
  People We Pass (Ralph) ... 169
  Robert Urquhart (Setoun) ... 863
  Self-Denying Ordinance, A (Hamilton) ... 712
  Successors to the Title (Walford) ... 712
  Tom Grogan (Smith) ... 771
  Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry (Carleton) ... 772
  Veil of Liberty (Peronne) ... 161
  Way of a Maid (Hinkson) ... 161
  Weird Tales (Hoffmann) ... 821
  Wizard, Little (Weyman) ... 161
Four-Handed Folk (Miller) ... 821
Free-Soil Party in Wisconsin (Smith) ... 254
Froebel's Gifts (Wiggin and Smith) ... 820
Genesis, The Unity of the Book of (Green) .. 712
German Society in the Middle Ages (Bax) ... 900
Gladstone, Life of (Lucy) ... 352
Great Movements (Nicoll) ... 483
Harris, Townsend (Griffis) ... 26
Hebrew Influence upon Civilization. (Astley) 900
Hebrews, History of the (Kittel) ... 65
History of the Warfare of Science with Theology (White) ... 820, 1153
How to Visit Switzerland (Lunn) ... 519
Hutchinson, Life of (Hosmer) ... 712
Hymnal for Schools (Ives) ... 402
Industrial Evolution of U. S. (Wright) ... 254
Inspiration, Lectures on (Sanday) ... 670
Irenics and Polemics (Bacon) ... 1075
Islands of the Pacific, The (Alexander) ... 671
Israel Among the Nations (Leroy-Beaulieu). 291
Jewish Ideals (Jacobs) ... 1154
Judaism, Spirit of (Lazarus) ... 940
Keynote, The (Griffin) ... 291
Knox, John (Maccunn) ... 290
London City Churches (Daniell) ... 440
Lotze, Philosophy of (Jones) ... 353
Manning, Cardinal, Life of (Purcell) ... 582
Mars (Lowell) ... 1153
Modern German Literature (Wells) ... 483
Mogul Emperors of Hindustan (Holden) ... 483
Moody's Lodging-House (Sanborn) ... 215
Moral Evolution (Harris) ... 518
Morality and Religion (Kidd) ... 402
Morse Lectures, 1895 (Tyler) ... 669
Municipal Government in Continental Europe (Shaw) ... 290
My Sister Henriette (Renan) ... 216, 1154
New England Fields and Woods (Robinson) 900
New England Town, An Old (Child) ... 939
New Orleans (King) ... 215
Oliver Wendell Holmes, Life and Letters of (Morse) ... 1000
On Parody (Martin) ... 772
Pater, Walter, Miscellaneous Studies by ... 160
Persecution and Tolerance (Creighton) ... 402
Plants, Natural History of (Von Marilaun) .. 26
Poetry:
  Child's Garden of Verse (Stevenson) ... 27
  Distaff and Spindle (Townsend) ... 215
  Echoes from the Sabine Farm (Field) ... 1154
  My Confidences (Locker-Lampson) ... 820
  Poems (Donne) ... 216
  Under the Pines and other Verses (Coonley) 671
  Poets, Modern English, Life of the Spirit in (Scudder) ... 104
Preacher and His Place, The (Greer) ... 669
Puritanism in the Old World and in the New (Gregory) ... 670
Religion of Hope, The (Moxom) ... 900
Religion, Thoughts on (Romanes) ... 216
Renan, Letters of Ernest and Henriette .. 216, 1154
Responsive Readings (Van Dyke) ... 713
Rome and Pompeii (Brossier) ... 1074
Sala, George Augustus, Life and Adventures of ... 634
Science, The Helpful (Mivart) ... 216
Spirit, The, in Literature and Life (Coyle) .. 1113
Spiritual Law in the Natural World (Thomas) 354
Stambuloff (Beaman) ... 520
Stanley, Dean, Biographical Sketches of ... 669
Statistics and Sociology (Mayo-Smith) ... 254
Strikes and Social Problems (Nicholson) ... 670
Synoptic Gospels, An Introduction to the (Gloag) ... 671
Theism as Grounded in Human Nature (Davidson) ... 634
Theologic Definition, Studies in (Palmer) ... 64
Tithes, A History of (Clarke) ... 900
Trent, Council of (Froude) ... 1209
University Hymn-Book ... 401
Venice, Guide to the Paintings of (Karoly) .. 583
Warfare of Science with Theology (White). 820, 1153
Witness of Denial, The (Scudder) ... 863
Women's Share in Primitive Culture (Mason) 900

The Lawton Simplex Printer

saves time and labor; money too—100 letters, postal cards, copies of music, drawings, or typewritten copy, in almost no time, and exact copies at that, by using the Lawton Simplex. Requires no washing or cleaning, and saves its cost over and again in sending out notices. Costs but little ($3 to $10).

CAUTION.—Other things are being made and called Simplex Printers. The only way to be sure of getting the genuine is to see that yours is the Lawton Simplex Printer. Send for circulars. Agents wanted.

LAWTON & CO., 20 Vesey St., New York.

Home Treatment for HAY-FEVER

8 Years Cured—W. L. WEDGER,
Roslindale, Boston, Mass.

7 Years Cured—J. L. TREVILLYAN,
24 5th St., N.E., Minneapolis, Minn.

8 Years Cured—MRS. A. P. FOSTER,
Chelsea, Mass.

5 Years Cured—J. W. GILLESPIE,
Black River, N. Y.

5 Years Cured—WM. E. WELLER,
164 Cherry St., Burlington, Vt.

WE OFFER

A Cure That Stays

Our constitutional treatment not only gives relief, but eradicates the cause of the disease and cures to stay cured. OUR NEW BOOK—Thesis for 1896—with 2,000 other references whom you can consult, now ready. Sent on application with blank for free examination. GET IT. Read it. Think it over. Talk with these people or write them. Get ready to meet the season's attack, and do it now. Address

Dr. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

"If at First You Don't Succeed," Try

SAPOLIO

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS

MR. GLADSTONE'S NEW BOOK

Studies Subsidiary to the Works of Bishop Butler

By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE

12mo, cloth, $2.00, net.

THE WORKS OF JOSEPH BUTLER, D.C.L.

Sometime Lord Bishop of Durham. Divided into sections, with Sectional Headings, Index, Notes, etc. Edited by The Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $7.00, net.

Life and Letters of Fenton John Anthony Hort, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D.

Sometime Hulsean Professor and Lady Margaret Reader in Divinity in the University of Cambridge. By his Son, ARTHUR FENTON HORT, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. With Portrait. 2 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price, $5.50, net.

The London Burial-Grounds

Notes on their History from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By Mrs. BASIL HOLMES. With 63 fine Illustrations. Small 4to, cloth. Price, $3.50.

God's Garden

Sunday Talks with Boys. By the Rev. W. J. FOXELL, M.A., B Mus. (Lond.). With an Introduction by the Rev. F. W. FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S., Dean of Canterbury. 12mo, cloth, pp. xiii. + 177. Price, $1.25.

NEW VOLUME

THE MODERN READER'S BIBLE

A Series of Books from the Sacred Scriptures presented in Modern Literary Form. Each number of the Series edited, with an Introduction,

By RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A.

(Camb.), Ph.D. (Penn.), Professor of Literature in English in the University of Chicago.

BIBLICAL IDYLS

THE LYRIC IDYL OF SOLOMON'S SONG, AND THE EPIC IDYLS OF RUTH, ESTHER, AND TOBIT. Small 18mo, cloth, 50 cents.

The Book of Job

A Dramatic Poem in which are embodied Varying Solutions of the Mystery of Life.

Deuteronomy

The Oration and Songs of Moses, constituting his farewell to the People of Israel.

Ecclesiastes—Wisdom of Solomon

Each is a Series of Connected Writings embodying, from different standpoints, a Solution of the Whole Mystery of Life.

The Proverbs

A Miscellany of Sayings and Poems embodying Isolated Observations of Life.

Ecclesiasticus

A Miscellany including longer compositions, still embodying only Isolated Observations of Life.

NOW READY. NEW BOOK BY SIR JOHN LUBBOCK

THE SCENERY OF SWITZERLAND

AND THE CAUSES TO WHICH IT IS DUE

By the Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D.

With numerous plans and illustrations. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

This volume comes out appropriately at a time when English and American travelers are already beginning to think of the Swiss Alps. It will no doubt become a favorite companion to thousands of travelers during the season, and be hardly less welcome at other times of the year as a reminder of past pleasures, or to those who have not yet visited Switzerland—as a delightful foretaste of what is to come. The book is scientific in character, but the subjects are handled in the peculiar style which so many readers have learned to associate with Sir John Lubbock's name. The titles of a few chapters will give an idea of the contents: The Geology of Switzerland, the Origin of Mountains, Snow and Ice Glaciers, Valleys, Lakes, Action of the Rivers, Influence of Strata upon Scenery, The Valais, Jura, Bernese Oberland, etc.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE:

The Pleasures of Life

Two parts in one vol. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

The Beauties of Nature

And the Wonders of the World We Live

With numerous illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Use of Life

12mo, cloth, $1.25.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE FLOWER OF ENGLAND'S FACE," ETC., ETC.

A CATHEDRAL PILGRIMAGE

By JULIA C. R. DORR

Author of "The Flower of England's Face," "Friar Anselmo," etc. 18mo, cloth, 75 cents. (Miniature Series.)

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

"THE FLOWER OF ENGLAND'S FACE"

Sketches from English travel. 18mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Riverside Letters

A continuation of "Letters to Marco." By GEORGE D. LESLIE, R.A, Author of "Our River." With Illustrations by the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

Alpine Notes and the Climbing Foot

By GEORGE WHERRY, M.A., M.C. CANTAB, F.R.C.S., etc. With 22 Illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

Two Queens: Caroline Matilda of Denmark, and Marie Antoinette of France

A Historical Novel from the Memoirs of Baron Simolin. With a Preface by F. MAX MULLER. Oblong 16mo, paper cover. 50 cents.

NEW VOLUME OF THE COLLECTED WORKS OF FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE. VOL. VIII.

Edited by ALEXANDER TILLE

THUS SPAKE ZARATHUSTRA

A BOOK FOR ALL AND NONE. By FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE. Translated by ALEXANDER TILLE. 12mo, cloth, $2.50.

ALREADY PUBLISHED. VOL. XI.

THE CASE OF WAGNER.—THE TWILIGHT IDOLS.—NIETZSCHE CONTRA WAGNER

Translated by THOMAS COMMON. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

⁂ This sole authorized edition of "Collected Works of Friedrich Nietzsche" is issued under the supervision of the Nietzsche-Archiv at Hamburg. It is based on the final German edition prepared by Dr. Fritz Koegel, by direction of Nietzsche's relatives.

Zola's New Novel.

Rome

By EMILE ZOLA, Author of "Lourdes," "La Débâcle," "Dr. Pascal," etc. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. 2 vols. 16mo, cloth, $2.00.

By Louis Becke and Walter Jeffery.

A First Fleet Family

A Hitherto Unpublished Narrative of Certain Remarkable Adventures Compiled from the Papers of Sergeant William Dew of the Marines. By LOUIS BECKE and WALTER JEFFERY. With numerous illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

By F. Marion Crawford.

Adam Johnstone's Son

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, Author of "Saracinesca," "Pietro Ghisleri," "Don Orsino," "Casa Braccio," etc. With 24 full-page Illustrations by A. FORESTIER. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, 66 Fifth Ave., New York

The Caligraph Typewriter

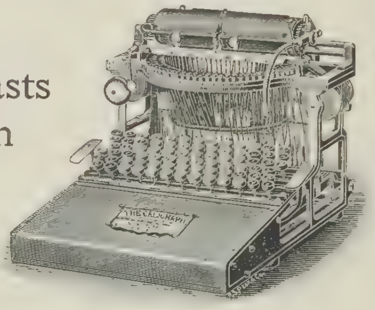
IS WORTH 100% MORE than any other, because it will wear twice as long

"It Outlasts Them All"



The finest Typewriter Catalogue ever issued, and interesting Pamphlets, will be sent on application to the American Writing Machine Company,

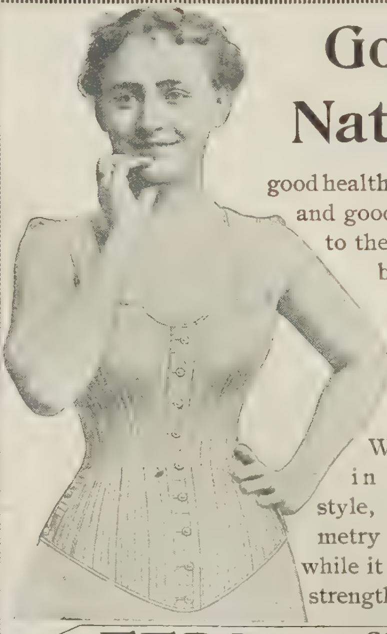
237 Broadway, New York, U.S.A.



Good Nature

good health, good looks, and good style come to the woman who breaks away from corsets and revels in the comfort of a Ferris Waist. Perfect in form and style, adding symmetry to the figure while it supports and strengthens,—the should be in every woman's wardrobe. Made in short or extra long waist, high or low bust.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE CORSET WAIST

Children's, 25c. to 50c. Misses', 50c. to $1. Ladies', $1 to $2.
For sale by all retailers.

In its curative properties is wonderfully effective—is also a great beautifier of a healthy skin. Its manufacture being conducted under the personal supervision of men who have made the treatment of the skin a serious study, it is the best soap in the market. Price twenty-five cents, and is worth it.

SEND TEN CENTS IN STAMPS FOR SAMPLE OF SOAP AND POWDER.

THE PALISADE MAN'F'G CO.
YONKERS, N. Y.

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

Volume 54 Saturday, 25 July, 1896 Number 4

William Eustis Russell

The old adage that death loves a shining mark has been painfully illustrated during the past two weeks. Political life in this country could hardly have suffered greater loss than that occasioned by the death of ex-Governor William E. Russell, of Massachusetts, one of the most interesting figures in our recent political history. Born in Cambridge in 1857, educated in the public schools of that city and at Harvard College, graduating from the Boston University Law School about 1879, Governor Russell's early career was full not only of promise but of performance. His gifts of temperament, character, and intellect showed themselves at a very early age. Sixteen years ago he began the practice of law in Boston, and at once became interested in politics, acting with the Democratic party. At twenty-four years of age he became a member of the Cambridge Common Council. Two years later he was an Alderman. In 1885 he was elected Mayor of Cambridge by a large majority, and this early success was followed by two subsequent re-elections without opposition; the ability, integrity, and efficiency of his administration making him practically the only possible candidate for the position. In 1884 Mr. Russell brought himself very prominently into notice by his campaign in behalf of President Cleveland. Four years later he was nominated for Governor of Massachusetts by the Democrats and defeated. The following year he was again nominated and again defeated. The third nomination, a year later, after a hot political campaign, resulted in his election; and in two subsequent years he was re-elected, overcoming Republican majorities which were supposed to be overwhelming. Governor Russell aroused not only admiration but enthusiasm. He was one of the few young men in our politics whose career was independent of bosses and machines. He stood for convictions, and he brought into public life independence, courage, courtesy, and a free movement of ideas. One of the worst features of the reign of the boss and the machine has been the disappearance in large measure of such young men from our public life. Governor Russell's career was an inspiring one from every point of view. He could ill be spared at any time, but his death at this moment, when the minority of the Democratic party opposed to free coinage stands in such sore need of leadership, is nothing short of a calamity.

* * *

The announcement of the death of the well-known artist and writer, William Hamilton Gibson, at his country home in Washington, Conn., on Thursday of last week, has brought a sense of personal loss not only to a wide circle of friends but to a wider circle of readers. Mr. Gibson's industry was tireless, and fears have often been expressed of late years that he was overworking; but his sturdy figure and his intense vitality gave no sign of the sudden arrest of activity which has now come upon him in early middle life. A graduate of the well-known Gunnery School at Washington, Conn., and later of the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, Mr. Gibson's first successful work was done, very significantly, in botanical drawing. He was connected with the "American Agriculturist" and "Hearth and Home" as an illustrator, and rapidly made his way by virtue of the excellence and delicate quality of his work. Popular attention was first attracted to him by his charming illustrations in the magazines, and he soon began to supplement the work of the pencil by that of the pen, developing a very easy and agreeable style, intimate knowledge of nature, and delicate observation. His nature studies, illustrated by himself, have been among the most attractive and widely read books about nature that have appeared in recent years. He was particularly happy in his summer home at Washington, where his love of out-of-door life and his habits of observation found full play. During the past two or three years he had utilized his knowledge of the plant and insect world and his ingenuity of illustration in a series of lectures on subjects relating to natural history, which proved not only extremely popular but instructive and stimulating. Mr. Gibson was a man of great integrity of nature, modest in his estimate of himself, and simple and friendly to a degree which won him the affection and regard of a great circle of acquaintances.

* * *

A very picturesque and interesting figure disappears from religious life by the death of the Rt. Rev. Arthur Cleveland Coxe, Bishop of Western New York, one of the best-known members of the Episcopal House of Bishops, a theological controversialist of great energy and persistence, and a well-known, widely appreciated hymn-writer. Born at Mendham, N. J., in 1818, the son of one of the foremost Presbyterian ministers of the day, Bishop Coxe was educated at the University of the City of New York and the General Theological Seminary in this city, his first charge being St. Ann's Church in this city. He was subsequently at the head of parishes in Hartford, Baltimore, and again in this city, where he became rector of Calvary Church in 1863. Two years later he was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Western New York, and three months later he succeeded to the Bishopric. A man of great energy of nature, of vigorous mind, and of strong convictions, Bishop Coxe soon made himself very widely known. He was a Catholic in the large, not in the technical, sense of the word. He discerned in advance the movement toward a revival of primitive Christianity in Italy and Germany, and he took great interest in the career of Dr. Döllinger and the development of the Old Catholic movement. It was his initiative which led to the revision of the Prayer-Book. Under his editorial care the Ante-Nicene Fathers have been largely republished. Several volumes of sermons, lectures, and poems bear his name, for he was an indefatigable writer. In an ecclesiastical controversy he was thoroughly aggressive, and his fight against the Roman Catholic claims was not only begun at an early age but was continued till the last year of his life. He was a man of strong individuality, not always perfectly balanced in judgment, but highly respected and greatly beloved by a host of people.

◆

The publication of the correspondence between Lord Salisbury and Mr. Olney looking toward an agreement for a permanent tribunal of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain is in itself a significant sign of the friendly spirit now existing between the two nations, and of the sincerity of the efforts to reach a mutual understanding. So far as the correspondence in itself shows, this understanding is still in the future, though semi-official reports from Washington state that considerable advance has been made since the letters now published were written. It is to be noted as another sign of amicable feeling that with regard to the Venezuelan question (which is inevitably, though we think unfortunately, under consideration simultaneously with the broader question of international arbitration) the English diplomats show no disposition to resent the action of our Government in interfering between the two original disputants. On the contrary, Lord Salisbury has frankly admitted in Parliament that Great Britain has more than once acted in the same way, and he even expresses a preference for dealing with the United States rather than with Venezuela directly. He still maintains, however, that it is unfair to submit to arbitration British claims to territory upon which bona-fide British colonists have settled under the assurance that the land was part of the British Empire. To this Mr. Olney rejoins with acuteness and apparent reason that the fact that some settlers may have occupied certain lands in this way does not in the least affect the question of national title, and if the British claim is particularly strong with regard to this special territory, all the more readily should it consent to place those claims before a fair board of arbitrators. Thus the Venezuelan question is still apparently much where it was; but there are indications—notably Lord Salisbury's complimentary allusion to our own Commission—which lead to the belief that an agreement may soon be reached. At all events, it is clear that both parties desire such an agreement, and will zealously try to attain it.

◆

With regard to the general scheme of arbitration between the two countries, Lord Salisbury proposed a convention providing that each country should name two permanent judicial officers; that in case of a dispute each country should name one of these as an arbitrator, and the two named should select an umpire with final power of decision; that claims to be subject to final decision should be those for less than £100,000, and not involving sovereignty or territorial jurisdiction; that claims of this latter kind might be arbitrated, the decision to be subject to formal protest from either party, and appeal to a court composed of three of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Great Britain and three of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States; that a majority of not less than five to one in this court should be necessary to sustain a finding; that differences which in the judgment of either nation affected its national honor need not be submitted to arbitration except by special agreement. Mr. Olney's efforts were at once directed toward changing the provisions as to appeal from the original Court of Arbitration. He would allow the six members to add three to their number, and would make a bare majority vote of the Court decisive. He also strenuously argues that no question shall be excluded from consideration by the proposed Court unless Congress or Parliament shall, by act or resolution, decide that the honor of the nation or the integrity of its territory or sovereignty is involved. Certainly, Mr. Olney's proposals give a more practical and workable scheme for arbitration, and (as we believe is right) tend to commit the nations beyond recall to an arbitration once agreed upon, while Lord Salisbury's views make arbitration easy in comparatively unimportant matters, but hedge it about with cautions as regards important matters. There is nothing whatever in the correspondence to indicate the presence of insuperable difficulties. On the contrary, there is everything to make us hope for a final reasonable, fair, and practical agreement. The object in giving the letters to the public has been to elicit the general feeling of the peoples of the two countries—a course as commendable as it is unusual in diplomacy. The public, through the press and by individual expressions, has warmly approved the progress made, and urges that the negotiations be carried on to a successful issue.

◆

The intensity of the political struggle in Belgium, reported from time to time in these columns, has been followed by something like a calm, and the recent elections for the Chamber of Deputies did not appear to arouse very great interest. The members of the Chamber are elected for four years, and half their number retire every two years. The body is made up of 152 members, and in the former Chamber these delegates were divided into 104 Clericals, 33 Socialists, and 15 Liberals, the Liberal party in Belgium having been almost destroyed at the previous election. The term Liberal, as it has been used in Belgium, represented the old-time individualism rather than the new-time Socialistic tendency. At the recent election the interest centered mainly in Antwerp and Brussels, where the size of the constituencies and the number of representatives who were voted for on a general list gave the election a general significance. The Liberals made their chief fight in Brussels, where they have practically taken the same ground as the Progressionists, who may be described as Radical Liberals with Socialistic leanings. The Liberals do not seem, however, to have succeeded in rehabilitating themselves, the latest reports indicating that the Ultra-Clerical group of the Catholic party will have a representation of 70 as against the representation of 58 in the former Chamber. The polling figures have not been telegraphed. At the last election 915,000 votes were cast for the various Catholic candidates, and 871,000 votes divided between the various groups of Liberals and Socialists. Apparently there has not been any marked change of opinion.

◆

As we go to press, the People's Party and Silver Conventions are assembled in St. Louis. The Silver Convention is certain to indorse the nominations made at Chicago, Senator Teller and his associates urging this policy in an open letter. The action of the People's Party Convention is still in doubt—the Southern wing being unwilling to fuse with the Democrats whom they have fought so long, and by whom they have been so obviously defrauded in many elections. If this Southern element stood alone in its opposition to fusion, the result would not be doubtful; but it is supported by Chairman Taubeneck, of the National Committee, and several other party managers, who insist that the party organization must be maintained at all hazards. Whatever the result at St. Louis, however, the bulk of the Populist party will doubtless fuse with the other silver forces. The anti-silver forces are likely to show an equally united front in the approaching campaign. The movement initiated by the anti-silver Democrats of Illinois in favor of a third ticket does not seem to have grown. In New York State, where such a movement would naturally have the most strength, it is kept back by the unwillingness of Senator Hill and Tammany Hall to lose control of the "regular" Democratic organization. Neither the Senator nor the New York City machine seems to be able to decide what course to pursue. The State Committee has been called to meet after the Populist Convention, in the hope that definite action can then be taken. Meanwhile, more and more Democrats are daily deciding to vote for either Mr. McKinley or Mr. Bryan. In Massachusetts there seems no doubt that Mr. George Fred Williams will be able to carry his party with him to the support of the Chicago ticket and platform. Two members of President Cleveland's Cabinet—Secretaries Herbert and Olney—have announced their determination not to support their party ticket, and it is reported that nearly every member of the Cabinet will vote for Mr. McKinley in November, unless an anti-silver Democrat is nominated. The confusion of old party lines could hardly be carried further.

*

The Republican Executive Committee has decided to maintain two campaign headquarters—one at New York, the customary place, and the other at Chicago, this year the center of the battle-field. The Democratic Executive Committee has practically decided to establish its headquarters at Washington, instead of New York, partly because it hopes for few campaign contributions from the latter city, but chiefly because campaign literature in the form of Congressional speeches can be mailed from Washington free of charge. The amount of work to be done by the campaign committees is enormous. The New York "Times" recently published a description of what it has amounted to in previous years. One committee of which the "Times's" contributor had some personal knowledge "printed and tried to put out 100,000,000 of documents." The man who had the contract to get out this work had only ten weeks in which to do it, and was "driven crazy" by the complications that arose. He was unable to secure presses enough of his own to turn out the work, and before the close of the campaign had to hire one man for the exclusive purpose of visiting the twenty or thirty other establishments to which he had been forced to turn for help. "The printers' bills aggregated dangerously near the two-hundred-thousand-dollar mark." The Committee on Printing has perhaps the principal work to perform, as it must select and edit the documents sent out—especially the campaign text-book for which the party is held so directly responsible. Another important committee is the "Bureau of Oratory," which arranges for the speeches of the campaign. Nearly all the speakers expect pay for their services as well as their traveling expenses, and their bills reach a high aggregate. Not a little work devolves upon the National Committee in the matter of looking after the press—especially the newspapers published in foreign languages, "nearly every one of whose editors is ready to espouse either side of the question for a consideration." As a rule, their support is secured by giving them standing orders for from 3,000 to 10,000 copies of each issue. These are the main avenues for the open expenditure of money. Besides these there are narrower but not straighter ways by which money is made effective. "Nearly every Committee establishes several secret bureaus which are located away from the headquarters themselves. There are bureaus for the workingmen, bureaus for the Swedes and voters of other nationalities, and even bureaus for the liquor-dealers, whose favor is generally courted by both parties. Curiously enough, more than one Committee has maintained a temperance bureau contemporaneously with a liquor-dealers' bureau." "One Committee a few years ago is said to have used up $1,900,000 in its existence of less than three months, but $1,500,000 is probably nearer the average."

*

The Bimetallic League of Great Britain held its annual meeting last week. The report presented declared that the cause of international bimetallism had made substantial progress during the past year, and mentioned the resolutions adopted in the French, Belgian, and Prussian legislatures. "In the United States," it continued, "all parties and classes would welcome international bimetallism." The report concluded as follows: "The responsibility for the present and growing dangers to the industrial life of the nation rests upon those who oppose that monetary system under which our prosperity advanced by leaps and bounds." A letter was read from Lord Aldenham (Mr. Henry Huck Gibbs), ex-Governor of the Bank of England and President of the League, congratulating the members upon the great progress which had been made in the United States. "Whatever may be the result of the Presidential election," he said, "we may be sure that our cause generally is prospering." General Francis Walker, however, who differs with Lord Aldenham regarding the ability of any one nation to maintain a bimetallic system, took a more sober view of the situation here. "It is deeply to be regretted," he said, "that millions of our best citizens, as represented at the Chicago Convention last week, declared for the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the action of other countries. This was done passionately, but the effect will be to maintain the gold standard unimpaired." Mr. McKinley, he assured the conference, was never a gold monometallist, and could not be if he tried. General Walker read the St. Louis currency resolution, which received hearty applause.

*

Another important strike in this city has been settled by arbitration, President Low, of Columbia, being this time the arbitrator. The strike was in the single establishment of J. J. Little & Co., but the parties to the dispute were the Typothetæ—the organization of the employing printers—and Typographical Union No. 6, the principal organization of printing employees. These two organizations had through conference committees reached an agreement upon four of the seven demands made by the strikers. The remaining three, submitted to President Low, were as follows: (1) that the text of all publications be done entirely on piece or entirely on time; (2) that certain cuts be paid for at space rates; (3) that book and job rooms shall be recognized as "card" offices. President Low decided the first point in favor of the Typographical Union. He decided the second point in favor of a compromise suggested by the Typothetæ. The third point was the most important one, and upon this President Low's decision was substantially as follows: To declare the office of J. J. Little & Co. to be a "card office," he said, was to declare that no one could be employed in it except members of the trade-union. As an arbitrator, he could not thus limit the right of an employer to select his employees. "No one," he said, "can compel union men, without their own consent, to work with non-union men. But it is a different thing to demand that an employer shall not be free to employ any but union men. It is no more reasonable for the union to demand that J. J. Little & Co. shall not be free to employ non-union men than it would be for J. J. Little & Co. to demand that the union should be deprived of the freedom to take in new members at its discretion."

President Low concluded by recommending that the Typographical Union be recognized as the accredited representative of the union employees, and that permanent arrangements be made for the arbitration of all future differences between the firm and the union.

❀

Defeat has already been turned into possible victory by the advocates of municipal rapid transit in this city who refused to be discouraged by the decision of the Supreme Court against the plan first agreed upon by the Rapid Transit Commission. That decision, it will be recalled, forbade the Commission to proceed with the making of contracts on the ground that the proposed road would cost more than $50,000,000, and make the debt of the city exceed the constitutional limit. At first the Commission seemed disposed to accept this decision as final, and to meet the public demand for rapid transit through further concessions to the elevated railway system. Fortunately, however, the elevated railroad company was unreasonable in its demands, and the Commission, supported by the press and the trades-unions, proceeded to consider whether new plans might not be adopted to which the objections of the Supreme Court would not apply. On Thursday last such a plan was submitted by the chief engineer of the Commission, and it is in some respects more satisfactory to believers in municipal ownership than the plan originally agreed upon. The underground road now planned begins at City Hall Square and proceeds up Elm Street, instead of Broadway, as far as Forty-second Street. From Forty-second Street north there will be two branches—one along Broadway and the Boulevard, and the other traversing the East Side. It was only along lower Broadway that the abutting property owners objected to the underground road at first proposed, and only in that section was there danger of serious damage suits because of dreaded injury to the foundations of buildings, etc., etc. The estimated cost of the new route is but $26,500,000, and this estimate is at prices shown to be excessive by the recent experiences of the Boston Transit Commission. The engineers estimate that the eight miles between the City Hall and the Harlem River can be traversed in twenty minutes. The elevated railroad has submitted another plan for its own extension, but it is believed that the Commission will proceed, as the vote of the people directed, to build a system which shall free the city from the discomforts, delays, and extortions inseparable from the control of its rapid-transit facilities by a private monopoly.

❀

A most important step has been taken by the Board of Health in New York. It has ordered the destruction of two hundred rear tenement-houses in various parts of the city, the greater number being located in what is known as the Italian region—Sullivan, Thompson, Mulberry, Greenwich, Baxter, and Mott Streets. The number of people who will be driven from these death and disease reeking tenements can hardly be estimated. One house contained four hundred and seventy-two human beings. The death-rate in some of these tenements is appalling. In three in Thompson Street it equals fifty-two and eight-tenths per thousand. The population of each of these tenements ranges from twenty to well into the hundreds. One building to be destroyed in Sullivan Street is a two and-a-half story brick and frame dwelling which contains five families. The conditions under which these people have been living are barbaric. The roof leaks, and has for years, so that the tenants have been obliged to move their miserable belongings about the room, and to use pails to catch the rain. This house is alive with vermin, and is filthy beyond expression. To realize what the rear tenement-house in New York is it must be remembered that a city lot is one hundred feet deep, and that the rear house is built on the rear end of this one hundred feet. Usually the rear house is two rooms deep. There are thousands of rear houses in the city of New York where the stones in the yard between the rear and the front houses are never dry. One woman gave as the reason for not wishing to move from an East Side tenement that the yard was dry because the baker's oven ran back under it; and it is true that babies were brought from the surrounding tenements and allowed to crawl on these stones in the cold weather because the stones gave out a perceptible warmth. The closets are located between the front and the rear houses in the small paved court, and must be used by the families of both houses. Very often the rear house has no water in it; the tenants in the rear house have to carry the water from the yard. Usually also the rear house adjoins the rear house in the parallel street. Often there is an air-space of but a few inches between these two houses, and the bedrooms in the rear house are absolutely dark and unventilated. A report from the Board of Health states that the average annual death-rate in the city of New York is a fraction over twenty-two per thousand, while the worst portions of the rear tenement district show one hundred and thirty-five per thousand. The average death-rate per thousand in rear tenement districts is about forty-five, or more than twice the average of the city. The space for light and air, that is, the so-called yard of these tenements—the yard for both rear and front tenements in many parts of the tenement districts of New York—is 6 x 25 feet, and in this space there will be found from six to ten closets.

❀

Commissioner Roosevelt, who has been very active in working for the destruction of the rear tenements, says that he is convinced that their existence is one of the greatest blots on the city, and their abolition is to the advantage not only of the health but the morals of the tenement-house dweller. Commissioner Parker has stated that he believes that the existence of the rear tenements in the city accentuates and engenders the criminal tendencies of the individual, and that their presence contributes to the crimes and vices of the city. It has been the unanimous conviction of those who have worked among the poor that nothing will so contribute to the well-being of the poor of New York City as the destruction of the rear tenement. The sentimentalists have asked, What will become of these people? It must be realized that to a large percentage of the poor in New York rent is an extravagance, and these rear tenements with their few dollars less per year rental are a tremendous temptation to those families with whom thrift has become a vice. There is no doubt that there will be a certain amount of suffering until these people find new habitations and adapt themselves to a new environment that will compel them to live in the light of day and to learn and appreciate the value of light and air. In looking over the list of tenements to be destroyed, it is a relief to find that but a small proportion of them are held by estates. It is also a lesson for the student of sociology to find that a very large percentage of the owners themselves live under tenement-house conditions. We have become so accustomed to attributing the evils of the poor to the grasping tendencies of the rich that to find that the poor are very often responsible for the unhygienic conditions under which their fellow-laborers live gives a new view to philanthropic effort. The task of beginning the education of the children to appreciate the decencies of life is fast becoming the aim of philanthropic effort; what we need is an effort that will educate the whole family. This in the lowest social strata must be done through compulsion; through the strict enforcement of laws the end and aim of which is the prevention of crime and the conditions that lead to it. The rear tenement is the largest factor to-day in the degradation of the individual.

⁂

It is often remarked that disasters affect our personal sympathy inversely as the distance increases or decreases. A child injured next door awakens one's sympathies more acutely than the report of a thousand deaths in China. It is probably due to this law of human nature that so little attention has been given by American papers to the recent terrible destruction of life in Japan. The Johnstown disaster, the St. Louis cyclone ruin, the Russian peasant slaughter—all together resulted in vastly less loss of life than was occasioned in the middle of last June by the single tidal wave which swept over the Pacific coast of the northeastern part of the main island of Japan. The number of lives lost is now officially announced by the Japanese Government as 26,889, but the investigation is not fully complete. Half an hour sufficed to sweep out of existence these many thousands, and the accompanying loss of property and non-fatal personal injury was proportionately great. The cause is supposed to be some kind of submarine shifting of levels. A similar though less fatal tidal wave was experienced in Japan some forty years ago, and one of the most curious incidents on that occasion was the carrying of a Russian man-of-war from its anchorage far up into the fields, where it was left stranded.

Educational Unity

The absence of Federal control of education, while productive of certain beneficial results, has had the obvious disadvantage of leaving the relations between secondary and higher education in an extremely unsettled condition. Each college has planned its own courses of study, and has established its own entrance requirements with more or less disregard of the practice of other colleges. The want of uniformity in courses of study resulting from the absence of Federal control has been further increased by the conflict between the upholders of the classics and the advocates of science as the basis of a liberal education. Disunity in educational aim has precluded the possibility of a proper correlation of studies from the primary school up to the university, with a consequent loss of time to the student, and has encouraged superficial methods of instruction. Secondary schools, under the necessity of fitting pupils for colleges differing widely as regards entrance requirements, have adopted a pernicious system of coaching based on examination papers and conflicting with every sound principle of pedagogy. Matriculates of American colleges are at least two years behind in their studies as compared with students of the same age in England and Germany.

The cause of the evils developed by the unsettled relations between secondary and higher education is, however, generally perceived, and earnest efforts are being made to remove it. These efforts are for the present directed chiefly toward securing uniformity in college entrance requirements. As the result of a conference between representatives of the Association of Colleges and Preparatory Schools of the Middle States and Maryland, the Commission of Colleges in New England, and the New England Association of Colleges and Preparatory Schools, held at Philadelphia in May, 1894, uniform English requirements were established throughout the States controlled by those bodies. A year later the league was joined by the Conference of Teachers of English of the North Central States. The National Educational Association, in July, 1895, appointed a committee to investigate the existing condition of entrance requirements throughout the United States, and the comprehensive report of this committee, printed in the June number of the "School Review," was laid before the recent Buffalo Convention. The adoption of uniform English requirements throughout New England, the Middle States, Maryland, and the North Central States was no small accomplishment. It was a much more difficult feat to secure substantial uniformity in all branches of study throughout a considerable section of the country. However, this feat has also now been accomplished, and constitutes the most notable event of the past academic year. During the spring of 1896, under the auspices of Columbia University, a series of conferences between representatives of Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Columbia, the University of Pennsylvania, Cornell, and the Schoolmasters' Association of New York and Vicinity has resulted in the adoption of a unanimous report recommending specific uniform requirements in Latin, Greek, German, French, mathematics, and history.

This report, although it fails to recommend requirements for the natural sciences, and although it leaves some matters of detail unsettled, cannot fail to be accepted by the institutions represented in the conferences, and, with six among the principal colleges of the United States agreed on entrance requirements, the prospect for National uniformity is excellent. As Chairman A. F. Nightingale writes in his letter accompanying the report of his committee to the National Educational Association, "If six among the best colleges of the country, and that, too, in a section where tradition is synonymous with law, and changes mean revolution, can substantially agree upon uniformity of requirements to the satisfaction of the secondary schools tributary to them, why may not one hundred colleges agree? . . . The unanimity of their conclusions presages the possibility of National unity on this same matter, if the movement is fostered and aided by the National Educational Association." In the present posture of affairs there is, therefore, every reason to hope that we shall, in the near future, obtain National uniformity in college entrance requirements, which will in turn prepare the way for a proper correlation of studies on some such plan as that recommended in the report of the Committee on Secondary School Studies appointed at the meeting of the National Educational Association, July 9, 1892. The ultimate unification of the American system of education appears by no means improbable.

Robert Burns

Tuesday of this week was the centennial of the death of Robert Burns. "Don't be afraid," said the poet shortly before his death; "I'll be more respected a hundred years after I am dead than I am at present." His most daring ambition could hardly have dreamed of the marvelous fulfillment of that prophecy. Like many other men of genius, Burns had an instinctive consciousness of his gift, and therefore of his fame; but he could hardly have foreseen the peculiar place he would come to hold in the heart of the English-speaking world, or the world-wide fame which was to be his. For he is one of the small group of poets whom the world really loves; that is to say, his name means something and his poetry is something to masses of people who know that Shakespeare was the greatest of English dramatists but who never read him. Indeed, it has been the good fortune of Burns to secure both kinds of reputation—the reputation which rests upon the recognition of pure poetic genius by those who are competent to recognize the presence of that great gift, and that which rests upon the wide acceptance of the mass of uncritical readers. Among the poets Burns ranks as one of the greatest of modern singers; among the people at large he is perhaps the best-loved poet read by the English-speaking races.

The expansion of this interior and in a sense esoteric reputation into a universal reputation could be achieved only by one whose manner had the magic of the highest art and whose material had the interest of universal experience. It was Burns's supreme good fortune to deal with things which affect the common life in the most perfect manner, to give to the metal which was passing from hand to hand without sign or superscription the stamp of ultimate perfection. The very frailties of his character and the disasters which overtook him have rather deepened the affection of men than alienated it. Of late years there has come a wiser and truer attitude toward those who, like Burns, fail to match the highest aims with the soundest living. No one nowadays attempts to conceal or extenuate the faults of the poet; they stand written in his life with a distinctness which makes futile any attempt to gloss them over. On the other hand, no wise man now attempts to fix the moral responsibility of such a man as Burns. The wise man has learned to leave that question with the only Intelligence in the universe which is in a position to deal with it. It must be said, moreover, that, as time has gone on and the facts have been more carefully ascertained, much of the ill repute which once surrounded Burns has been dissipated. That which remains of vice, affectation, and occasional vulgarity, the world has come to accept as part of one of those confused and tragic stories in which the life-history of great men have so often been written. When such genius as that which Burns possessed and a life so full of obstacle and pathetic experience come before the world for judgment, critics have grown more reverent as they have grown into a deeper knowledge of the range of human passion, of the force of heredity, and of the temptations of temperament. They are ready now to say with Burns,

> "Who made the heart, 'tis He alone
> Decidedly can try us;
> He knows each chord—its various tone,
> Each spring—its various bias:
> Then at the balance let's be mute,
> We never can adjust it;
> What's done we partly may compute,
> But know not what's resisted."

Another erroneous impression about Burns, which has been set right by time, was the once widely held belief that he was utterly without education. The "inspired plowman," untutored and untrained, was supposed to have sung as the bird sings or the flower grows. Those who know anything about the conditions under which strong men come to the mastery of their strength, and men of genius to the possession of their power, know that nothing great is achieved without preparation; that the very artlessness and simplicity through which the heart speaks in entire unconsciousness is won at the end of training and not at the beginning. Every great artist becomes great by the development of the quality which is in him; he does not become great by accident. Burns was not academically educated, but in his own way and for his own work he was one of the best-trained men of his time. He was, in the first place, supremely fortunate in the character of his father—a man of rare dignity, insight, and intelligence, passionate in temper and without commercial skill, but possessed in unusual degree of those aptitudes which in his son passed on into genius. He was fortunate also in his mother, who, like the mother of Goethe, had an insatiable love of stories and songs; who knew the old ballads by heart, and who made them as familiar as household words to her child. The beautiful picture of the father in "The Cotter's Saturday Night," who > "turns o'er, with patriarchal grace,

> The big ha' Bible, ance his father's pride," was a lifelike portrait of William Burns. "I have met," said Robert Burns, in speaking of him, "with few men who understood men, their manners, and their ways, equal to him." Burns was fortunate, also, in coming under the care of a teacher who had intelligence enough to discern the boy's gift and knowledge enough to give it wise direction, and in having the intimate acquaintance of an old woman who was a living anthology of country stories and songs, and in whose superstitious mind the world of devils, brownies, witches, kelpies, ghosts, and fairies still existed unblighted by skepticism. He was fortunate, too, in the books to which he had access. These were not many in number, but they were of the fiber and stuff which make poets of impressionable boys. Pope's translation of Homer, "The Spectator," the Plays of Shakespeare, and the collections of English and Scotch songs were the very material on which such an imagination as Burns's ought to browse.

Robert Burns[1]

Burns had, moreover, the keen intelligence of a very powerful intellect. He was not an irresponsible musician, as he has sometimes been called; he was a man of virile and energetic mind, who sang out of a full mind as well as out of a full heart. He knew how to make the most of the materials at hand, and he co-operated with all his opportunities in the work of educating himself. "I have not a doubt," he said, "but the knack, the aptitude to learn the Muse's trade is a gift bestowed by Him who forms the secret bias of the soul, but I as firmly believe that excellence in the profession is the fruit of industry, attention, labor, and pains. At least, I am resolved to try my doctrine by the test of experience." He knew the literature of his own country by heart, in the literal sense of the phrase; he had a considerable and loving acquaintance with the greatest English writers; he read French with ease and pleasure; he had picked up some Latin; but above all he absorbed into his very imagination a great mass of Scotch and English songs, which he pored over, verse by verse, separating the weak phrases from the strong, the tender from the sentimental, the true from the false, and thus learning not only the secrets of his own craft, but the practice of a sound criticism. It was to this education quite as much as to his native gift that Burns owes the great place which he holds to-day.

---

[1] Reproduced by permission of Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

There is some difference of opinion between the great host of the readers of Burns and those who endeavor to estimate his poetry with reference to absolute excellence. "The Cotter's Saturday Night" remains one of the domestic idyls of Scotland, and deserves the place which it holds. It is, from every point of view, a beautiful piece of work; and yet it is by no means representative of Burns's genius in its fullest, freest, and most individual expression. That will be found in some of those terrible satires like "The Jolly Beggars," "Holy Willie's Prayer," and "The Holy Fair"—satires which cut to the very heart of the things in Burns's own day which he was attacking, and which have by no means lost their power of shocking both the hypocrite and the sensitive in this day. That genius is seen, however, burning with pure and benignant ray in that group of songs which the English-speaking world knows by heart, "Oh, Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast," "To Mary in Heaven," "John Anderson, My Jo," "Auld Lang Syne," "Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon," and "Mary Morison." The writer of these songs will not be forgotten while life has its pathos, its humor, and its tragedy.

The Witness of Character

One of the most significant facts in connection with high development of character is the standard which such an attainment instantly imposes on a community. Every good man and woman brings the community in which he or she lives to judgment by defining a moral and personal standard. Just as Christ brought the whole world to judgment, not only by the truth which he spoke but by the life which he lived, so in lesser degree every noble person brings the world to the bar of judgment. Michael Angelo, pursuing his task with a noble fidelity in an age of corruption, unconsciously imposed a judgment on many of his contemporaries. Dante, preferring exile to the compromise of his convictions, by the greatness of his career and the arduousness of his work, set a standard which was in itself an inexorable judgment upon many of the men and women of his time. It is, therefore, always perilous to associate with superior people, because the moment we know a superior person we greatly enlarge our own responsibilities. Every disclosure of truth, whether in abstract or concrete form, imposes a new responsibility upon those to whom the knowledge is brought home. To live in the intimate relations of the family with a noble character is to bring one's self daily to the judgment bar. Goethe once said that the only protection against great superiorities is love; that is to say, men can free themselves from envy and jealousy and the habit of detraction when they stand in the presence of those who tower over them only by loving that which they recognize is higher than themselves. In like manner one can disarm moral and personal superiority only by emulating it. There is nothing more beautiful than the influence which a noble character exerts in the way of constantly raising the standards of others. It is impossible to live comfortably with an unselfish person unless one also endeavors to be unselfish; and so beautiful character becomes contagious, and, by constantly, although unconsciously, holding up an ideal, transforms those who are brought into association with it.

The Outlook Vacation Fund

Judging from several letters received in connection with The Outlook's Vacation Fund, it is very evident that there is a misconception in regard to Santa Clara. In some letters received during the past week it has been referred to as a Consumptives' Home. Santa Clara is in no sense a Consumptives' Home. Every girl who goes to Santa Clara goes there after examination by an expert, who decides that a two months' residence at Santa Clara may cure the girl, or so far cure her as to enable her to return to her work in safety, with the prospect of a two months' residence in Santa Clara every summer preventing the growth of the disease. The Working-Girls' Vacation Society has not the means to maintain a home for incurables, nor is this the purpose for which it was organized, nor for which it is maintained. The purpose of the Working-Girls' Vacation Society is to keep girls well; to make sick girls well; to give a chance to the girls working under unfavorable conditions—a chance of from two weeks' to two months' residence in the country in the regions best suited to their particular physical needs. Even limiting its work in this way, the demands upon the Vacation Society are so great, and the number of girls who need just what the Vacation Society can do are so numerous, that never yet has it had more than half money enough to meet the demands made upon it. This week to The Outlook alone there have come appeals from six girls, two of them in hospitals; one of them has been in but a week; one of them would have been in bed if it had not been that she did not wish to disturb her mother; and two are kept out of hospitals only by what the Vacation Society can do for them. The Outlook Vacation Fund is devoted to the support of the three houses, Cherry Vale, Elmcote, and Santa Clara, and the paying of railroad expenses.

The needs of this summer are greater than ever before in the history of the Working-Girls' Vacation Society. No one who is not in the city in these months, and in close touch with the working-girls, can know what a vacation means to the girls compelled to live under tenement-house conditions, and on the wages paid to the unskilled worker. This last week a girl was sent away who has been out of work six weeks. During this time the mother has had a few days' work each week to support a family of five. The girl is worn out by anxiety, and ill for lack of nourishing food. Her comment when told she was to go away for two weeks was, "Well, there will be one less to feed at home." That comment shows what life can be at seventeen.

THE VACATION FUND

Previously acknowledged	$2,464 07
M. H. H.	15 00
A Working-Girl	3 00
McClellan	25 00
T. P. W., Brooklyn, N. Y	5 00
M. K. J., New York, N. Y	20 00
R. S. Fund	10 00
F. A. H., Brooklyn, N. Y	5 00
A. A. R., Springfield, Mass	5 00
C. C., New Jersey	10 00
Mac, Baltimore, Md	2 00
L. E. S. and Friends, Ithaca, N. Y	8 00
S. A. M , North East Harbor, Me	30 00
Clifton, Port Chester, N. Y	25 00
A Friend	1 00
Marblehead	5 00
Faith and Marion Haines	1 00
S. H. W., Brooklyn, N. Y	3 00
From a Friend, Bangor, Me	10 00
V. W. C., Skowhegan, Me	1 75
Clyde Shannon, Nelson Simonson, Walter Douglas, and Edwin, Howard, and Wallace Vandewater	3 25
K. F., Lewistown, Pa	5 00
For Consumptives' Fund	2 00
E. C., Tarrytown, N. Y	1 00
Invalid, Ohio	5 00
A. B. C., Springfield, Mass	5 00
A Friend, Salem, O	2 00
F. B. W., Catskill, N. Y	8 00
Anonymous, Norwich, Vt	2 00
H	1 00
A. K. G., Northampton, Mass.	5 00
Mrs. E. P. M	5 00
E. H. T., Englewood, Ill	1 00
E. F. M., New York	5 00
Anonymous	1 00
J. H. B., Cottage City, Mass	13 00
A Friend, Salem, N. Y	1 00
Dublin, N. H	10 00
Mrs. R. B., Gloucester, Mass	5 00
Widow's Mite, New Haven, Conn.	2 00
"Bloomfield"	5 00
Total	$2,736 07

The Presidential Candidates

William McKinley

By Murat Halstead

THE platforms prepared under our system of government and custom of political expression, on the approach of elections that decide the fortunes of candidates and the fate of principles, are, as a rule, drawn rather to be attractive to voters than to determine policies. There is that which, in considering the claims of parties or the adaptation of men to meritorious public service, is of moment beyond all phrases of the promise of measures or men—something more profound in affecting public judgment than anything a party can say for itself, or that a candidate's friends can say for him—and that is the character of the party, the character of the man. There is an underlying and an overtopping understanding to this effect, and the people at large know it to be rather of weakness than strength in a candidate to manifest a deferential sentiment toward the platform on which he is alleged to stand. Horace Greeley once found no difficulty in reviling a platform, while he gave hearty support to the candidate. When Chief Justice Chase was thought of as the nominee of the Democratic National Convention assembled in New York in 1868, he was willing to accept the nomination if he could approve the platform; and yet the true test of the candidacy of the Chief Justice, if the Convention had carried out the plan much discussed, would not have been the nature of the platform, but the character of the party naming the candidate, and of the candidate himself. Anything decidedly excellent or otherwise in the party or the candidate, lighting up in confidence or shading in dark distrust, could not have been changed by the language of the resolutions.

Major William McKinley, of Ohio, is the candidate for the Presidency of the Republican party, and he has expressed his regard for the platform, which received unusually close attention and was drawn to be candid with the people; but it is the character of the candidate that imparts to the campaign the glow of life, and it is upon his reputation the country relies more than on any words in the declaration of principles, when the people are thoughtful of the future, and study the influences of the next Administration upon "We, the people of the United States." Major McKinley is a man of most attractive character. He was a bright and serious boy, whose first severe labor and strife were to educate himself. The children in Ohio were, from the days of the pioneers, specially instructed by their parents that, if they would better their condition, they must be educated. Few of them had no other occupation than that of education. Hard work on the farm in summer, and at school in winter, was the fate of the offspring of farmers, but the time of others—of the children of artisans—was not so arbitrarily divided; and perhaps they had greater latitude and were subjected to a larger variety of influences. McKinley's intelligent zeal and incessant effort were manifest in his ability to make an early start in the nearest academy; and he was there interrupted by one of those sharp illnesses that so often strike sturdy boys, and remind them, until they get well, of their limitations—and it is fortunate the lesson is not too well learned in youth. Soon there rolled over the country the sound of the guns that played on Sumter, and the school-boy, McKinley, attended a meeting where there was to be raised a company of volunteers for the war, and, quietly enlisting, became one of the boys in blue. How well I remember, one summer day, by the river at Cincinnati, seeing two steamboats covered with soldiers, and, asking the number of the regiment, made a note that for several reasons became memorable. The answer given was, "It is the one that Hayes and Stanley Matthews are in." The first Colonel of this regiment became General Rosecrans. We knew him in Cincinnati before the war as a West Pointer, who had left the army and invented a coal-oil lamp, an explosion of which, in course of experiment, had burned and scarred one of his hands; and he was remembered as the young lieutenant who, when rioters, upon the visit of Bedini, nuncio of the Pope, to the Archbishop of Cincinnati, threatened the Cathedral, organized and armed a company of defenders. It was the regiment of Rosecrans, Hayes, and Matthews in which William

MR. AND MRS. McKINLEY AT HOME

McKinley was a boy soldier; and perhaps I saw his figure in the groups that were massed on the boats, going from the farms and cities of northeastern Ohio to the big war. They were sunburned and bright-eyed and gay, the world and the war all before them, and in Ohio we heard from them often—on the Kanawha, and in the mountains of Virginia, and then in the valley of Virginia by the historic Shenandoah; and at South Mountain and Antietam! It was a hard but glorious school for boys, and its graduates were men—disciplined, trained to confront danger and brave sacrifice, imbued under the flag on stricken fields with National patriotism—taught amid the thunders of battle the high lessons of devotion and the inspiration of glory.

William McKinley passed from boyhood to manhood in the army, and at the end of the war had the reputation of an ideal soldier—won without fear or favor. He had been handsomely promoted with no shadow of influence that he did not earn in the field. His first advance was to the honorable grade of sergeant; then he was lieutenant, and at last major. His qualities of intelligence and faithfulness in the performance of duty, his intrepidity under the gravest circumstances, winning confidence and commanding admiration, throughout his hardy service appeared the characteristics that have distinguished his life, under all conditions and relations, no matter how high or humble has been the environment. The camp was to him a university, and all soldiers were his friends, from the leaders—Sheridan, Crook, and Hayes—to the field and staff officers, and the privates who carried rifles when and where he did, and were on the march and under fire with him. Through all experiences the abiding purity of his life was known and honored by his comrades; and whether galloping on an errand of life and death, a Confederate battery making of him a target for shells until he was hidden and seemed lost in their smoke, or calling for volunteers to drag abandoned guns to safety, or giving the first greeting to the Commander-in-chief at Cedar Creek at the end of the immortal ride "down from Winchester," he was brave and true—one of the noble youth summoned to the fiery front, always the hope of the land, and in time of the dread alarms of warfare the salvation of the country, not alone by the force of arms, but by the grace of the civic virtues. When the combat closed, Major McKinley was an officer and a gentleman, who had builded in his diversified education wiser than he knew. and taken a degree beyond any the colleges could confer, save as a recognition of deeds accomplished that told for the welfare of mankind.

He had witnessed and aided in the making of history, and, instructed in the common schools and the camps, applied himself with disciplined energy to the mastery of his chosen profession—the law; and in his first law case, though he faltered through diffidence, he gained the suit and the regard of an old lawyer, who invited him to a partnership that meant the precious first firm success that assures the young man there is a place for those who fight the good fights of hard work; and that, though the earth goes spinning dizzily, there is solid ground for the feet of the steadfast. The light of public favor now shone upon him. And what wonder? Joined to the charm of his remarkably happy and bright record of patriotic chivalry, there was the attraction of a singularly honest and earnest manliness, and a personal quality that was pleasing in its gentleness and that took on increase of brilliancy. It is well now, as of old, to admonish the young man, "Know thyself," but self-knowledge does not flash upon the gifted and reveal with a search-light the hidden stores and springs warranting the presumption of uncommon excellence and fame. The men as well as the maidens tarry with "reluctant feet," and have to learn to labor while they wait. McKinley became the prosecuting attorney of his county; and the young man who had carried a rifle for his country, and was proud of his uniform when there was not a strap to show rank, and was commissioned for meritorious conduct and bravery in the field by the good old war Governor Tod, of his State, and wore her sword for the people of the Nation, became the sword of the law. Thus far advanced, strong and prosperous and starlit with hope changing to confidence, the air became fragrant and radiant, and the fair fields and woods of Ohio touched with rarer beauty in the rosy light of love; and the lover became the husband of his beloved, and the world was altogether lovely. Sorrow came with its chastening—the children of the house were called away, but love remained and was holy and grew fonder, and there was yet the divinity of duty. Where there is love the paths of life are not lonesome, and the affection that endures grief and inspires endeavor, sanctifies the ambition that walks with righteousness.

McKinley first saw Washington City when a soldier, ordered there for its defense; and the monument of the Father of the country and the dome of the Capitol were unfinished, and like broken fragments of some vast beneficent conception arrested and shattered. Who shall say what the ardent young soldier dreamed by the Potomac, when Virginia led the war against the Union? When at last there was peace, and the law and love and sorrow informed and elevated and consecrated, there was a glimpse through a tearful atmosphere of a possible larger public life. As a child McKinley absorbed an education that has influenced his manhood to study and grasp the principles of the field of statesmanship that allured him, and where his usefulness was broadened to the National boundaries. He knew, in his early days, how his own parents and brothers and sisters and neighbors were influenced by the prosperity or the inability of the manufacturing industries that are among the resources and celebrities of his State. There are not in New England or in Pennsylvania clusters of cities busy in supplying the American markets with home-made goods that exceed those of Ohio, and the manufactories were, indeed, to McKinley those of home. They were sure enough "home industries." He knew how they were stricken by foreign competition or defended from it by the National arm that was extended to protect them in the first law after independence was real, and how the protected industries were identified with the farms in a common weal or woe; and when, in the natural order of events, he became a Congressman, it is not surprising that he spoke of the tariff, and put into his speeches the inner fire of impressive conviction and the intimacies of personal acquirement that kindled enthusiasm, until the story became one familiar to the Ohio people that the young Congressman made his speeches on protective tariffs intensely interesting, and swept away the mists of prejudice, making all clear, and commanding that we return to the policy of the fathers when the Revolution made the colonies free and independent.

It is in the course of the nature of nations that there shall be evolved in their emergencies men fitted to meet them, as the empowered agents of the people. There is provided by naturalism—we need not invoke the supernatural that so often does not enlighten the obscure—we find in the vital sunshine of the every-day globe we inherit, the qualities, the forces, the aptitudes, the characters, that are the requirements of leadership, in the times of trial for the forms and the spirit of popular government. Each chapter of the life of Major McKinley seems to have been prepared in regular logical course, fitting him for the destiny of exceptional responsibility now close at hand—the last, not least, of the studies in his preparatory course, his terms as Governor of his State; and in it is written, as with a pen of iron on a rock, the resolute stand of a soldier when there was a question of the suppression with the strong hand of the bloody craze for vengeance by lynch-law—a resolution that saved the honor of the State and conferred renown upon the Magistrate. View the character of William McKinley on all sides, and it will be found one that is symmetrical, gracious in its firmness, genial in its gravity; and there is in the history of his life, as in the tones of his voice, the dominating, thrilling note of absolute probity and sincerity.

William Jennings Bryan

By Richard Linthicum

IN personal appearance Mr. Bryan bears a strong resemblance to Samuel J. Randall when the latter was in the prime of life; in profile he most nearly resembles the bas-relief portraits of Cicero. His head is massive, but not too large for his body; his forehead is broad and full; his hair is black as jet, rather coarse, and is allowed to grow to a greater length than fashion dictates. A swarthy Anglican complexion, an aquiline nose, a heavy lower jaw, a square chin, a wide mouth, perfect teeth as white as milk, thin lips, and full dark eyes that are never dull, all tell the physiognomist of a strong character, an iron will, an equable temperament, denoting also intellectuality and fluency of speech.

The sturdy figure of Mr. Bryan is such as can be had only by a man of perfect physical development and having perfect health. In height he is five feet ten inches, and weighs 180 pounds. He dresses plainly but never slovenly. His appearance is rather statesmanlike or judicial than clerical. He is a man of wonderful energy and great physical endurance. His perfect physique he owes to his sturdy Scotch-Irish ancestry; his perfect health he owes largely to his excellent habits.

His father, Silas L. Bryan, came from Virginia. He was a Circuit Judge in Illinois from 1860 to 1872. In the latter year he ran for Congress on the Greeley ticket and was defeated.

Mr. Bryan's mother was Maria Elizabeth Jennings, of Marion County, Ill. She died at Salem two weeks previous to her son's nomination for the Presidency. Mr Bryan's father and mother were both deeply religious, and he inherits their characteristics in this respect. He joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church when he was fourteen years old, and is now a member of the First Presbyterian Church in Lincoln, Neb. This church has been without a regular pastor for nearly a year, but the church organization has been maintained. Mr. Bryan takes an interest in its affairs, and both himself and wife teach classes in the Sunday-school. In morals he is almost a Puritan. He does not use tobacco or liquor in any form, never utters a profane or vulgar word, and has such perfect mastery of himself that no one ever saw him angry. Keenly appreciative of humor, he never indulges in humorous statements except to illustrate a serious fact; in appearance, in word, and in act he is earnest, sincere, and intense.

William Jennings Bryan was born March 19, 1860, in Salem, Ill. His boyhood was passed on a farm near that place. At ten years of age he was sent to the public school in that town and attended it for five years, having previously been tutored by his mother. He then took a two years' academic course at Whipple Academy, and completed his education by a four years' course at Illinois College. During his college life he gave many evidences of forensic ability, taking part in inter-State oratorical contests and being selected as class orator and valedictorian in his graduation year. As a student in the law office of Lyman Trumbull he attended the Union College of Law in Chicago until June, 1883, when he removed to Jacksonville, Ill., and practiced law there for four years. In October, 1887, he located in Lincoln, Neb., and opened a law office with a former classmate, A. R. Talbot. His political career dates from this latter time, although he had participated in local campaigns from the time he attained his majority.

MRS. BRYAN

His public life began six years ago, when he was elected to Congress from the first district of Nebraska, and his career has been a succession of surprises to everybody but himself and his devoted wife. Bryan believes in himself, believes in every measure he advocates and every principle he represents; believes that he is armed with truth and enlisted in a righteous cause, and is, therefore, not surprised when he succeeds nor discouraged when he fails. These characteristics found felicitous expression in one of his recent speeches when he said: "One honest man clad in the armor of a righteous cause is stronger than all the hosts that error can bring."

It is not remarkable that the voters in the First Congressional District of Nebraska were surprised when Bryan was first elected to Congress in 1890. The district usually gave 3,400 Republican majority; it gave Bryan 6,713 majority.

His first speech in Congress was a surprise to his fellow-members who heard it and to every citizen who read it. It was on the tariff bill. Members who had started to leave the hall came back to their seats. The galleries, which had been thinned out, were soon filled with attentive listeners; Senators left their side of the Capitol and found audience-room on the floor of the House. The day before the speech Bryan was unknown outside of his district; the day after the speech he had a National reputation as an orator. Everybody was surprised except the man who made the speech. Two years later Bryan's Congressional district was gerrymandered to give a Republican majority of 6,000, but it gave Bryan 140 majority, and every one was surprised again.

His reputation in Congress was already established when he came back in 1892 as a member of the Fifty-third Congress. He took an active part in framing the tariff bill, and was especially urgent concerning the income tax clause. In the debate on the bill he controlled the time of the Democratic speakers, and was the choice of his colleagues to reply to Bourke Cockran in the debate on the income tax. His first tariff speech was widely circulated as a campaign document, but in this session he eclipsed all his previous efforts by a three hours' speech against the repeal of the Sherman Act, which has been and still is being circulated as a masterpiece of literature on bimetallism. When Bryan took his seat at the conclusion of his speech one of his fellow-members remarked: "There is nothing more to be said on bimetallism; that speech exhausts the subject."

So thoroughly does Mr. Bryan believe in the principles of bimetallism, and in the ratio in which gold and silver have been coined, that he refused to deviate one particle from the position he had taken, or to make a single concession to his opponents. Mr. Bland, who was the recognized leader of the silver forces, undertook to secure a compromise after the ratio of 16 to 1 had been defeated, by offering an amendment declaring for free coinage at the ratio of 17 to 1, of 18 to 1, of 19 to 1, and, at last, of 20 to 1. On the proposition of 16 to 1 Mr. Bryan, of course, voted with him, but on the amendments providing for different ratios he voted with the advocates of repeal. On a question of principle he is as unyielding now as then.

At the close of his second term in Congress he was tendered a renomination, but declined it in order to become a candidate for the United States Senate. He again surprised every one but himself by securing the indorsement of the Democratic and Populist Conventions, but was opposed by a faction in his party which differed from him on the money question as well as the Populist theories which Bryan has espoused. His opponent in this contest was John M. Thurston, and the canvass was a series of brilliant joint debates. The Legislature was Republican, and Mr. Thurston was elected.

Then came the principal surprise in Mr. Bryan's career up to that time. He made no secret of his aspiration to the Presidency of the United States. Those who knew him least smiled at what they considered presumption; those who knew him best chershed the belief that his nomination was a probability, yet when it came it surprised many of his most ardent supporters The night before his nomination, when the names of candidates were being presented to the Convention, Mr. Bryan sat in his room at a hotel and confidently predicted that the Convention would nominate him on the morrow. When the news came that he had been nominated, his self-command did not desert him. He was calm and cool; he finished a message he had begun to write, and the chirography of the latter part was as clear and firm as the first. A graver expression came over his face, his eyes were bright, but he betrayed no sign of exalted feeling. The message he had begun to write when it was announced that he had been nominated is as follows: "In order that I may have no ambition but to discharge faithfully the duties of the office, I desire to announce that if elected I shall under no circumstances be a candidate for re-election."

Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Bryan's name has been for more than a year mentioned in connection with a Presidential nomination, his selection as the party leader in this campaign was due largely to his oration on the adoption of the platform. This platform is almost identical with the one on which he made his canvass for the United States Senate against John M. Thurston. As an orator Bryan is thoroughly equipped. He developed a talent for oratory when a boy, and has improved every opportunity to display it. His handsome face, sturdy frame, and unstudied grace of movement and gesture put him at once on good terms with an audience. His voice is mellifluous and deep-toned; his manner is earnest, but never excited. In his most impassioned utterances he never conveys the impression of irresponsibility, but rather gives the idea of merely emphasizing the words of one who has thought clearly and has depth of feeling. He does not speak extemporaneously upon subjects of importance; he has said that he would as soon think of plunging wingless into an abyss.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN
From a recent Photograph

Of the now famous speech before the Chicago Convention Mr. Henry George wrote: "With his first words there began a scene which I think must be without parallel, not merely in the history of American conventions, but in the history of the world; a display of the power of well-chosen speech to move and stir great masses of men that can hardly before have had its equal. All that the imagination pictures of Demosthenes and Cicero, all that we have heard of the great orators of the English tongue, was realized to-day in a vaster audience than any orator of by-gone days could possibly have addressed. . . . When he began to speak, his clear, penetrating, exquisitely modulated tones soon compelled an attention that deepened as he proceeded to put in well-chosen words the thoughts which were in the breasts of a majority—their earnest demand, their defiant purpose. The man had come for whom such a hall and such an audience seemed the most fitting place and garniture."

Bryan knows the classics and has them at his tongue's end; he is grounded in knowledge, and has a marvelous memory. His English is plain and terse; he never strains after ponderous words or sounding phrases. He has a faculty of saying things that a person easily remembers. Since his nomination people have remarked a coincidence between his career and that of Lincoln. Bryan is and Lincoln was a Radical, but both have been conservative in act and kindly in expression. Both served terms in Congress. Both were candidates for the United States Senate, engaged in joint debates with their respective opponents, and both were defeated. Two years after his defeat by Douglas, Lincoln was nominated for the Presidency; two years after his defeat by Thurston, Bryan has been similarly honored.

Mr. Bryan is a poor man. Since his campaign for the Senate he has been the editor and one of the proprietors of the Omaha (Nebraska) "World-Herald." In addition to his editorial duties he has given much time to the cause of bimetallism, having been in demand as a speaker at silver meetings and political gatherings. He has recently spoken in almost every Southern and Western state. One of his most notable efforts in this particular was his reply to Secretary Carlisle's Kentucky speech, made in the same town where the Secretary advocated a gold standard. He was one of the signers of the address in behalf of silver issued March 4, 1895, declaring the money issue to be the paramount one of this campaign, and urging a union of all the silver forces.

Mr. Bryan was married October 1, 1884, to Mary Baird, of Perry, Ill. Mrs. Bryan attended the "female department" of the Academy at Jacksonville, where Mr. Bryan was a scholar. She graduated the same week as he, and, like himself, was class valedictorian. She studied law and was admitted to the bar, but has never practiced. She has a taste for literature and is fond of politics. Mr. and Mrs. Bryan have three children—Ruth, ten years old; William J., Jr., seven; and George, five. They have a comfortable home in Lincoln, Neb. They rarely go out into society, though both are of sociable temperament. Mrs. Bryan is her husband's junior by two years. She is below the medium height, with dark eyes, a pleasant face, and without affectation in manners. There never were more representative types of rugged American manhood and simple, unaffected American womanhood than William J. Bryan and his wife, when they stood side by side, plainly clad, and received the congratulations of the masses on the day following Mr. Bryan's nomination. The reception was without ceremony or ostentatious display. The gathering was in every sense democratic, and the candidate and his wife looked an ideal, self-made independent American couple.

Some personal recollections and incidents relating to Mr. Bryan have lately been given to the public by Mr. A. R. Talbot, Mr. Bryan's law partner in Lincoln, and himself a strong Republican. I may quote from these to throw a stronger light on the Democratic candidate's personality. Mr. Talbot says:

> Will Bryan and I were classmates in the Union Law College in Chicago. We entered the College the same day, in 1881, and we left it together. We usually occupied adjoining seats, and during two years we were the closest of chums. I first met him the year before in Galesburg, at an oratorical contest. He represented Illinois College in the contest, and took second prize. I don't remember his subject now, but he made a deep impression. Even then he had a considerable reputation as a public speaker. He had, while attending college, stumped the State of Illinois for W. M. Springer, with whom Bryan was always on the most intimate and friendly terms. Will was known as a ready, witty talker, and he was much in demand. His utterances were usually carefully prepared in advance, and were always polished and graceful. While we were attending the law college he delivered an address on Abraham Lincoln that was very generally commented on. I worked in one law office and Will in another—Lyman Trumbull's, by the way—for $5 per week. We paid all of our expenses out of that.
>
> All the time he was in law college Will gave a great deal of consideration and study to questions of government. He read up thoroughly on constitutional law, and he was early impressed with the idea that the people were being unjustly burdened by monopolies. He maintained even then that the menace of the country was the encroachment of wealth on the rights of the common people, and he thought there was serious trouble ahead for the country. He was a strong Democrat, and he came honestly by his Democracy, for his father, Silas Bryan, was one of the stanchest Democrats in Illinois. And, by the way, his father was a character. He was a politician, but at the same time he was known as a religious enthusiast. He was a great man to pray. He would pray at any time or in any place. You never could tell when Silas Bryan was going to break out in prayer. He served in the Legislature, and he invariably dropped to his knees and offered up a silent prayer before he addressed the Chair, and often during the proceedings he would get down on his knees for a few moments of prayer. Then he was made a Circuit Judge, and he continued his praying. Will Bryan is quite as religious as was his father, only he is less demonstrative.
>
> Bryan is an upright, conscientious, Christian man. I have never known a finer character. I am positive that he went into politics with no selfish motives. He is thoroughly convinced that the country is beset with conditions that call for the highest patriotism, the noblest endeavor, and he regards it his duty to help right what he says are the wrongs of the people.
>
> Two years ago a gentleman from New York sat in Bryan's private office there trying to get him to make a contract to deliver fifty lectures at $100 a lecture. Bryan was poor then, as he is poor now, and I urged him to accept the offer. But he would hardly listen to the man. He said he would not speak for money. He was not in politics for himself, but for the people, and he did not expect to make anything for himself. He said he would not take anything but his expenses. "Why," he remarked, "it is necessary that those who can should give their lives to the work of emancipating the people. Somebody has got to do this, and I have made up my mind to enter into it heart and soul, but not for my own benefit." He didn't sign the contract.

Harriet Beecher Stowe[1]

A Sketch

By John R. Howard

MRS. STOWE IN 1868
From a Photograph in the possession of Mr. J. R. Howard

"Is there not a fault in this word dead?" writes Mrs. Stowe to a friend. "Have we not heathenized it? 'Passed to the higher life' is what we should say." And surely it is not grievous, but joyous, when so pure and serenely strong a spirit as hers is freed from the trammels of the body.

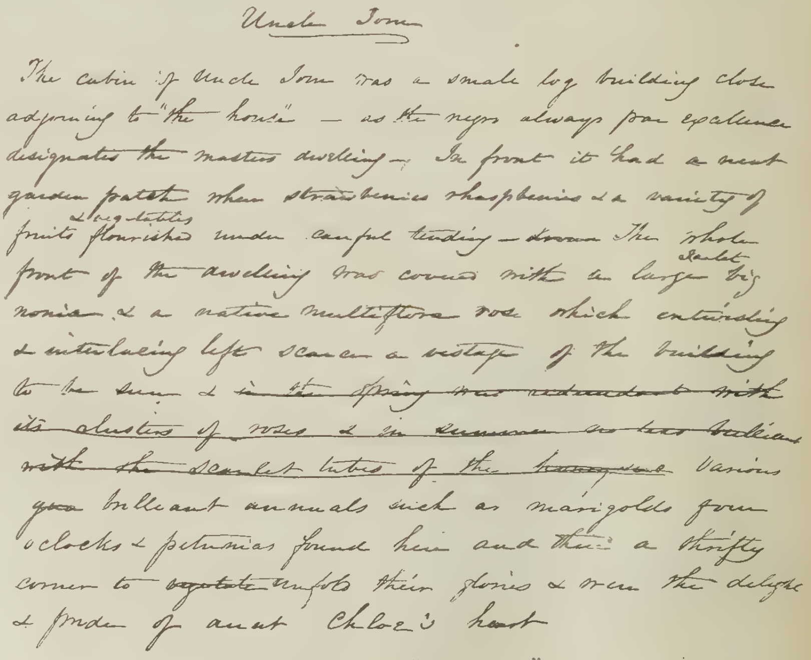
In 1817 the second Mrs. Lyman Beecher, describing in a letter the family into which she had come, with a graphic touch upon each of the children of Roxanna Foote, says: "Harriet and Henry come next, and they are always hand in hand. They are as lovely children as I ever saw—amiable, affectionate, and very bright." And through their long, earnest, potent lives these two continued in close heart-sympathy, without a shadow of misunderstanding or a break of constant love. It is a comfort to think that again they may be walking "hand in hand."

Widely different in physique, they were not unlike in many elements of character and mind, while in a certain sweet, unassuming simplicity, in quick and sustained generosity, in a keen sense of humor, in occasional moods of withdrawal from persons and things about them, and above all in a controlling instinct to live and labor amid "the things of the spirit," they were strikingly similar.

Mrs. Stowe's face, like those of all her mother's children, showed the delicate refinement of the Foote mask, overlaid by the stronger and more sanguine Beecher integument. Her curling, crispy hair, more or less freeing itself from the velvet bands with which she was accustomed to confine it, gave an informal grace to her head. Her eyes, whether twinkling with merriment or subdued to thoughtfulness, were always kind and pleasant. Her slender frame, with something of the "scholar's stoop" of the shoulders (although so faithful a mother and housekeeper might claim other reasons besides study, for that), was neatly but not stylishly dressed. Her manner was ever self-possessed, gentle, considerate; without the graces of one habituated to society, she was most evidently a gentlewoman, born and bred.

The sturdy English Beecher stock, infused with the poetic Welsh sensibility of the Wards, and combined with the refinement of the old Connecticut Foote family, found its highest fruition in Harriet and Henry Ward, whose natures were so richly and variously gifted. The home atmosphere in Dr. Beecher's Litchfield household, and afterwards in Boston, was pre-eminently religious and theological, with such incessant exercise in intellectual discussion that the children—particularly the younger ones—without much direct school training, grew up instinctively absorbing from their elders a familiarity with all the more serious questions of the day, which no amount of pedagogy could have drilled into them. Yet Harriet's schooling began at five years of age; and long before she was put at the task of writing compositions, the facility of unconscious absorption gave her the benefit of the master's discussion with the older scholars in history, rhetoric, moral philosophy, etc., so that her native powers of thought and of expression were very early available. Her avidity in reading was another marked characteristic; and the quick, appreciative spirit was at an unusually early period receiving its stores for future use. The fact that she found nutriment in such *un*juvenile authors as Paley, Bishop Butler, Bishop Heber, Richard Baxter, and Cotton Mather in her father's library, at once indicates and accounts for the strength of her mental fiber and moral sense, while the poetic fancy was bewitched with the "Arabian Nights" and "Don Quixote," and with the Byron and Scott that Dr. Beecher gave to his children and read with them. Some years at the school of her elder sister Catharine, in Hartford, had rapidly developed the sensitive, eager little woman, for from dreaming and writing poetry she was turned to Latin and arithmetic, Butler's "Analogy," French and Italian.

On her return home, at about the age of seventeen, she passed through the severe ordeal so well described as "experiencing religion"—a discouraging doctrinal process, which, only after four years of exhausting argument, and counsel from her wise brother Edward and her liberal-souled sister Catharine, she finally reduced to the simple principles of love and trust, in which her whole after life was passed. Affectionate, unselfish, profoundly religious by nature, sensitive, poetical, with more than a touch of the mystical in her spiritual aspirations, she had found in Christ the influence which was to move and guide her, and which, through all the bitter and joyful experiences of a long, varied, and notable life, was indeed the heart of it. It is not possible to understand this woman without comprehending how absolutely the love of Christ possessed and inspired her.



Uncle Tom

The cabin of Uncle Tom was a small log building close adjoining to "the house" — as the negro always par excellence designates the masters dwelling — In front it had a neat garden patch where strawberries raspberries & a variety of & vegetables fruits flourished under careful tending — ~~[illegible]~~ The whole scarlet front of the dwelling was covered with a large bignonia & a native multiflora rose which entwisting & interlacing left scarce a vestige of the building to be seen & ~~in the spring was redundant with~~ ~~its clusters of roses & in summer so [illegible] brilliant~~
~~with the scarlet tubes of the [illegible]~~ Various ~~gay~~ brilliant annuals such as marigolds four o'clocks & petunias found here and there a thrifty corner to ~~vegetate~~ unfold their glories & were the delight & pride of aunt Chloe's heart

FACSIMILE OF THE "UNCLE TOM" MS.

Of course the present brief sketch cannot even outline Mrs. Stowe's life, or depict her character; it will but try to recall with affectionate remembrance some of her traits and ways.

The faculty of unconscious absorption, which has been mentioned as marking her school days, was always of great value to her. When, in 1832, Dr. Beecher went to the presidency of Lane Theological Seminary, in Cincinnati, Miss Catharine accompanied the family to establish the Western Female Institute, and Harriet was (as she had been in Hartford for a while) her chief assistant. In the Life of Mrs. Stowe by her son, the Rev. Charles E. Stowe, is related the incident of her visiting Kentucky, across the river from Cincinnati, in 1833, and going to see "an estate that afterward figured as that of Colonel Shelby in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'" The lady who was with her at the time said afterward: "Harriet did not seem to notice anything in particular that happened, but sat most of the time as though abstracted in thought. When the negroes did funny things and cut up capers, she did not seem to pay the slightest attention to them. Afterwards, however, in reading 'Uncle Tom,' I recognized scene after scene of that visit portrayed with the most minute fidelity." And yet a letter that she wrote at that time to a friend contained not a word about plantations or slavery, but was altogether given up to education and their new college.

---

[1] Of the illustrations accompanying this article, the Richmond portrait, the portraits of Mrs. Stowe's father and mother, and the pictures of the homes in Andover, Litchfield, and Mandarin, are reproduced, by permission of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., from the "Life of Mrs. Stowe" by her son, Charles E. Stowe.

Mrs. Stowe's absorptive faculty, indeed, never failed her. How many times, in friendly circles, she would seemingly drop out of the conversation and be intent on her thoughts—perhaps, if in her own home, or in some familiar haunt, with a book or with writing, or merely in a "brown study"—when suddenly she would rouse, join in the talk, and show a complete knowledge of what had been going on. Never seemingly on the alert; going about, in doors or out, much of the time, in dreamy mood; often appearing utterly indifferent to scenes or sounds without her, in some mysterious way she would be aware of it all, and often astonish her companions with remarks on matters that had escaped those who thought themselves wider awake than she.

H. B. Stowe

(1841)
From a Pastel by Richmond

Her susceptibility to Nature in all its manifestations was an unending delight to her life, and an enrichment of her imagination. Her love of flowers and all vegetal growth, and her intimate knowledge of that whole realm, were evident in the blooming beauty and verdure that embowered her successive homes, and illuminate the pages of every book she ever wrote—from the trailing vines and ferns and scarlet poppies and golden oranges of "Agnes of Sorrento" to the docks and dandelions of Sam Lawson's huckleberry pasture. And her inherited artistic taste and small advantages of instruction in drawing when a girl gave her a facility with pencil and brush which she persistently improved, and which has preserved many a picturesque bit of natural beauty.

Nor were her affinities confined to inanimate Nature. The flies, the bees, the birds, the dogs (her especial pets and familiar companions), the cats, the denizens of the barnyard, the deacon's bony nag and the village race-horse, the majestic Italian buffalo and the belligerent ram that butted over the tithing-man and caused Dr. Lothrop's "Laughin' in Meetin'"—these and many more she knew and loved and made to live afresh in her vivacious pages.

As to children—read "Little Pussy Willow," "A Dog's Mission," and "Queer Little People"—the stories of animals and pets for little folks' enjoyment and unconscious leading towards the beautiful and the generous; remember the exquisite loveliness of Eva and the mischievous pranks of Topsy; recall the witchery and grace of the little Presbyterian girl turned Episcopalian, in "Poganuc People;" stroll again along the rugged, sea-dashed rocks of Orr's Island with Mara, the pretty "Pearl" of that rough retreat; see how this sympathetic soul appreciated boy-nature in Mara's little friend, misnamed Moses—the friendless Spanish waif thrown on that Puritan coast—and in Mary's lover, Jim, of "The Minister's Wooing" (the most artistic and complete of all her books), and—but the list is too long: re-read, and be assured that her mother-heart embraced all that is beautiful, perplexing, interesting, annoying, comical, and, alas! tragical, that boy life and girl life have for mothers to know.

In a dainty little book entitled "Under the Old Elms," Mrs. Mary B. Claflin, the widow of ex-Governor William Claflin, of Massachusetts (who has recently herself passed away), has told many interesting things of the well-known visitors who often sojourned with them in that lovely old home in Newtonville. Among these are some pleasant memories of Mrs. Stowe and Mr. Beecher. One incident concerned Mrs. Stowe and Mr. Whittier, who "were congenial spirits, and their favorite amusement when they chanced to be together at 'The Old Elms' was telling ghost stories. . . . These days will live in the memory of all who were fortunate enough to hear from their lips stories of tappings and ghostly visitations, and of music from the spirit land. Mr. Whittier would smite his knee, as was his custom when anything pleased him, and Mrs. Stowe's merry laugh would echo through the house."

This recalls a lovely winter spent in Italy (1859–60), when Mrs. Stowe, with two of her daughters and her son, and Mr. Beecher's daughter, passed two months in Florence, one in Rome and one in wandering along the shores of southern Italy, in company with a number of Brooklyn friends—two separate parties, but in close daily companionship. In Rome Mrs. Stowe had Wednesday evening receptions; and it occasionally happened that, after the generality of guests had departed, a few would remain. Then conversation ran into free and friendly talk, with quip and jest and repartee, and when it turned into the channel of story-telling the fun waxed high. One evening, besides the neighbor-group and a few young American students who had run down from German universities for a visit with home friends, there were present Charlotte Cushman, Randolph Rogers, the sculptor, Robert Browning (whose gifted wife was a dear friend of Mrs. Stowe, but whose health precluded her from social enjoyments), and that prince of publishers and genius of raconteurs, James T. Fields, with his charming wife. The stories came from all quarters of earth and sea and sky, and, seated in the midst, Mrs. Stowe, with twinkling eyes and provocative quietude, was one of the most apt in capping story with story, while her glee at a good point scored—whether her own or another's—was delightful to see and most infectious. The laughter was almost continuous; it was like a sparkling, roaring bonfire, interrupted only for the brief throwing on of new fuel in the shape of a fresh story, and then flaming up again. It would be hard to imagine a merrier group.

Mrs. Stowe's vis comica was like that of her brother

Henry, and, indeed, like that of Abraham Lincoln, not only a lubricator amid the grinding machinery of life, and a solace in times of depression and discouragement, but a brightener of all seasons for those around and a powerful weapon in discussion, when a quick-turned jest would flash an argument and penetrate where logic could find no entrance. Her books are full of it, and it is one of the essential charms of her graceful, attractive style.

MRS. STOWE'S HOME AT MANDARIN, FLORIDA

An always noticeable thing about Mrs. Stowe was her serenity. A favorite quotation of hers was, "He that believeth shall not make haste," and to one who saw her frequently it would seem impossible (at least within the last twenty years) that she could be moved to agitation or profound emotion. And yet this was she who saw and recorded those tremendous scenes of tragedy in "Uncle Tom," who recalled the thunderous threatenings and denunciations of "Dred," who depicted the agonies of hopeless love in Padre Francesco of the "Agnes," who revealed the bitter misery of mother-love over a lost boy in "The Minister's Wooing," and who in almost every one of her books showed how Chords that vibrate sweetest pleasure

Thrill the deepest tones of woe.

Her soul was sensitive to every wind of heaven and of earth, and yet, amid sorrows and sufferings, excitements and struggles of many kinds, the prevailing temper of her spirit was serenity.

MRS. STOWE'S HARTFORD RESIDENCE

She first came into the Brooklyn circle of her brother Henry's friends in the spring of 1850, two or three years after the founding of Plymouth Church, Dr. Stowe's family being on their way to Brunswick, Maine, where he had accepted a professorship in Bowdoin College. It was the year when the country was deeply moved over the slavery question; when Daniel Webster slew his own fame in the "Seventh of March Speech," favoring the luckless bargain proposed by Henry Clay, "the Great Compromiser," by which California was to be admitted as a free State in exchange for the Fugitive Slave Law. And this outrageous law, which not only gave Southern slave-owners the right to pursue and recapture their escaped slaves in free States, but made it the duty of the free citizens of those States to assist in the hunting of men, women, and children, was the beginning of the end. It brought the horrors of actual slave-catching into the consciousness of Northern people; it aroused the dulled Northern conscience and the sluggish Northern temper. The distresses of hunted fugitives, the breaking up of families that for ten and twenty years had been living useful lives of freedom, and forcing their members to scatter and flee or to be carried back to slavery, often torn, wounded, and bleeding—all this, with memories of hunted slaves along the Kentucky and Ohio border line, so passionately moved the spirit of this woman that she burned to do something in aid of the poor sufferers. Her pillow, nightly wet with tears of pity, gave her no repose; and amid the cares and trials of making a new home in a strange place, with four little children to care for (one a baby in arms), and all the petty details of household life about her, she "was in the Spirit," and the Voice said also to her, "What thou seest, write!"

DR. CALVIN E. STOWE
(1868)
From a Photograph in the possession of Mr. J. R. Howard

MRS. STOWE IN LATER LIFE

The world knows the story of the wonderful book—how it aroused the North, England, the civilized world, to the possible horrors of American slavery, "made the enforcement of the Fugitive Slave Law an impossibility," and stirred tens of thousands of growing youth and stalwart men to such depths that Kansas, Frémont and the Republican party, John Brown, Abraham Lincoln, and Emancipation followed in quick succession. Not that the book did it all, but that it was the solvent of genius that precipitated the gathering Anti-Slavery sentiment and made it visible, ponderable, effective, there is no doubt.

Take one instance of thousands. At the celebration of Mrs. Stowe's seventieth birthday at "The Old Elms," under the auspices of her publishers, Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., June 12, 1882, when Whittier, Holmes, and others of note graced the occasion, among the gathered guests was Judge Albion W. Tourgée, the author of that powerful picture of the South and the negro after the war, "A Fool's Errand." On being invited to speak, he addressed Mrs. Stowe as his mother; told how the reading of "Uncle Tom" when he was a mere lad stirred in him such a rage at the wrong and enthusiasm to see it righted that it seemed to change him from boy to man: so that when the war came, with this still burning in him, he broke away from college and entered the army at the very first call. It had shaped his whole life, filling it with zeal for a sacred cause. The sight of this strong man in tears of gratitude and reverence, and of the modest little lady looking up at him with childlike unconsciousness and surprise as she put her hands into his, stretched out to her at the close, was very touching and impressive. Doubtless all of Tourgée's Southern books came from this early impulse, and they have done potent work in the cause of the lowly; yet doubtless, too, there were innumerable other hearts and heads, and helpful lives, inspired by that labor of love. Its effects were incalculable, and, so long as the world thinks, Mrs. Stowe will live as the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and as one of the greatest forces of her generation.

MRS. STOWE AND MR. BEECHER

From a Photograph by Gurney, New York, owned by Mr. Davis Garber, and reproduced with his permission

The element of justice was very strong in Mrs. Stowe's character; so that, while the world was startled by the hideous pictures of slavery under cruel masters, the gentler side of the picture was no less faithfully given, although, at the time, it made but little impression. So keen an observer as Joel Chandler Harris, of the Atlanta (Georgia) "Constitution," in his introduction to the first of his fascinating "Uncle Remus" books (new edition), says: "Mrs. Stowe . . . attacked the possibilities of slavery with all the eloquence of genius; but the same genius painted the portrait of the Southern slave-owner, and defended him." The kindly Colonel Shelby and his tender-hearted wife, and the careless but generous St. Clare with his arguments about slavery to his Vermont aunt, are quite as notable, if not as powerful, as the plantation horrors of Legree.

MRS. STOWE'S BIRTHPLACE, LITCHFIELD, CONNECTICUT

Yet it is the woman herself that we are now interested in, and the simplicity and naturalness of her character appeared in nothing so remarkably as amid the tumult of applause and adulation that arose with the unexampled instantaneity and wide extent of the circulation of her book. Writing from Brunswick, in July, 1852, to one of the Brooklyn friends, after some bright chat about family matters, she continues:

> Do you want to hear of my European correspondence? Well, then: Imprimis, a note, edged with black, sealed with the royal arms of England, states succinctly that "Colonel Grey has been commanded by His Royal Highness Prince Albert to acknowledge the receipt of Mrs. Stowe's letter, dated the 30th of March, and to thank her for the copy of the work that attended it." It is dated Buckingham Palace. Think of that! The very note smells of palaces. One fancies Colonel Grey seated amid Titians and Correggios, carving, gilding, and what not. Think what Colonel Grey's eyes must have rested on only a moment before and a moment after! Think of the wonderful fact that Royal Highness actually for as much as five minutes was made conscious of the existence of your most obedient! Truly, what am I, and what is my father's house!!
>
> Then, nextly, is a note, neat, terse, and dignified, from Macaulay, saying that he had read my work, "he could not say with pleasure—for no work on such a subject could give pleasure—but with respect both for the talent and benevolence of the author."
>
> Then comes a letter of four pages—frank, able, and very cordial—from the Earl of Carlisle. Yesterday a very warm-hearted, cordial note from Dickens. I got also four very precious lines from Kossuth—worth in my eyes the letters of a dozen kings.
>
> Well, how do you feel now? Will this do? . . .
>
> Tell Eunice [Mrs. H. W. Beecher] I don't feel proud because my baby has teeth before hers. I think just as much of her as if it hadn't happened.

When, in the following year (1853), Mrs. Stowe went, with her husband and her brother, the Rev. Charles Beecher, to England, and was herself received into the "palaces" of which she had written half in awe and half in fun, her sweet simplicity of manner and genuine modesty won all hearts. She was never a bit "spoiled" by all her honors, but went her way, giving and receiving kindness on every hand. That same faculty of noting little things as well as great, however, gave her Yankee keenness many morsels of private enjoyment. She once told the friend to whom

DR. LYMAN BEECHER

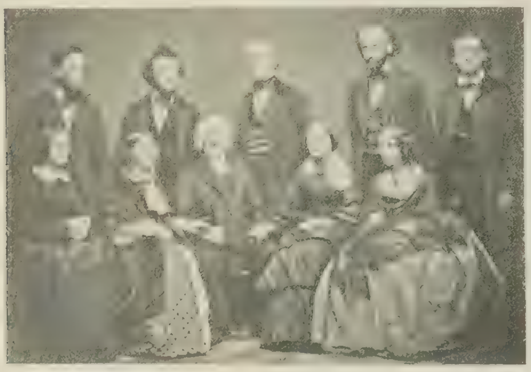
MRS. STOWE HENRY WARD BEECHER

(About 1861)

From a Photograph in the possession of Mr. J. R. Howard the above letter was written that, during a reception at the Duchess of Sutherland's, she was intensely amused at hearing one grande dame say to another, "It's fortunate she's so quiet"—as if they had expected to see some great, bouncing, "impossible" woman in the celebrated authoress whom they must treat politely.

The readers of The Outlook owe much to Mrs. Stowe for her generous aid and untiring labor during the early years of "The Christian Union." Her pen, her influence, her counsel, her suggestions, were faithful and effective for making its prompt successes. But to enter upon that would open up too many matters of interest, and we must find an end.

It would be easy to fill pages of The Outlook with illustrations of the peculiar moods, the charming traits, the really lovely characteristics of this delightfully human but truly saintly woman. Yet, when all is said, the source and all-permeating influence of her life was Christian love—love to Christ and perfect trust in the divine goodness, amid all the trials and distresses of earth, of which she had to bear many of the hardest and most grievous, and love to all of God's children, towards whom her heart went out in incessant affection and benefaction. One of the men who were her brother Henry's earliest friends in Brooklyn, and one whose friendship was close and faithful to the end, had become also a well-beloved friend of hers. He was visiting her at the Old Stone Cabin in Andover, and one afternoon she told him that she often arose in the morning at half-past four and went out to enjoy the birds and the dawn, and she challenged him to join her. The next morning they went out, and in that rare, sweet atmosphere they talked, and were silent, together. And she read to him some verses which she had written at such an hour. Since then they have been read and sung by many, to whom they have brought the very peace of Christ. No more appropriate close could be found for these fugitive memories than one or two of the stanzas of her hymn of the dawn, for they express, not only the calmness and beauty of the fresh day, but also the serenity of the unending dayspring of love and faith that lighted her life:



Thomas William Edward Charles Henry
Isabella Catharine Dr. Beecher Mary Harriet

THE BEECHER FAMILY

From a Photograph in the possession of Mr. J. R. Howard

Still, still with Thee, when purple morning breaketh,
  When the bird waketh, and the shadows flee;
Fairer than morning, lovelier than the daylight,
  Dawns the sweet consciousness, I am with Thee!

Alone with Thee, amid the mystic shadows,
  The solemn hush of Nature newly born;
Alone with Thee in breathless adoration,
  In the calm dew and freshness of the morn.

. . . .

Still, still with Thee! As to each new-born morning
  A fresh and solemn splendor still is given,
So doth this blessed consciousness, awaking,
  Breathe, each day, nearness unto Thee and Heaven.

. . . , ...

LYMAN BEECHER

(Mrs. Stowe's Father)

ROXANNA FOOTE

(Mrs. Stowe's Mother)

So shall it be at last, in that bright morning
  When the soul waketh, and life's shadows flee;
O, in that hour, fairer than daylight dawning,
  Shall rise the glorious thought: I am with Thee!

Personal Recollections

In response to a request from the editors of The Outlook, the following reminiscences of Mrs. Stowe, and of appreciation for her work and aims, have been elicited.

FROM EDWARD EVERETT HALE

I feel quite sure that no person would have met Mrs. Stowe for an hour who would not have seen that she was a person of remarkable natural genius—unless, indeed, the hour happened to be one when, by accident, almost, her attention was devoted to some special subject which interested her particularly, and therefore in that hour she seemed absent-minded. I have seen her come into the house to make a friendly visit, and take up a book within the first half-hour of that visit and interest herself in it, and then sit absorbed in the book, and in nothing else, till it was time for her to go home in the evening. I have known her, simply because she had an interesting book in her hand which she wished to read, take a street-car going out of town, and ride three or four miles without observing that she should have been going in the other direction. You might have fifty such stories of absent-mindedness told to you; but they are not fairly characteristic stories. They only illustrate the intensity with which she gave herself to any subject which she had in hand.

THE ANDOVER HOME

She was absolutely conscientious in the preparation of her stories. I remember that in one of them it was necessary that she should introduce a young couple who, on a very small income, married and lived in a cheap little house in a disagreeable quarter of the lower part of New York. She would not sketch the details even of an unimportant chapter describing this life without acquainting herself personally with the manner of life of people who lived thus, as she never had lived herself, that the lights and shades might be absolutely true to nature. I do not believe that she ever exaggerated anything for artistic effect. We know very well that nothing that she wrote was undertoned. I think she forgot herself entirely in her literary work.

After the year 1852 I was so fortunately placed that I knew a great deal of her literary work and her habits of composition. She had nothing of the mechanical book-maker about her. If she wrote a book, it was because she thought it ought to be written, and was resolved to write it for the glory of God and the good of the world.

When I was made the editor of "Old and New," six of us, who were all twenty-five years younger than we are now, met together and with mutual accord determined that we would write a story, which I believe I may say is well known, called "Six of One by Half a Dozen of the Other." We were three women and three men. The women were Mrs. Stowe, Mrs. Whitney, and my sister Lucretia; the men were Frederick W. Loring, Frederick Beecher Perkins, and myself. I made the plan of the story, with A. B., C. D., E. F., and so on, for the heroes and heroines; I assigned to each writer the part which each writer should take; and everybody entered with much spirit into the arrangement. Alas! our dear friend Loring was killed by some roving Apaches before he had more than made notes for his part of the story; but for love of him we included some scraps of his letters in the book as it was made up. It is a good illustration of the accuracy of criticism that the only thing, I believe, which the critics determined on was that Mrs. Stowe wrote the whole of the Guilford chapter, which was in fact the contribution of Mr. Frederick Perkins. Nobody, in any printed article which I saw, designated with correctness a single author of the five.

In the original draft of the story I said that the three heroes and three heroines would come together in Chicago in October, and there "meet their fate." It was so ordered that the great fire in Chicago took place in the very month which I had thus foreordained, eight months before. I had the pleasure myself, before the ruins were cold, of going over the ground and making the study for the closing act of that history.

I do not think that Mrs. Stowe knew, any better than any one else, which of her works were going to please the public. I am not sure that she cared. An author's judgment is never worth much on such a subject. I am sure that no publisher knows in advance. And I have long since ceased to think that the public's verdict of any book is any more correct than the verdict of a small circle of judges. That is to say, there is many a lost novel which has quite as much worth as stories that have had what the booksellers call a "run."

FROM JULIA WARD HOWE

Another crowned one has gone from our midst. In the fullness of years, and in the days in which rest is most earnestly to be desired, all that was mortal of Harriet Beecher Stowe has been laid with kindred dust. Her life has, for long years, been one of feebleness, of bodily and mental infirmity, but she bequeaths to us a record bright and imperishable. The gift of genius was hers, a gift whose value was enhanced—shall we say, a hundredfold?—by her noble conception of its responsibilities. With no stronger weapon than a woman's pen did she take upon herself the vindication of a wronged and oppressed race, and the arraignment of the mighty institution which held it only a little above the condition of the beasts that perish. The spark kindled by her imagination spread into a fire that lighted up two continents with its glow. She portrayed the negro, and truly, as possessed of every human attribute, as capable of culture and as worthy of freedom. She held up slavery to the abhorrence of the later civilization, with which it was in strange and glaring contradiction. The witness was accepted. The apparently hopeless cause which she so warmly espoused triumphed, as in the end God's causes will always triumph. The American Nation, yea, the human race, owes a debt of endless gratitude to this woman, who lived simply and modestly among us, faithful in the exercise of her nearer duties, and in the employment of her great abilities which makes hers a name to be held in lasting honor and remembrance.

FROM RICHARD MALCOLM JOHNSTON

I am not familiar with Mrs. Stowe's publications, other than "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which I read many years back. Although without experience, observation, or hearsay of such conditions as are mainly described in this work, I had no doubt that, near the border-line of slave territory, they must have existed to some extent; otherwise a tale so graphically and feelingly and powerfully told was impossible to mere human invention. I read the work with intensest interest, and conceived deepest admiration for the genius of the author.

As for the influence of this particular work, in my opinion there is nothing in the history of Letters to compare with it. The first appearance of "Waverley" in Edinburgh, of "Ivanhoe" in London, of "Quentin Durward" in Paris, vast as was the influence of each of these, were, taken together, far behind the appearance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Of all works of fiction it has led in the strength and endurance of its earliest impression.

FROM CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER

In private life, noble qualities endeared her to those who were so fortunate as to know her. She had a deep, affectionate nature, great magnanimity, freedom from petty views, jealousies, and affectations, a certain high and noble charity for the sin and weakness of the world, not a touch of Pharisaism, and a simplicity that made her ignore as unimportant many of the conventionalities. Though she had moods of abstraction and dreaminess, the uniform tenor of her life was cheerful; though she saw the evil of life, she was an optimist, for underneath all other mental processes was an abiding faith in the Divine Goodness. Without exact literary training, and cultivating literature as a means rather than an art, she possessed the artistic temperament; she drew, she painted flowers with unusual sentiment wherein was expressed her love for them, she had a great dash of dramatic power in narration, and she had that final gift to the novelist, the power of the raconteur; her taste in music was for that which was either gay or stirring, or which appealed most strongly to heroic sentiment; she had a remarkable appreciation of the various moods of nature, and an admiration, which seemed natural, for that which is best in art. Notwithstanding her serious comprehension of life, she liked gayety, and enjoyed what in the phraseology of the last generation used to be called fun—a capacity which seems to be dying out of modern life. And, perhaps most important of all in a person of her moral intensity, she had a broad and keen sense of humor—humor with the fiber not all refined out of it. She had the excellences and the defects of the talented and now historic family to which she belonged—courage of opinion, desire to be right at any cost, entire confidence in the correctness of its own views, indeed self-confidence which sometimes carried its members into nonconformity with general opinion and drew upon them the charge of eccentricity. Nor can her make-up be accounted for without allowing her that indefinable something in the accomplishment of results which we call genius.

FROM MRS. JAMES T. FIELDS

In the August "Atlantic Monthly" Mrs. James T. Fields writes:

It was my good fortune to be once in Rome with Mrs. Stowe, when she came unexpectedly face to face with an exhibition of the general feeling of reverence and gratitude towards herself. We had gone to the room of the Brothers Castellani, the workers in gold. Mrs. Stowe was full of enthusiasm, and we lingered long over the things which the brothers brought forward to show. Among them was the head of an Egyptian slave carved in black onyx. While we were enjoying it, one of the brothers said to Mrs. Stowe, "Madam, we know what you have been to the poor slave. We are ourselves but poor slaves still in Italy—you feel for us—will you keep this gem as a slight recognition of what you have done?" She took the jewel in silence, but her eyes were filled with tears, and it was impossible for her to speak.

. . . .

It was much at variance with her natural taste to appear before the public as a reader of her own stories, as she did in the autumn and winter of 1872 and '73. She was no longer able to venture on the effort of another long story, and yet it was unwise for her to forego the income which was extended to her through this channel. She wrote: "I have had a very urgent business letter saying that the lyceums of different towns were making up their engagements, and that if I were going into it I must make my engagements now. It seems to me that I cannot do this. . . . I feel entirely uncertain, and, as the Yankees say, 'didn't know what to do nor to don't.' My state in regard to it may be described by the phrase, Kind o' love to —hate to—wish I didn't—want ter—I suppose the result will be I shall not work into their lecture system."

. . . .

"Cold weather," writes Mrs. Stowe, "really seems to torpify my brain. I write with a heavy numbness. I have not yet had a good spell of writing, though I have had all through the story abundant clairvoyance, and see just how it must be written; but for writing some parts I want warm weather, and not to be in a state of a 'froze and thawed apple.' . . . I hope to get a clear, bright month in Florida.

"I did want to read some of my story to you before I went. I have read it to my husband, and, though one may think a husband a partial judge, he likes it. All I want now to go on is a good frame, as father used to say about his preaching. I want calm, soft, even dreamy, enjoyable weather, sunshine, and flowers."

The Higher Life of Philadelphia[1]

By Talcott Williams

THE OLD LIBERTY BELL

Apology is the keynote with which most Americans approach the discussion and description of their cities. For Philadelphia I have no apologies to make. It has its faults. I know them well. But I honestly believe that as I write there is not, the world over, a civic million and a quarter in which so many men and women are enjoying safety, security, food, shelter, and comfort, at so low a cost in personal effort and labor, as in this city. No city in which so many families have their own roof and doorstep. None in which the Church of Christ is so much the support of the poor and supported by the general mass and not by the rich. None in which so small a percentage live either as the very poor or the very rich, or in which so large a percentage live with neither poverty nor riches. This city, in all its history self-governing, has stopped the increase of its debt, a feat of self-denial to which no European cities have yet been equal. It has lowered its debt when theirs are rising by leaps and bounds, strangling trade with an irredeemable mortgage. It has paid for its water-works and its gas-works out of profits, repaved its streets at the expense of street railway corporations, and gained communication to its very heart at the expense of rival railroad companies. The realty improvements to this end have directly added to the taxable wealth of the city, and the indirect revenue from this source would be deemed a brilliant return if these viaduct lines were municipal. It has provided itself with one great park, selected with far-sighted wisdom thirty years ago, and in the past decade twenty-seven small parks, so that no home, when the system is completed, will be over half a mile from green grass and a children's playground. It jealously preserves its historic monuments when other cities destroy them. It led every American city in the kindergarten and manual training, though failing to keep pace with their full development. Faults exist, lamentable, depressing, and serious. Being a city in which the control vests in an enormous number of small taxpayers, who live in small houses in a small way and have small views, civic standards are both low and narrow. The sum spent on street-cleaning is not one-quarter large enough, and the streets are dirty, though improving. Wretched pavements were long tolerated, until 200 miles were laid at the cost of some $7,000,000, paid by the street-car companies, and as many miles more by the city. The water, while lavish in amount—four or five fold that given in Europe—is poor in quality, and public opinion is sluggish. A foul ooze of petty blackmail surrounds police operations in some districts. While twelve hundred policemen on ward and division committees were forced to resign six years ago, and by charter no office-holder can step inside a primary or convention, police and official influence is constant and omnipresent, though the efficiency of civic administration steadily improves. The schools are low in standard, and, what is worse, they satisfy the great mass. They are poor, and by the side of schools in Berlin or Paris make but a poor comparison; but, on the other hand, it is not necessary to provide meals at the public expense for tens of thousands of famished scholars; and if one must choose between a great government machine which by its iron bureaucratic efficiency raises schools to a high level and by its military burdens and heavy taxation depresses wages to a starvation level, the choice seems to me easy.

In a city thus constituted and organized, the problem presented by effort for a higher life is to crown the edifice already erected by thrift, security, and comfort, with spiritual aspiration and inspiration, and to improve what has been done by giving form and grace to what is now formless, always graceless, and too often shameless. The Church—I use the term in its broadest sense, for all the worshipers of God in the Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish communions—is the first, and infinitely the most powerful, of these agencies. If it did its work, there would be nothing else to do. But it does not do its work. A tithe, under both Judaic and Christian dispensations, has come to be the recognized dedication to better things.

ELM AT BROAD AND WALNUT STREETS

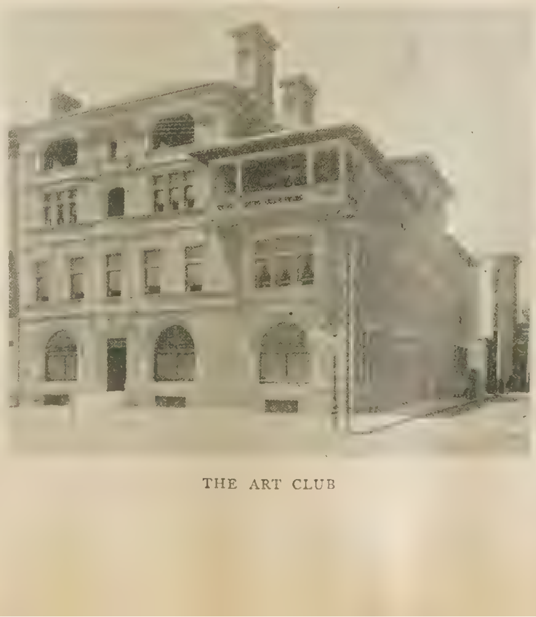
---

[1] Previous articles in this series have been: "The Higher Life of American Cities" (introductory), by Mr. Theodore Roosevelt (The Outlook for December 21, 1895); "The Higher Life of New York City," by Albert Shaw (The Outlook for January 25, 1896); "The Higher Life of Chicago," by Melville E. Stone (The Outlook for February 22); "The Higher Life of Boston," by Edward Everett Hale (The Outlook for March 28); "The Higher Life of New Orleans," by Grace King (The Outlook for April 25); and "Buffalo, the City of Homes," by the Rev. W. Burnet Wright, D.D. (The Outlook for June 27).

CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY

In Philadelphia, in 1890, there were 664 church edifices, with a value of $28,023,365. This was just half a tithe (5 per cent.) of the taxed real estate. Add to the churches themselves the rectories, hospitals, and various institutions (exclusive of those non-denominational), and a full tenth of the realty of the city is dedicated to the service of God. If there are added the schools, hospitals, and charitable institutions conducted by Christian men, not a tithe, but a tithe and a half, of the city's realty is in common Christian ownership dedicated to this higher cure of soul and body. I dare say other cities would give a like response to a like analysis, but I confess I am always awed by this unconscious and unostentatious tribute to the spiritual, and appalled that it accomplishes so little.

The churches of the city had, in 1890, 335,189 communicants. One-half of these were Roman Catholics (163,658), and the Roman Catholic population, adding baptized to communicants, is about 200,000 or so. If I turn aside from these, it is not from lack of admiration of the good work done by this ancient Church, but to enforce the responsibility of the communion whose privileges I share. The population for which the Protestant communion is responsible is about 800,000, deducting all others of every kind and creed. This population contains about 534,000 over fourteen years old, capable of church membership under the ordinary Protestant view. The recorded membership of these churches is one-third of this number. It was my privilege to have a missionary as my father. I passed my boyhood in a Mohammedan city, a bare fraction of whose population was nominally Christian, sunk in superstition and image-worship. If I had been told of a city in which every third adult in four-fifths of the population had assumed the solemn vows of church membership, I would have looked for a city of God on earth. If Philadelphia is not that, where lies the fault? In divided churches. In scattered responsibility. In 546 organizations where 100 would do the work infinitely better. In lack of all sense of territorial responsibility, so that the wearied clergymen I know are doubling and triplicating each other's trips, like milkmen, seeking each a family or two in a block. In utter refusal to recognize responsibility of the Church as a whole to the city as a whole. Always and everywhere denominationalism crucifying the Son of man at the gate that the priest and the Pharisee in the temple may be secure in the ritual, the creed, and the organization by which each seeks to worship a God in his own image.



THE ART CLUB

Yet, with all this sad lack, with this failure to keep at united work all this vast army of men and women, once at least in their lives touched with a sense of divine consecration—all other influences in the city are small by the side of those which stream from these churches. High liquor license in this city would have been a miserable failure but for the Law and Order Society, whose small expenditure each year maintains a vigorous detective watch on licensees, and opened the campaign, when high licenses were first granted, with a fund of evidence as to the character of the unworthier applicants. "Speak-easies" (illicit dram-shops) there are. They are small, obscure, in alleys, serving some one small demoralized neighborhood, or, in instances both better and worse, in a friendly way supplying a few neighbors with beer or whisky. But where, with 1,000,000 population, the city had 5,773 liquor-saloons under low license, and more of the hole-and-corner pest-holes than now, to-day 1,250,000 people have but 1,670 saloons, and a revenue of nearly $1,670,000 is added to civic resources. Arrests for drunkenness have decreased. Drinking on the streets is visibly less. The highest credit is due to our upright, courageous, and elected judiciary for these results. The Evangelical Christian League has done a most important work in suppressing the reappearance of gambling in and about the city, and in cleansing sundry plague-spots by the sound, judicious method of collecting evidence and then attacking the owner of the property with advice to purify or face the certainty of publicity and prosecution.

JOHN WANAMAKER

These are the two most conspicuous agencies for this particular work; but the real factor of improvement is the steadily rising tide of Christianity. When I remember what good men and women were praying for fifteen to eighteen years ago, and what has been accomplished since, I wonder that the churches do not unite in a special thanksgiving to God. Two or three great lotteries were then selling openly all over the city and advertising in the newspapers. Gambling-houses could be found up a flight, and often open from the street, for "bucket-shop" transactions, all over the central part of the city. A hideous plague-spot, which a modest woman could scarcely enter, stretched along an open street. Concert saloons and dives were accessible by the dozen. Prize-fights, thinly disguised as glove-fights, were of nightly occurrence. Liquor was sold, in defiance of law, at scores of low entertainments. Lotteries to-day are banished from papers, streets, and mails—the last and first because a Philadelphia Presbyterian elder became Postmaster-General. Gambling-houses and bucket-shops are closed, or exist only in hiding. The concert saloons, dives, and prize-fighting are all substantially suppressed, and there have succeeded dime theaters, which, though sometimes vulgar, are rarely indecent, and maintain a far higher moral standard than do more high-priced entertainments. Open licensed liquor-saloons, which were 1 to every 34 families, are now 1 to every 147 families. The center of the city has been in large measure purified. The streets are freer of evil than ever before.

These broad changes are only a part. The churches so constantly advertise their anxious desire to prepare us for another world that their good work in this is missed by most of the community. Of the money expenditure of the churches in a number of leading congregations whose balance-sheets I have seen, considerably over half is devoted to objects outside their own worship and expenditure. This proportion probably obtains as to the $1,000,000 raised yearly by the Protestant Episcopal churches and the $700,000 contributed for all purposes by Presbyterian churches. It is true of most Protestant churches. What is the result? A great network of libraries, of night schools, of guilds, of singing-schools, of industrial training-schools, which in the aggregate exceed all other like agencies put together. Each year sees these increase. The largest church in the city, Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, the Temple, in which Mr. Russel Conwell is doing a work akin to Spurgeon's, gathering a congregation of 5,000, supports a hospital and conducts a free "college," with 497 in its day and 1,585 in its night classes, whose over-pretentious name must not blind one to sound work on lines limited but useful. It has branch schools scattered over the city. By its lecture course, its concerts, its musical training, its clubs, its gymnastics, and a score of organizations, it honestly endeavors, and with surprising success, to make the church for all its members the center of social and intellectual as well as religious life. This is a single example nearly matched by Bethany Presbyterian Church. But every church does its share in this wide work. The libraries connected with Presbyterian churches alone number 70,000 volumes. The guilds connected with a single Episcopal church have 2,000 members. Nothing in all that is done in the city has appealed to me more than the patient efforts of pastors of small churches in laboring factory suburbs to provide lecture-rooms, organize classes, and develop an intellectual life.

INDEPENDENCE HALL

Health is the first of civic needs. The College of Physicians for a hundred years has been the expert medical adviser of the city. At the close of the last century it guided the struggle with yellow fever; and let us not forget that our American cities have been more successful in these contests with semi-tropical fevers than have European cities under similar semi-tropical summer isothermals, though the latter often make the braver outward show. In this century, and only three years ago, when cholera was an impending possibility, a delegation from the College, headed by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, waited on the Mayor and pointed out the need of asphalt pavements on certain slum streets. Councils at once appropriated $400,000. I know no other American cities, and few anywhere, whose acceptance of expert judgment would be so prompt. In ten years past, Hamburg, Marseilles, Madrid, and Granada have paid heavily for a disregard of like warnings. Pure water is the chief health need of the city, and a citizens' committee of fifty has for a year, through an efficient sub-committee, conducted experiments and carried on investigations to determine the best filtration system, and there is fair prospect that one will be adopted without the intervention of a pestilence, the heavy tuition fee paid by Hamburg under German city government. The prevention of tuberculosis has been for some time the purpose of a small but active society, which has diligently published and agitated and has secured several lesser reforms, notably one in the city hospital, while it is a mere question of time when the registration of all tubercular cases will be required. The New Century Guild has carried on investigations into the hygienic conditions under which women are employed, and improved them, besides, what is quite as important, drawing public attention to healthful surroundings provided by employers. Sweating, due in part to the influx of a Jewish population, has been fought by several agencies, including one headed by the Rabbi Krauskoff, and legislation secured providing inspection and restriction. In the prevention of contagious diseases, particularly of smallpox and scarlet fever, the city is singularly in need of active agitation, and the absence of any vigorous education of public opinion on the subject of vaccination renders it tolerably certain that a smallpox panic will rouse the public in the near future. The Women's Health Protective Association, under the indefatigable leadership of Mrs. John H. Scribner, has cried aloud and spared not in denouncing dangers to health. It has shared with other organizations in public meetings on the pure-water issue; it has maintained a monthly inspection of street-cleaning, and done useful service in raising the public din indispensable to public reform. The Civic Club, whose active efforts have been more devoted to education, has also its committees on subjects relating to health, has organized meetings, and has urged reforms. It is due to all these causes that Philadelphia has a steadily diminishing death-rate, that deaths from tuberculosis have shown a remarkable decrease, and that the increase to the well and working years of its citizens may be favorably compared with that of European cities with far more favorable climatic conditions.

PHILADELPHIA WORKINGMEN'S HOUSES; THERE ARE 150,000 OF THESE

The intellectual education of Philadelphia owes more in its higher life to the University than any great city I know owes to its leading institution of learning. Most universities live apart from the cities in which they live. Few owe much to the city government. Continental universities are Imperial or State. The University of Pennsylvania is civic, owes a noble site to the city government, houses its law school in a city building, and in countless relations is accepted by various city departments as adviser. While the University has received large gifts, the largest from its present Provost, its characteristic is the number of small gifts. With 3,000 students, the University is the center of an active associated intellectual life which reaches thrice this number of active men and women scattered through the community. Under the management of its two successive Provosts, Dr. William Pepper and Mr. C. C. Harrison, this University teaches the community as well as its matriculates. Clubs, societies, and conventions center about most universities; but these are usually limited to professional students and the immediate university group. In the University of Pennsylvania the aggregate membership of such societies reaches nearly 3,000. The large lay membership is actively engaged in raising money as well as directly occupied in the field to which it is devoted, and single years have seen $80,000 raised, in large sums and small, in this way, for the use of the University. The Archæological Association, the largest and most important of these, has created a museum which is rapidly taking its place as one of the first ethnological collections in the country, and its Babylonian Committee has raised over $70,000 for the exploration of Niffer, to-day the most important archæological work in progress anywhere, under any auspices. Its fruits are divided between the Imperial Ottoman Museum at Constantinople and the University Museum, already the owner of the largest collection of Babylonian tablets save those in the Louvre and the British Museum. Carried on for eight years by a small group of men led by Dr. William Pepper, Mr. E. W. Clark, Mr. Clarence L. Clark, Mr. C. C. Harrison, Mr. W. W. Frazier, and others, this exploration is a movement of well-directed, liberal support of pure learning. In addition, the Museum has had expeditions in Yucatan, Florida, and the Southwest, and has one now in Peru and one in Malaysia. The interest it has created in museums has led to the organization of Educational and Economic Museums, both supported by the city. It is a remarkable proof of the wide horizon of interest in the city that, independent of the University, but aided by those interested in it, Peary's Arctic Expedition had its chief support in Philadelphia, where over $16,000 has been raised, in average sums of $23. This has been succeeded by an effort to organize an Antarctic expedition, promoted by the competent efforts of Mr. Angelo Heilprin. The Philadelphia Geographical Club heard in January Mr. Peary's report, and in March the report of Dr. Donaldson Smith's exploration along a route of 4,000 miles in East Africa. Of how many other cities was it true last summer, or any year, that its citizens were supporting archæological research in Babylonia, an Arctic expedition, investigation in Florida and Yucatan, with two other expeditions under preparation?

Public education suffers in Philadelphia from the inorganic, amorphous character of a city which, like London (to which it bears various local and internal analogies), has grown by the coalescence of different neighborhoods. These jealously retain local control of local schools, so that Philadelphia has never yet had a thoroughly organized civic school system. Low standards in regard to education shown by the well-to-do, too small a proportion of whose sons go to college, as well as by the larger laboring masses, have aggravated a faulty organization. The Public Education Association has for fifteen years formed a small, active, and most useful center for effort in school reform. It has failed, as has its successor in these efforts, the Civic Club, in its efforts to reform the organization of the schools; but, by the valuable and highly practical expedient of paying for the beginnings of reforms, kinder-

ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS

PHILADELPHIA LIBRARY

Harrison S. Morris

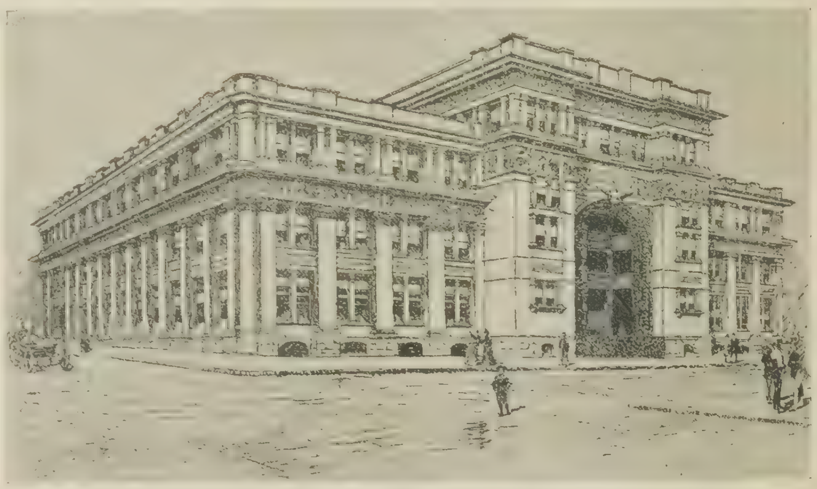
Dr. S. Weir Mitchell

Anne H. Wharton

C. A. Brinley

E. J. James

gartens have been introduced—a work promoted by a society directed to the end—cooking and sewing added to the school curriculum, and two large manual training schools opened. These are all now reforms accepted and supported by the city. In educational reform the Civic Club has for two years past led and organized local reform work. Wisely organized to educate and inform its members as to public needs quite as much as to agitate directly for reforms, and most ably led by Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson, the Civic Club has skillfully avoided the methods which turn some reformatory societies into noisy busybodies. A number of papers of more or less importance have been read before it. It has organized an exhibition of works of art suitable for school-rooms, and, more important still, has for two years carried on an active canvass for the election of women as ward school directors. This has been successful only when a regular party nomination has been secured from the political machine, but the energetic canvass carried on in one ward, the Seventh, was a typical example of the extent to which women can be organized, interested, and made effective in political work.



DREXEL INSTITUTE

The library problem stands next to the school problem. The same fission which afflicts all else has bequeathed, often as the lamentable legacy of one generation to the indifference of another, a large number of small, scattered, and special libraries, the latter often of individual excellence and value. Two subscription libraries divided this field, and have suffered from the flood of cheap books. No public library has hitherto existed, and no large endowment has been given one. The Pepper bequest of about $250,000 has, however, been wisely employed as a nucleus for a free library, of which Dr. William Pepper is President, and with it have been associated eight local libraries previously established by the Board of Education. These were generally due to local initiative, and it is the happy result partly of plan and partly of circumstance that Philadelphia, thanks in large measure to the zealous efforts of Mr. George B. Roberts, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, now has a library system, with an annual income of $100,000, which promises to combine the advantages of a strong central free library with local libraries enlisting local support, often by the provision of a building, and bringing books near the homes of each section—for these are not branches for distribution, but independent collections of books. One such branch, started by the College Settlement and assumed by the city, is in a Jewish immigrant population, whose appetite for books is natural to a race whose land had the earliest library town on record, Kirjath-Sepher. With 3,000 volumes, this library has had the extraordinary overturn of 300 volumes a day, and there are weeks which it closes with the last book gone from its shelves.

The three great educational foundations of the last half-century, left by Stephen Girard, V. Williamson, and A. J. Drexel, in all some $15,000,000, have gone in Philadelphia to what are essentially trade and technical schools. Girard College, whose work is familiar, up to recent years was a monument of the building mania, the educational Juggernaut under which so much of American education and learning is crushed and buried. Twenty years past have seen a great improvement in the methods of the school in the introduction of training in the mechanic arts suited to modern conditions; and its 1,524 boys, though their education is cut short at eighteen, furnish trained recruits to the great army of industry, the demand for its graduates exceeding the supply. The Williamson Trade School, a few miles outside of the city, teaches trades to 159 boys more on manual training lines. Both these house, feed, and care for the boys, and are industrial schools.

The Drexel Institute, thanks to having at its head a man —Dr. James MacAlister—trained in both the theory and method of education, has broken new ground. Taken as a whole, I regard it as the most important substantive addition to educational equipment made anywhere in a decade. Most such institutes make on the student of education the impression of a somewhat haphazard growth. The Drexel is ordered and organized. Its free lecture course, in subjects, in the experts it summons, and in the pay it

James McAlister

Frank Thomson

Mayor Warwick

Mrs. E. D. Gillespie

C. C. Harrison

Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson

offers, is comparable to the Lowell, though without the priceless advantage of publication. Its scientific departments serve two distinct ends: one, to furnish the many a technical training; the other, to give the few the opportunity for long-continued and systematic research and study, without barring the entrance by any scholastic requirements but capacity to do the precise work proposed. Strong believer as I am in general cultivation, it is, I submit, well, in a world of many powers, to open direct paths to learning. Technical training in the Drexel has, in addition, a carefully developed artistic as well as scientific basis. A library and museum, both small but both well related, furnish working tools and inspiration. The Drexel offers the art school wedded to the scientific laboratory to produce technical training in handicraft; with lectures, library, and museum to furnish liberal cultivation. Some 2,000 students have responded to this noble endowment and felicitous organization, one particularly fitted to supplement the work of manual training schools, and to meet the problem of that large number of both sexes whose breadwinning must begin at eighteen or nineteen years of age.

Art study and art applied to industry are the twin notes of the day. Twenty years ago we were all asking for it. To-day, in this single American city, which no one calls an "art center"—odious term (all places are centers to the earnest and all circumference to the tepid)—has 3,500 students in various classes drawing from cast or figure, and some 6,000 to 7,000 pupils of all ages in various institutions learning the rudiments, and much more than the rudiments, of various mechanic trades. Besides this, manual training and object work—modeling and the like—runs through all the public and most private schools, much of it in both being but poorly done for lack of adequate training and effective supervision. The Academy of Fine Arts addresses itself to the training of artists, and has 244 pupils in advanced work. The Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art, an outcome of the Centennial, in its special training for textiles is still the leading institution in the country, and was for many years the only one. It gives in addition general instruction in the methods and decoration of all the artistic crafts, and has 765 students. Insufficiently endowed and scantily supported by the city, this school owes its growth, as do so many other like institutions, to the sedulous efforts of a few women, led and organized by Mrs. E. D. Gillespie, a great-granddaughter of Dr. Benjamin Franklin. Two or three local institutes, of which the Spring Garden Institute, with 617 pupils, is the largest, give training in the arts, in handicrafts, and in simpler electrical engineering. Begun forty years ago, and up to a year ago, when it was given $100,000, having received only $33,600 in endowment, the Spring Garden Institute has gone on growing under local and neighborhood management and support, getting a building, collecting a library, building a hall, widening and increasing its courses, and receiving new ideas all the more readily because no large endowment has relieved it from the necessity of appealing to the public. It is now, as it was in 1841, the fortunate product of local city needs, local enthusiasm, and local regard. We all admire this sort of thing in a mediæval city. Why not admire it now? Philadelphia has six or seven such institutions, and no man can be fortunate enough to be asked to address one without new joy that an American city furnishes these simple, inexpensive, self-reliant centers of instruction, cultivation, and industrial training. The Master Builders' Exchange has established its trade school in building, plumbing, etc., and since 1891 its bricklaying class has had the recognition of three powerful unions. The Master Plumbers have another trade school, and the Master House-Painters one in their trade.

The broadest work in the prosecution of education outside of the schools is in the hands of the American Society for the Extension of University Teaching. Less organic in its connection with the University than its English models, this society, which owes everything to the efforts of Professor E. J. James, now does most of its work by paid lecturers, though a number of college professors share in its courses. A pioneer in this field in this country, the American Society has set out to organize centers for lecture courses which shall be as near as may be self-supporting. It has failed in getting organized consecutive work. It has succeeded in stimulating in its twenty-four centers in and about Philadelphia, with an attendance of 8,000 or 10,000, a vast deal of discursive reading. The number of books bought and read is amazing. It has been the center of a local intellectual awakening, most valuable although it has not taken shape in students who pass examinations. Local development with a view to permanent organization is the

CITY HALL

Dr. William Pepper

Herbert Welsh

A. J. Drexel

Horace Howard Furness

George B. Roberts

Hon. E. S. Stuart

Robert B. Ogden

chief feature of its policy under its present President, Mr. F. B. Miles. Annually it holds a summer meeting of a month in the University, whose lecture courses have been of marked ability, attracting picked audiences. More than one man of long experience has found himself in this meeting facing the best audience he has ever addressed. In the same field of post-school work, though on a different level, are the New Century Guilds organized by Mrs. Eliza S. Turner, who I sometimes think has avoided every possible error incident to efforts for working-girls. Begun by polling its members for the studies they desired, it has had 900 in its classes, though now but 179, and a membership of 500 use its rooms. It forms the center of an association of all such guilds in the city, with a membership varying, but running over 15,000. The Young Men's Christian Association in its central building has 1,500 students, and under the management of its Secretary, Mr. Halsey Hammond, reaches in various ways over 5,000 members, with branches over the city. The Women's Christian Association has turned its energies to the erection of a ten-story lodging-house, which houses over five hundred young women and provides them, under a single roof, with all the needs of a civilized life for three dollars a week. I hesitate to say which is the most extraordinary—that such a building should have been erected, or that it is full, well-managed, and happy.

CARPENTERS' HALL

The only American Guild Hall

The slums of Philadelphia are relatively small, but they offer a most difficult problem because there are scattered over the city, in the rear of the houses of the well-to-do, small groups of houses inhabited by the depraved. It was early noted that bringing Lazarus to the gate of Dives may be well for neither. These slums will never be redeemed until Christian men and women learn that when Christ said neighbor he meant neighbor. Consecutive work is, however, rendered difficult by the summer divorce between rich and poor which disorganizes all city work. The one seriously congested district in the city has been made the center of work by a College Settlement of women and of another by students from Princeton. Of the two the former has been the more successful. It has become the focus of a neighborly activity which takes many useful forms. The number directly affected is not very large, and I am unable to see that it differs very greatly from the mission work in constant progress in our large cities by churches, but its effect is unmistakable, and it has been accompanied by the creation of a park and library, both receiving city support.

The impulse to village improvement has its representative in the Fairmount Park Art Association, now twenty-five years old, with 1,100 members, which has expended on works of art $250,000. This Association began its work considerably earlier than any like society of which I know, and has expended considerably more money. Again one must regret low standards. Conventional and non-critical admiration has dictated too many purchases, though some of the commissions have resulted in work altogether admirable. How noble a thing it is for a small, well-organized group of men and women to devote themselves for twenty-five years to making beautiful the city in which they live! The Art Club, organized eight years ago, gives in its gallery two annual and successive smaller exhibitions. The Civic Club has energetically agitated to procure legislation to provide a jury of experts on works of art given to the city or erected in its limits. Mr. Harrison S. Morris, the managing director of the Academy of Fine Arts, has made it the center of associated action to provide decoration for the new City Hall; Philadelphia, more liberal than New York, providing prizes and an appropriation to pay for prizes for the competition. The Small Parks Association has organized and led the movement for small parks, which Councils have bought and are providing for. Germantown, Chestnut Hill, and other suburbs have active village and road improvement societies. The Civic Club, active in many directions, has organized in the Seventh Ward a school movement for clean streets, with street receptacles for paper provided by the Club. Railroads usually do naught but make a town hideous. The Pennsylvania Railroad sets an example to all railroad corporations by lining its tracks and bedding its depots with turf and flowers. Not less important than beautifying parks is the furnishing of playgrounds for children. A munificent provision of $500,000 has just been made by will by Mr. Richard Smith for this purpose. Each summer, on slender means, the Culture Extension League procures the opening of school yards, vacant lots, and city parks not yet laid out, as playgrounds, teachers being hired to supervise the games. To the general effort to improve city appearances must be credited the active interest in its monuments. The Colonial Dames and other Revolutionary organizations have taken up the work of restoring Independence Hall and its adjacent buildings. The former has begun the erection of memorial tablets. Bartram's Garden and his historic house have been bought by the city, made a park, and, under the active co-operation between city and university, Mr. Eisenhower, Superintendent of City Property, has, with a wise liberality, called in the advice of Professor Macfarlane, holding the chair of Botany.

Great tracts of efforts are necessarily omitted here. I have, after all, but considered the blossoming efforts of the great organic structure which constitutes a city. On its history I have spent much patient study. To the anonymous service of any great city it has always seemed to me that a man might gladly dedicate a lifetime and die happy if he had been privileged to aid in its upward march, though no man knew his name and no office recorded his work. To Philadelphia no man can give this study and this labor without the conviction that its history has been one of steady and continuous development, and that all labor given to its service is rewarded a hundredfold by the glad consciousness of sharing in a winning fight for those things which make for the salvation of man and the coming of the City of God.

REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D.

The Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D.

By John Willis Baer

FRANCIS E. CLARK
(Eighteen years old)

"Some twenty-seven years ago, in the old lecture-room of the Kimball Union Academy in Meriden, N. H., a boy of sixteen arose in the weekly prayer-meeting and gave a simple testimony for Christ. His words were few, but they came from a sincere heart; and upon one at least who heard them they made an impression that has lasted, with the friendship which began with them, for over a quarter of a century.

"That brief prayer-meeting testimony was a precursor of the Christian Endeavor movement. It was a keynote to the mighty symphony of prayer and praise which is arising from two millions and a half young hearts to-day.

"He was a modest, unassuming boy, yet withal very determined and wonderfully persuasive. He possessed a sensitive temperament, with instincts which were almost womanly in their delicacy and refinement, and yet he was every whit a man, strong, courageous, fond of manly sports, full of life and fire. He was all this as a boy of sixteen, and those who know him best to-day will tell you that he is all this and more as a man of forty-four."

Thus writes the Rev. Charles A. Dickinson, D.D., about his classmate and bosom friend, Francis E. Clark.

Francis Edward Symmes—for Dr. Clark's father was Charles Carey Symmes, a native of New England, as was his wife—though he has many generations of New England blood in his veins, was born under the Union Jack, in Aylmer, Quebec, September 12, 1851. The father died of cholera at Three Rivers, P. Q., in 1854, while absent from Aylmer on a business trip. From Mr. S. J. Jarvis, of Aylmer, I learn the following interesting facts:

"After her husband's death, Mrs. Symmes, who was not a novice at teaching, opened a young ladies' academy at the old homestead, 'Cherry Cottage.' This institution flourished exceedingly well, and many bright girls were made brighter and happier by their association with Dr. Clark's mother. The past pupils are still to be found, and they will invariably tell you that the happiest days of their lives were when they were eligible to be called 'cherry-birds.' They will tell of the wonderful way in which 'dear Mrs. Symmes' used to instruct them in God's own book. They say there was none that could teach its truths as she could. Nor do they forget the curly-headed Frank, who was so smart a boy; and they are greatly pleased that he has been so used by God for furthering the Master's work."

Dr. Clark's mother, sister, and brothers are buried in the cemetery a few miles from Aylmer, on the road to Ottawa. An aunt and cousins on his mother's side, besides numerous relatives of his father, still reside in Aylmer.

Mrs. Symmes lived but five years after her husband's death. Left an orphan so early in life, Dr. Clark tells me that, though he well remembers his mother, the face of his father lingers with him only as a vague memory. But God made up to him his great loss by providing for him new parents in the persons of the Rev. E. W. Clark and wife, a devoted uncle and aunt, who took him to Claremont, N. H., and into their home and hearts, adopted him (it being the wish of his mother) as their son, and gave him a liberal education. It was at this time that his name was changed from Symmes to Clark, his adopted father's and his own mother's name. There, in his new home, a country parsonage, under the best of religious training, he became a Christian at an early age, and decided to be a minister of the Gospel. Uncle and Aunt, or rather Father and Mother, Clark are both living to-day. Mr. Clark's voice was heard throughout the vast Mechanics' Building, Boston, in earnest prayer at the opening session of the last International Endeavor Convention. The mother is still an interested and active worker in the cause of missions. From Kimball Union Academy in Meriden he entered Dartmouth College, graduated with an honor in 1873 and with a good record as a scholar, and studied theology three years at Andover. From Andover he went immediately to his first pastorate at the Williston Church, Portland, Me.

REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D.
(1892)

WILLISTON CHURCH, PORTLAND, ME.

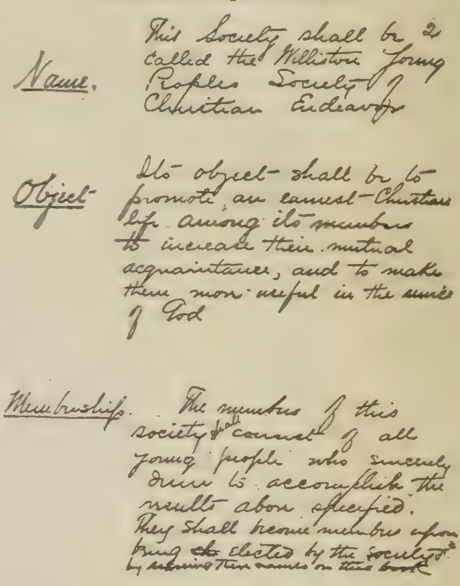
The Williston Church was at that time a new "mission," which had been started by a few earnest Christian people in a growing part of the city. The congregation was very small, and the services were held in a building which looked little like a church. Mr. Clark, however, soon became known as a preacher of ability, a zealous worker, and a devoted pastor. Large numbers rallied about him, and it became necessary to erect a church building of considerable proportions. Loved by all, especially by the young, Williston Church soon became famous for its evangelistic spirit and practical Christian work.

"It was in many respects an ideal church, and it had an ideal pastor; and these together furnished the ideal conditions for the Christian Endeavor organization. It came into being naturally, as the blossom comes. It was designed by a devoted pastor to meet the needs of a single church. It had in its conception no mixture of personal ambition, or denominational pride, or ecclesiastical rivalry. The man who conceived it believed in youthful piety and practical Christianity. He was himself an exemplar of these two ideas, and he had been conspicuously successful in realizing them in the church of which he was pastor; the Christian Endeavor constitution was the material mold in which these ideas found their natural development."

From Williston Church Dr. Clark was called in 1883 to the pastorate of Phillips Church, South Boston, where he ministered for four years. In 1887 the tide of Christian Endeavor had reached a mark that compelled National attention. The movement must have an official representative, and at the National Convention held at Saratoga the Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, D.D., pastor of Union Church, Boston, Mass., presented a resolution which recommended the adoption of the "Golden Rule" as the official organ of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. At this time Dr. Clark was urged to become its editor, a position for which he was especially fitted, having inherited literary ability from his mother (a woman with poetical tastes and temperament), and having had experience at Dartmouth as one of the editors of "The Dartmouth." It was some time before he was fully persuaded that he ought to give up his pulpit for the editor's chair. At this same convention Dr. Clark was elected President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

CONSTITUTION.

Fac-Simile of Original Constitution.



Name. This Society shall be 2 called the Williston Young Peoples Society of Christian Endeavor

Object. Its object shall be to promote an earnest Christian life among its members to increase their mutual acquaintance, and to make them more useful in the service of God

Membership. The members of this society sh consist of all young people who sincerely desire to accomplish the results above specified. They shall become members upon being ~~ele~~ elected by the society ~~by signing their names on this book~~

Christian Endeavor deals with spiritual matters and methods of service so largely that little is really known about its own machinery; a new generation of Christian Endeavorers has come forward since the United Society was formed; and, naturally, they may not be acquainted with its origin and its object.

PARLOR WHERE THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY WAS ORGANIZED

DR. CLARK AT HIS OFFICE DESK

For a few years after the formation of the first Society of Christian Endeavor, Mr. Pennell, Mr. Van Patten, Mr. Stevenson, of Portland, and Dr. Clark, with one or two others, did the work of the United Society. They furnished the information to those who wished it, and answered numberless letters. First, Dr. Clark made a hectograph copy of the constitution, and sent that out to inquiring friends. Then a supply of constitutions was printed for general distribution.

Thus things went on until the year 1885, when the United Society of Christian Endeavor was legally incorporated under the laws of the State of Maine (though it was afterward transferred to Massachusetts), for the purpose of publishing the necessary Christian Endeavor literature, and of furnishing the necessary information concerning the principles of the movement. That was the object of the United Society then, and it is no different to-day.

"CHERRY COTTAGE," AYLMER, QUEBEC, CANADA—BIRTHPLACE OF DR. CLARK

It is not the United Societies, you will notice, as it is often erroneously called, but the United Society, whose office is to supply information to those who desire it. It assumes no authority and levies no taxes. It seeks no control of State unions, local unions, or individual societies. Its corporate membership consists of all Christian Endeavorers who care enough for the privilege of voting at its annual business meeting to pay one dollar a year to support its work, or twenty dollars for life membership. Its trustees represent the different denominations. They are all well known, many of them most eminent in their respective denominations. They are all men who by their weight and character have commended the Society to their own denominations, and have thus largely promoted its growth. To many of them are due the increasing confidence and rapid growth of the Society in their respective denominations.

The United Society is, as I have said, a bureau of information, and is self-supporting. With a small income, it has accomplished its world-wide work most efficiently.

During all these years the "Golden Rule" has enabled Dr. Clark to contribute his time without a cent of expense to the Society of Christian Endeavor. It has paid his salary, and has enabled him to visit other lands in the interests of Christian Endeavor.

This is, briefly, the history of the organization called the United Society, which was founded in prayer, and has been carried on in the spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion to the cause it represents. It has strictly minded its own business. It has interfered with no local society and no local union. It has left matters of local development where they should be left—to the pastors and churches, and to the societies and unions, State and provincial. It has received the commendation of wise and level-headed men in all denominations, and the manifest favor of God, in that during the years spanned by this brief recital Christian Endeavor has spread into every land, has grown faster than any other religious organization ever grew, and has constantly been bringing forth its peaceable fruits of righteousness.

Dr. Clark's acceptance of the editor's chair of the "Golden Rule" and the presidency of the United Society was an epoch in the history of Christian Endeavor. God called him to these places of honor and responsibility, and has led him all these years. A passenger once asked a pilot on a treacherous water if he knew every rock and shoal; the answer was, "Oh, no, but I know where the deep water lies." Dr. Clark turns the wheel that keeps the craft Christian Endeavor in the

J. WILLIS BAER
Secretary Christian Endeavor Society

WILLIAM SHAW
Treasurer Christian Endeavor Society

"deep" water. A firm believer in the deep, powerful, religious life expressed in the Church of Jesus Christ, he is an enthusiastic champion of the young people and their ability to do Christian work, appealing to the heroic and devout in their lives. A man of sincere simplicity and at the same time resolute strength, quiet, unassuming, always persistent, never obstinate, always aggressive, never pugnacious, always courteous, never punctilious, always religious, never sanctimonious, a friend of self-respecting interdenominationalism, an enemy of narrow sectarianism, Francis E. Clark is an ideal Christian Endeavorer.

Editor-in-chief of the "Golden Rule," President of the World's Union of Christian Endeavor, the United Society of Christian Endeavor and of its Board of Trustees, his is a busy life. I presume no other man living to-day has the acquaintance of so many young people throughout the world. He has not only addressed conventions of young people in every State, Territory, and Province in the United States and Canada, but he has made several trips to Great Britain and Continental Europe, and has also made a complete circuit of the globe, meeting with and addressing thousands in all foreign and missionary lands. It is easy to believe that a leader with his opportunities and successes must have great executive ability. He has it, and has it to almost a wonderful degree. Dr. Clark has surrounded himself with associates whom he delights to trust, and, like General Grant, he delegates certain departments of work and lines of policy to his subordinates; while still guiding with a master hand, he expects these associates to direct affairs in their departments, and places much of the burden of responsibility for success or failure upon their shoulders.

Dr. Clark's home is in Auburndale, one of the suburbs of Boston. It is here, free from interruptions and callers, that he does much of his editorial and other literary work. When not called away to meet appointments at conventions—and he has many such engagements—he divides his days equally between his study in his home and his office at headquarters, 646 Washington Street, Boston.

Any sketch of Dr. Clark's life would be incomplete without generous mention of his wife and family and his home life. Max Müller has said that "all really great and honest men may be said to live three lives: there is one life which is seen and accepted by the world at large—a man's outward life; there is a second life which is seen by a man's intimate friends—his household life; and there is a third life, seen only by the man himself and by Him who searcheth the heart, which may be called the inner or heavenly life." Dr. Clark's public life is fairly well known the world around. It must be so, naturally, and we need no longer dwell upon it. If you want to see the best side of this man whose name is a household word in many countries, look in with me upon his home life. Step with me to the door of his hospitable home. Even before you receive a hearty and affectionate greeting from the man, you will have received a generous welcome if you glance up at the main girders of the porch, for here, in a dozen different languages, the word welcome is beautifully carved. You will be at once invited into his library, which is also the "family" room, for this is a typical American home. It is here more often than upon public functions that you will meet Dr. Clark's "better seven-eighths," and their four children. Mrs. Clark is beloved by a great host of people, for not only did she make deservedly loyal friends in both Dr. Clark's parishes, as she has in their present home, but she has been his traveling companion upon many of his pilgrimages in this and other lands. She has much of her husband's executive ability, and is the originator of many methods of Christian Endeavor and other church work. She is especially qualified in every way to be the wife of the leader of two million and a half young people. Let me say of her what the Rev. Charles Perry Mills, of Newburyport, Mass., the pastor who organized the second Christian Endeavor Society, once said of Dr. Clark: "Some men are gentle without strength, some are strong without gentleness; he has both gentleness and strength." All who know Mrs. Clark will say that she has both gentleness and strength. Personal knowledge from several years of intimacy convinces me that a peep into the home life of the family would give the same uplift that the personality of the two heads of the family has given to thousands outside of the home, whose contact has been only with their outward lives.

Then, lastly, there is a third life—that seen only by God and the man himself. I cannot trust myself to speak of that. My privileges have been many, in that my associations with Dr. Clark have been intimate and affectionate, and I think I know something, too, of the deep spiritual life that is his. There have been experiences that have been confidential, that have given me inlets into his very heart-life, yet, with Müller, let me say, "It is seldom that we catch a glimpse of those deep springs of human character which cannot come to the surface even in the most confidential intercourse, which in every-day life are hidden from a man's own sight, but which break forth when he is alone with God in secret prayer—aye, in prayer without words."

DR. CLARK AT HOME

KATE CARNEGIE[1]

By Ian Maclaren

Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush," "The Days of Auld Lang Syne," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XV.—JOINT POTENTATES

Among all the houses in a Scottish parish the homeliest and kindliest is the manse, for to its door some time in the year comes every inhabitant, from the laird to the cottar woman. Within the familiar and old-fashioned study, where the minister's chair and writing-table could not be changed without discomposing the parish, and where there are fixed degrees of station, so that the laird has his chair and the servant lass hers, the minister receives and does his best for all the folk committed to his charge. Here he consults with the factor about some improvement in the arrangements of the little commonwealth, he takes counsel with a farmer about his new lease and promises to say a good word to his lordship, he confirms the secret resolution of some modest gifted lad to study for the holy ministry, he hears the shamefaced confession of some lassie whom love has led astray, he gives good advice to a son leaving the Glen for the distant dangerous world, he comforts the mother who has received bad news from abroad. Generations have come in their day to this room, and generations still unborn will come in their joys and sorrows, with their trials and their affairs, while the manse stands and human life runs its old course. And when, as was the case with Dr. Davidson in Drumtochty, the minister is ordained to the parish in his youth, and, instead of hurrying hither and thither, preaching in vacancies, scheming and intriguing, he dwells all his days among his own people, he himself knows three generations, and accumulates a store of practical wisdom for the help of his people. What may be the place of the clergyman in an English parish, and what associations of sympathy and counsel the rectory may have for the English farm-laborer, it is not given to a northern man to know; but it is one good thing at least in our poor land that the manse is another word for guidance and good cheer, so that Jean advises Jock in their poor little perplexity about a new place to "slip doon an' see the Doctor," and Jock, although appearing to refuse, does "gie a cry at the manse," and comes home to the gude wife mightily comforted.

The manse-builders of the ancient days were men of a shrewd eye and much wisdom. If anywhere the traveler in the north country sees a house peeping from among a clump of trees in the lap of a hill where the northeaster cannot come and the sun shines full and warm, then let him be sure that is the manse, with the kirk and God's acre close beside, and that the fertile little fields around are the glebe, which the farmers see are plowed and sown and reaped first in the parish. Drumtochty Manse lay beneath the main road, so that the cold wind blowing from the north went over its chimneys, and on the east it was sheltered by the Tochty woods. Southward it overlooked the fields that sloped toward the river, and westward, through some ancient trees, one study window had a peep of the west, although it was not given to the parish manse to lie of an evening in the glory of the setting sun, as did the Free Kirk. Standing at the gate and looking down beneath the beeches that stood as sentinels on either side of the little drive, one caught a pleasant glimpse of the manse garden, with its close-cut lawn and flower-beds and old summer-house and air of peace. No one troubled the birds in that place, and they had grown shameless in their familiarity with dignities—a jackdaw having once done his best to steal the Doctor's bandana handkerchief, and the robins settling on his hat. Irreverence has limits, and in justice to a privileged friend it ought to be explained that the Doctor wore on these occasions an aged wide-awake and carried no gold-headed stick. His dog used to follow him step by step as he fed the birds and pottered among the flowers, and then it always ended in the old man sitting down on a seat at the foot of the lawn, with Skye at his feet, and looking across the Glen where he had been born and where for nearly half a century he had ministered. Kate caught him once in this attitude, and was so successful in her sketch that some have preferred it to the picture in oils that was presented to the Doctor by the Presbytery of Muirtown, and was painted by an R.A. who spent a fortnight at the manse and departed with some marvelous heads, still to be identified in certain councilors and nobles of the past. Both are hanging in the same house now, far from Drumtochty, and there they call one "Public Capaucity" and the other "Private Capaucity," and you require to have seen both to know our kindly, much-loved Moderate.

As John grew old with his master and mellowed, he would make believe to work close by, so that at times they might drop into talk, recalling names that had died out of the Glen, shrewd sayings that fell from lips now turned to dust, curious customs that had ceased forever, all in great charity. Then there would come a pause, and John would say, "Aye, aye," and go away to the bees. Under the influence of such reminiscences John used to become depressed, and gently prepare Rebecca for the changes that were not far off, when Drumtochty would have a new minister and a new beadle.

"The Doctor's failin', Becca, an' it's no tae be expeckit that a'll be lang aifter him; it wudna be fittin', an' a'm no wantin't. Aifter ye've carried the bukes afore ae minister for five and thirty year, ye're no anxious for a change; naebody 'ill ever come doon the kirkyaird like the Doctor, an' a' cudna brak ma step; na, na, there's no mony things a' michtna learn, but a' cudna brak ma step."

Rebecca went on with her dinner in silence; even capable men had weaknesses somewhere, and she was accustomed to those moralizings.

"A'm the auldest beadle in the Presbytery o' Muirtown—though a' say it as sudna—an' the higher the place the mair we 'ill hae tae answer for, Becca. Nae man can hold the poseetion a'm in withoot anxieties. Noo there wes the 'Eruption' in '43"—it could not be ignorance which made John cling to this word, and so we supposed that the word was adopted in the spirit of historical irony—"that wes a crisis. Did a' ever tell ye, Rebecca, that there wes juist ae beadle left the next morning tae cairry on the Presbytery of Muirtown?"

"Aye, forty times an' mair," replied that uncompromising woman; "an' it wud set ye better tae be servin' the Doctor's lunch than sit haverin' an' blawin' there."

No sane person in Drumtochty would have believed that any human being could dare to address John after this fashion, and it is still more incredible that the great man should have risen without a word and gone about his duty. Such a surprising and painful incident suggests the question whether a beadle or any other person in high position ought to be married, and so be exposed to inevitable familiarities. Hillocks took this view strongly in the kirkyard at the time of John's marriage—although neither he nor any one knew with how much reason—and he impressed the fathers powerfully.

"Becca cam frae Kilspindie Castle close on thirty year syne, and John's took the bukes aboot the same time; they've agreed no that ill for sic a creetical poseetion a' that time, him oot an' her in, an' atween them the Doctor's no been that ill-servit; they micht hae lat weel alane.

"She's no needin' a man tae keep her," and Hillocks proceeded to review the situation, "for Becca's hed a gude place, an' she disna fling awa' her siller on dress. As for John, a' canna mak him oot, for he gets his stockin's darned and his white stock dune as weel an' maybe better than if he wes mairried."

The kirkyard could see no solution of the problem, and Hillocks grew pessimistic.

---

[1] Copyright, 1896, by John Watson.

"It 'ill be a doon-come tae him, a'm judgin', an' 'ill no be for the gude o' the pairish. He's never been crossed yet, an' he 'ill no tak weel wi' contradickin' . . ."

"She wudna daur," broke in Whinny, "an' him the beadle."

"Ye ken little aboot weemen," retorted Hillocks, "for yir gude wife is by hersel' in the pairish, an' micht be a sanct; the maist o' them are a camsteary lot. A'm no sayin'," he summed up, "that Becca 'ill gie the beadle the word back or refuse to dae his biddin', but she 'ill be pittin' forrit her ain opeenions, an' that's no what he's been accustomed tae in Drumtochty."

They were married one forenoon in the study, with Drumsheugh and Domsie for witnesses—the address given by the Doctor could hardly be distinguished from an ordination charge—and John announced his intention of accompanying his master that afternoon to the General Assembly, while Rebecca remained in charge of the manse.

"It wudna be wise-like for us twa," explained the beadle, "tae be stravagin' ower the country for three or fower days like wild geese, but the pairish micht expect something. Noo, a've hed ma share o' a Presbytery an' a Synod, tae say naethin' o' Kirk Sessions, but a've never seen an Assembly.

"Gin ye cud get a place, a' wud spend ma time considering hoo the officer comes in, and hoo he lays doon the buke, an' sic like; a' micht get a hint," said John, with much modesty.

So John went alone for his wedding tour, and, being solemnly introduced to Thomas, the chief of all beadles, discussed mysteries with him unto great edification; but he was chiefly impressed by the Clerk of the Free Kirk Assembly—into which he had wandered on an errand of exploration—who was a fiery-faced old gentleman with a stentorian voice and the heart of a little child.

"Ye never heard him cry, 'Officer, shut the door,' afore a vote?" he inquired of the Doctor. "Weel, ye've missed a real pleesure, sir; gin ye stude on Princes Street, wi' the wind frae the richt airt, ye micht hear him. A' never heard onything better dune: hoo ony man wi' sic a face and voice cud be content ootside the Auld Kirk passes me."

John was so enamored of this performance that after much cogitation he unburdened his mind to the Doctor, and showed how such a means of grace might be extended to Drumtochty.

"Noo, if there wes nae objection in order, aifter ye hed settled in the pulpit an' hed yir first snuff, ye micht say, 'Officer, shut the door.' Then a' wud close the kirk door deleeberately in sicht o' the hale congregation, an' come back tae ma place, an' Peter Rattray himsel' wudna daur tae show his face aifter that. Ye hae the voice an' the manner, Doctor, an' it's no richt tae wyste them."

In public John defended the Doctor's refusal as a proof of his indulgence to the prodigals of the parish, but with his intimates he did not conceal his belief that the opportunity had been lost of bringing the service in Drumtochty Kirk to absolute perfection. John's own mind ran on the mighty utterance, and so it came to pass that the question of mastery in the kitchen of the manse under the new régime was settled within a week after his ecclesiastical honeymoon.

"Rebecca"—this with a voice of thunder from the fireplace, where the beadle was reading the "Muirtown Advertiser"—"close the door."

The silence was so imperative that John turned round, and saw his spouse standing with a half-dried dish in her hand.

"Ma name is Rebecca," as she recovered her speech, "an' there's nae ither wumman in the hoose, but a'm judgin' ye werena speakin' tae me, or"—with awful severity—"ye've made a mistak', an' the suner it's pit richt the better for baith you an' me an' the manse o' Drumtochty.

"For near thirty year ye've gane traivelin' in an' oot o' this kitchin withoot cleanin' yir feet, and ye've pit yir shoon on the fender, an' hung up yir weet coat on the back o' the door, an' commandit this an' that as if ye were the Doctor himsel', an' a' cud dae naethin', for ye were beadle o' Drumtochty.

"So a' saw there wes nae ither wy o't but tae mairry ye an' get some kind of order in the hoose; noo ye 'ill understand the poseetion an' no need anither tellin': ootside in the kirk an' pairish ye're maister, an' a'll never conter ye, for a' ken ma place as a kirk member an' yir place as beadle; inside in this hoose a'm maister, an' ye 'ill dae what ye're bid, always in due submission tae the Doctor, wha's maister baith in an' oot. Tak yir feet aff that steel bar this meenut"—this by way of practical application; and when, after a brief pause, in which the fate of an empire hung in the balance, John obeyed, the two chief officials in the parish had made their covenant.

Perhaps it is unnecessary to add that they carefully kept their bounds, so that Becca would no more have thought of suggesting a new attitude to John as he stood at the foot of the pulpit stair waiting for the Doctor's descent than John would have interfered with the cooking of the Doctor's dinner. When the glass was at set fair, they even exchanged compliments, the housekeeper expressing her sense of unworthiness as she saw John in his high estate, while he would indicate that the Doctor's stock on Sacrament Sabbath reached the highest limits of human attainment. The Doctor, being left to the freedom of his own will, labored at a time to embroil the powers by tempting them to cross one another's frontiers, but always failed, because they foresaw the consequences with a very distinct imagination. If he asked Rebecca to convey a message to Drumsheugh, that cautious woman would send in John to receive it from the Doctor's own lips; and if the Doctor gave some directions regarding dinner to John, Rebecca would appear in a few minutes to learn what the Doctor wanted. It was an almost complete delimitation of frontiers, and the Doctor used to say that he never quite understood the Free Kirk theory of the relation between Church and State till he considered the working agreement of his two retainers. It was, he once pleasantly said to the minister of Kildrummie, a perfect illustration of "co-ordinate jurisdiction with mutual subordination." It is just possible that some one may not fully grasp those impressive words, in which case let him appreciate other people's accomplishments and mourn his ignorance, for they were common speech in Drumtochty, and were taught at their porridge to the Free Kirk children.

It is an unfortunate circumstance, however, that even a scientific frontier wavers at places, and leaves a piece of doubtful territory that may at any moment become a cause of war. Surely there is not on the face of the Scottish earth a more unoffending, deferential, conciliatory person than a "probationer," who on Saturdays can be seen at every country junction, bag in hand, on his patient errand of "supply;" and yet it was over his timid body the great powers of the manse twice quarreled disastrously. As a guest in the manse, to be received on Saturday evening, to be conducted to his room, to be fed and warmed, to go to his bed at a proper hour—ten on Saturday and ten-thirty on Sabbath—to be sent away on Monday morning in good time for the train, he was within the province of Rebecca. As a minister to be examined, advised, solemnized, encouraged, to be got ready on Sabbath morning and again disrobed, to be edified with suitable conversation and generally made as fit as possible for his work, he was evidently within John's sphere of influence. It was certainly the beadle's business to visit the dining-room on Saturday evening, where the young man was supposed to be meditating against the ordeal of the morrow, to get the Psalms for the precentor, to answer strictly professional questions, and generally to advise the neophyte about the sermon that would suit Drumtochty, and the kind of voice to be used. One thing John knew perfectly well he ought not to do, and that was to invite a probationer to spend the evening in the Doctor's study, for on this point Rebecca was inexorable.

"A' dinna say that they wud read the Doctor's letters, an' a' dinna say they wud tak a buke as a keepsake, but a' can never forget ane o' them—he hed a squint and red hair—comin' oot frae the cupboard as a' opened the door.

"'There's juist ae wy oot o' the room, an' it's by the door ye cam in at,' a' said; 'maybe ye wud like tae come an' sit in the dinin'-room; ye 'ill be less distrackit.'" And Rebecca charged John that no probationer should in future be allowed to enter the Doctor's sanctum on any consideration.

John's excuse for his solitary fault was that the lad thought that he could study his sermon better with books round him, and so Rebecca found the young gentleman seated in the Doctor's own chair and working with the Doctor's own pen, unblushing and shameless.

"Gin ye want Cruden's Concordance"—this was when Rebecca had led him out a chastened man—"or Matthew Henry tae fill up yir sermon, the books 'ill be brocht by the church officer."

Rebecca's intrusion, in turn, into John's sphere was quite without excuse, and she could only explain her conduct by a general reference to the foolishness of the human heart. It came out through the ingenuousness of the probationer, who mentioned casually that he was told Drumtochty liked four heads in the sermon.

"May I ask the name of yir adviser?" said the beadle, with awful severity. "The hoosekeeper? A' thocht so, an' a' wud juist gie ye due intimation that the only person qualified an' entitled tae gie ye information on sic subjects is masel', an' ony ither is unjustified and unwarranted.

"Fower heads? Three an' an application is the Doctor's invariable rule, an' gin a probationer gied oot a fourth, a' winna undertake tae say what michtna happen. Drumtochty is no a pairish tae trifle wi', an' it disna like newfangled wys. Fower!" and the scorn for this unorthodox division was withering.

Rebecca realized the gravity of the situation in the kitchen, and humbled herself greatly.

"It wes as a hearer that he askit ma opinion, an' no as an authority. He said that the new wy wes tae leave oot heads, an' a' saw a' the hay spread oot across the field, so a' told him tae gither it up intae 'coles' (haycocks), an' it wud be easier lifted. Maybe a' mentioned fower—a'll no deny it; but it's the first time a' ever touched on heads, an' it 'ill be the laist."

Upon those terms of penitence John granted pardon, but it was noticed on Sabbath that when Becca got in the way of the retiring procession to the manse, the beadle was heard in the kirkyard, "Oot of ma rood, wumman," in a tone that was full of judgment, and that Rebecca withdrew to the grass as one justly punished.

This excellent woman once accomplished her will, however, in spite of John, and had all her days the pleasant relish of a secret triumph. Her one unfulfilled desire was to see the Doctor in his court dress, which he wore as Moderator of the Kirk of Scotland during the Assembly time, and which had lain ever since in a box with camphor and such preservatives amid the folds. It was aggravating to hear Drumsheugh and Hillocks—who had both gone to the Assembly that year for the sole purpose of watching the Doctor enter and bow to the standing house—enlarging on his glory in velvet and lace and silver buckles, and growing in enthusiasm with the years.

"It's little better than a sin," she used to insist, "tae see the bonnie suit gien the Doctor by the Countess o' Kilspindie, wi' dear's knows hoo much o' her ain auld lace on't, lyin' useless, wi' naebody tae git a sicht o't on his back. Dinna ye think, man"—this with much persuasiveness—"that ye cud get the Doctor tae pit on his velvets on an occasion, maybe a Saicrament? The pairish wud be lifted; an' ye wud look weel walkin' afore him in his lace."

"Dinna plead wi' me, wumman; a' wud gie a half-year's wages tae see him in his grandeur; but it's offeecial, div ye no see, an' canna be used except by a Moderator. Na, na, ye can dust and stroke it, but ye 'ill never see yon coat on the Doctor."

This was little less than a challenge to a woman of spirit, and Rebecca simply lived from that day to clothe the Doctor in embroidered garments. Her opportunity arrived when Kate's birthday came round, and the Doctor insisted on celebrating it by a party of four. By the merest accident his housekeeper met Miss Carnegie on the road, and somehow happened to describe the excellent glory of the Doctor's full dress, whereupon that willful young woman went straight to the manse, nor left till the Doctor had promised to dine in ruffles, in which case she pledged herself that the General would come in uniform, and she would wear the family jewels, so that everything would be worthy of the Doctor's dinner.

"Hoo daur ye!" began John, coming down from the Doctor's room, where the suit was spread upon the bed; but his wife did not allow him to continue, explaining that the thing was none of her doing, and that it was only becoming honor should be shown to Miss Carnegie when she dined for the first time at the manse of Drumtochty.

CHAPTER XVI.—DRIED ROSE-LEAVES

Townspeople are so clever and know so much that it is only just something should be hidden from their sight, and it is quite certain that they do not understand the irresistible and endless fascination of the country. They love to visit us in early autumn, and are vastly charmed with the honeysuckle in the hedges, and the corn turning yellow, and the rivers singing in the sunlight, and the purple on the hillside. It is then that the dweller in cities resolves to retire as soon as may be from dust and crowds and turmoil and hurry to some cottage where the scent of roses comes in at the open window and one is wakened of a morning by the birds singing in the ivy. When the corn is gathered into the stack-yard, and the leaves fall on the road, and the air has a touch of frost, and the evenings draw in, then the townsman begins to shiver and bethink him of his home. He leaves the fading glory with a sense of relief, like one escaping from approaching calamity, and as often as his thoughts turn thither he pities us in our winter solitude. "What a day this would be in Drumtochty!" he says, coming in from the slushy streets and rubbing his hands before the fire.

This good man is thankful to Providence for very slight mercies, since he knows only one out of the four seasons that make our glorious year. He had been wise to visit us in the summer-time, when the light hardly dies out of the Glen, and the grass and young corn present six shades of green, and the scent of the hay is everywhere, and all young creatures are finding themselves with joy. Perhaps he had done better to have come north in our springtime, when nature, throwing off the yoke of winter, burst suddenly into an altogether indescribable greenery, and the primroses were blooming in Tochty woods, and every cottage garden was sweet with wallflowers, and the birds sang of love in every wood, and the sower went forth to sow. And, though this will appear quite incredible, it had done this comfortable citizen much good to have made his will and risked his life with us in the big snow-storm that used to shut us up for fourteen days every February. One might well endure many hardships to stand on the side of Ben Urtach and see the land one glittering expanse of white on to the great strath on the left and the hills above Dunleith on the right, to tramp all day through the dry, crisp snow, and, gathering round the wood fire of an evening, tell pleasant tales of ancient days, while the wind powdered the glass with drift and roared in the chimney. Then a man thanked God that he was not confined to a place where the pure snow was trodden into mire, and the thick fog made it dark at midday.

This very season of autumn, which frightened the townsfolk and sent them home in silence, used to fill our hearts with peace, for it was to us the crown and triumph of the year. We were not dismayed by the leaves that fell with rustling sound in Tochty woods, nor by the bare stubble-fields from which the last straw had been raked by thrifty hands, nor by the touch of cold in the northwest wind blowing over Ben Urtach, nor by the grayness of the running water. The long toil of the year had not been in vain, and the harvest had been safely gathered. The clump of sturdy little stacks, carefully thatched and roped, that stood beside each homestead were the visible fruit of the long year's labor, and the assurance of plenty against winter. Let it snow for a week on end, and let the blast from the mouth of Glen Urtach pile up the white drift high against the outer row of stacks—the horses will be put in the mill shed, and an inner stack will be forked into the threshing-loft, and all day long the mill will go with dull, rumbling sound that can be heard from the road, while within the grain pours into the corn-room, and the clean yellow straw is piled in the barn. Hillocks was not a man given to sentiment, yet even he would wander among the stacks on an October evening, and come in to the firelight full of moral reflections. A vague sense of rest and thankfulness pervaded the Glen, as if one had come home from a long journey in safety, bringing his possessions with him.

The spirit of October was on the Doctor as he waited for his guests in the drawing-room of the manse. The Doctor had a special affection for the room, and would often sit alone in it for hours in the gloaming. Once Rebecca came in suddenly, and though the light was dim, and the Doctor was seated in the shadow by the piano, she was certain that he had been weeping. He would not allow any change to be made in the room, even the shifting of a table, and he was very particular about its good keeping. Twice a year Rebecca polished the old-fashioned rosewood furniture, and so often a man came from Muirtown to tune the piano, which none in the district could play, and which the Doctor kept locked. Two little pencil sketches, signed with a childish hand, Daisy Davidson, the minister always dusted himself, as also a covered picture on the wall; and the half-yearly cleaning of the drawing-room was concluded when he arranged on the backs of two chairs one piece of needlework showing red and white roses, and another whereon was wrought a posy of primroses. The room had a large bay window opening on the lawn, and the Doctor had a trick of going out and in that way, so that he often had ten minutes in its quietness; but no visitor was taken there, except once a year, when the wife of the Doctor's old friend, Lord Kilspindie, drove up to lunch, and the old man escorted her ladyship round the garden and brought her in by the window. On that occasion, but only then, the curtain was lifted from the picture, and for a brief space they stood in silence. Then he let the silken veil fall and gently arranged its folds, and, offering his arm with a very courtly bow, led the Countess into the dining-room, where Rebecca had done her best, and John waited in fullest Sabbath array.

The Doctor wandered about the room—looking out on the garden, mysterious in the fading light, changing the position of a chair, smoothing the old-fashioned needlework with caressing touch, breaking up a log in the grate. He fell at last into a reverie before the fire—which picked out each bit of silver on his dress and shone back from the black velvet—and heard nothing till John flung open the door and announced with immense majesty, "General Carnegie and Miss Carnegie."

"Welcome, Kate, to the house of your father's friend, and welcome for your own sake, and many returns of this day. May I say how that white silk and those rubies become you? It is very kind to put on such beautiful things for my poor little dinner. As for you, Jack, you are glorious," and the Doctor must go over Carnegie's medals till that worthy and very modest man lost all patience.

"No more of this nonsense; but, Sandie, that is a desperately becoming get-up of yours; doesn't he suit it well, Kit? I never saw a better calf on any man."

"You are both 'rael bonnie,' and ought to be very grateful to me for insisting on full dress. I'm sorry that there is only one girl to admire two such handsome men; it's a poor audience, but at any rate it is very appreciative and grateful," and Kate curtsied to each in turn, for all that evening she was in great good humor.

"By the way, there will be one more to laugh at us, for I've asked the Free Kirk minister to make a fourth for our table. He is a nice young fellow, with more humanity than most of his kind; but did not I hear that he called at the Lodge to pay his respects?"

"Certainly he did," said the General, "and I rather took a fancy to him. He has an honest eye and is not at all bad-looking, and tells a capital story. But Kit fell upon him about something, and I had to cover him. It's a wonder that he ever came near the place again."

"He has been at the Lodge eight times since then," explained Kate, with much composure; "but he will on no account be left alone with the head of the household. The General insulted him on politics, and I had to interfere; so he looks on me as a kind of protector, and I walk him out to the Beeches lest he be massacred."

"Take care, my dear Catherine," for the Doctor was a shrewd old gentleman; "protecting comes perilously near loving, and Carmichael's brown eyes are dangerous."

"They are dark blue." Kate was off her guard, and had no sooner spoken than she blushed, whereat the Doctor laughed wickedly.

"You need not be afraid for Kate," said the General, cheerfully; "no man can conquer her; and as for the poor young padres, she made their lives miserable."

"They were so absurd," said Kate, "so innocent, so ignorant, so authoritative, that it was for their good to be reduced to a proper level. But I rather think your guest has forgotten his engagement. He will be so busy with his book that even a manse dinner will have no attraction." The Doctor looked again at Kate, but now she wore an air of great simplicity.

It was surely not Carmichael's blame that he was late for Dr. Davidson's dinner, since he had thought of nothing else since he rose, which was at the unearthly hour of six. He went out for a walk, which consisted of one mile east and another west from the village, and, with pauses, during which he rested on gates and looked from him, lasted two hours. On his return he explained to Sarah that his health had received much benefit, and that she was not to be surprised if he went out every morning at or before daybreak. He also mentioned casually that he was to dine at the manse that day, and Sarah, who had been alarmed lest this unexpected virtue might mean illness, was at rest. His habit was to linger over breakfast, propping a book against the sugar-basin, and taking it and his rasher slice about, which was, he insisted, the peculiar joy of a bachelor's breakfast; but this morning Sarah found him at ten o'clock still at table, gazing intently at an untouched cutlet, and without any book. He swallowed two mouthfuls hurriedly and hastened to the study, leaving her to understand that he had been immersed in a theological problem. It seemed only reasonable that a man should have one pipe before settling down to a forenoon of hard study, but there is no doubt that the wreaths of smoke, as they float upward, take fantastic shapes, and lend themselves to visions. Twelve o'clock—it was outrageous—six hours gone without a stroke of work! Sarah is informed that, as he has a piece of very stiff work to do, luncheon must be an hour later, and that the terrier had better go out for a walk. Then Carmichael cleared his table and set himself down to a new German critic, who was doing marvelous things with the Prophet Isaiah. In three thick volumes—paper-bound and hideous to behold—and in a style of elaborate repulsiveness, Schlochenboshen showed that the book had been written by a syndicate, on the principle that each member contributed one verse in turn, without reference to his neighbors. It was, in fact, the simple plan of a children's game, in which you write a noun and I an adjective, and the total result greatly pleases the company; and the theory of the eminent German was understood to throw a flood of light on Scripture. Schlochenboshen had already discovered eleven alternating authors, and as No. 4 would occasionally pool his contribution with No. 6, several other interesting variations were introduced. In such circumstances one must fix the list of authors in his head, and this can be conveniently done by letters of the alphabet. Carmichael made a beginning with four, K A T E, and then he laid down his pen and went out for a turn in the garden. When he came in with a resolute mind, he made a précis of the Professor's introduction, and it began, "dear Miss Carnegie," after which he went to lunch and ate three biscuits. As for some reason his mind could not face even the most fascinating German, Carmichael fell back on the twelve hundredth book on Mary Queen of Scots, which had just come from the library, and which was to finally vindicate that very beautiful, very clever, and very perplexing young woman. An hour later Carmichael was on the moor, full of an unquenchable pity for Chatelard, who had loved the sun and perished in his rays. The cold wind on the hill braced his soul, and he returned in a heroic mood. He only was the soldier of the Cross who denied himself to earthly love and hid a broken heart. And now he read A'Kempis and the "Christian Year." Several passages in the latter he marked in pencil with a cross; and when his wife asked him the reason only last week, he smiled, but would give no answer. Having registered anew his vow of celibacy, he spent an hour in dressing—an operation, he boasted, which could be performed in six minutes, and which on this occasion his housekeeper determined to review.

With all the women in the Glen, old and young, she liked the lad, for a way that he had and the kindness of his heart, and was determined that he should be well dressed for once in his life. It was Sarah, indeed, that kept Carmichael late, for she not only laid out his things for him with much care and judgment, but on sight of the wisp of white round his neck she persuaded him to accept her services, and at last she was satisfied. He also lost a little time as he came near the manse, for he grew concerned lest his tie was not straight, and it takes time to examine yourself in the back of your watch, when the light is dimming and it is necessary to retire behind a hedge lest some keen Drumtochty eye should detect the roadside toilet.

John had brought in the lamp before Carmichael entered, and his confusion was pardonable, for he had come in from the twilight, and none could have expected such a sight.

"Glad to see you, Carmichael"—the Doctor hastened to cover his embarrassment. "It is very good of you to honor my little party by your presence. You know the General, I think, and Miss Carnegie, whose first birthday in Drumtochty we celebrate to-night.

"No wonder you are astonished," for Carmichael was blushing furiously; "and I must make our defense, eh, Carnegie? else it will be understood in Free Kirk circles that the manse is mad. We seem, in fact, a pair of old fools, and you can have your jest at us; but there is an excuse even for our madness.

"It is long since we have had a young lady in our Glen, and now that she has come to live among us—why, sir, we must just do her bidding.

"Our Queen has but a little court, but her courtiers are leal and true; and when she ordered full dress, it was our joy to obey. And if you choose to laugh, young sir—why, you may; we are not ashamed with such a Queen, and I do her homage."

The Doctor stooped and kissed Kate's hand in the grand manner which is now lost, after which he drew out his snuff-box and tapped it pleasantly, as one who had taken part in a state function; but there was the suspicion of a tear in his eye, for these things woke old memories.

"Kate's a willfu' lassie," said the General, fondly, "and she has long ruled me, so I suppose her father must do likewise." And the General also kissed Kate's hand.

"You are both perfectly absurd to-night," said Kate, confused and red, "but no Queen ever had truer hearts to love her, and if I cannot make you knights, I must reward you as I can." And Kate, ignoring Carmichael, kissed first her father and then the Doctor. Then she turned on him with a proud air, "What think you of my court, Mr. Carmichael?"

"It is the best in Christendom, Miss Carnegie"—and his voice trembled with earnestness—"for it has the fairest Queen and two gentlemen of Christ for its servants."

"Very prettily said"—the Doctor thought the little scene had gone far enough—"and as a reward for that courteous speech you shall take Her Majesty in to dinner, and we old battered fellows shall follow in attendance." There was a moment's silence, and then Carmichael spoke.

"If I had only known, Miss Carnegie, that I might have . . . put on something to do you honor too, but I have nothing except a white silk hood. I wish I had been a militiaman or . . . a Freemason."

"This is your second remarkable wish in my hearing," and Kate laughed merrily; "last time you wished you were a dog on Muirtown platform. Your third will be your last, I suppose, and one wonders what it will be."

"It is already in my heart"—Carmichael spoke low—"and some day I will dare to tell it to you."

"Hush," replied Kate quickly, lifting her hand; "the padre is going to say grace." As this was an official function in John's eyes, that worthy man allowed himself to take a general view, and he was pleased to express his high approval of the company, enlarging especially on Carmichael, whom, as a Free Kirkman, he had been accustomed rather to belittle.

"Of coorse," he explained loyally, "he's no tae be compared wi' the Doctor, for there's nae minister ootside the Auld Kirk can hae sic an air; and he's no set up like the General, but he lookit weel an' winsome.

"His hair wes flung back frae his forehead, his ee'n were fair dancin', an' there wes a bit o' color in his cheek. He hes a wy wi' him, a'll no deny, 'at taks wi' fouk.

"A'm no sure that he's been at mony denners, though, Becca, for he hardly kent what he wes daein'. A' juist pit the potatoes on his plate, for he never lat on he saw me; an' as for wine, a' cudna get a word oot o' him."

"Ye're lifted above ordinary concerns, John, an' it's no tae be expeckit that a beadle sud notice the way o' a lad wi' a lass," and Becca nodded her head with much shrewdness.

"Div ye mean that, Rebecca? That cowes a'; but it's no possible. The General's dochter an' a Free Kirk minister, an' her an Esculopian—"

"Love kens naither rank nor creeds; see what ye did yersel', and you beadle o' Drumtochty;" and John—every man has some weak point—swallowed the compliment with evident satisfaction.

Meanwhile they had fallen on this very subject of creeds in the dining-room, and Kate was full of curiosity.

"Will you two padres do me a favor? I knew you would. Well, I want to know for certain what is the difference between the two Kirks in Drumtochty. Now which of you will begin?" and Kate beamed on them both.

"Whatever you wish we will do, Kate," said the Doctor; "but you will have me excused in this matter, if you please, and hear my friend. I am tired of controversy, and he has a fair mind, and, as I know well, a pleasant wit. Tell Miss Carnegie how your people left the Kirk of Scotland."

"Well, the dispute began"—and Carmichael faced his task manfully—"about the appointment of clergymen, whether it should lie with a patron or the people. Lord Kilspindie had the nomination of Drumtochty, and if every patron had been as wise as our house, then there had been no disruption."

The Doctor bowed, and motioned to Carnegie to fortify himself with port.

"Other patrons had no sense, and put in unsuitable men, and the people rebelled, since it is a sad thing for a country parish to have a minister who is not . . ."

"A gentleman? or straight? Quite so," chimed in Kate; "it must be beastly."

"So a party fought for the rights of the people," resumed Carmichael, "and desired that the parish should have a voice in choosing the man who was to take charge of . . . their souls."

"Isn't that like soldiers electing their officers?" inquired the General, doubtfully.

"Go on, Carmichael, you are putting your case capitally; don't plunge into theology, Jack, whatever you do . . . it is Sandeman's—a sound wine."

"Then what happened?" and Kate encouraged Carmichael with her eyes.

"Four hundred clergymen threw up their livings one day and went out to begin a Free Kirk, where there are no patrons.

"You have no idea—for I suppose you never heard of this before—how ministers suffered, living and dying in miserable cottages—and the people met for service on the seashore or in winter storms—all for conscience' sake."

Carmichael was glowing, and the Doctor sipped his port approvingly.

"Perhaps they ought not to have seceded, and perhaps their ideas were wrong; but it was heroism and a good thing for the land."

"It was splendid!" Kate's cheek flushed. "And Drumtochty?"

"Ah, something happened here that was by itself in Scotland. Will you ask Dr. Davidson not to interrupt or browbeat me? Thank you; now I am safe.

"Some one of influence went to old Lord Kilspindie, who had no love for the Free Kirk, and told him that a few of his Drumtochty men wanted to get a site for a Free Kirk, and that he must give it. And he did.

"Now, Carmichael," began the Doctor, who had scented danger; but Kate held up her hand with an imperious gesture, and Carmichael went on:

"The same person used to send to the station for the Free Kirk probationer, and entertain him after a lordly fashion—with port, if he were worthy—and send him on his way rejoicing—men have told me. But," concluded Carmichael, averting his face from the foot of the table, "wild horses will not compel me to give that good Samaritan's name."

"Was it you, Davidson, that sanctioned such a proceeding? Why, it was mutiny."

"Of course he did, Dad," cried Kate; "just the very thing he would do: and so, I suppose, the Free Kirk love him as much as they do yourself, sir?"

"As much? far more. . . ."

"Had I known what downright falsehood the Free Kirk minister of Drumtochty was capable of, I would never have allowed him to open his mouth."

"Well, I am satisfied at any rate," said Kate, "and I propose to retire to the drawing-room, and I know who would love a rubber of whist by and by. We are just the number."

A minute later Carmichael asked leave to join Kate, as he believed she was to have him for partner, and he must understand her game.

"How adroit he is to-night, Jack!" But the General rather pitied the lad, with whom he imagined Kate was playing as a cat with a mouse.

"Have you ever seen the face below the veil?" for they did not talk long about whist in the drawing-room. "I do not think it would be wrong to look, for the padre told me the story.

"Yes, a very winning face. His only sister, and he simply lived for her. She was only twelve when she died, and he loves her still, although he hardly ever speaks of her."

They stood together before the happy girl-face enshrined in an old man's love. They read the inscription: "My dear sister Daisy."

"I never had a sister," and Carmichael sighed.

"And I never had a brother." Their hands met as they gently lowered the veil. "Well, have you arranged your plans?" and the Doctor came in intent on whist.

"Only one thing. I am going to follow Miss Carnegie's lead, and she is always to win," said the Free Kirk minister of Drumtochty.

[To be continued in the August Magazine Number of The Outlook]

◆

Tendencies in Collegiate Instruction

By Francis Hovey Stoddard

Professor of the English Language and Literature in the University of the City of New York

Within fifty years the American college has entirely changed its organization, character, and purpose. On the desk, as I write, lies a baccalaureate discourse, preached thirty-one years ago, by the President of a New England college. It was a commemoration discourse summing up the results of twenty-five years of incumbency by the retiring President; and was at once a brief history of the institution, a bird's-eye view of its then present state, and a forecast of its probable future. The college was, and still is, a representative New England college, in the second rank as to size, but holding then, and continuing still to hold at the present day, an honorable position. In 1865, when this sermon was preached, the college had counted half a century of useful years, and had educated eighteen presidents and sixty professors for herself and for other colleges. It retains to-day such vigor that at its commencement a few days ago the college showed every sign of vigorous life, and announced plans in due form for celebrating its approaching one hundredth anniversary. The institution is so fairly representative of the type-form of the smaller New England college that a comparison between its constitution, character, and purpose half a century ago and the constitution, character, and purpose of the average small college of to-day is reasonable and is worth making.

Singularly enough, the first sign of development that one would expect—that of increase in number of students—does not appear. The small college after half a century is still the small college; and undergraduate instruction is still carried on mainly in small colleges. A few universities, such as Harvard, Yale, and Princeton, do now, indeed, number large classes of undergraduates. But the average number of undergraduate students in the colleges has scarcely been doubled in fifty years. In 1836 the college under review had one hundred and sixty-eight undergraduate students; it has less than three hundred to-day. The number of undergraduate students now at Amherst, Williams, Dartmouth, Middlebury, Bowdoin, Bates, Colby, Trinity, will to-day average only slightly over two hundred. In other States some large and well-equipped institutions still keep their undergraduate divisions of very moderate size. Johns Hopkins has but one hundred and ninety undergraduates, Columbia (Arts) but two hundred and sixty, New York University (Arts) but one hundred and eighty-one, according to the last catalogues. The distinguishing characteristic of the modern college as compared with its ancestor is not mere size; the flight of fifty years has not greatly changed the numerical ratio, which still is governed by specific rather than general educational considerations.

But in other respects changes amounting to a revolution have come. The most noticeable of these changes is in the kind and extent of equipment used for college work. The complexity and expense of the modern organization has so developed that one almost doubts the earlier figures. It is almost incredible to us now that a college could exist at all with the slender endowment fund thought sufficient seventy-five years ago. "When the college," says this President in his baccalaureate discourse, "came from the hands of the Legislature as a chartered institution, its whole corporate property, buildings, funds, lands, and library, was worth less than five thousand dollars." "Hope," he truly says, "was the corner-stone." Yet the college did very good work with its five thousand dollars. It could not do good work to-day with that endowment. It could not even get a charter in New York State. For the State law in New York fixes a minimum of five hundred thousand dollars endowment to be possessed by the college as a condition precedent to conferring upon the college the power to grant degrees. In practice much more than five hundred thousand dollars is needed for even a small college. Amherst is not rich with two and a half millions of endowment. Exactly what proportion of the five millions of Johns Hopkins, of the four millions of the New York University, or of the ten millions[1] of Columbia, goes to the support of the instruction of the two hundred undergraduates one cannot say, but it is certainly a sum vastly exceeding any estimates current fifty years ago. It is probably under the mark to say that the complexity and extent of the equipment needed for a college, measured in either men or money, has increased tenfold in half a century.

It has increased because the character of the college education has changed. College education has changed in at least three respects. The college of to-day teaches young men instead of boys; it develops all faculties instead of the intellectual and moral faculties alone; it undertakes to train its student for many professions and occupations, instead of for but one or two. Seventy-five years ago the average college period was in the years from fifteen to nineteen; to-day it is in the years from eighteen to twenty-two. Before me lies the collegiate record of a single New England family. Its progenitor came to Boston in 1639. His son graduated at Harvard in 1662, aged nineteen; the grandson graduated at Harvard in 1701, at nineteen; the great-grandson graduated at Yale in 1756, at twenty; the great-great-grandson graduated at Yale in 1790, at nineteen; and the son of the last named graduated at Yale in 1820, at nineteen. The uniformity in age is not exceptional; it represents the general practice of the time. But the next two generations illustrate a new practice. The son of the man who graduated in 1820, at nineteen, himself graduated in 1869, at twenty-two; and the latest representative of this particular family will graduate at twenty-two next year. Here again the fact is not exceptional. The average age of the graduating classes of the ten leading colleges this year is over twenty-two years. The college period has entirely changed. Youths of eighteen to twenty-two, not boys of fifteen to nineteen, are now in colleges.

---

[1] These figures are not exact, no precise information as to endowments being available, but they are under rather than over the actual amounts in each case.

And they are in the colleges to be trained in more than one direction. The modern college undertakes to develop the student in directions not within the plan of training of the earlier methods. The physical side, for example, is cared for. The college president of fifty years ago expected that a considerable proportion of his students would gain intellectual and moral power at the expense, partial or total, of the physical organization. In 1839 a professor, in his inaugural address at the same college which has served us as a text, says: "The plans which have been devised to secure the health of studious young men have generally failed. The subject of physical education has been and still is strangely neglected in this country, in every class of society; but the defects of this neglect are oftenest seen in our educated young men. Many of these, even before their study is completed, are so enfeebled as to be unfitted for enjoyment or usefulness; many find a premature grave just as they are entering on active life; many more have paralyzed physical and intellectual powers as the melancholy result of excessive or injudicious application. The efforts that have been made to prevent such evils have been attended with only partial success, and it would seem that nothing but bitter experience can induce the young to avoid the causes which produce them." The hopeless professor told the truth for his day. But a new day has certainly come. Physical education is now a regular part of every college curriculum, and the gymnasium dominates the campus. It is certainly not physical education which is neglected in our colleges to-day.

In fact, nothing which is demanded is neglected. For the whole paternal idea of collegiate intellectual discipline, prescribing specific, limited, and unvarying studies, has passed, with the raising of the average entrance age from fifteen to eighteen. College discipline was paternalism pure and simple in 1838. "What are the studies," continued the professor just quoted, "required for a thorough education? Briefly stated, they are Greek, Latin, mathematics, the philosophy of the human mind, logic, rhetoric, and practical moral and religious instruction. Reading should be sparingly pursued, except in connection with the course of study. He who reads much at an early stage of education, like the youthful traveler, will indeed find much to gratify his curiosity, but, not having learned to apply the principles of philosophy and taste, he will derive little practical improvement." Certainly, this is the voice of an earlier, not of a present, college day. For the whole conception has broadened. The college question is not now, What minimum list of "Studies Required for a Liberal Education" can be drawn up? It is rather, How wide an educational tender can this college make? The college of to-day fits for any occupation, and offers the broadest possible opportunity. Of the three local institutions, mentioned earlier in the article as having a moderate number of undergraduate students, New York University offers 162 strictly undergraduate courses, Johns Hopkins quite as many, Columbia somewhat more. Nihil a me alienum puto is the doctrine of the modern college, and this, as compared with the college doctrine of fifty years ago, implies a change so great as to be virtually a revolution.

That all these changes are for the better will not be everywhere agreed, but they are certainly in the line of an evolution. The general tendencies seem to be toward the disappearance of the college cloister life as a separate and peculiar influence, and to be toward the uniting of the college opportunity with the other influences of education. The progress of time has broadened the view of both professor and student. The attitude is no longer the intensely personal—the, collegiately speaking, provincial—attitude of half a century ago. In 1838 the newly appointed professor of English literature in our before-quoted college has his opportunity to give an inaugural lecture, and here is what he has to say concerning English poetry and English fiction, and concerning his own mission as instructor: "But, while our language is distinguished by such excellences, and while it abounds in writers who, in various respects, possess such high merits, and who have done so much honor to their country and their race, the student needs, and urgently too, directions and cautions in his perusal of our prominent and standard authors. Of English essayists, I am acquainted with none, unless at times Johnson forms a noble exception, whose pages are not fraught with sentiments and a spirit decidedly opposed to the Gospel of Christ. The whole current of thought which is pursued in them, and the entire impression which they are adapted to create, is undeniably unevangelical. Among the poets of high and established reputation, with the exception of Milton, who possesses a peculiar character and occupies a peculiar station, but two, Young and Cowper, give prominence to the distinguishing truths of Christianity, breathe in their writings a strictly Christian spirit, and urge the performance of purely Christian duties. The mass pander to the evil passions and to the licentious inclinations of men; and slight would be the danger to the Christian principles, and to the purity of mind and the moral habits of the young, from all which heathen 'minstrels ever said or sung' compared with the mischievous influence which those who have written in our own language are fitted to exert, beginning no farther back than Dryden, whose poverty and profligacy led him, regardless of decency and conscience, to minister to the vices of a most dissolute age, and coming down to the debauched and reprobate Byron, whose works are suited to prepare men to think and feel like fiends, and, with the brute, to wallow in the sty. Of the works of fiction, the mass are the merest trash, fit only to be allowed to pass unimpeded to that oblivion to which they are so soon destined. They are all alike calculated to produce, in a greater or less degree, an intoxication of mind disqualifying for vigorous effort and high improvement, as well as unfitting for the serious and more important duties and for the severer trials of life. To examine these different classes of writings and to exhibit the peculiar traits, as it regards their excellences and defects, of prominent works in each, and to furnish, as far as may be practicable, security to the youthful mind against adopting erroneous views, and imbibing an unchristian spirit, and being seduced from truth and duty, from happiness and heaven, must be an object of high and inestimable value." Certainly these would be strange utterances for a professor of English literature to make to-day. Yet just this type of complacent and omniscient professor used to be common in our colleges. He has disappeared, and his disappearance is significant.

Significant also is the lessening of the importance of the individual graduate at commencement. He used to deliver an oration, to receive flowers, applause, congratulations, to be considered a completed and important example of learning. Now, in the midst of a crowd of classmates, he silently takes his degree, and passes almost unnoticed to join the ranks of the workers in the world.

The student, the professor, the college, all are becoming parts of a system of education rather than important separate forces. It is only when we look at the progress of education as a whole that we can rightly estimate the significance of the changes in a separate factor, such as is the college.

Books and Authors

Marcou's Life of Agassiz [1]

The reading public will take much interest in the perusal of this new Life of Agassiz. While it is a work largely in the interests of science, describing fully for the first time the achievements of one who left an abiding impress on the scientific progress of this age, it is also a life of a man who in a very recent past was widely known and admired, and whose wonderful personality will long be remembered.

Mr. Marcou was Agassiz's friend for thirty years, and is the last survivor among the naturalists who came to America with him. These facts incline one to a favorable prejudgment of his work; and, indeed, he has written a genuine biography—no eulogy nor panegyric; full of admiration for his subject, yet keeping truth constantly in view, not ignoring the failings of the man nor the errors of the naturalist. He has also skillfully interwoven accounts of many of Agassiz's contemporaries in science, or of such of his assistants or students as have become eminent; and a full bibliography much increases the worth of his volumes.

Agassiz's earliest researches in natural history were in the province of ichthyology; and herein he became well known, even while a student at Munich, for his work (in continuation of Spix's) on the fishes of Brazil. Later, his "Poissons Fossiles," in spite of its artificial classification, greatly heightened his reputation. The marked achievement, however, of his scientific career at Neuchâtel, where he was a professor for fourteen years, was his advocacy of the glacial theory. To De Charpentier is due the credit of the discovery of this theory; but Agassiz, who was at first strongly opposed to it, became, from observation, wherein he always excelled as a naturalist, its advocate and ablest defender—also greatly widening the range of its application, till it developed into his teaching in reference to the ice age. The famous "Discours d'ouverture" at Neuchâtel on this subject, given here in full in French as it was delivered, is called by his biographer "the climax of his scientific life as far as originality of research is concerned;" and although it must be owned that he here gave too much rein to his imagination, yet it is also true that from this time on his solid teaching concerning glacial action came to be more and more accepted; and, if we can trust Mr. Marcou's authority, his advocacy "advanced fully thirty years the recognition of the glacial theory, and he, and he alone, established the great 'Ice Age.'"

Agassiz came to this country in 1846, at the age of thirty-nine; and here he spent the rest of his life—the portion richest in fruitful results, if not in scientific activity. Most of this time he held a professorship in the Lawrence Scientific School at Harvard University. His career in America is marked by the establishment of the well-known Museum of Comparative Zoölogy at Cambridge, and by the wide popularization of science which he effected throughout this country.

The Museum was one of the eager dreams of Agassiz's life, and one which he lived to see nearly approach realization. The history of the inception and growth of this enterprise is told by Mr. Marcou with his usual accuracy and fullness. Agassiz obtained for this object during the last fourteen years of his life the immense sum of $700,000—"the success entirely personal, and due wholly to his power of persuasion;" he lived to see the Museum in a position of intimate relations with the first museums of Europe; while as a center of original research and as an educational institution, the best proof of what it accomplished even during his life is found in the record which these volumes furnish of students there trained under his direction.

The remarkable popularizing of science which Agassiz effected among us was due chiefly to his ability as a lecturer. He was a born teacher, and this was one of his methods. From those first lectures of his at the Lowell Institute, onward and outward spread the circle of his influence; the élite and the common people crowded to hear him and hung upon his words, while his popularity grew at a rate that astonished himself. As a speaker, the power of his personality appeared; and yet Mr. Marcou points out that, as he became increasingly sensitive to applause (even courting it and waiting for it), the lecture was "too theatrical" to be his best method of teaching, which he claims was in describing and explaining specimens, with a few students about him, where he had no thought of effect and showed himself "a wonderful and rare naturalist and incomparable teacher."

The most important contribution which Agassiz made to natural history during his life in America was his "Essay on Classification." This was issued as the introduction to what was to be a great work, in ten costly volumes, upon the Natural History of the United States; but, like so many other of his schemes, it was begun but not completed, for only four volumes ever appeared. He meant it to be also a popular work, like his lectures; but he failed; very few could follow what he made so profound and philosophical. Even the "Essay on Classification" his biographer shows came at an inopportune time for influencing his contemporaries. It was in the very next year (1859) that Darwin's "Origin of Species" appeared, and deeply impressed the scientific world. Agassiz at once took decided ground against Darwin. Following Cuvier, he did not believe in the descent of species. He claimed that he was not the foe of evolution or of development, but only "averse to drawing too hasty conclusions" unwarranted by facts; and to the end of his life he characterized the transmutation theory as "a scientific mistake, untrue in facts, unscientific in method, and mischievous in tendency." In the commotion which Darwin's book caused Agassiz stood almost alone, even his pupils in a body turning against him; and the bitter controversy which ensued separated him from some who had been his chief friends. If his attitude towards this question left him on what appeared to be the losing side, his biographer is surely right in claiming that he no less declared himself the true savant who would not give up his facts—which reminds one of those striking words nearly at the close of his life, "A physical fact is as sacred as a moral principle;" and as for his present and future fame, it is to be remembered that this question is still open. In the chapter which records this controversy Mr. Marcou makes it quite evident where his own sympathy lies. It is the only portion of his work tinged by strong partisanship.

Agassiz possessed a charm of personality which can hardly be described. His large frame, magnificent head, high forehead, searching eyes, were the signs of an unusually active mind and emotions intense and easily moved. He was brilliant in conversation, and of manners most winning; he was generally happy and good-natured, as he was kind and generous; and his friends were more and more drawn to love him. Yet, attractive, even fascinating, as he was, this "leader of men and above all a charmer" is said never to have been a good judge of character. Vain of applause and open to flattery, he was imposed upon by pretenders. He was of an eminently social nature—he must live surrounded by students or admirers—yet he was no manager of men; he must persuade or he could not control; he was continually in difficulty with his assistants; sometimes, as in the case of his secretary, Desor, they tried to take advantage of him, but more often it was his inconsistency or lack of tact—too familiar where he should have held his dignity, or giving reasons where he should have given orders—which made trouble and led to serious dissensions and separations. In money matters he was utterly unbusinesslike, always in debt from some visionary scheme or other; and yet his biographer's claim is just, that his Museum proves he must have had in him "something sternly practical mingled with his habitual idealism;" and he well calls him "at the same time a dreamer and a man of action."

In spite of his home influences, Agassiz became in early manhood a skeptic; but afterwards he gradually came to believe in a Divine Creator; and Mrs. Agassiz says, in her life of him, that this belief was the keynote of his study of nature. He was liberal towards all religious convictions; if he showed any sympathy, it was with Unitarians; he hated form, disliked theology, and would not talk about it. At heart he may have been a gentle Deist; or that "silent prayer" at Penikese, about which Whittier wrote a poem, may reveal the simple Quaker. He gave no clue at the last, so far as his friends declare. He raised himself in bed, and, exclaiming, "Le jeu est fini," he fell back and died.

* * *

In Richard Le Gallienne's Retrospective Reviews: A Literary Log (2 vols., Dodd, Mead & Co., New York), the trait that attracts one's attention first, while reading these reviews, is that the critic displays an appearance of having read the books that he criticises! Often he picks out small flaws that a mere cursory glance could not detect. For instance, he grieves sorely at Mr. Pater's over-nice alterations in the second edition of "Marius the Epicurean." Like other men of his genus criticum, Mr. Le Gallienne is out on a quest, in these latter days of rampant industrialism. Browning is dead, and Tennyson is dead, and Swinburne is twanging his harp to the same unchanging tune, pretty, but a little trite. Where shall we find a new poet? Mr. Le Gallienne and the rest of the critics continue to manipulate their search-lights. As a postscript to his whimsical preface, Mr. Le Gallienne utters this mature conviction: "William Watson, John Davidson, Francis Thompson, and W. B. Yeats are the greatest poets since Algernon Charles Swinburne, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, William Morris, George Meredith, and Coventry Patmore, long since classic—a classic, by the way, being an old book which continues to be read by young men." Ah, Mr. Le Gallienne! how could you say this after gushing over Lord de Tabley! Possibly because the review is retrospective! It is commonly known that the book reviewer is omniscient. Mr. Le Gallienne's omniscience does not reveal itself too obtrusively in these volumes, for he restricts his reviews to what has been somewhat arbitrarily denominated "pure literature." He makes observations only upon poetry, essays, the drama, and novels. His remarks are often penetrating and just. Much as he admires Browning and Meredith, he points out as the fault of their later work that they came in the end to see, not realities, but the image of realities. They might be said to discourse in a style of ultimate inference; at any rate, of Mr. Meredith this is the case. If Mr. Le Gallienne has any weakness as a "book-taster," to use Carlyle's rude phrase, it is that he finds almost everything "very good." Perhaps sometimes he writes an adverse criticism. If so, he has here suppressed it. His canon of criticism, "that the critic is still a gentleman though anonymous," throws light upon this peculiarity. No one need gird at Mr. Le Gallienne; he writes good English, and says ingenious things, many of which are true.

---

[1] Life, Letters, and Works of Louis Agassiz. By Jules Marcou. Macmillan & Co., New York. 2 Vols. $4.

It is a great pleasure, at a time when so much strain, stress, and morbid emotion impose themselves upon the readers of verse, to come upon a volume so sound in its feeling, so delicate in its perceptions, so refined in its expression, so thoroughly wholesome in its view of life, as Miss Sophie Jewett's Pilgrim and Other Poems. Miss Jewett has been known for a number of years to magazine readers under the pseudonym of Ellen Burroughs, and there have gathered about this name those associations which are created by good work. In this little volume Miss Jewett has collected her scattered verses, and thus affords her readers an opportunity of measuring her progress, and of arriving at some estimate of her quality. She does not attempt many forms, but she discloses thorough knowledge of the forms she uses; among them the sonnet, the rondeau, a group of poems in various meters which she calls "other lyrics," and a very delicate and finished group of songs. Miss Jewett has a trained literary conscience. One who reads her sympathetically feels that she is likely to write too little rather than too much; to be held back from a complete expression of herself by distrust of her power rather than stimulated to over-expression by too great confidence. Delicacy of feeling and of expression are qualities which lie on the very face of her work. She is possessed with the aspiration which seems to lift so many American women to the highest plane of aim and action, and she has the stimulus of a faith which, while never obtrusive and very sensitive to opposing currents, still holds itself steadfast through the shadows which lie upon it or pass over it. Feeling so delicate and workmanship so conscientious are always prophetic of better things to come, and if one notes here and there a phrase where the poetic thought runs over shallows, the reader is also impressed with the conviction that the writer of these verses needs but the enrichment of life to supply qualities which are not lacking in her work, but which have not yet come to their full development. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)

Controversy is the soul of ecclesiastical history. Every one makes theological claims that some one else is in a hurry to deny, and of the making of polemical books there is no end. To the papal claims has been accorded undue importance, for claims of supremacy and claims of authority in reality negate themselves, because when the fact exists there is no necessity to make any claim. Claims always begin to be made after the reality has evaporated. This is eminently the case with the claims of the See of Rome. Yet it is thought that by an iteration of these assertions of precedence and intellectual infallibility, the fact will again be materialized. Perhaps! Yet there are many who believe that the world does not move backward, and that the social and mental status of the Middle Ages can never be reproduced by a Pusey or a Pugin. The Rev. Mr. Rivington was a "Cowley Father," and then became from an Anglo-Catholic a Roman Catholic. Consequent upon this he wrote a book called "The Primitive Church and the See of Peter," a work intended to prove that one could not get to heaven if he did not admit that the Pope of Rome had the sole right to tell him what to believe and to do, and that, without some force emanating from this Pope, the sacrament ordained by Christ were empty of grace. In reply to this Dr. William Bright, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Cambridge, wrote various articles now collected into one volume, The Roman See in the Early Church, and Other Studies in Church History. Dr. Bright triturates Mr. Rivington exceeding fine, and then piles upon the "ex-Cowley father" an Ossa upon a Pelion of erudition. The "Other Studies" also in reality bear upon the question of the position of the Roman See in history. Dr. Bright is an authority in the realm of Church history. (Longmans, Green & Co., New York.)

New Books

[The books mentioned under this head and under that of Books Received include all received by The Outlook during the week ending July 10. This weekly report of current literature will be supplemented by fuller reviews of the more important works.]

To the new translation of Balzac the Macmillan Company have added Pierrette and The Abbé Birotteau, both translated by Clara Bell, whose admirable work in this department is coming to be very widely recognized. Mr. Saintsbury furnishes a preface.

It would not be easy to find a more charming combination of material, title, manner, and dress than are found in Mrs. Julia C. R. Dorr's sketches of travel in England, published by the Macmillan Company, under the title A Cathedral Pilgrimage—a dainty volume which takes its readers into some of the quietest and loveliest localities in England, into the heart of its richest history, and into the presence of its noblest architecture. Mrs. Dorr is a very agreeable writer, who knows her own quality, and neither endeavors to strain it nor to break away from it.

The very interesting chapters in The Early Life of Abraham Lincoln, prepared by Miss Ida M. Tarbell, which have appeared in the pages of "McClure's Magazine," have now been issued in book form, with one hundred and sixty illustrations, including twenty portraits of Lincoln. The chapters, as they have appeared from month to month, have been so widely read that most readers are already familiar with the writer's method, with the results she has obtained from fresh investigations, and with the genuine human interest of her narrative. This is, in the truest sense, a popular life of Lincoln. No other account of one of the greatest of Americans has set him so distinctly in his early surroundings, or has shown him so intimately in his early associations. This volume covers that period of Mr. Lincoln's life which has been most obscure, and throws new light upon it. It will have further attention when the work is completed. (S. S. McClure, New York.)

David Lyall's Heather from the Brae is a volume of short stories, or character studies, dealing with Scottish life. They are true to nature, simple, and of a strong religious tendency; they lack incident and humor. (The Revell Company, New York.)——Ginette's Happiness, by "Gyp," is not as sprightly as most of this witty French lady's novels. (R. F. Fenno & Co., New York.) From the same publishers comes Frank Frankfort Moore's Daireen, a fin de siècle love story of a languid kind, but with some clever bits of Irish character-drawing. ——A collection of short stories, written with a purpose, by Sarah Warner Brooks, is entitled My Fire Opal. (Estes & Lauriat, Boston.) The writer is interested in the prison reform movement.

Sir John Lubbock has a capital subject, one which no one could treat better, in The Scenery of Switzerland, and the Causes to which it is Due. No one can have enjoyed the mountains, lakes, and rivers of this wonderful country without having had a desire to know what stupendous natural forces underlie its physical geography. That a book like this has not been written before is remarkable. It is essentially a geological treatise, but is not too technical to be easily understood, and is clearly and profusely illustrated. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)

Adoniram Judson Gordon, a biography by his son, Ernest B. Gordon, is an admirable life of an admirable man. Dr. Gordon's son has inherited his father's spirit, and the book is full of filial love for all that his father stood for. This love, however, shows its strength, not in expression, but rather in repression—the son apparently feeling the needlessness of eulogy. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.)

The Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, Robert E. Speer, has written a careful study of Christ as a man, under the title of Studies of the Man Christ Jesus. (The F. H. Revell Company, New York.)

The literature of child study is becoming voluminous. As the subject of child study progresses, it is seen that there are two methods of gathering facts: one, the collection of those facts which support the student's theories; the other, the collection of facts for the purposes of study. This latter method is the one that helps mothers best, for what most mothers need is the widening of their field of observation. Child Observations is a collection of facts made by the students of the State Normal School at Worcester, Mass. It has a valuable introduction on child study, what it is, and how to study the child, by the principal of the school, E. H. Russell. The work of the students is edited by Miss Ellen Haskell. (D. C. Heath & Co., Boston.) This book is valuable for mothers; it introduces us to the resemblances and the differences between children, and compels us to see that much that seems remarkable in individual children is remarkable only because the common facts of childhood are not generally known. No intelligent mother wishes to be provincial in her knowledge of childhood. It is the range of her knowledge which enables her to meet with intelligence the problems of her own child.——Select American Classics (American Book Company, New York), containing selections from Irving, Webster, and Emerson, well bound, and printed on fairly good paper, is sold at 60 cents.

Books Received

For Week ending July 10

AMERICAN BOOK CO., NEW YORK

Select American Classics. 60 cts.
Riehl, W. H. Die Vierzehn Nothelfer, and Trost um Trost. Edited by K. E. Sihler. 30 cts.
Ebner-Eschenbach, Marie v. Krambambuli. Edited by A. W. Spanhoofd. 25 cts.

ESTES & LAURIAT, BOSTON

Brooks, Sarah W. My Fire Opal and Other Tales. $1.

R. F. FENNO & CO., NEW YORK

Moore, Frank F. Daireen. $1.25.
"Gyp." Ginette's Happiness. Translated by Ralph Derechef. 50 cts.

GINN & CO., BOSTON

Frye, Alex. E. Home and School Atlas.

HARPER & BROS., NEW YORK

Phillips, Andrew W., and Irving Fisher. Elements of Geometry. $1.75.

D. C. HEATH & CO., BOSTON

Haskell, Ellen M. Child Observations. $1.50.

THE MACMILLAN CO., NEW YORK

Lubbock, Rt. Hon. Sir John. The Scenery of Switzerland.
Two Queens. From the Memoirs of Baron Simolin. Preface by F. Max Müller. 50 cts.
Balzac, Honoré de. Pierrette and The Abbé Birotteau. Translated by Clara Bell. $1.50.
Dorr, Julia C. R. A Cathedral Pilgrimage. 75 cts.

FLEMING H. REVELL CO., NEW YORK

Gordon, Ernest B. Adoniram Judson Gordon. (Biography.) $1.50.
Lyall, David. Heather from the Brae. 75 cts.
Speer, Robert E. Studies of the Man Christ Jesus. 75 cts.

ERNEST E. RUSSELL, NEW YORK

Russell, Ernest E. The Reason Why. $1.

The Religious World

A New Step Forward at Chautauqua

Bishop John H. Vincent has announced a purpose to introduce at Chautauqua, during the present season, what he happily calls "The new education in the church," with the object of promoting biographical study. He quotes Mrs. Humphry Ward's use of Professor Jowett's words: "We shall come in future to teach almost entirely by biography. We shall begin with the life most familiar to us—the life of Christ—and we shall more and more put before our children the examples of great persons' lives, so that they shall have from the beginning heroes and friends in their thoughts." The experiment to be made at Chautauqua will be confined, this summer at least, to a single chapter in the New Testament —a representative chapter—historical, biographical, replete with fundamental doctrine, and designed, as few single chapters in the New Testament are, to afford broad views of revealed truth and stimulate faith and piety in the mind of the student. A little book entitled "Heroes of Faith," containing the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, being a study in the Greek New Testament for beginners, prepared by Burris A. Jenkins, D.B., with an introduction by Professor Joseph Henry Thayer, will constitute the basis of this summer's work. It is a simple and natural guide to the student along this line of inquiry. Besides this special class-work, "the new education in the Church" will later on include a seminar for the exhaustive study of the higher forms of home study and Sunday-school work, and will aid special classes in Biblical exegesis and literature. Special attention will be given to story-telling, picture-teaching, and the conversational method. The biographical method will enter into the regular devotional services at Chautauqua this summer, and will be used as a stimulus of spiritual life. It is within the scope of this new education in the Church to promote the scientific study of childhood, give a more critical treatment of the Bible, unite ethics and evangelical truth, enlarge the study of Christ as human and divine, familiarize the Church with the biographical centers of sacred literature and Church history, and lift up higher standards of personal character and attainment in the Church, the Sunday-school, and the home. Certainly this is a large field, with wonderful possibilities. Biblical biography contains charming stories of childhood, of home life, of struggles with poverty and discouragement, of ingenuity, of persistency, and of triumph. The biographical study of the Bible puts principles into concrete form; it arrests attention; it illustrates and demonstrates; it appeals to the imagination; it paints indelible pictures on the walls of memory; and it furnishes companions to love and comfort our whole life through.

Bishop Potter and the Lambeth Conference

The Lambeth Conference to meet in May, 1897, will discuss many important questions relating to the Anglican Church throughout the world. A cable dispatch to the New York papers states that Bishop Potter, of this city, has been requested by the Archbishop of Canterbury to attend a series of meetings convened by the Primate of the English Church in connection with the approaching Conference and to be held at once. The members of the committee to arrange the subjects for discussion comprise representatives of the Church in England, Scotland, Ireland, Canada, and the United States, and are as follows: The Rev. Dr. Edward Benson White, Archbishop of Canterbury; the Rev. Dr. William Dalrymple Maclagan, Archbishop of York; Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin; the Rev. Dr. R. Machray, Archbishop of Rupert's Land and Primate of Canada; the Rev. Dr. Frederick Temple, Bishop of London; the Rev. Dr. Brooke Foss Westcott, Bishop of Durham; the Rev. Dr. James Moorhouse, Bishop of Manchester; the Rev. Dr. Charles John Ellicott, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol; the Rev. Dr. G. H. Wilkinson, Bishop of St. Andrew's; and the Rev. Dr. Henry C. Potter, Bishop of New York.

A Pilgrim Monument Unveiled

Provincetown, Mass., the place where the Pilgrim Fathers first landed, was on July 14 historically recognized by the State and the town authorities. A great throng of people from many parts of New England gathered in Provincetown to witness the unveiling and dedication of a large monument which has been erected in front of the Town Hall. Two large bronze tablets bearing memorial inscriptions are inserted in the sides of the monument. The occasion was observed by the townspeople with many demonstrations of joy; flags were displayed from the public buildings, and many of the private dwellings were handsomely festooned with flags and streamers. Literary exercises were held in the Town Hall, over which Mr. A. P. Hannum, of the Board of Education, presided as master of ceremonies. Mr. W. T. Davis, Chairman of the Old Colony Commission, formally presented the monument to the State of Massachusetts. Colonel Henry A. Thomas accepted it on behalf of the Commonwealth, and then gracefully presented it to the town, for which it was accepted by the Board of Selectmen. Addresses were made by Congressman John Simpkins; William S. Green, of Fall River; Shebnah Rich, the Cape Cod historian; Colonel Samuel E. Winslow, of Worcester; and Edwin S. Barrett. An original poem, written for the occasion, was read by Miss Cora H. Howes, and the exercises were appropriately concluded by singing "America." Recently The Outlook published a notice of the unveiling of a stone of memorial in the John Robinson Church at Gainsborough, England, in memory of the Pilgrim Fathers. It is quite evident that the public is appreciating more and more the debt of gratitude which we owe to the spirit and influence of the Pilgrims.

Millions of Bibles

The American Bible Society has lately issued its annual report. This shows that the total issues of the Scriptures by the Society at home and abroad for the year ending March 31 last amounted to 1,750,283 copies. The issues of the Society during the eighty years of its existence amount to 61,705,841 copies. These millions of volumes have been circulated in nearly one hundred different languages and dialects in all parts of the earth. More than one-half of its issues in 1895 went into the hands of the pagan, the Mohammedan, and nominally Christian people outside of the United States; 383,000 were sold in China alone. The Society expended during the year $503,500.52. Agents of the Society report a successful year's work in all parts of the world, except, perhaps, in Cuba and Turkey, both of which countries have been disturbed by internal dissensions. The British and Foreign Bible Society has issued, since 1804, 147,363,669 copies, while seventy-three other societies have issued more than 257,000,000 Bibles, Testaments, and portions.

Robert College

Robert College has been for thirty-three years a center of Christian education in Turkey. The catalogue for 1896 has just come to us, and gives interesting facts concerning its work. Its history is too familiar to the Christian world to need more than a reference. Its founder was a New York merchant, Mr. Christopher R. Robert. In 1860 he invited the Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D.D., to join him in the effort to raise funds for the establishment at Constantinople of a college which should offer to young men, without distinction of race or creed, the opportunity to secure thorough education, equal to that obtainable in a first-class American college, and based on the same general principles. In 1863 the College was opened by Dr. Hamlin in a rented house at Bebek on the Bosphorus. Mr. Robert furnished all the necessary funds until his death in 1878, and then bequeathed to it one-fifth of his estate. His benefactions must have aggregated about $400,000. In 1864 "The Trustees of Robert College of Constantinople" were incorporated in the State of New York, and the College included with other similar State institutions in the University of New York. In 1869 an iradé for its establishment was granted by his Imperial Majesty the Sultan to the Legation of the United States at Constantinople, securing to the College all the advantages bestowed by the Imperial Government upon educational institutions in Turkey. In 1871 the first building, since called Hamlin Hall, was completed, and in 1892 the second, called Science Hall, was inaugurated. The College owns three residences—the President's house and two houses for professors. One interesting feature of the catalogue is its account of the graduates of the College. Since its beginning in 1863 it has graduated 311, the total number of students during that time being 5,574. It is interesting to note the various occupations of the graduates. They are found in almost all the avenues of work. Among them are clerks, merchants, bankers, teachers, lawyers, doctors, clergymen, and Government officials. The College has a preparatory school which covers three years of study, and which has been recently enlarged, and is now in pressing need of a separate building. The collegiate department occupies five years, and includes the various courses of our own colleges, and also thorough courses in the ancient and modern Armenian language and literature, and a Bulgarian course, whose object is to give the Bulgarian students as good and solid instruction in their vernacular as can be obtained in any Gymnasium in Bulgaria. There is also a Turkish course, which is optional. Physical culture is receiving more attention than formerly. There is also instruction in both vocal and instrumental music. The religious instruction is not controversial, but practical and unsectarian. The students are required to attend the morning prayers with which the work of the classes opens on week-days, and on Sundays the boarders are required to attend the morning and evening religious services and the afternoon Bible class conducted by the professors of the institution. The study of Christian evidences is included in the College curriculum.

Centers for Missionary Inspiration

In the July number of the "Missionary Review of the World" its editor-in-chief, Dr. Pierson, gives an interesting description of the "Henry Martyn Memorial Hall" connected with Cambridge University, England, which stands both as a memorial to the noble men who have gone to the various foreign fields from the colleges, and as a constant plea for more laborers. This building was erected in 1887. It is not large, and its principal features are a hall for general meetings, with small anteroom used as janitor's room and library. The outside is plain and modest, but the interior is a model of good taste and adaptation to its purpose. "The windows are small and high, leaving the side walls for a high wainscoting of wood surmounted by small panels filled with white painted scrolls bearing the names of men who have gone forth to mission fields, followed by the names of their particular colleges and the date of their departure for the field, and, if deceased, the date also of their departure from the field for a higher service above." Dr. Pierson says: "No student can come into this hall for a daily prayer service or an occasional missionary meeting without thus being compassed about with a great cloud of witness-bearers, whose constant and pathetic pleading for more laborers to enter the wide harvest-field he cannot but hear. Such a hall is the most effective and eloquent missionary advocate one can ever hear, and it is bound to make new missionaries so long as it stands." He then describes the various panels and inscriptions, beginning at the right hand of the platform-end of the hall and proceeding toward the right back to the point of starting. First is the inscription, "Ye have entered into his labors;" and underneath:

Henry Martyn. St. John's.
North India. 1805-12.
James Hough. Corpus.
South India. 1816-26.

Then in succession around the top of the wainscoting run the inscriptions: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few;" "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature;" "All authority hath been given unto Me in heaven and on earth;" "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all nations;" "One soweth, another reapeth;" and underneath these are the names and dates as indicated above. Also beside the tablets are portraits, flags of the different missionary countries, fresco devices with symbols for the Apostles, and a large colored chart showing the missionary statistics of the world, etc. "This hall has been designed and admirably adapted to feed and foster an intelligent and devoted type of missionary heroism." Oxford University is planning to build a similar structure to be called "Bishop Hannington Memorial Hall." The site is already purchased, and a building standing on the site is to be remodeled for the purpose. The students are making a noble effort to secure the needed funds, but about £2,500, or $12,500, more are required to complete it for use. Dr. Pierson suggests the erection of such a building in America, say in New York or Brooklyn, to be called "Brainerd Memorial Hall" or the "Judson Memorial." It would be an inspiration to missionary service and sacrifice, and could serve as a rallying point for departing and returning missionary students. He asks in closing: "Who will take the lead in providing this new nucleus for missions among our devoted young men and women?"

Swedish Lutherans in America

The old Swede Church in Philadelphia, one among the oldest of the Protestant churches in the United States, celebrated recently its one hundred and ninety-seventh anniversary. The present year marks the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Swedish Lutheran Church in America, it being in the year 1696 that King Charles XI. of Sweden issued the memorable royal order to the ecclesiastical state department to provide religious instructors for the Swedish colonies in America, then settled in what are now known as the States of Delaware, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. In 1696 the Rev. Andrew Rudman was selected as the first clergyman, and he was permitted to select for himself a fellow-laborer in his office, and for this Dr. Svedberg, who was well acquainted with him, proposed the Rev. Eric Bjork. To these two clergymen a third was also added by the King's command—the Rev. Jonas Auren. Before they left Sweden they were granted an audience with his Majesty, who most kindly received them, and commanded them to be the bearers of the books which the King had presented to the Swedes in America. Among these books were 500 copies of Luther's Catechism, translated into the American Virginian language. Upon the books the King's name was stamped in gilt letters. These books are now very rare in Pennsylvania, the old families of Swedish descent prizing them very highly. On June 25, 1789, the Swedish congregations in this country were, by royal order, granted the independence asked, and virtually transferred to the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States. The above facts we condense from an interesting historical article by Louis G. Northland in the Chicago "Inter-Ocean."

Berea College

This unique institution, which antedates the war, and is situated 130 miles south of Cincinnati, on the line between the "blue grass" and the mountains, has completed another successful year. Commencement, June 24, was held in the immense tabernacle, and attended by several thousand people. A notable scene was presented when Professor Rogers, who in 1859 was "warned" to leave the State by a company of sixty prominent citizens, shook hands with the Hon. John D. Harris, who pleaded guilty to having been one of that "gang"! Addresses were made by Dr. W. E. Barton, of Boston, the Rev. H. M. Penniman, of Chicago, who has recently become connected with the work at Berea, and the Hon. J. M. Ashley, of Toledo, O. Mr. D. K. Pearsons, of Chicago, has headed a movement for securing $200,000 endowment, pledging himself to give one-fourth the amount. The students have subscribed above $3,000, and a considerable sum will be raised in Kentucky. President Frost has made many new friends in the East during the last year, and says in his annual report that "the tone of the school was never better than to-day, and the number of persons who are watching it with friendly interest was probably never so great." Berea is distinctively Christian, but controlled by no sect. Until larger endowments can be secured, about $12,000 must be provided each year by contributions from friends of the cause.

In San Francisco

A paragraph in The Outlook of June 13, on the condition of affairs in the First Congregational Church of San Francisco, has called out the following letter, which we print in this place that all sides of the question may be known:

I have read with interest your article on the First Church of this city. The writer is evidently not at all familiar with the affairs of the church as they exist to-day, and bases his opinion upon conditions which do not exist. Were the difficulties of the church confined to the Dr. Brown affair, our problem would be a simple one, but we have an accumulation of discords that have been disturbing the peace of the church for ten years past, and this, coupled with the fact that the supporting families of the church have removed to a portion of the city remote from the present location, has brought about a condition which renders it imperative that the church property should be sold and a spot more convenient to our church families be selected. The past six years have demonstrated that if we remain in the present location the property will be consumed in expenses and lost to religious purposes. If we move now, the property can be sold for enough money to build a handsome church situated in a more convenient location and leave a surplus in the treasury of from twenty to thirty thousand dollars. We know of no man, foot-loose, East or West, that could take that pulpit and save the property to Congregationalism. The men that might do it are doing in their own pulpits as great, if not greater, work than they could do in San Francisco, and there are no inducements that can be offered here that would warrant any minister of the Gospel in leaving a successful and useful work in the East to undertake a task which the Board of Officers of the First Church and Society and a large majority of its members consider, from past experience, hopeless, and we must submit that we have quite as good opportunities for correct judgment on this question as has the editor of The Outlook. Could the First Church have been left to settle its own difficulties, it is possible that in time the removal of the First Church to a more convenient location, and an endowment (which has been contemplated) of the present property for evangelistic down-town work might have been accomplished, but the ministers who have assumed control of Congregational affairs on the Coast seem to have lost confidence in the ability of the First Church to handle its own affairs and precipitated by their action a condition that rendered an immediate closing of the church and its sale an absolute necessity- Dr. Brown and his friends, who constitute a large majority of the church membership, have been at all times in full accord with the entire Board of Officers of the Church and Society, Dr. Brown himself being willing to leave this city and coast whenever the interests of Christianity will be best served thereby.

J. H. MORSE.

Brief Mention

Bishop Temple, of London, says that during the last twenty-five years Anglican Churchmen have contributed about $400,000,000 to religious objects.

A museum in Berlin has secured possession of Luther's Bible which he used in his study. Its margins are covered with notes in the Reformer's handwriting. It was printed in Basle in 1509, and is in an excellent state of preservation.

The Rev. George L. Robinson, D.D., pastor of the Roxbury (Mass.) Presbyterian church, has resigned in order to accept a call to the chair of Old Testament Literature and Exegesis in Knox College, Toronto, Canada.

The Disciples of Christ in California have raised money to sustain an English Bible Chair in connection with the Stole University, to which Professor S. M. Jefferson, Professor of New Testament Literature in Bethany College, has been called.

The very handsome Methodist Episcopal church at Washington, N. J., was dedicated recently by the Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of the "Christian Advocate," who preached from the text, "The liberal deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things shall he stand" (Isa. xxxii., 8). The sermon was a particularly strong appeal for liberality in religious things. The new church is said to be the handsomest in northern New Jersey.

"The Congregationalist" says: "The call of the Rev. Dr. F. W. Baldwin, of East Orange, N. J., to the Chair of History and Economics, just established at Bates College, is another evidence that the partition between Free Baptists and Congregationalists is decidedly thin. If his own church permits him to accept this summons of his Alma Mater, his influence, we are sure, will promote still further friendly relations between the denominations."

The sum of $18,500 has been raised for the semi-centennial in honor of the Rev. Dr. Richard S. Storrs, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Brooklyn, and the sum is constantly growing. The special committee hopes to complete the full amount of $25,000 by November 19, when it is proposed to celebrate the semi-centennial of Dr. Storrs's pastorate in the Church of the Pilgrims by special services in the church, and in all probability a great mass-meeting in the Academy of Music. No doubt the citizens of Brooklyn will be glad of an opportunity to join in a general tribute of honor to one of the city's most prominent preachers.

The Home Club

The Homes and the City Franchises

Women, as a usual thing, do not pay much attention to the granting of a franchise, or to the forming of trusts, because they too rarely realize how close to the home the privileges of a franchise may come. The housekeepers of Brooklyn have just had a lesson in this respect. Two years ago there existed in Brooklyn seven independent gas companies. Through competition the price of gas went down to ninety cents a thousand. It was possible then, if a housekeeper did not like the quality of the gas delivered, or was dissatisfied with the bills rendered, to change to some other gas company. But now the seven gas companies are incorporated under the title of the Brooklyn Union Gas Company, and gas has risen to $1.25 per thousand, with no possible redress for poor gas or excessive bills. If the housekeeper uses gas in Brooklyn, she must take it from the Union Gas Company. This company represents a capital of $15,000,000. It is a well-known fact that a large part of this capital would come under the head of watered stock, but interest must be paid on $15,000,000 by the consumers of gas in Brooklyn, whether that interest represents invested capital in fact, or whether it represents so much paper. There is talk of an attempt to destroy this monopoly. Probably the sudden rise in the price of gas in Brooklyn will do more to change the sentiment of the people and hasten the day when gas, like water, will be delivered by the city, than any amount of argument or printed matter could have accomplished.

A Bird Day Suggested

The Agricultural Department at Washington has issued a circular calling attention to the fact that from all parts of the country reports come of the decreased number of native birds. The causes given are the clearing of the forests, the draining of swamps, and more especially the killing of birds for feathers and for game. The egg-collecting is also held responsible, although there are many who insist that egg-collecting has but very little to do in the decreasing of bird life in our forests. Laws protecting birds have been passed in several of the States, but with the protecting of birds, as with everything else, the law unsupported by public sentiment accomplishes its purpose but feebly. It is believed now that a day set apart in the schools, and known as Bird Day, would increase the knowledge of birds, and for the children to know them better would mean to love them better. The circular says that the general observance of a bird day in our schools would probably do more to open thousands of young minds to the reception of bird lore than anything else that can be devised. In several of the States, at the expense of the State, lists of the birds peculiar to the States, and even to certain localities in the States, have been issued. The knowledge of birds should come to children, not through books, but through observation. They should be taught to observe them, to recognize them, to know something of their habits, and as soon as this is done the life of a bird will become sacred to a child. There has been issued a circular which shows that in some States, through ignorance, large sums have been expended in killing birds that are supposed to be injurious to farmers, and the authorities hoped, by calling special attention to the importance from a commercial point of view of the preservation of bird life, to succeed in arousing a popular interest, that in the near future would result in our forests again re-echoing to the songs of the birds as in former years. The proposition is made to combine Bird Day and Arbor Day, and this meets with approval.

Rational Requirements

The Philadelphia Board of Health enforces the act of June 18, 1895, which makes it obligatory for superintendents of Sunday-schools, parochial schools, and private schools to exercise the same care in regard to the health of the children as is enforced in the public schools; that is, each pupil must present a certificate of successful vaccination, or else of having had smallpox. It is surprising that there are clergymen and Sunday-school superintendents who are opposing the Board of Health in this matter. Often, when the question of contagion is discussed, it is spoken of as though indifference to one's neighbor and ignorance of the danger of contagion were peculiar to the class commonly termed poor. Such is not the fact. People of intelligence, fully aware of the danger of their act, will let children attend school who have been exposed to contagion in their own homes. Only recently, when measles was almost epidemic on the entire Atlantic coast among children, a small boy attended one of the most expensive schools in an Eastern city when a rash was broken out on his face, neck, and hands. His companions of nine and ten years of age commented on his appearance to him and to each other. Twenty-three cases of measles broke out in that class-room within the next two weeks. The little seed-sower of this epidemic almost died, his exposure at the time bringing about complications that were most serious.

Diphtheria, that dread of every mother, swept over a school, leaving after it empty homes and almost broken hearts. This was a private school, whose circular stated that the number of pupils was limited. The price of tuition was very high, and the school considered very select. Presumably the parents of all the children sent to this school were intelligent people, and yet one mother permitted her child to attend school regularly from a house where there were two cases of diphtheria, a fact not known to the community until the white ribbons were hung on the bell of that house. Terror seized the heart of every mother who had a child in that school, but it was too late, and every day one child and another dropped out of the ranks of that little school, and from twelve pupils eleven fell victims to the disease and six died. Character is the protection of the community. Intelligence, or law itself, protects fully only when enforced by character, and that, fortunately, is not a question of income.

The church should stand for the highest in every community. If the church tries to evade the law, if it does not uphold it, it ranks as an evil with the saloon in just so far as it fails to live up to the law.

Eternal Vigilance the Price of Safety

The necessity of housekeepers exercising the greatest care as to the source of their milk supply is becoming more and more evident. In New York City there are thousands of cows stabled, whose milk is distributed through the city. The inspectors have discovered that these cows are not housed or cared for in obedience to the laws of sanitation—or, to use a more homely word, in obedience to the laws of cleanliness; for sanitation is cleanliness as every housekeeper should know it. Nothing will protect the people from unclean and diseased milk but their own intelligence and care. After the milk enters the house the most constant oversight will not make it clean if it has not been properly protected in transit, or if it is not the product of a healthy cow. The consumer must be educated to high standards in order to compel the producer to protect his product and sell only that which is uncontaminated. Legislation can do much, but legislation will not be enforced unless public sentiment demands it.

For the Public Good

An effort is being made to publish the old Dutch Records of New York. The Board of City Records some time ago agreed that these old annals should be translated and published in a series of seven volumes. They limited the number of sets to three hundred. James Grant Wilson, of the American Authors' Guild, was President of the committee appointed by the Mayor to supervise the translation and the publishing of these records. It has been discovered, just at the point where the Board of Records was giving the contract for printing, that the Board had acted without authority, and that the work could be done only with the permission of the Board of Aldermen. It is to be hoped that some agreement will be reached by which these valuable records can be placed on the shelves of the libraries for the use of the people. It is especially advisable that this should be done now, when the interest in colonial history is so active and is being so widely encouraged by patriotic societies and school-teachers.

School-Room Hygiene

The National Council of Education which convened recently in Buffalo brought together the leading educators of the country. One of the most interesting papers presented was the report by William A. Mowry, of Hyde Park, Mass., Chairman of the Committee on School Sanitation. The title of the report was "School-room Hygiene." This report was based on papers received from teachers all over the country who had made a special study of the hygienic conditions of their own school-rooms. The report stated:

> Throughout the whole country the deplorable hygienic state of the school-houses is such as to demand serious attention and prompt relief. Some years ago, in one large Eastern city having more than 1,200 school-rooms, it was found that the average of all the rooms gave less than seven square feet of floor-space and less than ninety cubic feet of air-space to each pupil, while it is now generally agreed that the necessary floor-space for each pupil in a school-room should not be less than twenty-five square feet, and with the best ventilating appliances every school-room should furnish three hundred cubic feet of air-space per pupil.
>
> Severe charges are also frequently made by oculists against the schools. They assert that studying injures the eyes, and that the school-room is responsible for numerous cases of defective eyesight. The evils complained of are chiefly the result of wrongly constructed school-houses.

The Council listened to a paper by Dr. Aaron Cove, of Denver, Chairman of the Committee on City School Systems, on "The Business Side of City School Systems."

Untrammeled Experts

It is interesting, in connection with the recent discussion of the value of expert opinion when the question of art for the public was being decided, to know that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees to decide on the decoration of the new library building at Peoria, Ill., one of the trustees, a physician, said, in response to the suggestion that a detailed scheme should be required of the artists before the question was decided: "When you call me in to attend a patient, you do not make me analyze my course of treatment and tell you my reasons for prescribing certain drugs; and when you call in an artist, you should not exasperate him with questions, but give him the benefit of the same confidence." The logic of this declaration prevailed, and the artists, once chosen, were allowed to follow out the bent of their genius and training. The result, according to report, fully justifies the course of action pursued, for it is said that the library decorations are in perfect harmony with the purposes of the building, making it one of the most restful of rooms.

The Evils of Coffee-Drinking

The leading medical societies of Paris and Germany have published a protest against the evils of excessive coffee-drinking. These evils, they declare, are almost as serious as those of alcoholism, and the victim of excessive coffee-drinking finds the habit as hard to overcome as does the victim of alcohol. The circular protests against the use of coffee by growing children, which it claims is becoming more common every year. The symptoms of coffee poisoning are insomnia, depression of spirits, lack of appetite, and nausea.

Unity

The Daughters of the Revolution of New York have agreed on a new Constitution which unites the chapters. This settles the disputed questions that gave rise to so much trouble in the spring. The Long Island Branch of the society is recognized now as a separate chapter.

For the Little People

The Rose's Wonder-Book

By Edward A. U. Valentine

If I only had the eyes
Of the wingèd butterflies,
I could read the words of wit
That upon the rose are writ!
How my curious spirit grieves
O'er those flut'ring fifty leaves
Nature has so nicely bound,
When the insects hover round
And within its pages peep!
Surely, its red leaflets keep Wondrous tales and elfin lore,
Over which they love to pore!
There, I fancy, honey-bees
Learn the verses and the glees
They are all so fond of humming
In their going and their coming!

Polly Popcorn

By Jessie F. O'Donnell

The Popcorn farm-house was delightfully situated in a grove, where great spreading leaves waved over it, sheltering it from storms and sun. Popcorns were so numerous that it afforded cramped quarters.

They were a branch of the Maize family, widespread through our dear America—a powerful and bounteous family, possessing broad acres of rich land, and pouring wealth lavishly into the coffers of the Nation.

Phœbe Popcorn was one of the Maizes, but now mistress of a household of her own, comprising Papa Phineas Popcorn, portly and dignified, as became the father of so promising a family; Aunts Patience and Prudence, dear old-fashioned souls! and a troop of little Popcorns—Peleg, with his smooth, broad head, "like a philosopher's!" said Papa Phineas, and his nose "like a pug puppy's!" said mischievous little Pat, who was too full of pranks and possibilities ever to be taken for a philosopher; and solemn Peter, so puffed up with the consciousness of his superiority to the rest of the Popcorns, his head could scarce hold its own wisdom.

Then there were the Popcorn girls: stately Penelope, and pretty Pauline, and precise, housewifely Priscilla, whom they called "Miss Prim;" plain little Polly, her brain full of impossible dreams; and Baby Primrose, the pet and posy of the Popcorns!

They looked exactly alike in their plain yellow garments, but even a Popcorn has an individuality; and so it was that Polly, although she came of a practical and hard-headed stock, was a poet and prophet, dimly conscious of a power in her soul that promised something better and broader than this cramped life in the thatched homestead.

"I don't believe we are to stay packed away here forever!" Polly confided to Penelope, who shook her head as she answered:

"You will believe it, Polly, when you get to be a young lady. I used to dream of a prince who would take me away to a palace of pearl and opal. He hasn't come, Polly. I'm still plain Penelope Popcorn. Better put such thoughts out of your head, child."

Polly smiled brightly at her sister's pensive face. "I know the prince will come for her some time. There's a place where dreams come true, I know!"

"Miss Prim" pursed up her little lips in a "prunes and persimmons" manner, and told Polly her time would be much better employed in packing away stores of starch and oil for family use; but Polly again whispered to herself: "All of us can't be housekeepers; there's a place for poets somewhere, I know."

Aunt Prudence pondered over Polly in much perplexity. "No good came from getting out of one's sphere," she said. "Polly must be content with her particular place in the Popcorn farm-house; she would surely get into trouble by reaching after outside things." Then she would sing in a thin, piping voice a song caught from the farmer as he walked through the Maize forests:

> Stay, stay at home, my heart, and rest!
> Homekeeping hearts are happiest,
> For those that wander they know not where
> Are full of trouble and full of care:
> To stay at home is best.

But Polly went on dreaming her strange, beautiful dreams, in spite of ridicule and disapproval. Poets and prophets are rarely appreciated by people like the Popcorns, yet perhaps their pretty fancies are as true as the facts of the most practical philosopher.

Certain it is, in this particular case the little poet was right, for the Popcorn family had been bound in a strong enchantment by a powerful fairy called Dame Nature, and were not those prosaic, yellow-robed creatures at all, but beautiful white princes and princesses in disguise. The Popcorns did not know it. Ah, no! like many people in this world, they didn't dream they were enchanted, and possibly would never learn it, unless revealed by some greater power. Thus Dame Nature held the Popcorns in their commonplace disguise till they should meet the Heat Fairies who alone could set them free.

Through the beautiful summer the Popcorns stored away starch, sugar, and oil in plenty. Autumn came; the waving green forests grew brown and withered, rustling drearily in the wind which crept under the eaves of the farm-house, till the brothers and sisters snuggled closer together for warmth. One day, the farmer, gathering up all the Popcorn homesteads, carried them away to hang on rafters in a great barn for long weeks. Papa Phineas's family grew harder and drier than ever, and even hopeful Polly could scarcely preserve her precious faith in the place where dreams come true.

After many days, the little homestead was taken to a room where children played round a fire in an open grate, and eagerly watched the Popcorns as they were taken from the farm-house and thrown into a spacious wire apartment, where they rattled against each other in profound amazement.

Then some one took this queer new house and thrust it directly over those glowing coals. The pleasant warmth permeated the Popcorns through and through, and, presto! change! What wonderful thing was happening?

Papa Phineas was performing a polka; "Miss Prim," heretofore the model of propriety, hopping about in a marvelous white gown, with so many stiff skirts she looked like a balloon; Peleg, the ponderous philosopher, was light-headed as a poet; the twins were parading ruffled pea-jackets and puffed trousers; Aunt Patience wore a superb cap, with the daintiest of fluted ruffles; and placid Aunt Patience had flounces galore.

Polly could hardly persuade herself that she was awake, for poets are often as surprised as any one at the realization of their dreams; and it was bewildering, indeed, to see the Popcorn family skipping and leaping around each other, amid the clapping of fairy palms, for the little Heat Fairies were as delighted at the change they had wrought as any of the Popcorns.

It was the strangest, prettiest sight in the world—like the blossoming of white roses, or the bursting of snowy foam into bubbles and spray; like the flowering of some graceful fancy in a poet's brain; like white butterflies springing from worn-out chrysalides.

Polly rubbed her puzzled eyes as she saw Penelope holding up an embroidered petticoat and listening graciously to—was it the prince of whom her sister dreamed? Or was it only one of those poky Popcorn cousins, whose advances Penelope had always pretended to despise? How different he looked with those nodding plumes! and Penelope appeared pleased and content.

Funny little Pat was prancing about with Primrose in his arms; while solemn Peter was turning himself inside out in his delight, and executing a double somersault in the air; and even Mamma Phœbe was frolicking with the Popcorn uncles and aunts and cousins, till Polly's head whirled.

How was it with herself? Polly looked at her unchanged dress with a thrill of dismay; but just then she felt a sudden sharp pain, which set her trembling like a poplar-leaf, and, lo! Polly Popcorn was no longer an insignificant little person, but a beautiful maiden in a spotless, fluffy gown, with just a hint of the detested yellow garb in the golden slippers on her pretty feet, soon twinkling in and out to the tune of "Pop! goes the weasel!" as merrily as if she had never been pinched into a corner in the old farm-house. One of the Heat Fairies had touched her with his flame-tipped wand, and in an instant her dreams had come true!

Stories of Pigeons

The story is told of a flock of pigeons that outwitted a hawk. Hawks can fly high with less effort than the pigeons, and they both know it. This flock of pigeons were terribly frightened one day by the appearance of a hawk between them and the cote. If the hawk flew higher than the pigeons, he would swoop down and catch at least one of them. The pigeons worked hard to keep above the hawk; he lazily rose in the air, keeping just under them. Suddenly the pigeons closed their wings and literally fell below the hawk, falling so rapidly as to astonish the hawk. Before he recovered, the pigeons were safely housed in the cote, in the well-house, and two were in the kitchen. The other day—it was Sunday—a man came out of a stable with a bag in his hand. He came out into the middle of the street, and, looking up, gave a peculiar call. There was nothing in sight. He called again and again. Suddenly a beautiful gray pigeon dropped at his feet. In a moment another seemingly fell. In a few minutes about one hundred pigeons were on the street, all fluttering and crooning and bobbing about, a mass of beautiful grays, with touches of silver and green and gold and red, as the setting sun touched them. They almost touched the man, he was so close to them. He opened the bag and threw out cracked corn, and soon the flock were busily eating. They rose in a body, circled round and round, and then began lighting on the roof of the house and stable. Above the stable was a large cote, that had room for about fifty pigeons.

The Elephant's Change of Temper

Do you suppose that when an elephant has a toothache the ache is in proportion to his size? If so, it must be terrible for an elephant to have the toothache. A dentist tells this story of an elephant that belonged to a circus. He was very good-natured, but one day when his keeper went near him he made a vicious switch at him with his trunk. The keeper knew the elephant so well that he said at once the elephant was sick; something was the matter with him. He sat at a safe distance from the elephant and watched him. The elephant trumpeted loudly and acted as though he was very angry, but no one could decide what was the cause of the change in this good elephant's disposition. This continued for three days. At the end of that time one of the men said, "Why, when Jack (that was the elephant's name) lies down, he keeps rubbing one side of his head; I think he has got the toothache;" and everybody immediately said, "Yes, that's what's the matter." The elephant was chained safely to posts and iron rings, so that he could not move, and the dentist was sent for. The dentist looked in his mouth and saw that one tooth was badly decayed. He touched it, and the elephant trumpeted as though in great pain; then the dentist went to work and filled the tooth. After a time the elephant seemed to understand that the dentist was trying to do something for his pain, and he gave every evidence of appreciating the attention. Some weeks later the dentist visited the winter quarters of the elephant and the elephant recognized him. It was rather an expensive operation, for it cost one hundred dollars to fill that one tooth. Doubtless, then, the elephant's toothache is a larger ache than either you or I ever know when our teeth ache.

The Spectator

Among quiet people of only ordinary means hospitality has its penalties, and under most conditions it is something of a trial to both of the parties to it. The Spectator has long been of the conviction that those not in the habit of being entertained had as well not be invited out, and that those not in the habit of entertaining had much better not make exceptions to the general rule of their lives. For these convictions he has good reasons founded on personal experience, strengthened by the confessions of many others who have been bored as the Spectator has been bored. When the unaccustomed grand dinner or ball must be attended, the whole course of the family life of the quiet man is disarranged, and he says fifty times to himself on the momentous day, "I wish this abominable thing were over." Now, this is not a very festive mood of preparation for the entertainment that is provided; the consequence is inevitable. He is not entertained, he contributes nothing to the enjoyment of others. Of course he keeps all this to himself, and his women folk are left ignorant of the suffering he tries to conceal. But they see that something is the matter, and they contrast the head of their house unfavorably with the men who are more at ease on such occasions, with men who are trained by long experience to know what to do and what to say at such solemn functions. For the head of a family to be thus depreciated in the opinion of his own nearest and dearest is a loss very hard to make up, and one that the Spectator cannot contemplate unmoved. The going out to unaccustomed places works its active hardship most upon the man; but when the unaccustomed entertainment is given, then the women are apt to get a dreadful amount of punishment. Something is sure to go wrong. The ducks will be tough beyond experience; the salt will get into the ice-cream; the champagne will be put on the hearth to warm, and the claret will be placed in the ice-buckets. These things are sure to happen. The guests will notice them and be uncomfortable for fear that the hosts are suffering; and the hosts—well, the hosts will wish that it was all well over with. And when it is over, what will happen? Mrs. Host will be sure to have a good cry, and waken in the morning with a headache that gives promise never to get any better. So the Spectator is convinced that real kindness would permit the quiet people to stay quietly at home, and that real wisdom would prevent such quiet people from turning their home upside down and spending more money than they can afford in order to make both themselves and their friends uncomfortable.

* * *

The Spectator has said what he has with much hesitation, and he does not mean to go around, as some writers have been known to do, and ask his friends if they have read his piece in The Outlook on mistaken hospitality. No, the Spectator will "lay very low" about this, because he knows, just as well as he knows that he is a sinful man, that he will—if his life be spared a few years longer—have to go to many places of entertainment which will afford him no more enjoyment than two or three hours in a dentist's chair. Indeed, he would not say what he does if he did not hope that some one else would take up the matter in the same view, and, expressing these ideas in better and more popular fashion, work a reform which might result in the Spectator's exclusion from the twelve-course dinner and the post-midnight ball. And yet, when he thinks of it, the Spectator would not be left out. To be left out entirely would indicate that the Spectator is a surly fellow and only fit for social Coventry. No, he does not wish to be left out; he only desires that within his little and usually happy circle such things may not be. Then there would be no question of inclusion or exclusion, and all of such could take their slippered ease without the dread of those other times when a man, with the feelings of a trooper or the thoughts of a monk, would have to tie up his neck in stiff white linen and imitate the manners and the sentiments of a waiting gentlewoman.

* * *

But balls and dinners are not the only forms of mistaken hospitality. There is such a thing as house company—house company which suffers and makes to suffer. The Spectator, in what he is saying and what he has said, makes no allusion to those who have ample places and generous means. To them hospitality is a matter of course, as much a matter of course as the comfortable balance in the bank. The Spectator alludes only to those quiet people who live in small houses which are not larger than the regular occupants need for their comfortable and decent lodgment. Why such persons should stuff their houses with visitors passes the Spectator's comprehension. Who enjoys it? The guests certainly don't, for they are placed in narrower quarters than at home; the hosts don't like it, for they are frequently all but crowded out of house and home; the servants like it least of all, for their work is doubled and trebled, and their wages only increased by inadequate tips which insult rather than compensate. When such a visit is over, the hosts are apt to say, "Well, thank goodness! that is over," and the guests when they get home will congratulate themselves, and possibly remark with sighs of satisfaction, "Ah, bless us! are we not glad indeed to be at home again!" Writing these things down, they look cynical. And yet the Spectator is not a cynical man. On the contrary, he loves his kind as much as the next one. Upon this occasion, however, he speaks plainly, because he feels deeply. A man with five thousand dollars a year cannot be expected to do the things that a man with ten times that income would do without a second thought. Then why should Mr. Rusticus in his cottage, or Mr. Suburban in his Queen Anne villa, be expected to fill up his few little rooms in imitation of Mr. Midas, who has half a dozen houses of fifty rooms each, and servants so numerous that they can hardly keep out of each other's way? If he happen to be in himself a pleasant fellow, it is Mr. Midas's bounden duty to be hospitable to the utmost; but the others, unless they have gifts approaching genius, should entertain as little as possible, and then on the smallest possible scale. This suggestion is made out of kindness to all concerned, for the visited suffer no more in such times than the visitors; both are thoroughly uncomfortable, and both are heartily glad when the encounter at close quarters is finished.

* * *

The Spectator has known persons so ill-advised in their hospitality that they have invited guests to stay with them even though they live in flat or apartment houses. Few flats that are constructed are large enough to accommodate more than two persons; and then the relations of these persons should be most intimate and confidential—such, for instance, as husband and wife. Flats are so small that the amount of individual privacy to be enjoyed in them is most inconsiderable. Even the privilege to sigh, to sneeze, or to snore must be shared with the other occupants. Under such circumstances, what could be more uncomfortable than to be in a flat with visitors—visitors with whom a degree of formality needs to be preserved? The Spectator knows whereof he speaks, as he has in such circumstances been both the visited and the visitor. Emerson in one of his essays gives this counsel: "Lovers, preserve your strangeness." That advice might be given to friends quite as well. An intimacy which has no reserve is sure to end in disenchantment, if not in estrangement and active hostility. An intimacy accompanied by great discomfort is sure to end that way. So this is why the Spectator, from a full and a sad experience, has written in this way and counseled against ill-considered and mistaken forms of hospitality. Cherish the kindly feeling with all your heart, do the good and the generous deed with an open hand, but do not make both deed and feeling costly alike to him who gives and him who receives.

Notes and Queries

I am just entering the pastorate of a Congregational church in a town of some 3,000, where probably one-third of the inhabitants do not go to church. Our church during the last two years has been through very trying experiences and has had no settled pastorate. Can you advise me as to methods of work, etc.? As far as I have read, I am a strong believer in Christian evolution. Am inclined to the taking up of the social questions of the day, believing that they are vital questions for Christian churches to consider and deal with. What commentaries would you recommend me to procure on "Acts" and "Romans" dealing with the practical life of to-day? M.

Lacking definite information, we can only in a general way respond to your request for advice. Draw around you the most faithful and active of the church, avoiding all semblance of personal partiality. Through these as a nucleus endeavor to quicken all with the spirit of Christian service. To draw in the unchurched, the "Men's Sunday Evening Club," presenting a varied programme for the second service, the core of which is a short but earnest address on some vital subject, has proved very effective. Probably Dr. Abbott's commentaries come nearest to what you inquire for. We suggest that you read Dr. Gladden's "Ruling Ideas of the Present Age."

> "Till I fancy but thinly the veil intervenes > Between the fair city and me," closes the second verse of Mrs. Ellen H. Gates's hymn, No. 20, Gospel Hymns No. 1, or No. 15 Gospel Hymns Complete, "I will sing you a song of that beautiful land."

Kindly quote the first line of the hymn on the topic "The Church," containing

> "There my best friends, my kindred dwell,
> There God my Saviour reigns."

W. R. B.

It is in one of Watts's versions of the 122d Psalm, beginning "How did my heart rejoice to hear."

Can you give me the remainder of the familiar quotation commencing "I'd rather be a toad and live upon the vapor of a dungeon—"? Also, can you tell me who is the author of these lines?

B. J.

The remainder is:

> "Than keep a corner in the thing I love
> For others' uses."
>
> —Shakespeare's Othello, Act III., Sc. 3.

Please inform me where I can get the poems written by Eugene Field. Some of them have been published of late in "McClure's Magazine."

B. D.

Collections of Mr. Field's poems are published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

Will you kindly inquire for us through the columns of your paper whether any art school in our country or elsewhere has among its students a Christian organization or any united effort on a Christian or philanthropic basis? At present we know only of an art students' church in Paris, which has given pleasure to American students abroad. In one art school in Ohio a short weekly prayer-meeting found favor with many of the students. During the past winter several students have taken classes in a mission Sunday-school, and now a plan is made to work through the churches. We very much desire to have Christian fellowship with other art schools such as exists between colleges, in order that our own work may be encouraged and strengthened. Any one who can inform us concerning anything that is done elsewhere will do us a great favor.

ART STUDENTS.

Can any of the older readers of The Outlook furnish me with a sonnet called "April," published at least twenty years ago in the "Atlantic Monthly"? It began:

> "No days such honored days as these,
> When first fair Aphrodite reigned."

I had supposed it was by Helen Hunt Jackson, but I am not able to find it. E. H. K.

I see that credit is given to Julia Gill for the poem "Christ and the Little Ones." The poem was written by Mrs. Marcia Locke Bailey, of Providence, R. I., and after her death published with other beautiful pieces of hers in a little volume called "Star Flowers." It was published by G. P. Putnam's Sons in 1882. Mrs. Bailey also wrote "The Mistakes of My Life Are Many." C. V. W.

Any church desiring to dispose of about fifty copies of "The Church Hymn-Book," compiled by Edwin F. Hatfield, 1872, or twenty-five copies of "Gospel Hymns Consolidated," in fair condition, will please correspond with

REV. CHAS. N. GLEASON.

Edgartown, Mass.

To whom does T. B. Aldrich refer in the words,

> "There's one, a later-laureled brow,
> With purple blood of poets in his veins," etc., in No. XXV. of his "Later Lyrics," entitled "When from the tense chords of that mighty lyre"?

J. J. W.

Can some one please inform me the name and address of the proper person to correspond with to know definitely about "The Society of Mayflower Descendants," and to whom to apply for membership? F. R.

Correspondence

What Converted Me to Silver Coinage

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Up to a few years ago I had given little attention to the currency question. So far as I considered it at all, it seemed conclusive that one standard was all there could legitimately be, one final money article into which all currency, and thus all financial transactions, must be convertible. How simple most of the public questions seem when regarded superficially!

When the political prominence of the currency question became accentuated by the panic, the withdrawal of gold, the loss of business, and the idleness of men with families to support, I began to read and think. I was a gold-standard man, and was prejudiced by the fact of silver advocacy coming almost wholly from the small, silver-producing States. This looked like protection in the manufacturing States—self-interest carried into public affairs. I first read President Andrews's "Honest Dollar." I saw clearly enough that contracting the standard money meant a corresponding reduction in prices. General Walker and other authorities confirmed my own opinion that the quantity of standard money had a direct and marked effect on prices. On a steadily declining market men will hold back from investing and buying; they will buy as little as possible; the enterprising men will suffer, failures will be more frequent, debts will be harder to pay. Industries are chiefly carried on by energetic, sanguine men who use borrowed capital and credit to the fullest extent. A regular decline in their merchandise in hand adds greatly to their chances of failure. The disinclination to invest tends strongly to repress industry, the failure of employers dislocates employment. Thus it was apparent that appreciation of the standard money and depreciation of prices tended to depress industry, precipitate panics, and throw industrious men into unsteady employment or enforced idleness. The rate of wages is a small matter compared with the steadiness of work. The personal demoralization of workers and workers' families is greatly increased by lack of work and broken income.

Next my attention was directed to Mexico, where my own business connections gave me some personal knowledge. In the twenty years of our gold standard we had been beset with panic and depression. Almost half of that period has been "dull times," and three distinct financial panics had turned business men gray, and had converted numberless wage-earners into vagrants and tramps. Starting from a revolutionary collection of States, with almost no industries, and with an ignorant population, Mexico had progressed and prospered in a phenomenal way.

My own business with Mexican merchants, manufacturers, and miners had steadily grown. Scarcely ever a failure occurred, and frequent interviews with Mexican customers brought the information that wages had advanced, that business and employment was steady, and capital abundant. Foreign investments flowed in freely.

All this while Mexico had free coinage of gold and silver, and, consequently, a silver currency which was steadily depreciating in comparison with foreign currency and gold. But prices did not depreciate. A house or a machine or a horse or wheat was worth as much this year as last, and would be worth as much next year, barring minor fluctuations. Fears of a decline retarded no one, the actual decline bankrupted no one. Men had regular work. Imported goods were converted from the foreign invoices to the local currency, sold and paid for accordingly, without other difficulty than we find in pounds sterling or francs or marks into dollars.

International exchange is exchange, and a bushel of wheat or an ox's hide will bring a yard of woolen, a cwt. of tin, just the same whether a pound sterling stands for five American dollars or nine Mexican dollars. It will take no more work to produce the wheat or the hide, whether it is rated at two shillings or at four. I thus found that no disadvantage had accrued to Mexico by reason of her free coinage and silver standard, but manifest advantage. Our own conditions are not identical with those of Mexico, but the unfavorable influences of a coin contraction and lowered prices are intensified by our greater dependence upon trade and credit. As we have suffered vastly more than Mexico, as we are better situated to stand on our own feet, I reached the conclusion that free coinage had no terrors in store for us, but, on the contrary, would immediately restore prosperity, and thus I became a free-coinage man at the old ratio independent of other nations. By your leave I shall later say a word about the so-called 50-cent dollar and repudiation.

N. O. NELSON.

One Phase of the Higher Life of Brooklyn

To the Editors of The Outlook:

The articles in The Outlook upon the higher life of different cities have been a means of instruction and stimulus to all readers. Brooklyn is behind many other cities in some respects. It is badly lighted. It is not as well paved as it ought to be, though during the past year so many improvements have been made that this reproach will soon be but a matter of history. Brooklyn has not many art treasures, no good book-store, only a few monuments, and it is lacking in trees. But it has a splendid park, is crowded with fine churches, and has one of the best libraries in the country. Besides, "the Brooklyn Institute" is already becoming world-famous. There is one aspect of the higher life of Brooklyn which is not receiving the praise it deserves. In one respect she can hold herself head and shoulders above other cities, and that is because of the concerts which are held every summer at Brighton Beach. These concerts owe their existence to the self-sacrificing efforts of a few noble and clever Brooklyn women who have formed themselves into a society for the cultivation of musical taste among the masses. For eight years they have worked and striven, in the face of discouragement and sometimes almost overwhelming odds, to not only exalt the musical taste of the public, but to furnish to that public the best music obtainable in the country, at a cost within the reach of the humblest lover of music. As I am not a member of this society, nor acquainted with its president or officers, I can say all this without suspicion of flattery, or in any way as an advertisement. It is a simple act of justice. The public is far too insensitive to its benefactors. It often takes as a matter of course opportunities, advantages, which it would not have were it not for the self-sacrifice of some people whose sole motive is the public good. Here we have the opportunity of hearing the finest music in the world, rendered by one of the best orchestras in the country, conducted by one of the greatest conductors the world has ever seen, a man famous on two continents. What do we pay for these concerts? Twenty cents apiece, occasionally forty cents! I can buy as many tickets for the whole season as I have time to use, and they will cost me no more than the price charged for one seat in the Opera-House during the winter. It seems to me that when the Music Hall at Brighton is not well filled, it shows a singular disregard of great opportunities for culture, for recreation, for refreshment of the spirit, for the uplifting of the soul. The "Evening Telegram" had the other evening an article on the "Music Cure." It spoke of how music soothes tired nerves, and gives rest and relaxation to worn-out hearts, acting as medicine in many cases of troublesome disease. When I read this article, I thought of these Seidl concerts this summer.

The great difference between this "Seidl Society" and many others is that its object is not self-interest, it is pure benevolence. It is plain that such music cannot be furnished at such a price without some people putting their hands in their pockets and giving largely. Is this not as good as endowing a library, giving to a college, as good as many of the charities which win applause from every one? I have often thought that if some rich men would endow the Metropolitan Opera-House in New York, and make it possible for these great singers and musical artists to be heard by the great mass of music-lovers, of hungry, thirsty, aspiring men and women, who now cannot afford even a glimpse of the inside of the Opera-House, or one strain of glorious song to gladden and refresh them, it would be as noble an act as the founding of the Astor Library, or the building of the Chicago University, or President Low's gift to Columbia. For it cannot be denied that music has an indispensable place in the culture of the community. Even if it did not minister to the culture of the mind, the higher development of the whole nature, it would have its glory in that it is a recreation, a solace amid the whirl and stress of daily life. The people cannot do without it. If the higher forms of it are denied them, they will seek it in places which are a disgrace and a blot on our civilization. It is not alone for the people of Brooklyn that these noble women of Brooklyn are working. They are of help to the development of the higher life of New Yorkers as well. Of course it takes longer for people in New York to reach Brighton than for people in Brooklyn. But the concerts are worth the journey. Indeed, the whole community cannot be too grateful to Mrs. Langford and the other women who are doing so much for the cultivation of taste for the higher forms of musical art.

KENYON WEST.

Non-Resistance

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Will The Outlook please explain the difference between non-resistance in extreme cases and selfishness?

It is so easy to let things go as they are and to feel that we need not interfere in other people's affairs, that the doctrine of non-resistance as explained by Tolstoï seems to me a very dangerous one.

Already, not only Congressmen, but some Church members, are saying that the missionaries in Armenia ought to come home, that they really have no right to be there if the Turks do not want them.

Must we believe that England and Russia did right in not resisting Turkish wickedness by force if need be? To some of us it has looked like selfishness, but is it to be counted to them for righteousness? Must my sympathy, my love for my neighbor, be wholly for the Turk, and not for the Armenian, especially the Armenian woman? Is it, after all, through love for the Turk that Christendom has used only mild persuasion?

How is it possible to love one's neighbor as one's self, and not defend her when she is in danger, whether it be from a wild beast or a devil in human form?

Are we to suppose that if the good Samaritan had arrived a few minutes earlier he would have stood by until the thieves had pounded the man into a state of unconsciousness, and then have come forward and offered his services?

And, taking the other side, would not the greatest love of the robber try to prevent his committing a crime, using force if necessary?

It is better for a robber to be killed than that he should commit a crime.

Christ teaches resistance in time of danger in Matt. xii., 29.

The extreme doctrine of non-resistance seems to me pernicious. Christianity is positive, not negative. The slaves would be slaves still but for the Union Army. Christ cast out devils. We have not that power, but we can restrain them. A man who does not believe in government ought to live where there is none, or he is not true to his convictions.

G. W. S.

Regents' Examinations

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Now that the final examinations in the public schools of New York State are over for the year, and those of our Seniors of the High Schools who "passed the Regents" have received their diplomas of graduation and have gone forth to prepare for more advanced education, or have entered the career of business life—to them I send this first appeal, trusting that by and through them the Faculties of our High Schools may be influenced; that they may arouse our Boards of Education throughout the State, and through that power that the Board of Regents may awaken to the great importance of a decided change in their examination papers.

Every year come the reports of mental and physical "breakdowns" caused by over-exertion and strain of study to pass "the Regents." While the general plan of examinations may be beyond criticism, a proper change in details would prevent the constantly recurring cases of positive injustice to individual students.

I would suggest a uniformity in the text-books used, or the preparation of several sets of examination papers, so that each school may have papers whose questions apply directly to the books that have been there studied. I have known of cases where Regents' papers have contained questions that could not be answered by any information contained between the covers of the text-book on the subject that has been used by a particular school, although the book had been carefully selected, and ranked among the best to be obtained.

I would suggest a system of substitute papers, so that a student who, for any reason, is unable to take the examination with his class may have an opportunity for a private examination at another time. A case occurred recently in one of our largest schools where a student who was prepared to take them found that Regents' examinations upon three of his subjects were set down for the same date. An appeal was made to the Board of Regents to secure change of date or permission for a private examination. This not being granted, the student was obliged to omit the subject, solely on account of lack of time for taking it.

We frequently have cases where students who are fully prepared for the work fail to secure their diplomas because of illness at examination time.

I would suggest that all papers securing a mark of seventy or more from the local teacher should be forwarded to the "Regents" for revision, so securing a thoroughly impartial marking. Upon a close paper it is often next to impossible for a teacher to avoid being somewhat influenced by personal prejudice, or by the previous work which the student has done in the class-room.

I have known a case of this kind where a teacher had marked a paper below a pass—thrown it out as beyond question a failure. An appeal was made, and, against strong opposition by the teacher, the paper was forwarded to Albany, and the pupil promptly and unhesitatingly given a "pass."

A high standard for examinations is what makes the diplomas of value, and while I would not reduce the standard, I would plead for more equal and exact justice to individual students and individual schools.

What can be done about it? ITHACA.

[Publisher's Department]

THE WESTERN COLLEGE AND SEMINARY

FORTY years ago, at Oxford, Ohio, two young women were graduating from a new institution which was destined to become an important factor of educational life in the Central West. Mount Holyoke Seminary, at South Hadley, Massachusetts, was then laying the foundations for the present system of women's colleges in America. The associates and friends of Mary Lyon, who were familiar with the Mount Holyoke system, as it had been applied with such happy results in the East, were desirous of seeing the same system introduced under favorable auspices in the great States west of the Alleghanies. Of this Seminary Miss Helen Peabody was a graduate, and for a time had been a member of its Faculty. When, therefore, the Western Female Seminary received its charter, in the year 1853, and a little later called Miss Peabody to inaugurate the Mount Holyoke system at Oxford, it was as a daughter of Mount Holyoke that the school began its work. No better selection could have been made for the responsible duties that awaited her. The school to-day is a living monument to the long, faithful, and capable service of its first Principal. Added to her natural endowments and training, which abundantly qualified her for her position, were indomitable courage and perseverance. On January 14, 1860, she saw that first, dearly bought home of the Western burned to the ground. A second structure and a better one rose from the ruins. On April 7, 1871, she again saw the Seminary building in ashes. A third edifice was placed on the same foundations in the latter part of the same year, to reward her devotion and express the esteem in which her work was held by the pupils and patrons of the Seminary. Through stirring providences of fire and pestilence and war her woman's faith never wavered; her hope for the future of the school was unfaltering. Since her resignation as Principal, eight years ago, Miss Peabody has lived in Pasadena, California. Her home is a kind of Mecca for those who were her students in the thirty-three years during which she presided over the institution. Their reverence for the godly woman, whose days of active service are over, has been handed down from mothers to daughters, and all who know her history delight to do her honor.

The Front Porch

Miss Leila S. McKee, of Danville, Kentucky, a graduate of Wellesley, succeeded Miss Peabody, and is now the able and capable President of the College. She has raised the standard of instruction to full college work, and is keeping it abreast with the best colleges of the country. Until her administration the school was continued on the Mount Holyoke plan, and each student was required to do a certain amount of domestic work daily. In later years this plan has been greatly modified, both at Mount Holyoke and Oxford. Although the lighter housework is done by the students, it occupies but half an hour daily, and is really more in the nature of relaxation than that of serious work.

A prominent feature of the College is its location. The buildings rise from an eminence which overlooks the Miami country, in one of the most beautiful and healthful regions of Ohio. There is a campus of sixty-five acres, and the picture one has of it from the pike, a mile out of Oxford, is not soon forgotten. The long drive winding up to the main building; a glimpse of Alumnæ Hall, with its ivy-clad tower; the pretty little brook; the summer-house; the smooth-clipped lawn; the acres of woodland stretching away at one side; the great front porch, embowered in rose and honeysuckle—all of these are gathered up in one's first impressions of the very agreeable outdoor surroundings with which the Western is favored. Nor is the impression indoors less pleasing. The cool and quiet library, with its handsome alcoves, its inviting shelves, and its splendid Tillinghast window; the art gallery; the pretty parlors; the pleasant chapel; the well-lighted reading-room, with its tables of fresh periodicals and its easy chairs; the neat and restful rooms for the pupils—all add to the favorable impression made upon the visitor.

The Western is a home as well as a school. It has never been an ambition of the management that the College should be large in its numbers. The wish is rather to select students who will maintain in scholarship and in character the high standard of excellence of which it is justly proud. The number admitted to its classes is limited, and for this reason the home feeling is the more easily cultivated. It is a household where each pupil comes into intimate relations with all the members. A visitor almost invariably speaks of the sympathy that seems to exist between the faculty and the students. This is a recognition of a great factor constantly operative in the life of this College. Each teacher knows every girl in the institution, and the girls all know each other. The interest of one is made the interest of all, and a staunch little democracy exists within the boundaries of the campus, in which character is constantly acting upon character. And this feeling of kinship does not cease when the school-days are over. The alumnæ are thoroughly loyal to the institution, and are its most devoted friends. They have a lively organization and several branch societies in which good fellowship and kindly interest are cultivated and perpetuated. These meetings and reunions of the alumnæ have given a stability to the College as helpful to its work as they have been delightful to the members. A substantial proof of this is a handsome fire-proof building presented to the College in 1893 at a cost of fifty thousand dollars, and known as Alumnæ Hall. A library having a capacity of one hundred thousand volumes occupies the whole north end of this building. The cases and shelving for the books are of electroplated bronze, made after the pattern of the new Congressional Library at Washington. Laboratories for the departments of physiological and biological sciences occupy the ground floor; a lecture-room and several of the recitation-rooms are located on the second floor; while the whole upper floor of this building is devoted to art. The departments of Art and Music offer exceptional advantages under the direction of six competent instructors.

It is an aim of the Trustees of the Western to select for the members of the Faculty teachers of thorough Christian culture from the best colleges of the land. The object of this policy is to secure for the Western the best and most approved methods of instruction pursued successfully in other institutions. The University of Michigan, the University of Chicago, Oberlin College, Vassar College, Smith College, Mount Holyoke College and Seminary, and Wellesley College, and several of the leading schools of music, are thus represented in the work of the Western, while many of its Faculty have done advanced work abroad. While the College is undenominational in character, it has always been in active sympathy with the practice and precepts of the Christian religion. The Bible is systematically and thoroughly studied under instructors whose attitude toward it is devout and reverent.

Sophomore Shepherdesses—Tree Day

The Western is often, and justly, commended for the health of its students. A prime necessity for this was secured at the outset in a healthful location. But in the complicated conditions of modern social life much more is required. In light, heat, ventilation, plumbing, water supply—and diet, exercise, physical training, cheerful surroundings, and agreeable companions as well—there are sanitary conditions requiring vigilant and intelligent care. These are matters for experts, and no expense has been spared to secure the best hygienic results. Col. Latham Anderson, of Cincinnati, a sanitary expert of wide experience and observation, was employed last year to make a thorough examination of the sanitary condition of the buildings and premises, and closed his report in these words:

"I desire to express my admiration for the high state of discipline of the institution everywhere apparent, especially as affecting the cleanliness and sanitary condition of the place. An unusual degree of intelligence and sound judgment has been evinced by the management in the precautions which have been taken for maintaining good hygienic conditions. The conservatism of the general management is also shown by the fact that tank water, as I am informed, has never been used for cooking purposes, although, as shown by the above examination, it is sufficiently pure for such purposes.

"It would be well for the rising generations of students if all educational institutions were managed with the same care and intelligence apparent here."

Every student is required to receive a systematic physical education under the direction of a competent expert. The system of training is after the method of the Anderson School of Gymnastics at New Haven. In cases of defective muscular development the intelligent application of such a system to the wants of a particular individual often secures results of the highest value. In addition to the regular gymnasium work, a large athletic field gives ample opportunity for outdoor sports, and athletics are in high favor with the Western girls. Tennis, cricket, basket-ball, baseball, and bicycling vie with each other in popularity, and doubtless contribute in no little degree to the excellent health the students enjoy.

The campus of the Western, beautiful at any time, is never more attractive than at the "Tree Day" season. May and June divide honors with October, for the trees are then in their glory, and its bit of woodland is the pride of the College. "Tree Day" is celebrated in the month of May, and the Western is the only "Western" college which makes a special feature of the ceremony. It has become the grand fête of the year, and guests attend from miles around. The students appear in costumes of every contrivance and color, and a spirit of fun and good will and merrymaking pervades the exercises. The ceremonies consist in farewells by the Senior Class to the tree they planted in the Freshman year, followed by the planting of another tree by the present Freshman Class. A splendid pageant forms part of the ceremonies, and there are many speeches, witty and learned, and much hilarity and frolic. The Western should be visited on "Tree Day" to be seen at its best. The grounds are in gala array, the girls are more charming than any landscape, and the mirth and light-hearted gayety in which the exercises are conducted realize a college girl's idea of a "good time."

The Trustees and Alumnæ Association are now engaged in an undertaking to raise a fund of fifty thousand dollars to endow the Chair of Christian Evidences, and to be known as the Helen Peabody Endowment Fund. Mrs. Calvin S. Brice has lately sent to her Alma Mater, by cablegram from St. Petersburg, a subscription of one thousand dollars to this fund.

The Western has undoubtedly a future before it. With its unique and most creditable history; with the affection of its alumnæ; with its unsurpassed location; with its handsome grounds and buildings; and with its excellent Faculty, there is every prospect that it will continue to grow in its influence and usefulness.

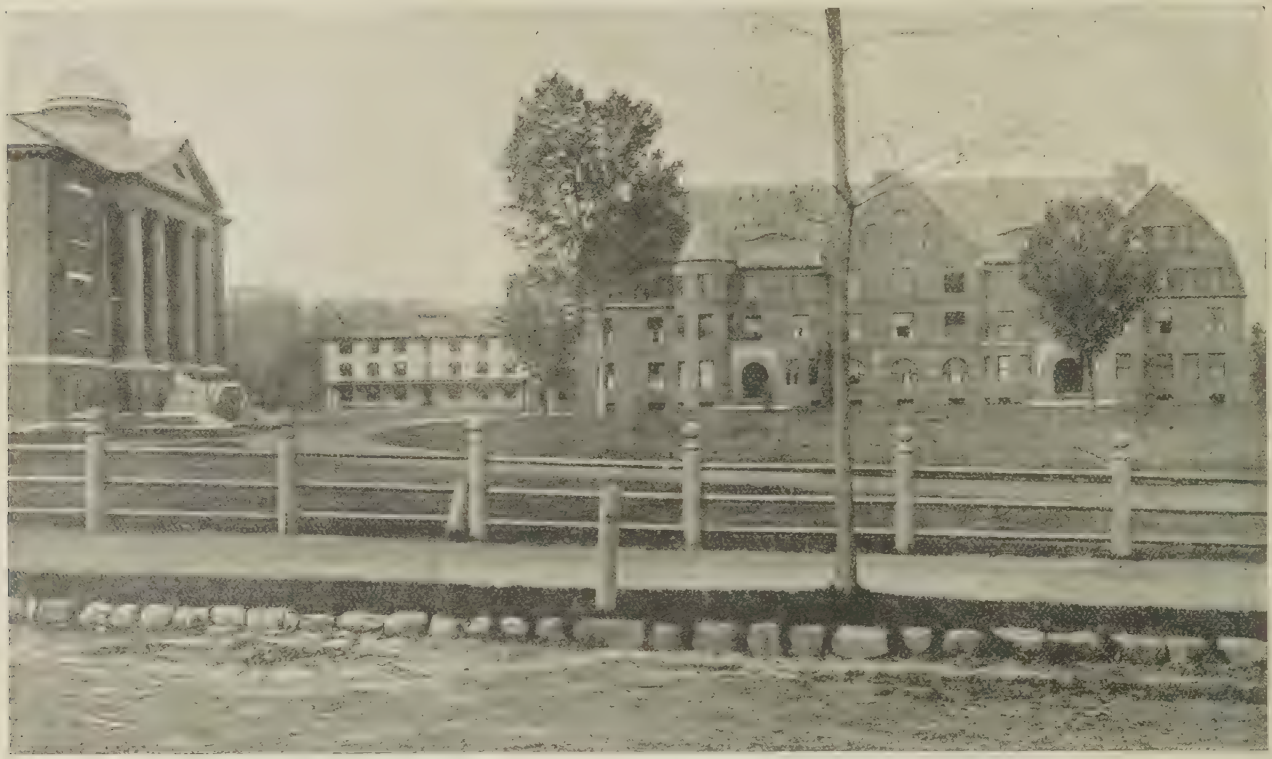
The accompanying cuts give some idea, though an inadequate one, of the beauty of the place. The graceful outlines of Alumnæ Hall; the stately proportions of the Main Building, with its vine-covered chapel; the charm of the winding drive; and the hills and dales of the rolling campus, cannot be reproduced by the photographer's art. To realize it all you must visit old Oxford town and look with your own eyes over the fair possessions of this queen of "Western" colleges.

Alumnæ Hall

JESSIE TRIMBLE.

Cincinnati, July, 1896.

[Publisher's Department]



Abbot Academy, of Andover

As a school distinctively Christian in influence and instruction, Abbot Academy aims to prepare its girls for useful, earnest lives, and provides exceptional opportunities for thorough intellectual culture and the best development of character. Founded in 1829 in the old historic town of Andover, Mass., twenty-three miles north of Boston, it enjoys a healthful climate and is surrounded by the most beautiful scenery. The Academy grounds comprise twenty-three acres laid out in beautiful walks and lawns, including a large grove of majestic oaks. Abundant opportunity is thus offered for healthful outdoor exercise, which is required of all. As Andover is the seat of several other educational institutions, certain incidental benefits are thus derived from mutual sources, while its proximity to Boston renders available the advantages in art and science which that city offers. The equipment of Abbot Academy is acknowledged to be exceptionally complete. Draper Hall, the largest and most imposing of the school buildings, is one of the finest of the kind in the country. No care or expense has been spared in its arrangement and construction. It is admirably ventilated, lighted, and heated. The rooms are mostly arranged en suite, allowing a parlor and bedroom for two pupils. Each young lady has a separate bed, her own bureau, closet, and toilet conveniences. The building stands at an angle which permits every room to have the sun during some part of the day. Separate floors entirely distinct are devoted to Music and Art. The wing of Draper Hall is devoted to the German classes, while Smith Hall is the home of the French students. Here the most pleasant accommodations are provided, each pupil having a room to herself. The pleasant parlors and dining-room present a homelike appearance which adds to other attractions. Abbot Hall, the old academy, contains the assembly hall, class-rooms, laboratory, and gymnasium. In the Academy library of five thousand volumes, catalogued by the card system, are found carefully selected books, many of which are especially supplied as an aid in the studies of Literature, History, Science, and Art. The library is open at all times, as is also the reading-room, which contains all the desirable magazines and newspapers of the day. Attendance at Sunday morning service is required. Those who have been reared in the Episcopal Church worship in Christ Church; all others attend the South Congregational Church, where free sittings are provided for the school. No visits are made or received on this day, as Tuesday evening and Wednesday (not Wednesday evening) are set apart for recreation. Visitors may also be received out of study hours on other days. For 70 years Abbot Academy has drawn its pupils from all sections of the country, thus establishing a service equally adapted to all. Until 1853 the Academy was in charge of a male Principal. At this date the principalship passed into the hands of Miss Nancy J. Haseltine, niece of the celebrated Abigail Haseltine. Six years later she was succeeded by Miss Philena McKeen, under whose charge the Academy enjoyed thirty-three years of unprecedented success. In 1892 Miss McKeen was ably succeeded by Miss Laura S. Watson, in whose charge the school now is. Abbot Academy certainly enjoys an enviable position among the educational institutions of the United States, won by time-honored efforts in behalf of the young women intrusted to its care. The illustrated annual catalogue contains full information of the facilities and opportunities of the several Literary and Scientific courses, and also of a thorough College Fitting course, offered by this institution.

Miss Laura S. Watson, Principal

[Publisher's Department]

Chicago as an Educational Center for Women

The University of Chicago, with its great money endowments, its splendid equipments of special buildings for the natural sciences, its facilities for post-graduate work, its equal opportunities for men and women, has drawn the attention of the entire country away from the far East as the educational Mecca of students, and bids fair to change the educational center of the United States from New England to the southern shore of Lake Michigan. The single fact that this great university in its incipiency provided three commodious and finely equipped buildings for the accommodation of its women students shows the importance it attaches to their higher education, and sets a standard for their intellectual development such as no other city in the United States can boast.

It has long been known to well-informed people that the standard of intellectual culture among women in Chicago has for many years been the highest, and while it is well said that comparisons are odious, yet it is true that as long ago as the meeting of the Women's Congress in 1882, when the Chicago Woman's Club entertained that highly cultured and dignified body of women, the superiority of Chicago women as speakers, parliamentarians, and in general ability to guide and inform audiences was generally and generously recognized. At that time a distinguished woman from New York City said: "I feel as if the Chicago women were a deep sea in which we Eastern women swim as small and unimportant boats."

The women's clubs of Chicago are the most numerous and enroll the largest membership of those of any city of the United States. They also contain the largest proportion of women who are college graduates. Two of these clubs, the Fortnightly, with a membership limited to 200, and the Chicago Woman's Club, with a membership of nearly 800, have very handsomely equipped club-rooms which occupy the entire fifth floor of one of the great business blocks in the heart of the city. Here, over a quiet cup of tea or chocolate, which can always be obtained on call, the best women of Chicago meet to discuss matters of general interest or to formulate plans for the humane and Christian enterprises for which they are so noted. The presidency of the National Confederation of Women's Clubs, with its 200,000 members, has, for the second time, been awarded to a Chicago woman, Mrs. Charles Henrotin, notwithstanding a vigorous attempt on the part of Eastern members to remove it to New York.

Academy of Sciences

All the pupils of Chicago schools, public and private, have the advantages possessed only by great cities, of access to the great libraries of the city; to its Art Institute, now among the finest in the country; to its museums, which contain many of the most valuable things shown at the Columbian Exposition; to its great Academy of Science, etc. The musical and other entertainments are also an important factor in a liberal education for girls. The Thomas concerts continue throughout the winter season, and as the rehearsals are given on Friday afternoons they are attended by hundreds of pupils from the schools. The best musical artists come to Chicago every winter.

The great Chicago Conservatory of Music and Elocution, under the direction of Samuel Kayzer, with its finely equipped studios in the Auditorium, and its corps of teachers in each department, from the front ranks of the profession, offers the opportunity to the pupils of Chicago schools for education in all branches of musical and dramatic art which New York and Boston have until recent years monopolized.

A great deal of the credit of the general high standard of culture among Chicago women is due to the Chicago private schools for girls, which, ever since the great Chicago fire, have been doing singularly effective, if quiet, work. Among the twelve or fourteen long-established schools for girls in Chicago, only two receive more than twenty boarding pupils, none receive over thirty, while the majority receive only ten or twelve in the families of the principals. This restriction has had the effect of bringing the young girls who are boarding pupils into close personal relation to the principals of these schools, to the great advantage of these pupils, since among the principals of the private schools of Chicago are to be found women distinguished not only as educators but as scholars and writers to a degree scarcely equaled by any other city in the country.

Another interesting fact in regard to these private schools is that all make a specialty of fitting girls for college, and every September witnesses the interesting spectacle of special trains for college students. Usually these trains are decorated with flowers furnished by the officials of the various roads, and the young ladies leave Chicago for Vassar, Smith, and Wellesley under the happiest auspices of attention and éclat.

One of Chicago's leading schools for girls is the Loring School, on Prairie Avenue, founded in 1876 by Mrs. Stella D. Loring and Miss Howells, a sister of W. D. Howells. This school is now under the principalship of Mrs. Loring, a most cultured, scholarly woman, who, besides her large number of day pupils, receives into her family twelve young ladies as boarding pupils. The Loring School gives especial attention to college preparatory work, and its certificates admit to the leading colleges for women and co-educational universities without entrance examinations. At Mrs. Loring's home the pupils meet the literati of the city, as Mrs. Loring gives frequent evenings when distinguished people read papers or give musical recitals or meet with members of her family socially.

On Indiana Avenue near Twentieth Street are the two spacious buildings occupied by the Holman-Dickerman School, under the principalship of Mrs. L. C. Holman and Miss F. S. Dickerman. The course of instruction embraces all the studies included in a thorough English education, and especial attention is also given to the study of French. The school numbers among its pupils and alumnæ the daughters of some of Chicago's most prominent families. While this has been strictly a day school in the past, Mrs. Holman and Miss Dickerman intend receiving a few boarding pupils into their home in the fall.

Further south—for these are South Side institutions—is to be found the Kenwood Institute, on Forty-seventh Street, near the Lake. The principal, Miss A. E. Butts, receives into her large and finely appointed home about twelve boarding pupils. This school has the distinction of being the only girls' school affiliated with the University of Chicago, thus obviating the necessity of entrance examination. A certificate from the principal of Kenwood Institute admits to the University of Michigan, the University of Wisconsin, Vassar College, Smith College, and Wellesley College without examinations. Special attention is given to the study of art history, illustrated lectures being given regularly on this subject.

On Oakenwald Avenue, also near the Lake, is Ascham Hall, a school for young ladies. The principal is Miss Kate Byam Martin, a sister of Mrs. Charles Henrotin. Miss Martin's school is noted for the attention it gives to modern languages and to art. Examinations for the University of Chicago are given quarterly at Ascham Hall. Miss Martin, having lived many years abroad, speaks French and German with fluency. She is the author of several well-known works of fiction and travel. Miss Martin receives twelve young ladies into her house.

Eight miles west of the city, but connected with it by numerous lines of electric and steam cars, in the beautiful suburb of Oak Park, is the Scoville Place School, Mrs. Helen E. Starrett, principal. This school is named for the gentleman whose spacious mansion, surrounded by five acres of lawn, the school has occupied since his death. On account of its size, large and finely furnished rooms for pupils, and its general superior equipment, this school has been named the Ogontz of Chicago schools. It accommodates twenty-five boarding and one hundred day pupils. It is especially noted for the attention given to the use of good English in speech and composition. Its certificates admit to all the best colleges for women. Mrs. Starrett is well known in the literary world, not only for magazine articles on educational topics, but for several books on ethical and social subjects. Her "Letters to a Daughter" have been read by thousands of young girls during the past ten years.

Beautiful Kenilworth, a few miles north of Chicago, on the heavily wooded bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, possesses one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the country, Kenilworth Hall. Within easy reach of the city by numerous suburban trains, with a most beautiful natural environment, are situated the home of Mrs. Babcock, the principal, and another building devoted exclusively to the purpose of recitation and study. Mrs. Babcock is an experienced teacher of widespread reputation. While, if desired, pupils are prepared for college, the special inducements offered by this school are delightful home associations and a most thorough course of study along general lines under Mrs. Babcock and a corps of competent assistants. Numerous graduates of Kenilworth Hall, prominent in society and literary circles, attest the thoroughness of Mrs. Babcock's training. Mrs. Babcock receives twelve boarding pupils into her home.

Art Institute

The truth is, that Chicago, possessing its unsurpassed opportunities for general culture, with such finely equipped schools, offers inducements which are proving sufficient to cause parents to turn their eyes thither when considering the question of the education of their daughters.

Bits of Fun

Making His Mark.—She—Have you heard that our minister is to be tried for heresy? He—Yes, it is quite a distinction for so young a man.—Brooklyn Life.

He Wondered.—"Dearest," she said, cooingly, "I wish you were a great statesman, with your picture on our greenbacks." "I wonder if she knows that a man has to be dead to get his picture on the currency," he thought to himself. There are some things it is better not to know.—Indianapolis Journal.

Mr. Anstey, the author of "Vice Versa," tells a story to illustrate the inappropriate way in which Scripture texts are sometimes used. At a small seaside resort in England a generous citizen presented a number of free seats for the promenade, each adorned with an iron label stating that "Mr. Jones, of this town, presented these seats for the public use. The sea is his and he made it."—New York Tribune.

In one of the smaller towns of Kentucky lives a negro familiarly known as "Tim White." On one occasion it was necessary to record his full name. The not unusual supposition that "Tim" stood for "Timothy" was met with flat denial. "No, sah! My right name is What-timorous-souls-we-poor-mortals-be White. Dey jes' calls me Tim fo' short, sah."—Exchange.

It is not often that the House of Commons has the chance of enjoying a good and innocent joke. But it found the occasion the other night, and at the expense of Mr. John Burns, who is far too earnest a man to indulge in jokes of malice prepense. "Since I came into the House, four years ago," Mr. Burns said, "the confidence of the public in it has much diminished." The laughter that here broke forth prevented him from finishing the sentence.—Household Words.

"It is a wonder to me," said Willie Wishington, "to see how quickly the minds of some men act. There are people who can decide in an instant what it would take others a long time to consider. I met a man the other evening who is that way." "Was he a lawyer?" "I don't know. But he had an intellectual grasp that was astounding. I met him in the hall just as he was reaching for an umbrella. 'Is that your umbrella?' he inquired. 'No,' replied I. 'In that case,' he answered, 'it's mine.'"—Washington Star.

Mark Twain has been telling the South African pressmen some yarns and cracking some jokes at his own expense. One of the latter is related by a Johannesburg paper. Mark was talking about South Africa's numerous recent afflictions. "Yes," he said, "you have had a fearful time here lately—what with wars, revolutions, rinderpest, locusts, drought—and me. I guess you can go no further with plagues. Now that I've come, you must take a change for the better."—Westminster Gazette.

The preacher spoke of little things,
  Their influence and power,
And how the little pitted speck
  Made all the apple sour.

He told how great, big, sturdy oaks
  From little acorns grew,
And how the tiny little stone
  The burly giant slew.

But the cyclist sat there unimpressed
  By all the speaker's fire,
Until he went outside and found
  A pin had pierced his tire.
—Wilkesbarre News Dealer.

One old-fashioned divine of my early youth (writes A. K. H. B.) preached every Sunday upon "The Broken Covenant." At length the long-suffering parishioners could stand it no longer, and a deputation was organized to visit the manse. The deputation informed the minister that they were extremely weary of hearing continually of "The Broken Covenant," and that there was a general desire to have at least one new sermon. "You shall have it," said the worthy minister, in conciliatory strain; "you shall have a perfectly new sermon next Sunday." Accordingly the church was fuller than usual, and a thrill of satisfaction ran round when the text was announced in these words: "And the cup was found in Benjamin's sack." "Let me tell you, my friends," said the preacher, "the day is coming when all your sacks will be rypit. And what, think you, will be found in them? Yes, what will be found in them? Again I ask you, what will be found in them? The first thing found in them will be 'The Broken Covenant,' on which I will now proceed to speak at great length." Thus was hope dashed to the ground, and the congregation fell back into the state of utter misery in which they had listened to that dismal orator on many past days.

An Electrical Fancy

The astonishing progress of electrical science is neatly satirized by a Parisian paper, which imagines Mr. Edison, in his laboratory, hearing the news of a declaration of war between Great Britain and the United States. A young man, his assistant, rushes in, pale and out of breath, and exclaims to the great electrician:

"Oh, master, war is declared! It is terrible!"

"Ah!" says the master. "War declared, eh? And where is the British army at this moment?"

"Embarking, sir."

"Embarking where?"

"At Liverpool."

"At Liverpool—yes. Now, my friend, would you please join the ends of those two wires hanging there against the wall? That's right. Now bring them to me. Good! And be kind enough to press that button."

The assistant, wondering and half-amused, presses the button.

"Very well," says the inventor. "Now do you know what is taking place at Liverpool?"

"The British army is embarking, sir."

The inventor pulls out his watch and glances at the time. "There is no British army," he says, coolly.

"What?" screams the assistant.

"When you touched that button you destroyed it."

"Oh, this is frightful!"

"It is not frightful at all. It is science. Now, every time that a British expedition embarks at any port, please come and tell me at once. Ten seconds afterward it will simply be out of existence, that's all."

"There doesn't seem to be any reason why America should be afraid of its enemies after this, sir."

"I am inclined to believe you," says the master, smiling slightly. "But in order to avert future trouble, I think it would be best to destroy England altogether."

"To—to destroy England, sir—"

"Kindly touch button number four there."

The assistant touches it. The inventor counts ten.

"—eight, nine, ten—it is all over. There is no more England."

"Oh! oh!" screams the young man.

"Now we can go on quietly with our work," says the master. "And if we should ever be at war with any other nation, you have only to notify me. I have an electric button connecting with every foreign country which will destroy it when pressed. In ten minutes I could destroy every country in the world, the United States included. Be careful, now, that you don't touch any of those buttons accidently—you might do a lot of damage!"—Youth's Companion.

[Publisher's Department]

Exit the Spinning-Wheel

Woman's Work in New Fields

When the spinning-wheel and the loom went from cottage to factory, there began a world-revolution not equaled by any overturning of an old order which civilization has witnessed. When cloth was no longer spun and woven and bleached and fashioned by home skill, but came from factories and called for a price instead of for effort at first hand; when baking and brewing and churning became great separate industries, like soap-boiling, candle-making, and a score of other tasks which had once filled woman's days to the full, civilization stood on the threshold of a great new era compared to which those were unimportant times when slaves were turned loose into the condition of self-dependent freemen, and vast armies were disbanded after having forgot all crafts but the craft of war. History took on a new turn in this revolution, or evolution, to which almost no other can compare. The hands and hearts and minds of millions of women, born and yet to be born, stood ready for new occupations in large degree, and some of the gravest questions this old world has propounded stared in the faces of both men and women then, nor have they ceased their insistence or their gravity even now.

In what may woman engage to do best justice to her powers and most good with them, and suffer least detriment to her womanliness? We are told that there are over two thousand occupations open to women to-day, as against only three to which they could turn a generation ago. The general aspect of the world to-day toward a woman at the bar or on the jury, for instance, is far different from what it would have been thirty years ago, but there are still thousands who are unreconciled to such conditions, and among womankind there are almost as many, proportionately, who view with dread the prospect of going into the world as bread-winners, as there were a half-century ago. To these the first choice of occupation is one of the very first which opened to the woman in search of opportunity. Teaching is the nearest and dearest work to the truly feminine heart, and although it was one of woman's first resources, it has been outclassed by none subsequent to it, either in the extent of its demands or the rewards they offer. From the college presidency to the teaching of babes, there is call in every field for the capable woman; but in no branch of labor, educational or otherwise, can women find a field so peculiarly their own as in the kindergarten.

Kindergarten! Beautiful word, suggesting the flowers of childhood and the tender study and love and care of the coaxing gardener, who is wise beyond the point where men expect roses to flourish under the same treatment as violets, but give to each tender plant the care which, by minute, individual study, they have found it to be in need of. This branch of education is offering, perhaps, the most and the choicest inducements of any occupation open to women. It is a field in which they need fear no stress of competition except among themselves, for in it there can be none of the vexed strife between men and women, such as works so sorely on the spirits of those women who choose the more advanced stages of educational work. In it, moreover, women find a vocation which is more than bread-winning, a calling next of kin to their crown of glory, motherhood! For that sacredest of offices it fits such as God may, in time, elevate thereto; and for those who may always find their work outside the walls of home, it opens up opportunities of a depth and breadth and beauty any one might well envy. The science of child-study, to which it has given birth and impetus, is assuming proportions and revealing charms which take captive the finest minds, and from being first misunderstood as a scheme for "amusing children," kindergartning has come to be recognized as one of the most subtly delicate and beautiful, as well as one of the most important, of all sciences.

From Mrs. J. N. Crouse, the Principal of the Chicago Kindergarten College, No. 10 East Van Buren Street, Chicago, Ill., where many of the best teachers in the country have been trained, it was learned that the demand for good teachers far exceeds the supply, and that places are sometimes open months looking for "the right woman." Further inquiry also brought out the facts that a knowledge of kindergartning is a strong recommendation for applicants for ordinary positions the country over, and that salaries may be said to be better in this than in almost any other branch of woman's work. For instance, teachers who have had but two years' instruction receive from $500 to $600 per year for services during half a day through the school year, and students who have had three or four years of theoretical and practical instruction receive from $800 to $1,500 per year. These, then, are some of the facts of one of the promising and honorable avocations open to women.

About People

—Dr. George Taylor Winston, President of the University of North Carolina, was unanimously elected President of the University of Texas. He has accepted.

—Christina Rossetti is to have a memorial in Christ Church, Woburn Square, where she attended for nearly twenty years. It will consist of a series of paintings for the reredos by Sir Edward Burne-Jones.

—In an interview on the late Jules Simon, Rochefort said: "Although he was Minister several times, he accomplished the feat—a rarity, under the circumstances, which deserves emphasizing—of acquiring no fortune and dying poor."

—John Hardy, the inventor of the vacuum brake, died recently in Vienna, where for many years he had been employed by the State railroads. He was born in 1820, worked for a time under George Stephenson, and is believed to have been the last survivor of his assistants.

—Besançon was the birthplace of Victor Hugo and Pasteur. Its Town Council recently had a warm debate over the question whether the town lycée, now named after the former, should be named the Lycée Pasteur instead. The advocates of the change declared that Pasteur had cured many people in the department, while Victor Hugo had never done anything for them. But a majority of the Council voted to retain the present name.

—Miss Kingsley, the African traveler, gives an amusing account of the beginning of her love of adventure. She was at the Canary Islands, and, hearing "very dreadful accounts of the dangers and horrors of traveling in West Africa," she felt she must go, out of mere feminine curiosity. She continues: "I asked a man who knew the country what I should find most useful to take out with me, and he replied: 'An introduction to the Wesleyan mission, because they have a fine hearse and plumes at the station, and would be able to give you a grand funeral.'"

—The wife of Bishop Wightman, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, has given to Bishop Hurst, for the American University, an autograph letter of John Wesley, written March 31, 1790, the closing paragraph of which is as follows: "As soon as possible you should put the Believers in Bands and introduce ye whole Methodist Discipline. But, I pray, do not introduce slouched hats; let us not imitate Clowns or Quakers. Next to the Bible, I love Common Sense. Therefore I wd never be singular for singularity sake. I am, dear Billy, your affectionate Friend and Brother, J. Wesley. Beware of women."

—Writing of Dr. Newman Hall, a correspondent of the London "Daily News" says: "Never were fourscore years borne more brightly and buoyantly than by the great Congregationalist minister, who first saw the light on May 22, 1816. It is but a brief while ago that I watched him chasing an omnibus in the Strand with all the nimbleness of a man of thirty; and when, one day this week, he came into the library of Vine House, Hampstead, to greet me, it required a distinct effort of the imagination to realize that Dr. Newman Hall was within a day or two of eighty. No stranger who met him and conversed with him, without being informed beforehand of the fact, would dream of charging the famous successor of Rowland Hill with the burden of forescore years. His good health Mrs. Hall attributes in large measure to her husband's bright way of looking at things in general, and to his singularly happy temperament."

—A letter in the daily papers suggests that some lasting memorial of Mrs. Rundle Charles, the well-known author of "Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family," would be in harmony with the wishes of the large circle of friends and readers who hold her and her work in warm appreciation, and to whom her death is a deep sorrow and an irreparable loss. Mrs. Charles, the writer adds, took a great interest in the North London Hospital for Consumptives, near which she lived, and for many years she regularly attended its committee meetings. She also frequently visited the sick and suffering in the wards. It is felt that many would like to contribute towards the endowment of a bed to be called "The Elizabeth Rundle Charles Bed," thus forwarding the work so dear to her, and at the same time appealing to the sympathies of the public at large. Contributions may be sent to Basilwoodd Smith, Branch Hill Lodge, Hampstead Heath, London, N. W., England.

—Major J. B. Pond, in a recent article in the "Cosmopolitan," writes as follows of Jonn B. Gough:

> It is strange, but it is a fact, that although Gough never broke down in his life as an orator, and never failed to capture his audience, he always had a mild sort of stage-fright which never vanished until he began to speak. To get time to master this fright was his reason for insisting upon being "introduced" to his audiences before he spoke, and he so insisted even in New England, where the absurd custom had been abandoned for years. While the chairman was introducing him, Mr. Gough was "bracing up" to overcome his stage-fright. By the way, let me say right here (as the phrase "bracing up" has two meanings) that the slanderous statements often started against Mr. Gough, to the effect that he sometimes took a drink in secret, were wholly and wickedly untrue. In his autobiography Mr. Gough has told the story of his fall, his conversion, and his one relapse, and has told it truthfully. He was absolutely and always, after his first relapse, a total abstinence man in creed and life. There never lived a truer man.

—Ernst Curtius, the well-known German Hellenist, who died in Berlin on July 11, was born at Lubeck on September 2, 1814, and, after a preliminary training in the college of his native town, pursued his studies at the universities of Bonn, Göttingen, and Berlin, and in 1837 visited Athens, in company with Professor Brandis, in order to begin at headquarters his researches into Greek antiquities. Subsequently he accompanied Otfried Müller in his archæological expedition to the Peloponnesus. On the death of that eminent scholar in 1840, he returned to his native country; was made doctor by the University of Halle; taught for some time in the colleges of Berlin; became professor extraordinary there, and was appointed tutor to Prince Frederick William, the father of the present Emperor of Germany, and Secretary of the Royal Academy of Sciences. In 1856 he succeeded Hermann as professor at Göttingen. He went to Athens to undertake excavations at Olympia in April, 1864, and in 1875 was sent by the German Government to Greece, where he concluded a convention with the Greek authorities, by which the Germans obtained a monopoly of the excavations at Olympia. Since 1870 he had been director of the antiquarian department in the Royal Museum.

They Didn't Know What to Make of It

Once upon a time there was an island in the Pacific Ocean inhabited by a people that had no acquaintance with matters outside their own domain. On a certain day there was a terrific storm at sea, and among the things thrown upon the shores of the island was a ladder.

When the islanders saw the ladder they marveled much as to what it was and for what purpose created.

Some thought one thing and some another. Finally there were but two opinions, and behind each was ranged half of the people, the other half being behind the other opinion.

One party held that the rungs of the ladder were intended to hold the sides together, while the other party as stoutly maintained that their purpose was to keep the sides apart.

However the people might agree or differ as to what the ladder was intended for, upon the rung question they stood unalterably divided, one side holding to the keep-apart theory, while the other side clung to the theory of hold-together.

If an islander set the ladder upon its side and proceeded to prove, at least to his own satisfaction, that it was the section of a fence (although he would not go so far as to explain what kind of an animal it was that was so large that he could not get through the palings and yet so sluggish that he could not top so low a wall), it was only for a moment that he received attention; for it was only a question of time how soon the old contention asserted itself, and the people began again the old question as to the object for which the rungs were created and put in place.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

The same result was sure to follow when some other theorist placed the ladder flat upon the ground and sought to show that it was the skeleton of a raft, or possibly a well-ventilated palanquin. The keep-apart and hold-together controversy was sure to rekindle.

There is no knowing how long this condition of things might have gone on had not a sailor from some far-off country been washed ashore.

He was shown the ladder, and was asked in signs what it was for. He replied by standing it on end against a tree and mounting into the latter's branches.

The islanders were astonished, but their minds, as usual, reverted to the old puzzle—were the rungs designed to keep the sides apart or to hold them together?

The sailor explained that both parties were equally in the wrong; the rungs were, there neither to keep the sides apart nor to hold them together. But the sides were there to hold the rungs in place.

Moral: Very much depends upon the point of view; and, ten chances to one, notwithstanding you think you know it all, there may be a few things not included in your mental stock-in-trade.—Boston Transcript.

A big wash looks discouraging.

But when you have the right weapon to attack the great stack of soiled clothes with, the battle is half won already.

Sunlight Soap

is the weapon to use. It will make that big wash look like a pile of driven snow.

All the sheets and blankets as well as the delicate fabrics will be saved by Sunlight Soap, and there won't be any tearing or ripping, because you don't have to rub.

Less Labor
Greater Comfort

Lever Bros., Ltd., Hudson & Harrison Sts., N.Y.

The Sherman Statue

The National Sculpture Society has replied to the Sherman Statue Committee of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee in regard to the criticism by the Committee that the National Sculpture Society did not protest until after the award for the statue had been made to Mr. Rohl-Smith. Mr. Ward says that that is true. The National Society was in entire ignorance of what had taken place in the Committee after the decision of the committee of experts had been given until the announcement of the successful artist's name was made public. As soon as this was known the Society made its protest. Mr. Ward calls attention to the fact that $80,000 of public money, money that belongs to the people of the United States, is to be expended on this statue, and that the National Sculpture Society wishes to call the attention of the people to the way in which their money is used. Mr. Ward says: "The question is whether, by trusting to your own, in neglect of more competent because more instructed, judgment, you have undertaken to misspend this public money by directing the expenditure of it upon a less worthy work of art than might have been obtained for it." That is the controversy in a nutshell. The qualifications which would make a man a good general would not necessarily make him a competent judge of art. Mr. Ward says: "It is a question whether the training and experience that confer authority in every profession and in every trade shall confer authority in the choice of public works of art, to be paid for with public money. This is the question upon which we have notified you that we should appeal to the public." The method of appeal adopted by the National Sculpture Society is to request the competing artists to put their models on public exhibit, not only in the city of New York, but, as far as practicable, in other cities, in order that the people who have contributed the money may have the opportunity, so far as their education permits, to judge of the merits of the work selected, and also that these models may be made the occasion for educating the people to the value of an art not so highly appreciated in this country as it should be. All the artists, with the exception of the successful competitor, have agreed to meet the request of the National Sculpture Society. Mr. Rohl-Smith doubts his ability to meet the wishes of the Society, because of illness and his absence from the country until autumn.

Baptist Young People's Union

The Baptist Young People's Union of America, which held its sixth annual International Convention of four days, July 16–19, at Milwaukee, Wis., is an organization within the Baptist Church similar in purpose and work to the Epworth League in the Methodist Church, and to the Society of Christian Endeavor in the various denominations in which it is active. The Milwaukee Convention was attended by about 12,000 delegates from local, State, and provincial unions in all parts of the United States and Canada, and was a fine exhibition of religious zeal and enthusiasm. One of the peculiarities of this Union is in the geographical subdivisions of the territory which it covers and the emblematic color of each. Canada is represented by red badges and banners; the Northern States west of the Mississippi River by blue; the Northern States east of the Mississippi River by gold; and the Southern States are known in the Convention by their green emblems. The general headquarters of the Union are in Chicago, where "The Baptist Union," the official organ of the movement, is published, and is supported by a $50,000 fund. The Union was organized in Chicago in 1891 in pursuance to a call issued by the Baptist Church. It has enjoyed a wonderfully rapid growth. One of the encouraging features of this denominational union is its tendency toward union in the Baptist denomination, for it brings together in annual convention the young people of the Northern and Southern branches of the Baptist fold, and cannot but be a strong factor in preparing the way for union between these branches. Another special work is the Gospel car service which it sustains. Four of these "churches on wheels" are kept busy in the work of evangelism, especially on the frontiers of the West, where they have done a splendid service.

One of the cardinal features of the forces which the Milwaukee Convention represents is the "Christian Culture Course," especially prepared by scholarly pastors and professors and pursued by thousands of young Baptists all over the country. These courses are recognized to be invaluable to the increased intelligence and efficiency of the Baptist young people. The early prayer-meetings each morning were seasons of spiritual refreshing. The first was termed a "Surrender Meeting;" the second, a "Praise Meeting;" the third, a "Promise Meeting," and the fourth, which was held on Sunday morning, was an "Enduement Meeting." These were held simultaneously in four Baptist churches in different parts of the city. The Convention proper was held in the Milwaukee Exposition Building, with a seating capacity of 12,000, and it was crowded to overflowing at each session. President John H. Chapman delivered the opening address, and the welcome of the "Cream City," her churches and people, was extended by representative ministers and city officials. The annual reports of the President, the Board of Managers, the Secretary and Treasurer, were all received with demonstrations of great joy, as they showed evidence of spiritual and material prosperity. One whole afternoon was profitably devoted to the topic "The Young People's Society a Training-School of the Church." "The Young People's Society as a Working Force" was the general topic of a number of conferences on "New Members," "Literature," "Temperance and Evangelism," "Junior Work," "Social Work," and "Missions," all of which were subdivided and each phase of the subject presented by those best able to do so. These conferences were new departures in this Annual Convention, and were warmly welcomed. Three other new features in this Convention were the "State and Provincial Rallies," "Departmental Rallies," in which each of the four distinctive colors held separate rallies, and the "salutation of the flags," consisting of a beautiful service in which the departmental colors, the American flag, and the Union Jack were all greeted with great enthusiasm. Almost every pulpit in Milwaukee was occupied by Baptist divines on the Lord's Day. The Convention was conceded to be the best in the history of the Baptist Union.

Reason Enough

A party of women once had the privilege of inspecting a factory devoted to the manufacture of spool thread. Their cicerone was the proprietor of the factory, one of the largest and most complete in the world.

What most impressed the visitors, however, was not the size and evident prosperity of the plant, but the beauty of the place. Not only was every hygienic and commercial comfort attended to, but, so far as possible, every æsthetic consideration was observed as well. Around each wall of the spacious, well-windowed apartments where the work was done ran a broad, exquisitely painted frieze. The figures upon the frieze were a dainty dancing company, beautiful in color as well as in form, and fit to grace the walls of a dwelling rather than a mill.

Finally one of the women, a practical, plain-spoken dame, asked the owner why he made beauty such an object.

"I don't see the use of a frieze like that in a factory," she said, bluntly. "Why do you have it?"

The mill-owner smiled. "Well, come to think of it, it is a very practical reason," he said. I find that it makes better thread."—New York Sun.

Do you want a Tonic?

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Dr. W. J. Norfolk, Chicopee Falls, Mass., says: "I have used it as a tonic and stimulant with success. I always keep it in the house for my own use."

The Little Sentinel

At the gate of the stomacn
—the palate—will welcome

Made into Griddle Cakes
Muffins
Mush
Puddings is Palatable Nourishing Satisfying

Cheap because it goes far

Wheatlet is the best Cereal Food made, because it contains all the nourishing elements of the Whole Wheat. Ask your Grocer to let you read the wrapper.

FRANKLIN MILLS CO.
Lockport, N. Y.

Health Springs from the Cocoanut
COPYRIGHTED 1896-

Pure and Wholesome

describes the new article of food just being introduced and for your health's sake you should investigate our

Cocoanut Butter

it is a superior article of guaranteed purity to be used in place of butter, lard or compounds in cooking. Requires only one-half to two-thirds the quantity used of other shortening. Endorsed by physicians for purity and by bakers and chefs for its economic value. Sold by all grocers. Write for free book about it.

THE PURE FOOD PRODUCT CO.,
544-554 N. Water St. CHICAGO.
McLellan, Brigham Co., 51 Chatham St. Boston.

Sickness Prevented

By Using

Old Family Remedy

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT
TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

In Use Fifty Years

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient

The most pleasant and effective remedy for Constipation, Sick Headache, Disorders of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels. Relieves distress after eating; cures Prickly Heat; heals Eruptions, reduces Fever.

Sold by Druggists.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED.
Our INVISIBLE TUBE Cushions help when all else fails, as glasses help eyes. NO PAIN. Whispers heard. FREE
Send to F. Hiscox Co., 853 B'way, N. Y., for Book and Proofs

Editorial Criticism

There are many people who mistake an editorial office for a bureau of revision. One of these wants "a specific criticism, rather than the inevitable printed slip so discouraging to would-be writers." If editors had single manuscripts to deal with, rather than scores and hundreds; if they and their publishers were philanthropists, with no living to make; if it didn't matter whether the day's work were finished with the day, or left over to week after next—then it might be possible to meet these demands. But, even then, an altruist of any prudence could hardly gratify this correspondent:

"If the accompanying manuscript is not wanted for publication, please mark with a cross in the list below, to indicate in which grade you honestly consider it belongs.

"Excellent.

"Good.

"Middling.

"Poor."

This is not an exhaustive classification by any means, and the criticism thus conveyed would be of small value. But imagine the writer's wrath at getting back his (or her) communication marked "poor" or "middling"! An editor makes enemies enough by simply returning MSS. which the writers feel to be much better than most that he prints: why should he go out of his way to add insult (as it would be considered in many cases) to injury?

"I have convinced myself that there is some merit in the inclosed short story, otherwise I would not trouble you to examine it. If unavailable, I should esteem it most highly, in returning MS., if you would spare me a word saying whether or not you found the story entirely wanting in merit."

These two sentences don't seem to fit together. If you have formed a definite and positive opinion on a given subject, why ask for another fellow's, unless to prove (what you may have already suspected) that he is an ass? It is a free country; nobody denies your right to believe, if you like, that your work is admirable, that you are an unappreciated genius, and that those who think otherwise are soulless numskulls. An editor, if he understands his business, does not pretend that his judgment of a MS. is final and infallible. It may contain beauties that escape his hasty glance; some one else may like it, if he does not. He has no desire whatever to offer an opinion on its merits or demerits; his concern is simply to determine whether he wants to use it or not. If he doesn't, you can't force him to buy it; it is a free country for him too, thus far at least.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Laughter

There ought to be societies formed for the encouragement of laughter. A real laugh is not common, for it must be remembered that a snicker is not a laugh.

The Puritans were inclined to frown upon laughter as frivolous, and therefore wicked. Life was a very grave affair to them, an almost constant struggle for existence, and they had no time to make merry. The first two centuries of their national life were busy years. Privations were many, and the Indians were almost continually on the war-path. It is small wonder, perhaps, that they rarely enjoyed a hearty laugh.

Philosophers and cynics sneer at laughter. Goldsmith (who was always laughing) tells us of "the loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind," and the scornful Byron says, "And if I laugh at any mortal thing, 'tis that I may not weep."

Many people are afraid to laugh because they think it common; so they repress their merriment with a smile.

They do wrong. Nature evidently intended us to laugh, or children would not know how. Laughter is healthful, and provocative of good morals as well as of good health. Hamlet says that "one may smile, and smile, and be a villain," and so one might; but no one could laugh and laugh, and be a villain.

To smirk, grin, guffaw, or smile is not to laugh. A good, whole-souled, hearty laugh is a panacea for many ills, and worth a doctor's prescription.—Golden Days.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR	Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC	New York.
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN	Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER	St. Louis.
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS.CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

"LET WELL-ENOUGH ALONE" is a safe maxim to follow in painting—as in everything else. Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil are and always have been the best and standard paint. To be sure of getting examine the brand (see list genuine brands).

Pure White Lead

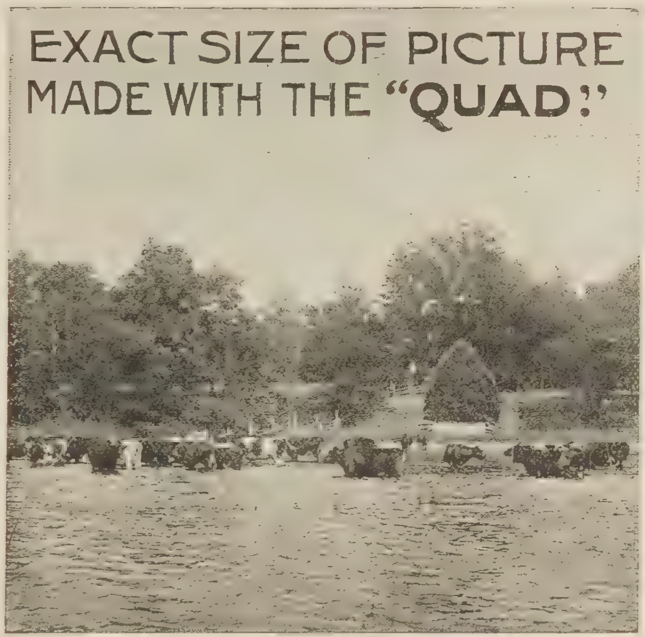
For colors tint White Lead with the NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. They are the best and most permanent.

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

A Quad Your Best Outing Companion



THE ONLY PRACTICAL CAMERA FOR $5.00

It does the work of other Cameras costing two and three times as much, and a novice can operate it.

Size of Camera 4⅝ x 4⅝ x 6 inches. Can be loaded and unloaded in daylight.

It is the only Camera using the new Quadruplex Plate Holder.

EVERY "QUAD" Is Fully Guaranteed

Ask your Dealer for it, or send us two 1-cent stamps for illustrated catalogue and sample of work.

CLOSE & CONE, 126 State St., Chicago, Ill.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER (Spring No. 2) in Rheumatic Diathesis, Nephritic Colic, Calculi, etc., etc.

Dr. Cyrus Edson Health Officer, New York City: "Buffalo Lithia Water is a potent remedy in correcting Rheumatic Diathesis. In a case of Uric-acid Gravel in which I recently prescribed it its beneficial effects were apparent after the third dose."

Wm. C. Wile, A.M., M.D., LL.D. of Danbury, Conn., reports the following (New England Medical Monthly, December 15, 1888): "In a recent outbreak of Nephritic Colic in our own person, the attack, under the Buffalo Lithia Water, was speedily cut short, the stones quickly passed, and the débris which followed showed a thorough cleansing of the kidneys and bladder of all foreign substances. All of the reflex symptoms and sequelæ were promptly relieved, and we feel under a deep debt of gratitude to this most excellent Water for wonderful relief."

The Water is for sale by druggists and grocers generally, or in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00, f. o. b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent free to any address. Springs open for guests from June 15th to October 1st. Address

PROPRIETOR, BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS, VA. On the Atlantic & Danville Railroad

"The Cleaner 'tis, the Cosier 'tis."
What is Home Without SAPOLIO

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

New Series of The Christian Union

Copyright, 1896, by The Outlook Company.
Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post-Office.

The Outlook is a weekly Family Paper, containing this week seventy-two pages. The subscription price is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance.

Postage is Prepaid by the publishers for all subscriptions in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. For all other countries in the Postal Union add $1.56 for postage.

Changes of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given. The notice should be sent one week before the change is to take effect.

Discontinuances.—If a subscriber wishes his copy of the paper discontinued at the expiration of his subscription, notice to that effect should be sent. Otherwise it is assumed that a continuance of the subscription is desired.

How to Remit.—Remittances should be sent by Check, Draft, Express-Order, or Money-Order payable to order of THE OUTLOOK COMPANY. Cash should be sent in Registered Letter.

Letters should be addressed:

THE OUTLOOK,
Clinton Hall, Astor Place,
New York.

Contents for 25 July, 1896

EDITORIAL:

William E. Russell 125
W. H. Gibson 125
Arthur C. Coxe 125
International Arbitration 126
Belgian Politics 126
The People's Party 126
Campaign Methods 127
Bimetallism 127
Rapid Transit 128
Rear Tenements 128
Educational Unity 129
Robert Burns 129
The Witness of Character 131

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES:

William McKinley 132
By Murat Halstead
William J. Bryan 135
By Richard Linthicum
Harriet Beecher Stowe 138
By J. R. Howard
The Higher Life of Philadelphia 144
By Talcott Williams
Francis E. Clark 151
By John Willis Baer
Kate Carnegie. Chapters XV., XVI 155
By Ian Maclaren
Tendencies in Collegiate Instruction 160
By Francis H. Stoddard

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:

A Step Forward at Chautauqua 164
Bishop Potter and the Lambeth Conference 164
A Pilgrim Monument 164
Millions of Bibles 164
Robert College 164
Centers of Inspiration 164
Swedish Lutherans 165

BOOKS AND AUTHORS:

Life of Agassiz (Marcou) 162
Retrospective Reviews (Le Gallienne) 162
New Books 163

THE SPECTATOR
CORRESPONDENCE
NOTES AND QUERIES

THE

HANDY BINDER

for The Outlook, made to hold compactly and conveniently twenty-six numbers, will be sent by mail on receipt of sixty cents.

THE OUTLOOK CO. · NEW YORK

From "Tom Sawyer, Detective."

MARK TWAIN'S

NEW STORY

TOM SAWYER, DETECTIVE

A startlingly dramatic story of the Middle West in the last generation, with drawings by A. B. Frost, begins in the

AUGUST NUMBER
OF

Harper's Magazine

The White Mr. Longfellow, by William Dean Howells. Illustrated. Peeps into Barbary, by J. E. Budgett Meakin, formerly editor of the Times of Morocco. Illustrated by F. de Myrbach. The Strange Days that Came to Jimmy Friday, by Frederic Remington. Illustrated by the author. Doorstep Neighbors, by William Hamilton Gibson. The Silent Voice, a fine dramatic poem, by Laurence Alma-Tameda. Illustrated by Edwin A. Abbey. Etc., Etc.

5 SHORT STORIES

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York.

A LUXURY.

almost a necessity.

A most delightful summer Beverage can be made from

Ideal Root Beer or Lemonade Tablets

Add one "Ideal" tablet to a glass of water and sweeten to the taste, no preparation necessary. QUICK and REFRESHING.

Ask Your Druggist For Them

or send us 12 cents for a sample bottle.

PREPARED SOLELY BY
Billings, Clapp & Co., Boston, Mass.

For the Postage—A Sample of Famous

Sozodont

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

A sample of liquid Sozodont by mail, provided you mention this publication and send three cents for postage. Address the Proprietors of Sozodont, HALL & RUCKEL, Wholesale Druggists, New York City.

A Tour Awheel

results in greater pleasure and less fatigue when DIXON'S Cycle Chain Graphite is used on the chain. Sample stick mailed for 10 cents.

Jos. Dixon Crucible Co.
Jersey City, N. J.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S

List of Standard Reference Works includes:

THE NEW

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA

AT A POPULAR PRICE

A Dictionary of Universal Knowledge, containing upwards of 30,000 articles; illustrated by more than 3,500 engravings; over 11,000,000 words, and 17,560 columns of reading matter.

Rewritten and Enlarged by American and English Editors. International in Character. Based upon the most recent Census Returns, and Corrections and Additions made up to the day of printing.

The New Popular Edition. In 10 volumes. Imperial octavo. Cloth binding, $20.00, net; half leather binding, $25.00, net.

Worcester's Unabridged Quarto Dictionary

Sheep, marbled edges, $10.00; half Turkey morocco, marbled edges, $12.00; half Russia, marbled edges, $12.00; half Russia, vermillion edges, $12.50; full Russia, marbled edges, $16.00; full Russia, vermillion edges, $16.50; full Turkey, marbled edges, $16.00; full Turkey, extra gilt edges, $17.00. The above styles, with Denison's Patent Index, 75 cents additional.

Lippincott's Pronouncing Dictionary of Biography and Mythology

New Edition. Thoroughly Revised and Greatly Enlarged

REDUCED ONE-THIRD IN PRICE

Containing Memoirs of the Eminent Persons of All Ages and Countries. By J. THOMAS, M.D., LL.D.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume of 2,550 pages. Sheep, $8.00, net; half Turkey, $10.00, net; half Russia, $10.00, net.

Two-Volume Edition. Sheep, per set, $10.00, net; half Turkey, $12.00, net.

Lippincott's Gazetteer of the World

Edition of 1895. With Latest Census Returns, Newly Revised and Enlarged

REDUCED ONE-THIRD IN PRICE

A Complete Pronouncing Gazetteer or Geographical Dictionary of the World, containing notices of over 125,000 places, with recent and authentic information respecting the Countries, Islands, Rivers, Mountains, Cities, Towns, etc., in every portion of the globe; also, the Census for 1880–1890. Originally edited by JOSEPH THOMAS, M.D., LL.D., author of "Lippincott's Pronouncing Biographical Dictionary," "Thomas's Pronouncing Medical Dictionary," etc. One imperial octavo volume of nearly 3,000 pages. Library sheep, $8.00, net; half Turkey, $10.00, net; half Russia, $10.00, net.

Allibone's Dictionary of Authors, and Supplement

A Critical Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors, Living and Deceased. By S. AUSTIN ALLIBONE, LL.D. With Supplement. By JOHN FOSTER KIRK, LL.D. The entire work containing the Names and History of over Eighty-three Thousand Authors Complete in five imperial octavo volumes. Cloth, $37.50; sheep, $42.50; half Russia, $50.00; half calf, $55.00; half morocco, $55.00.

THE NEW VARIORUM EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE

Edited by HORACE HOWARD FURNISS, Ph.D., LL.D., L.H.D. Royal octavo volumes. Extra cloth, uncut edges, gilt top, $4.00. The ten volumes already issued, bound in half morocco, gilt top, $50. Sold only in sets.

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM
THE TEMPEST
AS YOU LIKE IT
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE
ROMEO AND JULIET
KING LEAR
HAMLET (2 vols.)
MACBETH
OTHELLO

For sale by all booksellers. Specimen pages sent free on application to the Publishers,

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, = = PHILADELPHIA

The Lawton Simplex Printer

saves time and labor; money too—100 letters, postal cards, copies of music, drawings, or typewritten copy, in almost no time, and exact copies at that, by using the Lawton Simplex. Requires no washing or cleaning, and saves its cost over and again in sending out notices. Costs but little ($3 to $10).

CAUTION.—Other things are being made and called Simplex Printers. The only way to be sure of getting the genuine is to see that yours is the Lawton Simplex Printer. Send for circulars. Agents wanted.

LAWTON & CO., 20 Vesey St., New York.

600 SECOND HAND BICYCLES

All makes Must Be Closed Out, $5.00 to $25.00 each. Send for Descriptive Lists.

O. G. MEAD & PRENTISS, Chicago

FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Gospel Hymns, 1 to 6, for Devotional Meetings. Excelsior Music Edition, 739 Hymns, $75 per 100.
Gospel Choir No. 2. $40 per 100.
Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School. $30 per 100.
Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St. New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago

Beecher Books

For anything by or about HENRY WARD BEECHER, send to his long-time Publishers.

FORDS, HOWARD & HULBERT, 47 E. 10th St., New York City.

Home Treatment for HAY-FEVER

8 Years Cured—W. L. WEDGER, Roslindale, Boston, Mass.

7 Years Cured—J. L. TREVILLYAN, 24 5th St., N.E., Minneapolis, Minn.

8 Years Cured—MRS. A. P. FOSTER, Chelsea, Mass.

5 Years Cured—J. W. GILLESPIE, Black River, N. Y.

5 Years Cured—WM. E. WELLER, 164 Cherry St., Burlington, Vt.

WE OFFER

A Cure That Stays

Our constitutional treatment not only gives relief, but eradicates the cause of the disease and cures to stay cured.

OUR NEW BOOK—Thesis for 1896—with 2,000 other references whom you can consult, now ready. Sent on application with blank for free examination. GET IT. Read it. Think it over. Talk with these people or write them. Get ready to meet the season's attack, and do it now. Address

Dr. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

This Little Maid in Red which you'll find on every box of

ELECTRO-SILICON

marks the genuine, and is a guarantee of the Best Silver Polish Known.

Grocers sell it. Send for trial quantity and fac-simile of box.

THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., 72 John St., New York.

When calling ask for Mr. Grant.

Educational Books

of all descriptions can be obtained at

LIBERAL DISCOUNTS

from me.
Send 10 cents for set of special slips.

F. E. GRANT
23 W. 42d St., New York

History for Ready Reference
and Topical Reading
IN FIVE IMPERIAL VOLUMES
By J. N. LARNED, Ex-Pres. Am. Library Ass'n.

☞ Giving History on All Topics in the Exact Words of the Historians Themselves

This work is a New Departure in Book Making as it fills a place hitherto wholly unoccupied.

It gives History in the very language of its best interpreters, and within easy reach of the reader.

Its system of Ready Reference and Cross Reference is new and complete, and shows History in its relations as does no other work.

It also presents History in its Literature, hence in its most attractive form. and with its sources clearly given.

Quotations from over five thousand volumes make it equivalent, practically, to a library of very many volumes, or, as Bishop Vincent says, "puts the history of the world on a single shelf"

It will answer more questions in History, more authoritatively, with greater excellence of literary expression, and with a greater economy of time, than any other work in the world.

Sent carriage free to responsible subscribers on easy payments. Send for circular, giving full information.

SOLICITORS EMPLOYED

The C. A. Nichols Co., Publishers
Springfield, Mass.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR 25 CTS.
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
[illegible] Tastes Good. Use
[illegible] by druggists.
CONSUMPTION

Fugitive Poems

To Hafiz

By Thomas Bailey Aldrich

Though gifts like thine the fates gave not to me,
O Hafiz, one thing we both hold in fee—
Nay, it holds us; for when the June wind blows
We both are slaves and lovers to the rose.
In vain the pale Circassian lily shows
Her face at her green lattice, and in vain
The violet beckons, with unveilèd face;
The bosom's white, the lip's light purple stain—
These touch our liking, yet no passion stir.
But when the rose comes, Hafiz—in that place
Where she stands smiling, we kneel down to her.
—The Critic.

Matterhorn Quests

By Richard Burton

As men essay the Matterhorn—
That peering peak of stone and snow—
To view, some matchless Alpine morn,
The petty world stretch far below,
Though after all their toil and pain
They can but clamber down again,

So yearning souls essay the heights
Of spirit, setting dangers by,
And recking naught of low delights
The flesh affords; you ask them why,
They know not; some divine unrest
Bids them to climb and do their best.
—Exchange.

The Hour Draws Near

By J. G. Whittier

The hour draws near, howe'er delayed and late,
When at the Eternal Gate
We leave the words and works we call our own,
And lift void hands alone
For love to fill. Our nakedness of soul
Brings to that gate no toll;
Giftless we come to Him who all things gives,
And live because He lives.
—Selected.

Hammer and Anvil

By John Clifford, D.D.

Last eve I paused beside a blacksmith's door,
And heard the anvil ring the vesper chime;
Then, looking in, I saw upon the floor
Old hammers worn with beating years of time.

"How many anvils have you had," said I,
"To wear and batter all these hammers so?"
"Just one," said he; then said, with twinkling eye,
"The anvil wears the hammers out, you know."

And so, I thought, the anvil of God's Word
For ages skeptic blows have beat upon;
Yet though the noise of falling blows was heard,
The anvil is unharmed—the hammers gone.
—Selected.

Work

By Mrs. E. B. Browning

What are we set on earth for? Say, to toil,
Nor seek to leave thy tending of the vines
For all the heat o' the day, till it declines
And Death's mild curfew shall from toil assoil.
God did anoint thee with his odorous oil,
To wrestle, not to reign; and he assigns
All thy tears over, like pure crystallines,
For younger fellow-workers of the soil
To wear for amulets. So others shall Take patience, labor, to their heart and hand
From thy hand, and thy heart, and thy brave cheer,
And God's grace fructify through thee to all.
The least flower with a brimming cup may stand,
And share its dewdrop with another near.
—Selected.

Waterproof

your skirt edges with

Duxbak

S·H·& M· REGISTERED TRADE MARK

BIAS VELVETEEN BINDING

It keeps them dry and whole and it never fades.

If your dealer will not supply you we will.

Samples showing labels and materials mailed free.

"Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new 72 page book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, giving valuable points, mailed for 25c.

S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.

"My skirts are made of Pride of the West Muslin."

Fine as linen—
Soft as silk.

For sale by all leading retailers.

The Dyspeptic and convalescent find in SOMATOSE a tasty, easily digested and nourishing food. It never palls on the appetite, and rapidly increases weight.

Somatose

A Perfect Food, Tonic and Restorative.

It is a powder made from the most nourishing elements of meat, prepared for the nutriment and stimulus of weak systems. May be taken dry, or in milk, water, etc.

At druggists, in 2-oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

PHOTOGRAPHIC EVERYTHING

NEW STORE—Convenient
NEW STOCK—Complete
NEW PRICES—Lowest
NEW IDEAS from everywhere
NEW APPARATUS of all makers
NEW SUPPLIES of old staples

The Scovill & Adams Co., of New York
Nos. 60 and 62 East 11th St.
(Five doors from B'way)

Send 25 cents for a sample number of The Photographic Times, containing about 100 handsome photographic illustrations.

A Childlike Naturalist

In his "Life, Letters, etc., of Agassiz," Professor Marcou gives this sketch of Gressly, one of Agassiz's early companions:

"Agassiz had to pay for his lodging, which consisted of a small bedroom poorly furnished, and which soon became a true pandemonium of the most sordid kind. He boarded when in Neuchâtel at a third-rate inn, called Le Poisson, kept by the sister of the artist Jacques Burkhardt. When traveling—always on foot—there was even less expense; for Gressly entered the first farm on his road, and asked for food and lodging. He had already roamed all over the Swiss Jura Mountains to make the observations which had resulted in the excellent 'Observations géologiques sur le Jura Soleureis,' and was well known personally or by reputation by almost all the country people, who always received him kindly, giving him a place at their table and a bed to sleep in—or more exactly on; for he slept with his clothes on, even with his shoes on. The farmers liked Gressly extremely, because he not only told good stories, but also gave good advice for finding springs, digging wells, and he indicated good places for marls and clays used in agriculture, and for stone quarries. Like a child, as he was all his life, he played with the children, making cocks and boats and dancing frogs out of pieces of old almanacs or newspapers. As an example of his cheap way of traveling, he once started with a small sum of money in his pocket, then he forgot that he had any money, and remained two or even three months without spending a penny, going from farm to farm, and returned loaded with the most splendid and rare fossils. And when asked why he had stayed so long without writing—'Why,' said he, 'you forgot to give me any money, and I was obliged to do as well as I could with my friends the paysans, who generously gave me board and lodging as I went along; a slow process,' he added, 'which took much of my time.' 'But, Gressly, I gave you some money before you started, and I saw you, if I remember rightly, put it in that pocket,' indicating the pocket. Gressly put his hand in his pocket and brought out the gold pieces which had been there, forgotten, ever since he started two months before."

Whaling by Electricity

That the field for the application of electricity is practically unlimited is again demonstrated by a seafaring man who proposes to go out and kill whales with it.

The salt had so much faith in his scheme that he engaged an electrician to build a dynamo that would generate an alternating current of 10,000 volts. That dynamo he will have rigged up in his ship, and then he will sail away to the north to capture the whale in a fin-de-siècle manner.

Captain Charles W. Hershell, of Halifax, owner and commander of the whaling ship Rosalie, is the man who intends to wipe out the customs and traditions of the whaling industry with a small wire and a large dynamo.

As to the method of application, the captain explained it to a New York writer as follows:

"I am going to place the dynamo on the whaler, and not put it into operation until the whaling grounds are reached. On board I will have a big reel of heavily insulated wire.

"The reel will be placed in the smaller boat in which we go out to meet the whale. We shall have several thousand feet of wire on the reel. One end will be connected with the dynamo. At the other end, which will be in the smaller boat, will be a hard rubber stick, about four feet in length. The wire will run through that stick, so that it may be handled easily and safely.

"At the end of the stick will be attached a piece of metal twenty-four inches long and one inch in diameter. The point of that needle will be sharp, so as to penetrate the flesh of the whale easily.

"The hard-rubber stick and the big needle will be used just as we use the harpoon today. When near the big fish, as near as we get in the old way, the harpooner will throw the electric barb.

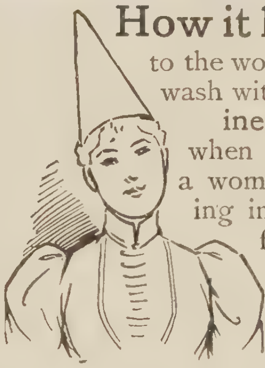
"At the time there will be a current of 10,000 volts running through the wire. When the point of the needle strikes the whale a current connection will be formed with the dynamo, and the whale will get the full shock of the high voltage and be dead in the fraction of a second."—Boston Globe.

The Armenian Fund

Previously acknowledged	$7,520 82
Mrs. M. A. C., Oakland, Md.	5 00
From Fairmont Schools (additional)	50
H. A., Bendersville, Pa	3 00
Utica Relief Association, Utica, N. Y.	12 25
A. A. R., Springfield, Mass	10 00
Lemonade Booth, Springfield, Mass.	2 00
Wellesley, Mass	5 00
Second Cong'l Church, Ashtabula, O.	5 00
Total	$7,563 57

A Good Child

is usually healthy, and both conditions are developed by use of proper food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant's food: so easily prepared that improper feeding is inexcusable and unnecessary.



How it looks, to the women who wash with Pearline (use without soap), when they see a woman washing in the old-fashioned way with soap—rubbing the clothes to pieces, rubbing away her strength, wearing herself out over the washboard! To these Pearline women, fresh from easy washing, she seems to "wear a fool's cap unawares." Everything's in favor of Pearline (use no soap)—easier work, quicker work, better work, safety, economy. There's not one thing against it. What's the use of washing in the hardest way, when it costs more money? 489

Millions NOW USE Pearline

Free Cycle Book

The Liberty catalogue isn't for sale—we don't sell our catalogues. Send your address—don't enclose stamp, use a postal—we will send you the Book about the Liberty.

THE LIBERTY CYCLE CO
4 Warren Street, New York

KODAK VALUES ARE REAL VALUES.

There are two kinds of list prices. Lists that are made to sell from—and lists that are made to give discounts from. Our catalogue list is the net retail price and no dealer is allowed to sell

POCKET KODAKS,
BULLS-EYES, BULLET CAMERAS or TRANSPARENT FILM

at less than such published prices.

Discounts may be tempting, but when you buy a camera at 10 per cent. off, how do you know that the purchaser before you did not get 20 off, and that the next one after you will not get 25? Kodak purchasers all get the bottom price and every one of them is sure that his neighbor got no better bargain than he.

KODAK VALUES ARE STANDARD VALUES—REAL VALUES.

Only good cameras can sell at list. The best cameras sell only at list.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.
Book of Kodaks Free. Rochester, N. Y.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion

Both caused by the inability of the stomach to properly assimilate the food. Pepsin, Bismuth, and Nux Vomica combined in has a triple effect—that of the actual solvent action of the Pepsin on all articles of food, the prevention of fermentation and formation of gases by the Bismuth, and the stimulant effect of the Nux Vomica (which is undoubtedly the best known tonic for nervous dyspepsia) on the secretion of the digestive fluids.

Trigestia

Dr. A. H. Shook, Red Hook, N. Y., says: "Of late I have been using your Trigestia tablets, and find your formula so good and the tablets so convenient that I recommend them highly."

Price 50c. and $1.00 per bottle. Send 25c. for trial bottle, postpaid.

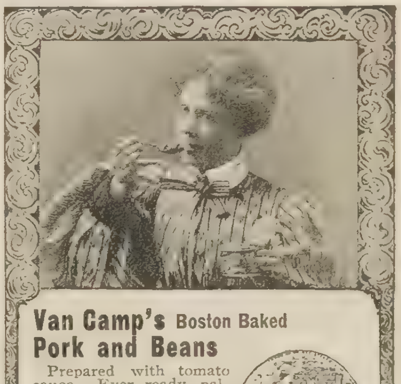
A. J. DITMAN, Chemist, 2 Barclay Street
NEW YORK



Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Ever ready, palatable hot or cold.

Choicest beans, juicy meat. Three sizes.

Send 6c for sample can.

VAN CAMP PACKING CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

The Business World

The Week The alarmists, pessimists, and bear speculators had their own way with the stock market last week and on Monday of this week. The political situation, the cessation of London buying of stocks, and the increased gold exports gave them their opportunity, and even the illness of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt was most unreasonably urged as a reason for lower prices. It is noted that the average of prices fell as low or lower than that at the time of the Venezuelan "panic," but professional critics term the week's condition as "depressed" rather than "panicky." There was a rally on Friday and Saturday, but an accented decline on Monday of this week, checked only at the close of the day. Railway stocks suffered almost universally and evenly, and the losses ran from one to eight per cent.; the so-called "Granger" stocks showed the greatest reductions. Governments declined to about 112 for coupon bonds. The industrials suffered considerably, especially Sugar, Leather, and Tobacco. The exports of gold formed a very serious feature of the week. The reserve is rapidly reaching the $90,000,000 level, and talk of a new bond issue is again current, but is generally denied. It is announced that the New York bankers have decided to turn $15,000,000 of their accumulations into the Treasury, and it was this report which on Monday afternoon checked the depression in the market. On Monday Burlington closed at 63¾ (asked), Louisville and Nashville at 45⅝, Lake Shore at 139, Missouri Pacific at 17, New York Central at 91½, St. Paul and Omaha at 33½, Western Union at 78, General Electric at 22, Manhattan at 93½, Michigan Central at 95, Chicago and Northwestern at 93, Illinois Central at 91½. As might be expected, the volume of general business trade is small, and the industrial markets dull; exports of wheat, however, were 2,963,000 bushels, as against 2,167,000 bushels the previous week, and 1,652,000 bushels in the corresponding week of last year. The total number of business failures for the week is given by "Bradstreet's" as 255, as compared with 219 the previous week, and 214 the corresponding week last year.

Chinese Railways The London "Times" says: "The text of the edict of the Emperor of China respecting the construction of railways in that country has now reached London. The Emperor begins by stating that he has read the memorial of the Ministry of War recommending the appointment of a high officer to take charge of the construction of railways. The latter, the Emperor observes, are most important for the maintenance of trade as well as for the employment of the masses of the people. Hence he has decided to encourage railways in every way. Recently he instructed the princes and ministers to commence with a line in the neighborhood of the capital, and they put the work of surveying a route between Peking and Tientsin under the care of Hu, a provincial judge. Hu's report has also been read by the Emperor, and from this it appears that the line, starting from Tientsin, would take the route of the western banks of the Grand Canal, and, passing northwards, wonld cross the southern parks and terminate at the Lukon bridge, in the western suburbs of Peking, traversing a distance of about 80 miles. The estimate for the construction is 2,400,000 taels. The Board of Revenue and the Viceroy of Chi-li are to supply the necessary funds. With reference to the grand trunk line from Peking to Han-kau, the Emperor says that, as the distance is great and the cost immense, he grants the privilege of constructing it to wealthy men in the various provinces who can show a capital of 10,000,000 taels or more. As this line will, therefore, be a purely commercial affair, government officials are ordered not to interfere with the gains or losses of the company, and the promoters are promised tokens of imperial approbation if they are successful. The edict is addressed not only to people in the capital, the provinces, and other dependencies of the empire, but also to 'our people laboring in other lands.'"

How the Roads Will be Built A struggle is going on between British and French, or Russo-French, syndicates competing for railway and other public works contracts in China. The French, on the whole, says a London press telegram, "seem to be getting the best of it. The Pekin government, according to advices received in London and Paris, besides assenting to the construction of a narrow-gauge single line from Tungchow to the Tonquin frontier, where it will join the French line, have given the Russo-French syndicate contracts for a projected trunk line between Hankow and Canton. Nominally this big enterprise will be carried out by native contractors, but with French money and by French engineers. Ten civil and railway engineers have just left Paris for the East in connection with these contracts. On the British side contracts have been secured for railway extension from Tientsin to Pekin. German and American private enterprises in the new development of China are not heard of"

British Armaments and Trade A manifesto on recent political events bearing on Imperial policy, trade, and armaments has been issued by the British Increased Armaments Protest Committee. "It concludes by stating (1) that the total of British trade has not by any means advanced in proportion with the area and population of the Empire—that, in brief, trade does not follow the flag, and that the disproportionate growth of armaments forms an increasingly severe strain upon industry; (2) that by far the greatest proportion of our trade always has been and still is, not with our colonies, but with foreign countries, and especially certain of them which are affected by our political policy; (3) that the proportion and in some cases the amount of colonial trade is not increasing, and that recent acquisitions which have involved a heavy political and financial burden have only infinitesimally increased that trade; (4) that British labor is losing and not gaining, and will probably lose still more heavily by the extension of the Empire; (5) and, finally, that a large and increasing portion of our wealth accrues from loans to and investments in foreign countries, a fact which helps to show the folly of perpetually increasing armaments, and gives a new reason for a non-provocative and conciliatory foreign policy."

The Biggest Farms in the World Some of our far Western ranches are still pretty large, but the Australian "station" has nothing to equal it on this side of the globe. An Oregonian paper thus describes some of these "stations:"

> One James Tyson has about 2,000,000 acres, or a territory nearly as large as three States like Rhode Island, one and one-half Delawares, or even one-third the size of Vermont, or one-seventeenth the size of Iowa. He has nearly 1,000,000 sheep or the equivalent in cattle. One Mr. McCaughey has one station of 1,214,877 acres, with some 500,000 sheep. James Wilson has 640,000 acres, or just 1,000 square miles, in one station, and over 400,000 sheep. I have a friend in the interior, whom I visited recently, who has 500,000 acres and 300,000 sheep. One can drive 100 miles on a straight line on his estate. Of this 500,000 acres, 70,000 are freehold, and the rest is leased from the Government of New South Wales on long time, for a definite annual rental. I have another friend, a member of the New South Wales Parliament, who holds 240,000 acres in Queensland on long lease, at an annual rental of one farthing, or one-half cent, per acre. Recently the Government sunk an artesian well on this land that flows 3,000,000 gallons per day, according to newspaper reports. Most of this station, I am informed, is good land. All these stations, like the petty dukedoms of Europe, are named, and the names, when pronounceable, are not easily forgotten. But their names serve a better purpose than mere ornament. As there is a considerable difference in altitude, latitude, soil, vegetation, breed or care of sheep, there is a very noticeable difference in the wool, and the reputation of the station has no little influence on the price of the respective clips. In the English trade reviews, or prices current, the names of the stations of Australia become as familiar to a large business class as are the names of the nations of the globe to the average educated man.

Mining in British Columbia The "Engineering and Mining Journal" says: "The attention that is now being paid to British Columbia as a promising and safe field for the investment of capital in mining enterprise is fully warranted by the past few years' development work, carried out under great difficulties. These difficulties have consisted, firstly, in the inaccessibility for many months in the year, under ordinary conditions, of some of the best mining territory, and, secondly, even in the summer months, want of continuous communication by water and rail. The latter obstacle is being rapidly overcome, and the most important camps, before snow comes again, will be in much better shape for regular shipments, and at fair freight rates instead of those they have hitherto experienced. The former drawback, viz., that of a long and severe winter, cannot be changed, but it will be materially mended in the future by the railroad extensions now being carried out, and which will be kept open just as are the Canadian Pacific and other northern roads."

Flax Culture The experimental culture of flax in the Puget Sound country, conducted this year over a wide area under the supervision of the Puyallup station, promises to be attended with satisfactory results. The establishment of a plant for handling the raw product on Bellingham Bay is also in progress, and next season may see Puget Sound flax culture assuming commercial importance. Many tests of the product have been made by manufacturers and experts, in every case returning the most encouraging results by comparison with the best product of Europe, both in quality of fiber and amount of yield, and also in the value of the seed for commercial purposes. The Seattle Chamber of Commerce, which recently sent a large quantity of flax straw to Barbour & Sons, the great manufacturers of Lisburn, Ireland, have been informed that the samples were excellent and very similar to that grown in the Courtrai District, Belgium, the recognized home of superior flax.

The British Consular Service The seemingly paradoxical statement is made by the English trade paper, the "Iron and Coal Trades Review," that the United Kingdom has perhaps the most complete and costly consular service in the world, and yet that it has on the whole unquestionably the most ineffective, from the traders' point of view. "This," the journal quoted says, "is a broad and sweeping charge to make in reference to any branch of the service, but, unfortunately, it is 'an ower true tale.' Every trader, every manufacturer, every exporter knows to his sorrow how difficult it is to get the consular and diplomatic officers of her Britannic Majesty's Government to meet their reasonable views and aspirations in reference to commercial affairs. Our old tradition of the service, which has become crystallized into a confirmed habit, is that the consular officer is not required to take any initiative in introducing or promoting business, but has simply, like Captain Cuttle, to 'stand by' until he is called on to do something, which is usually a mere matter of routine, and of no particular service to anybody. The German consul is generally a much more sentient being. He is always ready, perhaps for a substantial consideration, to aid in advancing the interests of his country's commerce, whether it affects the community or merely the individual."

FINANCIAL

AMERICAN FIRE
INSURANCE COMPANY
A.D. 1810.
Office, Company's Building,
308 & 310 Walnut St.,
Philadelphia

THE Bond Record List of Safe Investments

We shall be happy to send our list of safe investments to any reader of The Outlook desiring the same.

This List includes only such bonds and stocks as in our judgment are likely to be regular interest and dividend payers. It is pre-eminently for the use of investors, and is intended for those who, having no special knowledge of securities, fear to trust their own judgment. It may be safely assumed that those who take this List as a standard and always consult it before investing will rarely, if ever, suffer any loss in principal, and at most only a temporary delay, in exceptional times, in the receipt of interest. Investments based upon THE BOND RECORD LIST, and carefully watched in the light of the information to be derived from the regular reading of THE BOND RECORD, will give better satisfaction and be less trouble than those made in any other way.

In order to be kept thoroughly informed concerning the condition of corporations in which you may have money invested, it is advisable to subscribe to THE BOND RECORD, and to study its articles with care.

HARVEY FISK & SONS

Dealers in United States Bonds and Other Selected Securities

24 Nassau Street, New York

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York

Formerly New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co.
Mutual Life Building
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.

Capital, - - - $2,000,000
Surplus, - - - $2,000,000

ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS, AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.

DIRECTORS

Samuel D. Babcock,
George F. Baker,
George S. Bowdoin,
Frederic Cromwell,
Walter R. Gillette,
Robert Goelet,
G. G. Haven,
Oliver Harriman,
R. Somers Hayes,
Charles R. Henderson,
Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
Augustus D. Juilliard,
James N. Jarvie,
Richard A. McCurdy,
Walter G. Oakman,
Alexander E. Orr,
Henry H. Rogers,
Henry W. Smith,
H. McK. Twombly,
Frederick W. Vanderbi:
William C. Whitney.

YOUR RELATIONS ABROAD will be greatly enhanced if you use
CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES
for traveling and for remitting.
Issued by the AGENCY OF
THE U. S. CHEQUE BANK, L'd
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Manager,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

£

YOU SELL — WE BUY

Do you want to sell a WESTERN MORTGAGE or Western Land—avoid foreclosure costs—stop sending good money after bad—get a good 5 per cent. investment instead?

State exact location, condition of title, and your lowest price. Over $2,000,000 in Western securities successfully handled by the present management of this corporation. THE BOSTON REALTY, INDEMNITY AND TRUST CO., 33 Equitable Building, Boston. Send for our Bond List.

The Australian "Dry-Air" Treatment,

Hyomei,

will cure your sneezing, sniffling, nagging

Hay-Fever

and do it quickly. Don't wait until your regular attack has come—prevent it. Hyomei also cures by inhalation asthma, catarrh, bronchitis, etc. Don't dose the stomach to cure the respiratory organs.

Price by mail, $1.00.

Dear Sir: BROOKLYN, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1895.
Booth's Pocket Inhaler works like a charm. The first inhalation gave relief. It is a blessing to humanity and I am sorry it is not better known. I add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."
Sincerely yours, (Rev.) J. M. FARRAR, D. D.

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs which cause disease in the respiratory organs. The air, charged with Hyomei, is inhaled at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air-cells, is exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief. It is highly recommended by physicians, clergymen, public speakers and thousands who have been helped and cured.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00, to any part of the United States; consisting of pocket inhaler, made of deodorized hard rubber, a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send your address: my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei cures. Are you open to conviction? Extra bottles of Hyomei inhalant by mail, 50 cents. Hyomei Balm, for all skin diseases, by mail, 25 cents

R. T. BOOTH, 23 East 20th Street, New York.

KNICKERBOCKER.

No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address

KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.

Drink HIRES Rootbeer when you're hot; when you're thirsty; when callers come. At any and all times drink HIRES Rootbeer.

Made only by The Charles E. Hires Co., Philadelphia. A 25c. package makes 5 gallons. Sold everywhere.

Recreation Department

It will give The Outlook Company much pleasure to assist you in planning your

Summer Outing

if you will write stating fully what you desire. No charge is made for this service.

Suggestions for planning a vacation or a trip anywhere in the world; printed information, if issued, concerning any Transportation Line, any Tour, any Hotel, or any Pleasure or Health Resort in any part of the world, will be sent on request, without charge, to any Outlook reader.

Address Recreation Department, The Outlook, 13 Astor Place, New York.

Natural Beauty

Just now the territory along the line of the Lehigh Valley System, which extends through Nature's Wonderland, from New York to Buffalo and Niagara Falls, is most interesting to the tourist. The foliage is in full bloom, the flowers are wearing their brightest hues, and as the train speeds along over rippling streams, through verdant valleys, and glides easily over the mountain grades, one is impressed with the natural beauty and grandeur of this route. Fast trains are operated between New York and Buffalo and Niagara Falls, there being four trains westbound and five eastbound daily. All locomotives burn anthracite coal, and the torture to the flesh of hot cinders and detriment to clothing caused by the soot, so highly objectionable on roads burning soft coal, are agreeably missed. Dining-cars à la carte are attached to day express trains. This is also the route of the Black Diamond Express, the handsomest trains in the world, composed of library, café, and dining cars, sumptuous day coaches, and magnificent Pullman observation parlor cars. For information, etc., address Chas. S. Lee, General Passenger Agent, Philadelphia.

The Perplexing Problem of a summer outing is solved by the handsome new book just issued by the Delaware and Hudson Railroad, containing illustrations of localities, hotels, and boarding-houses, maps, rates, routes, etc. Sent free on receipt of 4 cents postage. J. W. Burdick, General Passenger Agent, Albany, N. Y. H. G. Young, Second Vice-President.

The Union Pacific "Overland Limited" is now making the fastest time of any train to Utah and California points, and the service, consisting of buffet, smoking and library cars, chair cars, sleepers, and diners, is unsurpassed.

TRAVELERS' R. R. GUIDE Formerly Appletons'.

R. R. Maps and Time-Tables. Conveniently Indexed. Monthly—25 cents. 24 Park Place, N. Y.

EUROPE

International Navigation Company's Lines

SAILING EVERY WEDNESDAY

From Piers 14 and 15, North River, New York (foot of Fulton St.)

AMERICAN LINE

NEW YORK—SOUTHAMPTON (London—Paris)

New York..July 29, 10 A.M.
Paris......Aug. 5, 10 A.M.
St Louis...Aug. 12, 10 A.M.
St Paul....Aug. 19, 10 A.M.
Paris.... Aug. 26, 10 A.M.
New York(Sat.)Aug.29,10AM
St Louis....Sept. 2, 10 A.M.
St Paul.....Sept. 9, 10 A.M.
Paris.....Sept. 16, 10 A.M.
New York(Sat.)Sep.19,10AM
St Louis..Sept. 23, 10 A.M.
St Paul...Sept. 30, 10 A.M.
Paris.......Oct. 7, 10 A.M.
St Louis...Oct. 14, 10 A.M.
St Paul....Oct. 21, 10 A.M.
Paris......Oct. 28, 10 A.M.

RED STAR LINE

NEW YORK—ANTWERP

Noordland, July 29, 12 noon
Friesland.. Aug. 5, 12 noon
Kensington, Aug. 12, 12 noon
Westernl'nd, Aug. 19, 12noon
Southwark, Aug. 26, 12 noon
Noordland, Sept. 2, 12 noon
Friesland..Sept. 9, 12 noon
Kensington, Sept. 16, 12 noon
Westernl'nd, Sept. 23, 12noon
Sotuhwark, Sept. 30, 10 A.M.

INTERNATIONAL NAVIGATION COMPANY

6 Bowling Green, New York

305-307 Walnut St., Philadelphia.
143 La Salle St., Chicago.
609 Market St. (Grand Hotel Bldg.), San Francisco.

MELROSE, SCOTLAND

The Abbey Hotel ABBEY GATE AND George and Abbotsford Hotel

HIGH STREET.—The only First-class Hotels in Melrose, both overlooking the ruins, and only two minutes' walk from Railway Station. Hotel 'Buses attend all Trains. G. HAMILTON, Proprietor.

CHESTER, ENGLAND QUEEN HOTEL

First-Class Hotel, connected with the General Railway by covered Way. Lift. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

Europe

CROWN HOTEL Scarborough, Eng.

Occupying the finest position in ths beautiful seaside resort. Electric lights and bells throughout. Continental entrance lounge newly added. Terms on application. DOUGLAS GORDON (late of the Gordon Hotels, Lim.).

Stratford-on-Avon, England Golden Lion Hotel

This favorite Inn was known in Shakespeare's time as "Ye Peacocke Inn," 1613. JOHN FRY, Prop.

Lake of Como, Italy

GRAND HOTEL BELLAGIO

AND DEPENDANCE

HOTEL VILLA SERBELLONI

One of the finest Hotels in Europe. The most beautiful site on the Italian Lakes. Perfect sanitary arrangements Electric light. Telegraph in the hotel. L. BREITSCHMID, P.

Hotel Mont-Fleuri

TERRITET MONTREUX LAKE OF GENEVA

600 Meters Above the Sea

First-class Hotel; most delightful and healthy situation; splendid view over the lake and the Alps; highly recommended to American families; summer and winter residence; lift, electric lights; moderate terms; omnibus at station Territet.

Circulars of The Outlook.

LUCERNE, SWITZERLAND Hotel d'Angleterre

First class; lift; finest situation in Lucerne; arrangement de pension; prices moderate; opens April 1st. F. HEFFEN, Prop.

INTERLAKEN, SWITZERLAND

Hotel AND Pension St. George

Situated directly on the main promenade, opposite the park and the mountains. Cable-cars connect with steamboats and railroads. Highly recommended. C. LICHTENBERGER.

HOLLAND

AMSTERDAM

AMSTEL HOTEL

The largest hotel in Amsterdam. Strongly recommended to families. Every moderate comfort. Moderate prices

---

Munich, Germany "Bayerischer Hof" (BAVARIA)

Most fashionable Hotel

250 ROOMS & SALOONS

Electric Light, Lift, etc. Moderate terms.

Prop're, TH. SEIF^we. Director, H. SCHLENK.

European Summer Resort

INNSBRUCK, TYROL, AUSTRIA

1,900 feet above the sea, with, dry, bracing climate; center for Coaching Trips and Excursions of all kinds; fine university, hospital, &c.

HOTEL TIROL (Open all the year.) Large, airy, sunny rooms, well furnished; superior cuisine; modern conveniences. Best references. Illustrated pamphlets on application. CARL LANDSEE, Prop'r.

TRAVEL

17 HOURS TO PARADISE

THE BEAUTIFUL LAND OF EVANGELINE

On the map it's Nova Scotia; in literature it's called "Acadia, Evangeline's Land;" but every vacationist calls it "The Summer Paradise." A land of cool nights and bright days; of enchanting views and perfect climate; a land of rest and recreation; of lakes and streams, and fish and game.—Then the 17-hour sail on

THE FINE STEEL STEAMERS THE "BOSTON" AND "YARMOUTH"

the fastest, stanchest, steadiest steamers that sail out of Boston Harbor. You leave Lewis Wharf, Boston, every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday at 12 noon—the next morning you are at Yarmouth, the portal of the Province. "Beautiful Nova Scotia," a handsome 60-page book, with 40 photo-engravings, will tell you all about it—where to go—what to do—how much it costs—everything. Write for it (putting in 10 cents for postage) or send for free circular to J. F. SPINNEY, Agent

YARMOUTH STEAMSHIP CO.
43 Lewis Wharf, Boston, Mass.

LOW PRICES FOR BOARD in Attractive Summer Homes.—Write the Maine Central R.R., Pass. Dept., Portland, Maine. Full summer service in effect June 21st to White Mountains, Bar Harbor, Rangeley Lakes, Moosehead Lake, St. Andrews. Guide-books, folders, and full information on application.

RAMSDELL LINE

Steamers leave Pier 24 N. R., foot Franklin St., for Cranston's, West Point, Cold Spring, Cornwall, Fishkill Landing, and Newburg, week days, 5 P.M.; Sunday, 9 A.M.; 132d St. & N. R. 9:25 A.M. Returning leave Newburg daily 7 P.M. U S Hotel at Newburg landing. Dinner 50 cents

---

SUMMER HOMES ON LONG ISLAND

"Long Island," a new illustrated descriptive book, and "Summer Homes," a book describing hotels and boarding-houses on Long Island, free upon application at 113, 192, 950, and 1313 Broadway, New York; at 333 Fulton St., Eagle Summer Bureau, and Flatbush Ave. station L. I. R.R., Brooklyn; or send (4) cents in stamps for "Long Island," or (2) cents for "Summer Homes," to H. M. SMITH, T. Man. L. I. R.R., Long Island City, N. Y.

SUMMER COTTAGES

Cottage at Silver Bay on Lake George

Well furnished, either with board or without, will be let at nominal rent for remainder of season. Apply to HAROLD R. CODMAN, Silver Bay, Warren Co., N.Y.

HOTELS AND RESORTS

Canada

Miss Leonard's BOARDING-HOUSE

Established 1865. QUEBEC, CANADA

Colorado

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.: The Antlers

Illustrated book, describing Colorado Springs, sent on request by E. BARNETT, Proprietor.

Connecticut

Pequot House and Cottages

NEW LONDON, CONN.

NOW OPEN

"A delightful combination of seashore and country life at the Pequot."

A number of furnished cottages, with hotel service and board, to let for the season.

For terms and circulars address

BLANCHARD & HAGER

Connecticut

WEANTINAUG INN
New Milford, Conn.
Under new management. Accommodations for coaching parties. OSCAR FLORENCE, Manager.

Maine

BAR HARBOR, MAINE, RODICK HOUSE
300 rooms. Rates, $2 to $4 per day. Season rates on application. ALBERT W. BEE, Lessee and Manager.

CASCO BAY, COAST OF MAINE
The quiet and comfort of home life, with every advantage of the seaside. Delightful situation; water on three sides; charming views; pure air; remarkable spring water; excellent table; reasonable rates.
S. G. SIMPSON, Brunswick, Maine.

"THE BAY VIEW" Ferry Beach, Bay View,
Saco, Me.—A unique summer resort; seashore and country combined. Pure spring water; perfect drainage; accommodates 200. Send for illustrated booklet.
Mrs. E. MANSON & SON, Owners and Managers.

PARKER HOUSE
KENNEBUNKPORT, MAINE
CHARLES S. PATTEN - - - - - - - Proprietor
Send for illustrated booklet

THE LOOKOUT
(ON ISRAEL'S HEAD)
New house; very high; large rooms with grand ocean and country views; fine beach and picturesque cliffs.
GEO. H. LITTLEFIELD, Ogunquit, Me.

POPHAM BEACH, MAINE
THE ROCKLEDGE
FINEST VIEW ON THE ATLANTIC COAST
A thoroughly modern first-class hotel. Excellent Cuisine, fine Orchestra, perfect drainage, grand beach and surf bathing. No hay fever. Rates reasonable. Address
J. D. FORSYTH, Mgr.

THE BEECHES PARIS HILL, ME.
For Recreation and Health. Electricity, Massage, the Rest Cure. Send for circular. C. F. HAMMOND, M.D

WEST BALDWIN, Me. Pine Grove Cottage. One of the most desirable summer resorts in Maine, charmingly situated in a grove of fragrant pines; elegant, large, airy sleeping rooms; pure spring water; fine drives; on M.C.R.R.; fishing and gunning. Address S. P. MURCH.

Massachusetts

Powder Point Hall
and Cottages, DUXBURY, MASS.
Good boating, bathing, and shade-trees. Illustrated circular. "The Pilgrim Town of Duxbury."

Hill's Mansion House Easthampton Mass.
First-class in all its appointments. Send for descriptive circular to WILLIAM HILL, Manager.

HOTEL TUDOR Nahant, Mass.
OPEN JUNE TO OCTOBER
A hotel strictly of the First Class.
WILLIAM CATTO, Proprietor.

BERKSHIRE HILLS
PECK'S INN
VAN DEUSENVILLE STATION, N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., BERKSHIRE DIVISION
SEASON, JUNE 1 TO NOV. 1. Address for terms, &c.,
PECK'S INN, Great Barrington, Mass.

NEW MARLBORO INN
BERKSHIRE HILLS, MASS.
1,500 feet above the sea. Rates to suit the times.
G. FARINTOSH

Marblehead Rockmere Point COVE COTTAGES
Will open Ninth Season. For health, pure air, fine views, unequaled. Prominent headland; grounds and beach for bathing, boating, and fishing private for our guests. Special rates for June. Address J. R. GILES.

VERANDA HOUSE ISLAND OF NANTUCKET
Will open June 15th. High, healthful; fine ocean views. Pleasant, homelike house, accommodating about 100 guests. Mrs. S. G. DAVENPORT.

Portable Camping Houses
The thing to take to the Seashore or Mountains
All sizes. Moderate in price. Good floors and roofs. Nicely finished. Perfect protection from wind and rain. No nails or screws to put in. Any one can put them up. Easily handled and shipped.
Send 4c. in stamps for Illustrated Catalog.
AMERICAN PAT. PORTABLE HOUSE MFG. CO.
CORONA, L. I., N. Y.

We make all kinds of Frame Houses, large or small, Club Houses, Churches, Chapels, Cottages, &c.

Massachusetts

Turks Head Inn
ROCKPORT, MASS.
Extreme point of Cape Ann, overlooking Thatcher's Island. Fine sea views and bathing beach. Will open for the season in June. For plans and circulars address J. F. HARVEY, The Ericson, 373 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston.

BERKSHIRE HILLS
THE GREYLOCK
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
The best hotel, and the most beautiful village, in the Berkshires. Open May 15th. For circulars or rates address SEISER AND VINING. Proprietors.

New Hampshire

The GRAMERCY THE WHITE MTS. BETHLEHEM, N.H.
1,600 feet above sea-level. Delightful summer home for families. Send for booklet. E. STIMPSON.

An Ideal Mountain Resort
Jerusalem Spring House
CANAAN, N. H.
Terms moderate. Special rates for June, Sept., and Oct. Jerusalem Spring Water challenges the world for its medicinal qualities, purity, and excellence. D. H. MAYNARD.

Forest Hills Hotel
and Cottages
HEART OF THE WHITE MTS.
Golf link, wheel track, casino. Up to date in every respect. MAY TO NOVEMBER.
J. W. DUDLEY & CO., Proprietors,
Franconia, N. H.

PLINY RANGE HOUSE
WHITE MOUNTAINS
GEO. W. CRAWFORD & SON, Jefferson Highland, N. H.

The Grand Mont Vernon, N. H.
1,100 feet above the sea. Season June 25 to Oct. 1
HARRY A. EDGERLY, Proprietor
220 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.

PROFILE HOUSE AND COTTAGES
WHITE MOUNTAINS, N. H.
OPENS JUNE 29. CLOSES OCTOBER 1.
Address Hotel Vendôme, Boston, or Profile House N. H. TAFT & GREENLEAF.

WHITE MTS.
THE NEW MT. PLEASANT HOUSE
OPENS JULY 1st. The new cottage now open, with single and double rooms at low rates. Parlor-cars from New York through by daylight. ANDERSON & PRICE, Mgrs.; also of Hotel Ormond, Florida.

New Jersey

THE FENIMORE
One and a half blocks from ocean; capacity 200. For circulars address THOS. NOBLE, Asbury Park, N. J

ASBURY PARK, N. J.
COLEMAN HOUSE
Directly on the beach. Opens June 25. New passenger elevator. For rates, diagrams, and information address A. P. MARGETTS, Chief Clerk, Asbury Park, N. J., or F. H. SCHOFIELD, 1 Madison Av., N.Y. City.

BERNARDSVILLE, N. J.
SOMERSET INN
AND COTTAGES Open June 3d
35 miles from New York, on the D., L. and W. R. R., in the Highlands of New Jersey, via Barclay or Christopher St. Ferry. GEO. W. TUTTLE, Manager.

Norman House OCEAN GROVE N. J.
Half-way between Auditorium and Ocean

WILBURTON-BY-THE-SEA
SPRING LAKE, N. J.
OPENS FOR THE SEASON ON JUNE 13TH.
R. K. LETCHWORTH.

ON THE OCEAN FRONT!
"The Paradise of Watering Places"
SEVEN MILES BELOW LONG BRANCH
MONMOUTH HOUSE
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.
Open from June 20 to October.
BENJAMIN H. YARD, Proprietor.
Write for descriptive pamphlet, containing terms and information, New York Office, "Scofield's," Metropolitan Building, Madison Square.

New York City

Good Living—
good beds—good service—scrupulous cleanliness—quiet—central location. These are a few of the good points of the Westminster Hotel
cor. 16th Street and Irving Place, one block east of Union Square, New York
American Plan; $3.50 per day and up
4th ave. cars to and from Grand Central Depot, one block away; Broadway cable, two blocks.

New York

Heart of the Adirondacks
ADIRONDACK LODGE
Location perfect—a cool and delightful combination of lake, forest, and mountain. Cuisine and accommodations of the best. Beautiful shady walks; mountain-climbing, &c. Address New York Agency, 147 West 88th St.

CATSKILL MOUNTAIN HOUSE
Open June 20. 3½ Hours from New York.
CATSKILL MOUNTAIN HOUSE CO., Catskill N. Y.

THE BANNER HOUSE
Chateaugay Lake, N.Y. J. S. KIRBY, Prop'r.

(For other advertisements in this department see following page.)

New York

HIGHLAND PINES SANITARIUM FOR LUNG TROUBLES

Elevation, 1,500 feet above sea; balsamic air of the pines; magnificent views; broad piazzas; electric bells and modern improvements; spring and summer best for treatment; Edson Aseptolin and other modern treatments for Lung and Throat diseases. Address
HIGHLAND PINES, Corning, N. Y.

CHATEAUGAY CHASM HOUSE

CHATEAUGAY, N. Y.—Rates, $8 to $15. Open June 1. For pamphlet address GEO. H. CRAPON.

GLEASON SANITARIUM
ELMIRA, N. Y.
1852 (Formerly Elmira Water Cure) 1896

REST AND RECREATION

GUESTS RECEIVED WITH OR WITHOUT MEDICAL ATTENTION

Pure Spring Water; Good Table; Fine Views; Pure Air. All forms of Baths, Electricity, and Massage. All modern improvements. Under the care of medical graduates of long experience. Send for illustrated Booklet.

The Highland House
GARRISON-ON-HUDSON, N.Y.

Directly opposite West Point, 50 miles, 1¼ hours from New York City. A select family hotel. Pure mountain air; purest spring water; sanitary arrangements modern and perfect. Excellent table a specialty. Tennis, croquet, bowling, beautiful drives, fine wheeling. Open in May. Write for booklet. J. W. & G. W. GARRISON.

GLEN LAKE HOUSE
FAMILY HOTEL. TERMS REASONABLE

Dry mountain air; beautiful scenery; fishing; boating; all amusements.
E. BIRDSALL, Mgr. S. T. BIRDSALL, Prop.
Glen Lake, Warren Co., N. Y.

"INTERPINES" Wickham Park, Goshen, N. Y.

A BEAUTIFUL, QUIET, RESTFUL "HOME."

Particularly adapted to Chronic and Nervous Invalids of refinement who require all the appointments of an elegant modern home, together with the constant attention of skilled physicians and trained nurses. Address
FREDERICK W. SEWARD, M.D., Resident Physician.

Catskill Mountains
Hotel St. Charles
OPENS JUNE 1st

Delightful month in the mountains. Hotel complete with every modern convenience, including passenger elevator. For booklets, rates, etc., apply to F. H. SCOFIELD, Metropolitan Building, Madison Square, New York; or to J. H. BURTIS, JR., Propr., Hunter, N. Y.

TREMBLEAU HALL

LAKE CHAMPLAIN, Port Kent, N. Y. Open June first. 'Bus meets all boats and trains. Write for illustrated booklet. FARRELL & ADGATE.

WILLEY HOUSE
IN THE ADIRONDACKS

2,000 ft. above sea-level. For illustrated circular address HARVEY WILLEY, Keene, N. Y.

Adirondack House
KEENE VALLEY, N. Y.

S. KELLEY, Prop'r. Illustrated Booklet on application.

FLUME COTTAGE, Keene Valley, N.Y.—Heart of Ad'k Mts.; site superior to all others; magnificent views; very healthful; walks and drives; abundant shade delicious water; excellent table; illus. circ.; $8 and $9.

New York

FERNWOOD At head of Lake George, N. Y. A resort of exceptional excellence at moderate rates; an ideal place for parties wishing to economize in their expenditures. Illustrated books free.

Adirondacks INDIAN POINT HOUSE CHATEAUGAY LAKE

Daily mail; cuisine perfect; $8 to $10 per week. For illustrated circular address R. M. SHUTTS, Merrill, N.Y.

BEAR AND FOX INN AND COTTAGES
Onteora-in-the-Catskills

TOWN & COUNTRY RENTAL CO., 115 East 23d St., N. Y.

THE ULSTER Pine Hill Ulster Co. N. Y.
CATSKILL MOUNTAINS
Open June 17 to Oct. 1, 12th Season

Send for Circular. H. F. BAKER, Prop.

W. C. T. U. OCEAN HOUSE

Point o' Woods, L. I., N. Y—A restful summer home on the Great South Beach, between the Bay and the Ocean. 40 miles from N. Y. Fine fishing, boating, surf and still-water bathing. Terms moderate. Open July 1st.

FERNWOOD HALL
LAKE OZONIA

One of the most healthful and beautiful Homes in the Adirondacks. Send for Booklet.
FREDERIC M. HEATH, Owner, Potsdam, N. Y

Mizzen Top Hotel
Quaker Hill, Dutchess Co., N. Y.

Two hours from New York, by Harlem R.R. A first-class family hotel. Now open. 1,200 feet elevation.
N. S. HOWE, - - - - - Proprietor
Post-Office and R.R. Station, Pawling, N. Y.

The Adirondack Inn SCHROON LAKE, N. Y.

"THE COOLEST PLACE IN TOWN." NO BAR.
PROP'S, A. E. & A. R. ROGERS.

Dr. Strong's Sanitarium
Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

For health or pleasure. The appointments of a first-class Hotel. Elevator, electric bells, sun-parlor, and promenade on the roof. Suites of rooms with baths. Massage, Electricity, all baths and health appliances. New Turkish, Russian, and Natural Sulphur-Water baths. Dry tonic air, Saratoga water, croquet, lawn-tennis, etc. Open all the year. Send for illustrated circular.

IN THE LAND
OF PEACE
The Ontio, Unadilla, N. Y.

CEDAR GROVE COTTAGE, on Lake Champlain, 3 miles south of Hotel Champlain. Large, airy rooms; broad piazzas; fine walks and drives; boating, bathing, and fishing. Circulars. W. H. REED, Valcour, N.Y.

NEPTUNE BRINE BATHS
For Rheumatism, Gout, and Nervous Diseases
The Glen Springs
A Sanatorium for those Seeking Health and Rest

A medical staff experienced in the use of the Waters. All approved therapeutic appliances and modern improvements. ALL FORMS OF BATHS.

VALUABLE MINERAL SPRINGS

NEPTUNE SPRING is a 67 per cent. Brine, containing the largest amount of Chloride of Calcium of any Spring in the world. Location overlooks thirty miles of Seneca Lake. Send for illustrated pamphlet.
WM. E. LEFFINGWELL, Manager, Watkins, N.Y

PLEASANT FARM, White Lake, Sull. Co., N. Y.—$6.00 per week; R.R. depot, Liberty, N.Y.; free transportation; reference, R. J. Kent, D.D., 605 Hancock St., Brooklyn, N. Y. S. KERR, Prop.

Oregon

PORTLAND, OR.—THE PORTLAND. One of the most complete and elegant hotels in this country; American plan; $3.00 per day and upward.
W. H. BARMORE, Manager.

Pennsylvania

Mountain House
Delaware Water Gap, Pa.

Twenty-sixth season. A comfortable, attractively located, popular house at this well-known resort. Send for circular. Mrs. THEO. HAUSER & SON.

WALTER'S SANITARIUM
Walter's Park or Wernersville, Pa.

Addressing us, always use the name WALTER. The value of anything is proved by its imitations. There is only one WALTER. Send for illustrated catalogue.

Rhode Island

WATCH HILL, R. I.
Plimpton Hotel and Annexes
Open Saturday, June 20th

Under entirely new management. A comfortable seaside home at very reasonable rates. For circulars and other information address ALFRED S. AMER.

Vermont

BOARDERS WANTED at a comfortable farmhouse in the Green Mountains. Good board, beautiful scenery, pure water, and bracing air. Quiet and retired. Address E. W. BARROWS, Dorset, Vt.

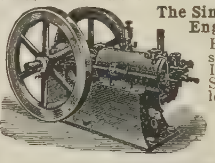
ARCADIA RETREAT
IN THE GREEN MTS.

An ideal place for rest and recreation. Beautiful scenery; pure air; pure water; fishing and boating. Information at The Outlook office or address J. R. Parker, West Burke, Vt.

Virginia

HOTEL ALPHIN Hot Springs, Bath County, Virginia. Three hundred yards from the Mammoth Bath House. All modern improvements; opens June 10th, 1896; remains open throughout the entire year. Address L. C. ALPHIN, Proprietor.

THE CHICAGO GAS AND GASOLINE ENGINE



The Simplest Gas and Gasoline Engine on the Market.

Has no equal for absolute, steady speed and durability. It is a dwarf in size, but a Samson in strength. Catalogue sent on application.

MANUFACTURED BY
J. J. NORMAN CO.
64 and 66 So. Clinton St.,
Chicago, Ill.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Want advertisements of thirty words or less will be published under this heading at one dollar a week. Four cents a week is charged for each word in excess of thirty.

WANTED—By an intelligent, capable young woman, a position as companion and secretary. Understands stenography and typewriting, and is accustomed to responsibility. No objection to traveling. Highest references. Seven years in present position. Address Miss W., 124 West Second St., Los Angeles, Cal.

A LADY TEACHER, of experience in several of the best private schools in New York, viz., "The Charlier Institute," "Columbia Institute," is open for an engagement. Address "TEACHER," care Rev. A. D. Vail, D.D., 104 East 86th Street, New York.

EDUCATED AND REFINED SOUTHERN WIDOW, aged thirty-eight years, desires position as housekeeper or companion. Thoroughly adapted to social or domestic duties. Can take full charge. Address BALTIMORE, care The Outlook.

A RETIRED PASTOR will take into his home one boy, giving especial attention to the formation of character, and assistance in studies if necessary. Location near the State Model School. Address 57 Model Ave., Trenton, N. J.

COMPANION OR HOUSEKEEPER.—Wanted, by a young lady of three years' experience, a position. Has taken charge of house and children during parents' absence. References exchanged. Address No. 1,638, care The Outlook.

THE PRINCIPALS of a day school twelve miles from New York would like to receive into their home three young ladies. Pleasant family life; opportunities to enjoy art and music in the city. F. T., No. 1,561, care The Outlook.

A LADY with furnished house wishes to rent to a small family with whom she could board. Cool and shady; location pleasant; terms very reasonable. Address Mrs. S. Y. LUM, Rutherford, New Jersey.

A LADY desires a situation as a companion or governess for young children. References given and required. Address Miss RANDOLPH, Colleen P. O., Nelson Co., Virginia.

WANTED TO RENT IN MONTCLAIR, N. J., house of 8 or 9 rooms. House must have modern improvements. Address No. 1,618, care The Outlook.

PUPIL NURSES wanted in suburban hospital. Tuition free and services paid for while learning. Address HOSPITAL, No. 1,626, Outlook Office.

EDUCATIONAL

New York City

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY

Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established 1855. 3 East 14th St., N. Y.

The Misses Ely's School for Girls

RIVERSIDE DRIVE
85th and 86th Streets, New York

The Misses Graham (Successors to the Misses Green)

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS (established 1816).
New location. 176 West 72d Street, Sherman Square,
NEW YORK

CLASSICAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Certificate accepted by Smith, Vassar, and Wellesley. EDITH H. GREGORY, ELIZABETH P. GETTY, Principals. Resident pupils. 2034 Fifth Avenue, New York City

MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S

Boarding and Day School for Girls, 15 West 86th Street, NEW YORK CITY. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and Chaperonage for special students.

Miss Peebles and Miss Thompson's Boarding and Day School for Girls

30, 32, and 34 East 57th St., New York
Special students admitted.

160-162 West 74th Street, New York

MADEMOISELLE VELTIN

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS COLLEGE PREPARATION
FIRE-PROOF SCHOOL BUILDING.

A DESIRABLE SCHOOL IN NEW YORK CITY FOR SALE

Particulars address WEST SIDE, No. 1,554, Outlook office

NEW YORK, 160 Joralemon St., Brooklyn Heights.—Miss Katharine L. Maltby's Home and School. Highest city advantages. Regular expense for school year, $550. Eighth year. Circulars upon application.

California

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont, Cal.—Full College courses leading to degrees of B.A., B.L., B.S. Degrees recognized by University of California and other similar graduate schools. Thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. An Academic course. Preparatory school preparing for all institutions connected with the College. Address C. G. BALDWIN, President.

Colorado

COLORADO CLIMATE

Mr. F. C. Thornton, a graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, wishes to receive three boys to educate. Every home comfort given under Mrs. Thornton's care. Their home is a large ranch twelve miles from Colorado Springs, where riding and other healthful exercises are provided. References, Wm. F. Slocum, Jr., Pres. Colorado College, Colorado Springs; Prof. T. S. Woolsey, Yale College, Conn. Address F. C. THORNTON, Franceville Junction, Colorado.

Canada

ONTARIO LADIES' COLLEGE

Whitby, Ontario.—Pronounced by Minister of Education "the best equipped college for women in Canada." The sanitary arrangements are perfect. Steam heating, electric lighting, new Pipe Organ, &c. Apply for Calendar to Rev. J. J. HARE, Ph.D., Prin.

Connecticut

Brookfield Center, Fairfield Co., Conn.

The Curtis School for Young Boys

A strong life in school and out, full of normal activities and healthy conditions. A clean moral atmosphere, a loyalty, a high purpose—full of help for your boy's manhood. Home life; single rooms. $500. 22d year. A book full of suggestion. FREDERICK S CURTIS.

THE CHESHIRE ACADEMY

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS
For College or for Business.
The 103d year will open Sept. 16.
Address E. D. WOODBURY, Principal, Cheshire, Conn.

The Housatonic Valley Institute Cornwall Conn.

Among the Berkshire Hills of Northwestern Connecticut. Home School for boys. Classical, Scientific, Business, Preparatory Courses. Thirteenth year.
H. B. MacFarland, S. B., L. W. Arnold, A. B., Principals

The Misses Stowe Principals of the HOMESTEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Greenwich, Ct.

A Family School for 12 Girls.

Academy and Home for 10 Boys

GREENWICH, CONN.

71st year of Academy, 17th of Home. Preparation for College or Business. Absolutely healthful location and genuine home, with refined surroundings. Gymnasium. References required. J. H. ROOT, Principal.

Connecticut

Woodside Seminary

Terms, $500 to $700. City advantages for culture and study. Rural surroundings.
Miss SARA J. SMITH, Principal, Hartford, Conn.

THE Hotchkiss School

LAKEVILLE, CONN.

Prepares for the best colleges and scientific schools
The next year will begin Sept. 16, 1896.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

THE TACONIC SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

LAKEVILLE, CONN.
Opens Sept. 30. Admission to college by certificates.

Mrs. and Miss Cady's SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

56 Hillhouse Avenue, New Haven, Conn.
Circulars sent on application. Address, until Sept. 1st, Grenell, Thousand Islands, New York.

Mrs. Mead's School For Girls and Young Ladies

College Preparatory and Elective courses of Study Vocal and Instrumental Music, Art, Languages. Certificate admits to Wellesley, Vassar, and other colleges.
Hillside, Norwalk, Connecticut.

MISS AIKEN'S BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. Daily drill in Miss Aiken's method. Prepares for college. For terms and circular apply to Principal Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER SCOVILLE DEVAN, Stamford, Conn.

STAMFORD, CONN.

MISS LOW'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Miss Low and Miss HEYWOOD, Principals.

THE CHOATE SCHOOL FOR BOYS

MARK PITMAN, A.M., Principal
Wallingford, Conn.

References:
Hon. Wm. G. Choate, New York.
Rev. Edward Everett Hale, D.D., Boston.
Dr. Francis Bacon, New Haven.
Hon. Nathaniel Shipman, Hartford.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE Windsor, Conn.

A Home School for Girls of all ages. Refers to the Board of Examiners of five colleges as to the thoroughness of its instruction, and to its patrons for the care of the health and morals of its pupils. Terms, $350 to $500. For circulars address Miss J. S. WILLIAMS, Prin.

District of Columbia

National Park Seminary

For Young Women, WASHINGTON, D. C.

claims the attention of thoughtful parents on the following grounds:

Its charming location in the suburbs of Washington, D. C., 400 feet above the city; 20 minutes out B. & O. R.R., 20 trains a day; city and country advantages. Station on the grounds.

Its proximity to Washington, whose wonderful educational facilities are offered by no other city. Libraries, Museums, Departments of Government, Congress, Foreign Legations, official and social life at the National Capital, are all interesting and profitable study.

Its equable climate, free from the rigors of the Northern winter, inviting outdoor life. Tennis, basket-ball, bowling, croquet, riding, etc.

Its complete equipment. Handsome $75,000 building, 330 feet front, 400 feet verandas, Libraries, Laboratory, Fine Gymnasium, extensive and picturesque grounds. Courses of study planned especially for the development of womanly women; also College preparation. 25 teachers, 70 resident pupils. Graduate courses in Music, Art, and Elocution.

A bright, cheery, happy, artistic, and loving home. Health a matter of first consideration. Personal care in sickness and in health. Abundant table. Every home comfort. No Nerve-Straining Examinations; promotions depend on daily grades. Training in Character-Building given by a mother who has made it a study. See catalogue, page 35. Limited number enables us to select our students carefully and to supervise habits, manners, associations, etc.

Provision made for pleasure and happiness as well as study. See our calendar of Pleasant Home Happenings. Expense, $350 to $400. Early application necessary—22 States represented last session. Write for catalogue giving views of the school and opinions of enthusiastic patrons. Address
J. A. I. CASSEDY, Pres., P. O. Box 211, Forest Glen, Md.

Chevy Chase French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies.—Half an hour from Washington, D. C., by electric cars. French the Language of the house. Reopens October 1, 1896. Address Mlle. Léa Bouligny, P. O. Station E, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON COLLEGE

FOR YOUNG LADIES

Thorough courses. Experienced faculty. Bountiful table. Charming location in park of ten acres. New buildings, elegantly furnished.
F. MENEFEE, President, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C. (Cor. M and Eleventh Sts., N.W.)

Mount Vernon Seminary

English, French, and German Boarding and Day School for Young Girls. Opens September thirtieth.
Mrs. ELIZABETH J. SOMERS, Principal.

France

FRANCE, Paris.—St. Margaret's Church School. A French and American School for Girls. French the language of the household. Autumn term opens October 1. Terms, $1,000 a year. Address Miss JULIA H. C. ACLY, 50 Avenue d'Jéna.

A teacher will conduct pupils from New York to Paris in September. Address, until Sept. 1, Miss Mary Davy, care Finch, Van Slyck & Young, St. Paul, Minn.

Germany

BERLIN, GERMANY

American Home School for Girls

Mrs. MARY B. WILLARD, Principal, will spend the month of August in the United States, and will return to Germany with pupils in September. Address 2019 O Street, Washington, D. C.

GERMANY, BERLIN

Kleiststrasse, 26. Fräulein Lange's school for young ladies offers the best opportunities in languages, music, art, literature, and home culture. Also Normal course. Beautiful and healthful location. Students enter any time. Best American references.

Illinois

Rockford College for Women

Fall Term Opens Wed., Sept. 16, 1896

Classical and Science Courses. Excellent Preparatory School. Specially organized departments of Music and Art. Well-equipped Laboratories. Fine Gymnasium. Resident physician. Memorial Hall enables students to reduce expenses. For catalogues address PHŒBE T. SUTLIFF, A.M., Pres't, Rockford, Illinois. Lock Box 9.

Maryland

1405 Park Ave., Baltimore, Md.

RANDOLPH-HARRISON

Boarding and Day, College Preparatory, and Finishing School. Resident native French and German Teachers. Special advantages also in Music, Art, and Gymnastics. Mrs. JANE RANDOLPH HARRISON RANDALL, Principal.

Massachusetts

Mount Doma Home School for Girls

Prepares for college. Send for circular.
Rev. E. C. WINSLOW, A.M., Amherst, Mass.

OAK GROVE HOME SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Amherst, Mass. Reopens September 23d, 1896. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley.
Miss VRYLING WILDER BUFFUM, A.B., Principal

AMHERST, MASS.

Mrs. W. F. Stearns's Home School for Young Ladies. Reopens Sept. 22, 1896.

Auburndale, Mass. (10 miles from Boston)

Lasell Seminary FOR Young Women

suggests to parents seeking a good school consideration of the following points in its methods:

1st. Its special care of health.

Resident Nurse supervising work, diet, and exercise; abundant food in good variety, and well cooked; early and long sleep, a fine gymnasium, furnished by Dr. Sargent of Harvard; bowling-alley and swimming-bath; no regular or foreknown examinations, etc.

2d. Its broadly planned course of study.

Boston proximity both necessitates and helps to furnish the best of teachers, including many specialists; with one hundred and twenty pupils, a faculty of thirty. Four years' course; in some things equal to college work; in others, planned rather for home and womanly life. Two studies required and two to be chosen from a list of eight or ten electives. One preparatory year. Special students admitted if eighteen years or over, or graduates of high schools.

3d. Its homelike air and character.

Training in self-government; limited number (many declined every fall for lack of room), personal oversight in habits, manners, care of person, room, etc.; comforts not stinted.

4th. Its handiwork and other unusual departments.

Pioneer school in scientific teaching of Cooking, Millinery, Dress-Cutting, Business Law for Women, Home Sanitation, Swimming.

Regular expense for school year, $500. For illustrated catalogue address (mentioning The Outlook),
C. G. BRAGDON, Principal.

Chauncy-Hall and Berkeley SCHOOLS

Boylston, cor. Berkeley Sts., Back Bay, Boston

Sixty-ninth year (Chauncy-Hall) opens Sept. 21.

The consolidation of Chauncy-Hall, the oldest Boston private school, with the Berkeley School is the union of two strong forces forming an institution of the highest order, to be known hereafter by the older name.

Thorough preparation for Colleges and Professional Schools. Full Grammar and High School Courses. In all classes Special Students are received. Particular attention to preparation for Mass. Institute of Technology. Send for 1896 Catalogues.
Taylor, DeMeritte, and Hagar.

Massachusetts

THE IDEA OF "GOING TO EUROPE" for a musical education grows weaker as the power of the

New England Conservatory of Music,

Elocution and Languages,

Boston, Mass., grows stronger. Already the largest in America, it competes with the world. Carl Fælten, Director. Send to Frank W. Hale, Business Manager, for prospectus.

Boston University Law School

New Hall, Ashburton Place,
Opens Oct. 7. Boston, Mass.

---

18 Newbury St., Boston, Mass.

Miss Frances V. Emerson

Successor to Miss Abby H. Johnson. School for Girls. College Preparatory. Regular and advanced Courses.

THE CAMBRIDGE SCHOOL A select, private school for girls. Best preparation for college. Many courses not leading to college. Comforts of home. Mr. ARTHUR GILMAN is the Director, Cambridge, Mass.

A PLEASANT COUNTRY HOME, Motherly Care, and Expert Instruction for two or three little girls under twelve. The best of references given and required. Address Miss ELLEN HYDE, Framingham, Mass.

PROSPECT HILL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

GREENFIELD, MASS.

A thorough education with good home influence. Established 1869.
Miss Ida F. Foster, Miss Caroline R. Clark, } Principals.

LOWELL, MASS. ROGERS HALL

A Home School for Girls and Young Women. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley. Reopens October first. Terms, $750. References: Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer. Mrs. Frederic T. Greenhalge. For further particulars address Mrs. E. P. UNDERHILL, M.A., Principal.

WALNUT HILL SCHOOL

FOR GIRLS

Natick, Mass. Two miles from Wellesley, seventeen miles from Boston. Certificate admits to Wellesley and other Colleges.
MISS CHARLOTTE H. CONANT, MISS FLORENCE BIGELOW, } Principals

---

Windsor Hall School

prepares girls for Radcliffe and other colleges. Studies elective in other courses. Comfortable home. Ten miles from Boston. Dr. CHARLES H. CLARK, Principal, WABAN, MASSACHUSETTS

WESLEYAN ACADEMY

WILBRAHAM, MASS.—Both Sexes. Nine Courses. Specialists in Classics, Arts, and Music. Enlarged endowment insures superior advantages at moderate expense. 80th year. Opens Sept. 16, 1896. For Catalogue address Rev. WM. R. NEWHALL, Prin.

QUINCY MANSION

The Quincy Mansion School for Girls

Will open at Quincy, Sept. 23. Regular Courses; experienced teachers; special attention paid to vocal and instrumental music; certificate admits to college; new school building; class-rooms on first floor; stairs few and easy; beautiful grounds—four acres; view of Boston, the harbor, and Massachusetts Bay; rooms high and light; fireplaces; steam heat; electric lights; open plumbing; 13 min. ride from Boston. Send for prospectus to Dr. HORACE MANN WILLARD, Wollaston, Mass.

WORCESTER ACADEMY

fits boys for College and Scientific Schools. Equipment in grounds, buildings, and Faculty of twelve men unexcelled. Send for new finely illustrated catalogue. Principal D. W. Abercrombie, A.M., Worcester, Mass.

Miss Kimball's School for Girls Worcester, Mass.

Thorough preparation for College. Intermediate, Academic, and Special Courses. Send for Illustrated Circular.

HIGHLAND MILITARY ACADEMY, Worcester ("The Academic City"), Mass. 41st year. Best preparation for College, Professional or Business Life. Healthful location. Careful selection and supervision of students. Small Classes.
Joseph Alden Shaw, A.M., Head Master.

Worcester Polytechnic Institute Worcester, Mass.

Courses of Study in Mechanical, Civil, and Electrical Engineering, and Chemistry. 158-Page Catalogue, showing appointments secured by graduates, mailed free. Expenses low. 29th year. T. C. Mendenhall, President.

New Hampshire

The Phillips Exeter Academy

The 114th year begins September 16th, 1896. Eighty Scholarships awarded to students of high standing. For Catalogue and illustrated Supplement address HARLAN P. AMEN, Principal, Exeter, N. H.

COLBY ACADEMY, New London, N. H.

$200 to $250 a Year. Co-educational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. Geo. W. Gile, President

New Jersey

IVY HALL BRIDGETON, NEW JERSEY.—Home and College Preparatory School for Young Ladies. Certificate admits to Smith. Established 1861. Mrs. J. Allen Maxwell, Principal.

SOUTH JERSEY INSTITUTE Bridgeton, N. J.

27th year begins Sept. 16. Both sexes. Prepares for any College, Teaching, or Business. French, German, Art, Music, Gymnasium. Competent Physical Director. Spacious campus and athletic field. Pure water, drainage perfect. H. K. TRASK, Principal.

"Mind and body are intimately related:
If the former is joyful the latter feels free and well." —Goethe.

At the Bordentown (N. J.)

Female College

for young ladies and girls, mutual confidence is the guiding characteristic. We teach the English branches, Science, Languages, Art, Music, Tennis, Rowing, and every healthful exercise, and lastly (but first in importance) the Bible and the Christian life.

Correspond with us. We will mail you our Catalogue on application. Location, Bordentown, N. J. (1 hour from Philadelphia, 2 hours from New York). Homelike and healthy.

REV. J. W. BLAISDELL, President.
FREDERICK T. SHULTZ, A.M., Head Master.

BORDENTOWN MILITARY INSTITUTE
Bordentown, N. J.

Prepares for Colleges and Government Academies. Music; Military Training; Government, a combination of parental and military. No compromise on tobacco. liquor, or hazing. Rev. T. H. LANDON, A.M., Prin. Capt. T. D. LANDON, Com'd't.

Englewood, N. J. (14 miles from New York)

Dwight School for Girls 8th year.

New, pleasant home; finest educational advantages. College preparation. Miss Creighton. Miss Farrar.

FREEHOLD, NEW JERSEY

Young Ladies' Seminary

Preparation for College. Seminary Course. Post-Graduate Studies. Art, Music, Oratory. For catalogue apply to the Misses SEWALL, Principals.

PEDDIE INSTITUTE Hightstown, N. J. Prepares for College, Teaching, Business. Courses in German, French, Music, Art. Both sexes. 29th year opens Sept. 9th.
Address Rev. JOSEPH E. PERRY, Ph.D., Prin.

Lakewood Heights School

"Among the Pines."
Thorough and attractive.
Prepares for College, Scientific Schools, or Business. $600.
JAMES W. MOREY, A.M., Principal.
LAKEWOOD, N. J.

Miss Dana's School for Girls,
Morristown, New Jersey, will reopen September 23. Certificate admits to Smith, Wellesley, and Baltimore Colleges. Music and Art. Resident native French and German teachers. Nearness to New York affords special advantages. Boarding pupils, $700.

Miss Townsend's School for Girls

Academic and college preparatory departments. Special courses. Sept. 29. 54 Park Place, Newark, N. J.

The Misses Anable's English, French, and German Boarding and Day School
NEW BRUNSWICK, NEW JERSEY
College Preparation, Art, and Music. Apply for circulars.

SUMMIT, N. J. Near New York

The Kent Place School for Girls

Principal, Mrs. Sarah Woodman Paul, late of Wellesley College. Modern methods. College preparation. Home comforts for boarding pupils.
HAMILTON W. MABIE, President.

New York

Wells College for the higher education of young women.

The catalogue gives full information about entrance requirements, courses of study, scholarships, expenses, etc., and will be mailed upon application to WILLIAM E. WATERS, Ph.D., President, Aurora, N. Y.

CAYUGA LAKE MILITARY ACADEMY

Aurora, N. Y.—A live military school; strict discipline, thorough work. Beautiful and healthful location. $400.00 per year. Col. VASA E. STOLBRAND, Superintendent.

The Lady Jane Grey School

Binghamton, N. Y.—Home School for Girls. Address Mrs. JANE GREY HYDE.

New York, Brooklyn, Marcy Avenue, 815.

Nassau Hall. Dr. and Mrs. Charles H. J. Douglas receive three boys into their family, September 15. Delightful home. Expert supervision of studies and recreation. Former pupils now in Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Princeton, Cornell, and other colleges. Advantages of city and country. $500.

---

284 Delaware Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO SEMINARY

The forty-sixth year. For circulars address
Mrs. C. F. HARTT, Principal.

THE HUDSON RIVER INSTITUTE

A Classical Seminary of high grade for boys and girls. Beautiful and healthful location in the Hudson River Valley. A record of forty-two years of uninterrupted successful educational work. Conservatory of Music, Art, and Elocution. 43d year begins Sept. 16. For catalogues address Rev. A. H. FLACK, A.M., Principal, Claverack, N. Y.

HOUGHTON SEMINARY

For Young Women, affords best facilities for scholarship, culture, and sound moral training amid pleasant, healthful surroundings. College preparatory.
A. G. BENEDICT, A.M., Clinton, N. Y.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y.

Granger Place School for Girls

A Collegiate Course of Study. Diplomas given. Preparatory course admits to leading colleges by certificate. Special attention given to the culture of girls who are not expecting to enter college, but desire a thorough and practical education.

New York Military Academy

CORNWALL-ON-HUDSON

For boarding cadets only. Distinctively military in organization and discipline. Located on the Hudson River four miles from West Point, in a region famous for its beauty and healthfulness. For catalogue address
S. C. JONES, C.E., Superintendent.

Fort Edward Collegiate Institute

For young women and girls. A choice of six courses or special studies. 39th year Sept. 22d, 1896. $350. Illustrated catalogue. JOS. E. KING, Pres., Fort Edward, N. Y.

MISS BENNETT'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y. Opens Sept. 23d. 1896. An exceptional school with the most desirable school features, 20 miles from New York. Refers to Charles Dudley Warner, &c. Apply to the Principals, Miss May F. Bennett, Miss Eleanor W. Rose.

CASCADILLA SCHOOL

Cascadilla School Residence

ITHACA, N. Y.

Leading fitting school for Cornell. Tuition and home, $650. New $30,000 residence. "I believe the Cascadilla School to be one of the best preparatory schools in the country."—J. G. Schurman, Pres. of Cornell University. Address C. V. PARSELL A.M., Prin.

ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL

MANLIUS, N. Y.

Next term begins September 16th, 1896.
Apply to WM. VERBECK.

New York, Newburgh.

The Misses Mackie's School for Girls

Academic and College-Preparatory. Special advantages in Art and Music. Certificate admits to Vassar and Wellesley.
One and a half hours from New York.

The Peekskill Military Academy

Peekskill, N. Y.—63d year. Send for illustrated catalogue. Col. LOUIS H. ORLEMAN, Prin.

EASTERN ✤ TEACHERS' ✤ AGENCY Miss E. F. FOSTER, Manager

50 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS. - Telephone, Boston, 775-2.

Teachers furnished for all grades of public and private schools. Specialists in any desired branches. Tutors and Governesses.

New York

The Clinton Classical School for Boys

Open all the year. Fall term begins Sept. 17th.
CHARLES W. CLINTON, Ph.D., Principal,
Peekskill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL

For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation.
SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y

TEMPLE GROVE SEMINARY
SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
For Young Women
Forty-second year begins Sept. 23d.
CHARLES F. DOWD, Ph.D., Pres.
Send for year-book giving details of courses to FRANKLIN B. DOWD, Asst. Prin.

Mount Pleasant Military Academy

A high-grade school for boys. Fits for college and for business. Eighty-second year. Library of 12,000 volumes. Reference: Hon. JOSEPH H. CHOATE: HAMILTON W. MABIE, L.H.D. CHARLES F. BRUSIE, A.M., ARTHUR T. EMORY, A.B., Principals. Sing Sing-on-Hudson.

BERKELEY ACADEMY Ramapo Mountains.—Boys' ideal home school. Superior location and training. College or business Write. Rev. J. CAMERON, M.A., Suffern, N.Y.

HOME INSTITUTE A Boarding and Day School for Girls. College preparation, Music, Languages, and Art.
Miss M. W. METCALF, Principal, Tarrytown-on-Hudson.

TROY, N. Y.
EMMA WILLARD SCHOOL

Preparation for all colleges open to women; four years academic course; graduate courses; departments of music and art. 83d year opens Sept. 23, 1896.
MARY ALICE KNOX, Principal.

Ohio

1020 Prospect Street, Cleveland, Ohio
Miss Mittleberger's School for Girls

Prepares for all Colleges open to women.
Fall term begins September 23.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE NEW ATHENS, O. 72d year. Board, tuition, fur. room and books, $2.80 to $3 a wk.: total cost, $140 a yr. 8 courses; no saloons. Thoro, safe. Catalog free, with plan to earn funds. W. A. WILLIAMS, D.D., Prest.

Oberlin Theological Seminary 62d year opens Sept. 23d, with special advantages in the College and the Conservatory of Music. E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec.

OXFORD, OHIO
THE WESTERN A College and Seminary for Women
Miss LEILA S. MCKEE, Ph.D., President. Forty-second year opens Sept. 9, 1896. Superior advantages for thorough Christian culture. Terms, $250 per year.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES
Opens Sept. 30. Established in 1850. Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. For circular, apply to Principals, FRANCES E. BENNETT, SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Ogontz School P.O., Pa.

Miss Baldwin's School FOR GIRLS
BRYN MAWR, PA.
Preparatory to Bryn Mawr College. MISS FLORENCE BALDWIN, Principal. Within five years more than fifty pupils have entered Bryn Mawr College from this school. Certificate admits to Smith, Vassar, and Wellesley. Diploma given in both General and College Preparatory Courses. Fine fire-proof stone building. 25 acres beautiful grounds. For circular address the Secretary.

1350 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Anable's Boarding & Day School
FOR YOUNG LADIES. Estab. in 1848. Circular on application.

Miss Gordon's French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies and Little Girls COLLEGE PREPARATORY 4110 and 4112 Spruce St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA SEMINARY
1325 N. Broad St., Phila. College preparatory. Languages, Art, Music, etc. 26th year. For circular address REBECCA E. JUDKINS, Principal.

WALNUT LANE SCHOOL
Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.
Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies. Reopens Sept. 23d. Academic and College Preparatory courses.
Mrs. T. B. RICHARDS, Prin.
Miss S. L. TRACY, A.M., Associate.

THE WALTON-WELLESLEY SCHOOL
2101 and 2103 Spruce St., Philadelphia
For Girls. Possesses finest private property in city. Boarding and day. 15th year. Academic, College Preparatory, and Musical Depts. For illus. catalogue and references address Dr. and Mrs. JAMES R. DANFORTH.

Freed by a Barrel of Oysters

Says the New York "Tribune:"

One of the best-known banking houses of St. Petersburg, and the one to which most American visitors to Russia carry letters of credit, is that of Messrs. Shalounine & Sons, the founder of which, father of the present head of the firm, owed his liberation from serfdom, fifteen years before the decree of emancipation, to a barrel of oysters. Old Shalounine was a serf belonging to Count Sheremetieff, one of the wealthiest nobles in Russia. He had frequently entreated the Count to grant him his freedom, offering him as much as $500,000 for the boon. But money was no object to the Count, and it gratified his pride to feel that one of the leading bankers of the Empire was one of his serfs, unable to marry either his sons or his daughters without his master's consent. Moreover, as serf, the banker was liable to have his money seized and confiscated at any moment by the Count, since everything that belonged to a serf, including his wife, children, and property, belonged ipso facto to his master.

One day Shalounine, who had just that very morning returned to the capital from Odessa, called at the Sheremetieff Palace for the purpose of reporting his arrival, as in duty bound, to his owner. He had brought with him a barrel of delicious Crimean oysters for presentation to the Count, but left them in his carriage at the palace door until he should have obtained his master's intimation that his gift was acceptable.

On entering the presence of the Count the banker found him surrounded by a party of guests and engaged in berating his chief butler for neglecting to provide oysters for the breakfast to which they were about to sit down. The butler was explaining to the Count that there were no oysters to be got in the capital at that moment for love or money. Catching sight of the serf-banker, the Count exclaimed:

"Oh, it is thou again: thou art come to pester me once more for thy liberation! Thou knowest that it is useless. I should not know what to do with thy money. But, stay, I will tell thee something: Get me some oysters for my breakfast and thou shalt have thy freedom!"

Shalounine bowed low, left the room, fetched the small barrel of oysters which he had left in his carriage at the door, and laid it at the feet of his master.

As soon as the barrel had been opened the Count called for a pen and paper, wrote out a declaration emancipating both the banker and his family from serfdom, and then, bowing courteously to the man who but a moment before had been his slave, exclaimed: "And now, my dear Mr. Shalounine, will you give us the pleasure of your company at breakfast?"

Pennsylvania

Williamsport Dickinson Seminary

Both sexes. Regular and Elective Courses. Degrees conferred. Fits for College. Music, Art, Modern Languages, Specialties. Steam heat, electric light, home comforts. Write for catalogue.
E. J. GRAY, D.D., President, Williamsport, Pa.

Rhode Island

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
FRIENDS SCHOOL FOR BOTH SEXES
Founded in 1784. Excellent home. Students from 18 States. All denominations. Thorough work in English, Science, Classics, Music, and Art. Address AUGUSTINE JONES, LL.B.

Virginia

BETHEL MILITARY ACADEMY, VIRGINIA. —Value, $100,000. Located 56 miles from Washington in Northern Virginia. Prepares for advanced study and for business. Charges extremely low. Patronage from 22 States. Address for illustrated catalogue
Col. R. A. McINTYRE, Bethel Academy P. O., Va.

ROANOKE COLLEGE, SALEM, VA.
Courses for Degrees, with Electives. Large Library. Working Laboratory. Beautiful, healthful mountain location. Good morals. Very moderate expenses. Catalogue, with views, free. Address THE PRESIDENT.

For the Church, the Social Meeting, and the Home

The Plymouth Hymnal

Edited by LYMAN ABBOTT
With the Co-operation of HERBERT VAUGHAN ABBOTT and CHARLES H. MORSE

Rev. Cornelius H. Patton, Duluth, Minn., whose church (Pilgrim Congregational) has been using 325 copies of THE PLYMOUTH HYMNAL for a few months, says: "I am inclined to think you have produced the best of all the hymn-books. In the matter of typography it is distinctly superior to all others. As to the choice of hymns, I think you have maintained the proper balance between the new and the old."

Many other pastors, from Maine to California, after practical experience of THE PLYMOUTH HYMNAL in their churches, also say that it is the best.

Full information concerning the book and the prices for its introduction, together with a free (RETURNABLE) copy, will be sent to any pastor or choirmaster for examination with a view to introduction.

THE OUTLOOK COMPANY
PUBLISHERS
13 Astor Place, New York

Pie Knife.

The Waldorf—

is the ideal pattern for the best family use. The design is artistic. The quality is assured by

STERLING SILVER INLAID

in the back of the bowl and handle on spoons and forks

Guaranteed 25 Years.

Patented.

Made only by Holmes & Edwards,
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SALESROOMS–N. Y. City, 2 Maiden Lane.
Chicago, 65 Washington St.
St. Louis, 307 N. Fourth St.
San Francisco, 120 Sutter St.

48

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE. Pure, Delicious Flavor. Mix with boiling milk or water, and it's made. Stephen F. Whitman & Son, Philadelphia.

FREE Cut this out and send to-day for free catalogue. $2.75 buys natural finish Baby Carriage with plated steel wheels, axle, springs, one piece bent handle. 3 years guarantee. Carriages sent on 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL. BUY FROM FACTORY & SAVE DEALERS' PROFITS. OXFORD MDSE. CO., 340 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

THOSE answering advertisements appearing in The Outlook will confer a favor upon the advertiser as well as the publisher by mentioning this publication.

A Mellin's Food Boy

SCOTT RATCLIFF

"When every other Food failed to agree with Scott—he was teething—we used MELLIN'S FOOD and it agreed with him perfectly from the first. I think it is the best of foods for teething children."—Mrs. W. G. Ratcliff, Nacogdoches, Texas

Write to us and we will send you a sample bottle free of charge
Our book of instructions to mothers mailed on request

DOLIBER—GOODALE CO., BOSTON, MASS.

MELLIN'S FOOD

THEY ALL USED IT

And like thousands of others who have used MELLIN'S FOOD, they are healthy, happy and bright. Babies not only thrive on MELLIN'S FOOD but it gives them sound and rugged little bodies that defy disease.

If you have never tried MELLIN'S FOOD, write us and we will send you a sample or our book, "THE CARE AND FEEDING OF INFANTS," free of charge.

DOLIBER - GOODALE CO.,
Boston --- Mass.

Longest Service
Highest Grade of Work
Best Mimeograph Stencils
Strongest Manifolding Power are characteristics of the

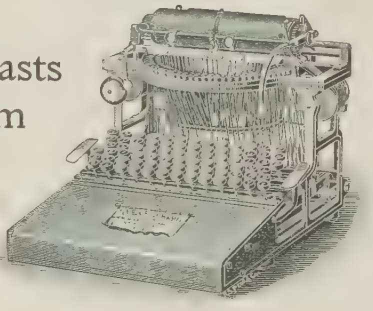
No. 4 Caligraph Typewriter

It
Outlasts
Them
All



Our pamphlets will give full information and may be had on application.

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE COMPANY
237 Broadway, New York, U. S. A.

James McCreery & Co.

LEADING NOVELTIES IN SILKS, DRESS GOODS, HOSIERY, SUITS

Broadway and 11th St.

NEW YORK

A SHAPELY BACK is one of the beauties imparted by the Ferris Waist. The perfect curves, the smoothly fitting shoulder straps supporting hose and preventing heavy skirts from sagging, unite to make the

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE
CORSET WAIST

the favorite of all women who wish to look well and feel well. Made in short and extra long waist, high or low bust. Children's, 25c. to 50c. Misses', 50c. to $1. Ladies', $1. to $2. For sale by all retailers.

INFANCY

What does it mean to the mother who cannot nurse her own babe? Without NESTLÉ'S FOOD it means anxiety, worry, the health, perhaps the life, of her baby. Those mothers who use NESTLÉ'S FOOD tell of healthy, strong, vigorous children—ask some of them—their experience is worth more to you than our tale of facts.

Nestlé's Food is invaluable in the prevention of Cholera Infantum and summer complaints. In its preparation water only is required, thus avoiding the use of cow's milk, whose use in summer is always a source of worry and danger to careful mothers. Our "Book for Mothers," full of valuable hints, and a sample can of Nestlé's Food, free.

NESTLÉ'S FOOD

THOS. LEEMING & CO., 73 Warren St., New York

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

Volume 54 Saturday, 29 August, 1896 Number 9

THE delivery of an address by the Lord Chief Justice of England before the American Bar Association would be, whatever subject might be chosen, an event of strong interest to the public as well as to the legal profession. In choosing as his topic "International Arbitration" Lord Russell made his address of last week of the highest possible importance; no public utterance of the year—not even the most noted political speech—has been more widely published and more fully discussed. The paper was admirably written, was expressed with clearness and precision, and was beyond criticism in spirit and temper. Lord Russell, in fact, did not confine himself to the subject announced, but covered in a broad way the entire origin, history, and nature of international law, with special reference to the part taken by this country in its development. He dwelt with courteous emphasis on the statement that "to the United States—to its judges, writers, and statesmen—we largely owe the existing rules which relate to a state of peace and which affect the rights and obligations of powers which during a state of war are themselves at peace," and recalled the fact that this country has been engaged in thirty-two out of the sixty successful cases of arbitration since the close of the War of 1812. As a historical survey Lord Russell's paper leaves nothing to be desired. It would be well worth reading if it were only for its splendid definition of civilization: "It is not dominion, wealth, material luxury; nay, not even a great literature and education widespread—good though those things be. Its true signs are thought for the poor and suffering, chivalrous regard and respect for woman, the frank recognition of human brotherhood, irrespective of race or color or nation or religion, the narrowing of the domain of mere force as a governing factor in the world, the love of ordered freedom, abhorrence of what is mean and cruel and vile, ceaseless devotion to the claims of justice." Its expression of the belief that no possible calamity could be greater than strife between the two great English-speaking races was equally welcome and forcible. When, however, Lord Russell approached the future of international arbitration, he disappointed many of his hearers. If not pessimistic, he was at least over-cautious. Like the Hon. E. J. Phelps in a recent review article, Lord Russell seems to labor under the idea that those who favor forward steps are expecting an immediate millennium. The difficulties he finds are not insuperable; the friends of international arbitration do not ignore them, but seek to obviate them. Whether a court be permanent or formed for each occasion; whether the nations form an international army to enforce its decrees or rely on moral force and the knowledge that coercion is always possible (and what else now maintains the "balance of power" in Europe?); whether the definition of "national honor" as a cause for war is possible or not—at all events there is ample evidence that the scope of international arbitration is easily capable of wide enlargement, and that immediately; that the road to this end is the one to follow; and that mutual concession and good will among the nations can find a way, or make one.

◆

Mr. John Morley's article in the current "Nineteenth Century" is the fullest and ablest response yet made to Lord Salisbury's request for light on the trend of public opinion as to the settlement of the Venezuelan question, and as to a permanent method of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States. Mr. Morley treats both the less and the greater questions lucidly, acutely, and forcibly. How he feels about the latter is shown in the words, "To leave it alone would, in the opinion of the present writer, be nothing short of a great disaster to one of the greatest causes now moving the Western world." His analysis of the correspondence convinces him that there is no serious difficulty in shaping the functions and constitution of a tribunal. The real difficulty, he thinks, is in framing an exception clause—in specifying, that is, matters not subject to arbitration. But even this he thinks "not beyond the expert skill of Lord Salisbury and Mr. Olney." Mr. Morley gives full force to Mr. Olney's claim that an arbitration without an award is no arbitration at all, and is clearly of the opinion that there need be little practical trouble with questions of "national honor" and territorial claims. Speculative claims as to territory are not likely to appear between these two countries: real questions, like that now existing about Alaska, are precisely the best ones for arbitration. Neither nation is at all likely to assail the "integrity or national honor" of the other. Mr. Morley warmly commends the temper shown at the Washington Conference last spring. He believes in an effective, workable plan; "to insist upon a plan which shall make a miscarriage of justice impossible is equivalent to throwing up the task." Lord Salisbury will find in Mr. Morley's article strong approval from a political opponent for what has been done, and urgent advice not to let a deadlock occur when the possibilities are so great and success so near at hand.

◆

With regard to the Venezuelan matter, Mr. Morley fears that a miscarriage of a settlement is still possible. He calls the whole subject in dispute a petty question, adding, "It will be ridiculous or criminal if it ever becomes more than a petty question," and "A quarrel with America on the question of arbitrating a boundary-line that has been in active and lively dispute at intermittent periods for more than half a century has been viewed from the first with the deepest incredulity and abhorrence." The correspondence indicates that the great difficulty is as to the districts settled under a claim of right by British colonists. Mr. Olney's position that if the British title were defective these colonists must look to Great Britain for redress if injured, and that if the question of title cannot be arbitrated there is nothing to arbitrate, is really impregnable. Mr. Morley does not say so, but he evidently thinks so. He points out, however, that Lord Salisbury and Mr. Olney are really coming close to agreement by concession. The first says (we quote Mr. Morley's summary): "I will not promise to accept the line which the arbitrators may find to be the true boundary, if it should prove to hand over to Venezuela lands in the occupation of British subjects. But I shall feel myself bound not to disregard any recommendations which the arbitrators may make as to these occupied lands, and which seem to be 'calculated to satisfy the equitable rights of the parties.'" Mr. Olney says: "Let the arbitrators draw the true boundary on the historic and legal merits of the case; if the arbitrators find British subjects in occupation of what, on the merits of the case, is established as Venezuelan territory, such weight and effect shall still be given to this occupation as international law and the equities of the particular matter may seem to require." With mutual desire for a settlement, parties who are as close as this should be able to come to a settlement. That Lord Salisbury should invite comment and advice upon a diplomatic correspondence not yet closed is not merely a novelty in international affairs, it is an indication of an appeal to reason and common sense in place of the old reliance on national selfishness and political intrigue; that his invitation should have elicited such a reply as Mr. Morley's is alone enough to have vindicated the wisdom of his unusual course.

⁂

In a recent interview with the correspondent of a Chicago newspaper, the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, Premier of the Dominion, indicated the policy of the new Liberal Government with regard to the United States. His statement, which was doubtless meant to be authoritative, referred to several questions which have caused friction between this country and its northern neighbor for some time; such as closer trade relations, fisheries, the coasting trade of the lakes, the alien labor law, and the bonding privilege. The question of deep waterways was also mentioned. All these matters should, to quote Mr. Laurier's words, "be taken up together and dealt with in a broad, serious, and comprehensive spirit, on one anvil." As regards trade relations, he is prepared to make an arrangement with the United States for the free exchange of such natural products and manufactured articles as could be agreed upon. This goes further than the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, which was abrogated at the close of the Civil War. With regard to fisheries, Mr. Laurier favors an arrangement resembling that effected under the Treaty of 1854 and the Washington Treaty of 1871, whereby the ports and inshore waters of both countries were made free to the fishermen of both on equal terms, and the markets for the fish of both countries also made equally free. The question of deep waterways is now acquiring great importance in the Dominion, and those who favor the scheme are making vigorous efforts for its practical recognition by the Government. Mr. Laurier expresses the hope that the United States and Canadian Commissioners who are now considering the question will report a practicable plan whereby the twenty-foot channel which is now open for vessels between Buffalo and the head of Lake Superior will be continued to the Atlantic seaboard. He favors the joint participation of the United States and Canada in this great work, as well as a joint control of the waterway system when completed—a control, however, which must in no way compromise the sovereignty of Canada over its own territory. These are questions of great and far-reaching importance; that of the waterways is especially so. Its chief benefit would be the lessening of transportation charges to the farmer of the Canadian Northwest and to the farmers of our Western and Northwestern States, and it would result in increasing the profit from their grain. Mr. Laurier may, we think, rest assured that his friendly policy and straightforward declarations will be met by the United States Government in a conciliatory spirit, and we cannot doubt that more cordial political relations between the two countries will be thereby inaugurated.

⁂

The vexatious and protracted Manitoba school question is at last nearing settlement. Three Ministers of the Manitoba Government have recently conferred with the authorities at Ottawa, and an agreement is stated to have been arrived at between the Provincial and Dominion authorities. It has not been published, but there is a general impression, against which no contradictory evidence has been given, as to its main features. In the first place, Manitoba will not recede from the position already taken on the main point—the abolition of separate schools as a part of the educational system. Second, the Dominion Government, in accordance with promises before the election, has definitely abandoned the policy of coercion, and will proceed to act in a conciliatory manner regarding the details of the proposed settlement. The question thus becomes one of compromise between Manitoba and the separate school party. The main terms of the compromise are as follows: The Provincial Government, while declining to re-establish separate schools, offers to allow religious instruction in any school at a certain time each school-day of the week, and these religious exercises may be ordered by the Board of Trustees or introduced by petition of the ratepayers. One or more denominations are allowed to agree upon a form of religious exercises, and the offer includes an agreement to pass legislation compelling school boards to employ one Roman Catholic teacher for every fifty Roman Catholic children, and one Protestant teacher for every fifty Protestant children. Another concession is that, in districts in which French is the language of the children, teachers must employ the bi-lingual system of teaching French and English. The fact that the above terms are substantially the same as were offered by the Manitoba Commissioners some time ago is a strong presumption that they will afford a basis of final settlement now. They will secure a large share of Roman Catholic control over the children of Roman Catholic parents. The clause referring to petition by the ratepayers will secure the appointment of a Catholic teacher whenever the proper conditions are complied with. Already in the Canadian press there is a disposition to regard the school question as removed from federal politics.

⁂

The German Reichstag has passed a sensible law restricting essentially gambling operations upon stock exchanges. The new law forbids stocks and bonds of corporations to be listed on the exchanges until the corporations have published at least one year's profit and loss account. Government officials are to require from the companies in question a full statement of their financial condition, for which the directors of these companies are to be held personally responsible. If this statement proves to contain falsehoods, or to have omitted important facts and thus misled investors as to the value of the stock, the directors are made liable for any losses incurred by the buyers. Such an act as this will not only prevent the robbery of the investing public by the promoters of companies whose affairs will not bear investigation, but it will also prevent the directors of companies whose property has a real value from possessing so great an advantage over outside investors. Such companies as most of the American Trusts, for example, would be required to submit a sworn statement of assets and liabilities, profits or losses, and the public would have practically the same opportunity as the directors of estimating the real value of the stock. It would be impossible for directors to force the market value up by declaring unearned dividends and then to force it down by passing earned dividends, profiting both by the rise and the fall at the expense of the general public. In short, it would make purchases of stock exchange securities partake less of the nature of gambling and more of the nature of investment. Such a measure will certainly appeal to all those who have supported the American bills to prevent gambling upon the exchanges, and it is to be hoped that in the future the protection of the investor as well as the protection of producers will form a part of the legislation against the illegitimate operations on our exchanges.

❀

On Wednesday evening of last week, at the Madison Square Garden, Mr. Bourke Cockran replied to the speech delivered by Mr. Bryan in the same hall the week before. There was an immense audience present, and the speech was received with enthusiasm. Mr. Cockran took the position that the vital issue in this campaign was the effect of the free coinage of silver upon the wages of labor. He declared that the free coinage of silver meant a fifty-cent dollar. The value of gold, he said, would not be lessened; all the governments in the world could not affect its value. The value of silver would not be raised; the silver mine-owner would "get cheated with the rest." The coined silver dollar would merely have the present value of silver bullion; the price of products would double, and the laborers would be the sufferers. In reply to Mr. Bryan's argument that the laborers would receive more employment under rising prices than under falling prices, Mr. Cockran said that this was merely another way of saying, "If the laborer is willing to have his wages cut down, he will get more work." Mr. Cockran maintained that wages would not rise as rapidly as prices, and therefore the laborer's real return would be lessened. In reply to the argument of the free-coinage advocates that it was the creditor class they wished to reach, Mr. Cockran declared that the laboring class was the principal creditor class. "The laborer," he said, "is always a creditor for at least one day's work." The bankers, he declared, were not creditors, for, despite their capital and surplus, they must keep in reserve twenty-five per cent. of the money lent them by their depositors. The laborers were the great creditors; their wages were the first mortgage upon the earnings of every corporation and every individual employer. "This proposal of the Populists is an attempt to enlist the farmer in a conspiracy to reduce the wages paid to labor." The men back of it in the West and South, he said, were the "professional farmers who want to pay low wages, and the unreconciled slaveholders who would like to pay no wages." The laborers, he said, were benefited by falling prices, and the men who supported the gold standard and falling prices were the men who supported an increase in labor's share of the product of industry.

❀

Mr. Bryan delivered a second political speech in the town of Tivoli, N. Y., on Saturday of last week. In the main it was a criticism of the position of his opponents. He declared that they were divided upon every point, and had no remedy to offer for the evils of our present financial condition. They were divided, he said, as to whether the gold standard was a good thing which the country ought to retain, or a bad thing which the country was to get rid of through an international agreement. They were divided as to whether the free coinage of silver should be denounced because it doubled the value of silver to the mine-owner, or because it would not raise the value of silver at all, and simply lower the value of a dollar to fifty cents. They were similarly divided upon the question of falling prices. One speaker declared that there had been no fall in prices, and the next speaker that it was the greatest blessing in the world to have prices fall. In reply to the criticism that the advocates of free coinage were similarly inconsistent in declaring that their policy would furnish relief to the debtors and at the same time maintain silver dollars at par with gold dollars, Mr. Bryan said that the free coinage of silver would lessen the demand for gold as well as increase the demand for silver, and that it would bring relief to the debtors through an increase in the currency. The fundamental principle governing the currency, he said, was as simple and clear as the fundamental principle governing irrigation. In irrigation it was simply that water flowed down hill; in currency it was simply that the value of money, like the value of everything else, depended upon the law of supply and demand. If there is a relative increase in the supply of the currency, its value falls and prices rise; if there is a relative decrease in the supply of currency, its value rises and prices fall. Every voter, he said, was able to determine whether he would be benefited by the policy which meant higher prices and cheaper money, or one that meant lower prices and dearer money.

❀

Mr. McKinley the same day delivered at Canton a speech somewhat longer than usual to a visiting delegation of twelve hundred voters from Pennsylvania. He said that there were two issues in the campaign. One was a return to the tariff policy under which the Nation prospered, and the other was the avoidance of the financial policy proposed by the party responsible for the tariff policy under which the Nation is now suffering. The wing of the Democratic party which controlled the Chicago Convention, he said, "is just as much in favor of free trade as the wing of the Democratic party in control of the Administration." "Most of those prominent in that Convention were conspicuous leaders in the assault upon our industries and labor made by the Fifty-third Congress. They are devoted to this un-American and destructive policy, and were chiefly instrumental in putting upon the statute-books tariff legislation which has destroyed American manufacturing, checked our foreign trade, and reduced the demand for the labor of the American workman." This wing of the Democratic party, he continued, having "cut wages in two," now wants to "cut in two the money in which wages are paid." "The other wing of the Democratic party," he said, "is patriotically standing for the public honor, and is opposed to free silver, because it believes that such a policy would disturb existing values and contract the currency of the country by depriving us of the use of gold and putting us upon a silver basis." "What we want," Mr. McKinley declared, "is business activity and confidence. With business confidence restored, money will be invested in private and public enterprise, and when so invested labor will be well rewarded, and the toil of the husbandman will be fully requited. Without confidence money will be hoarded and the wheels of industry stopped, and what that means many of the men before me know. . . . We cannot restore confidence by a proposition to debase the currency of the Government and scale down public and private obligations."

* * *

Secretary Hoke Smith, of the Department of the Interior, has resigned from the Cabinet, and ex-Governor David R. Francis, of Missouri, has been appointed his successor. Ex-Governor Francis has long been the leader of the gold wing of the Democratic party in Missouri. Secretary Smith's resignation is due to his decision to give Mr. Bryan his active support during the approaching campaign. The most interesting political convention of the week is that which assembles in New York the day we go to press. The supporters of Mr. Platt have an overwhelming majority, and most of these supporters are urging that Mr. Platt shall himself accept the nomination for Governor. Thus far, however, Mr. Platt has persisted in declining the honor. "I do not want to be Governor," Mr. Murat Halstead reports him to have said, "but to be just a plain, simple boss." In some of the doubtful States West and South—for example, West Virginia and North Carolina—the Populists and Democrats have failed to effect a fusion. Senator Squire, of Washington, hitherto a Republican and now a candidate for re-election, has declared in favor of Bryan. Nevertheless the Republicans claim that they will carry all the Pacific States, and point to the fact that hardly more than one Republican paper out of a hundred has joined the free-silver bolters. Senator Mitchell, of Wisconsin, who was a gold Democrat up to the time of the Chicago Convention, has declared his allegiance to the candidate and platform adopted by the majority of his party. The Hon. E. J. Phelps, of Vermont, our Minister to England during Mr. Cleveland's first administration, has written a long and earnest letter against the support of Mr. Bryan. He declares that he will support Mr. McKinley. "I am not a Republican," he says, "and I never shall be. But in the throes of a deadly malady I cannot afford to reject the only physician who is in a situation to help me, because his political opinions are different from mine, or even because I think there are better physicians than he, if they could only be had in time." Dr. Otto Arendt, the German bimetallist, whose opinion against independent free coinage of silver by the United States we quoted a few weeks ago, announces that in view of present political conditions his attitude has changed. He still believes that international agreement is the safe and true way of restoring silver to its former place in the currency and restoring prices to a normal level; but he believes that under present conditions the triumph of the free-coinage party in the United States offers the surest road to such an agreement.

* * *

By an interesting coincidence, hardly had Dr. Nansen arrived in Norway from his Arctic adventures, which we outlined last week, when the news was received that his vessel, the Fram (which he left embedded in Polar ice in order to make with one companion a dash toward the North Pole), had arrived at a fishing village on the North Cape. Captain Sverdrup and all on board were well. After Nansen left the vessel, the Fram drifted north and west as he had predicted, and in July last had reached the very high latitude of 85° 57′, which is only about twenty miles short of the latitude attained by Nansen himself, and is very far in advance of that reached by any previous explorer. Nansen's "highest North," by the way, was 86° 14′—not 83° as by a slip of the pen we stated last week. Since July 10 the Fram has been working southward, and it took her but a month to reach open water. All indications show that the approach toward the Pole from Franz Josef Land is the most likely to meet with success, and there is fair reason to hope that Mr. Jackson, who is now in Franz Josef Land, may next year go beyond Nansen's "furthest North." The Fram stopped at Danes Island, on the northwest coast of Spitzbergen, on her way back, and her crew found M. Andrée there. He has since returned to Norway, having abandoned his plan of crossing the Polar regions in a balloon this year on account of adverse winds.

* * *

Judge Simonton, of the United States Circuit Court in South Carolina, who became prominent by his decision against the Dispensary Law of that State, has recently granted an injunction more remarkable than any of those that have attracted so much attention during the past few years. At the request of a small road in the hands of a receiver, he has issued a temporary injunction forbidding the Seaboard Air Line and the Southern Railway Company from making contemplated reductions in freight rates, and directing them to restore their rates to a former schedule. The power to issue such an injunction is said to be found in the Inter-State Commerce Law. This law, it will be remembered, was adopted by Congress against the protests of the railway companies in order to secure competitive rates for their patrons. That it should be used to prevent competitive rates is a singular anomaly.

The Church of England in Parliament

Since the English Church in Ireland was disestablished, in 1868, there has not been a session in which the concerns of the Church of England were more before Parliament than they are in the one just prorogued to meet again on October 31. The principal matters affecting the Church are: the parish schools, the sale of benefices, the marriage of divorced persons, and Lord Salisbury's appointment of bishops.

But for the need of further help for the parish schools from the Imperial Treasury, the Education Bill—a Government measure, and the most contentious English measure of the last thirty years—would never have been introduced. The bill was as much in the interest of the Church of England as though it had been drawn up for discussion in convocation. All its more important changes were directly in the interest of the Church. The Benefices Bill is a private member's measure, for which the Government takes no responsibility, and on which its supporters are free to vote as they choose. It was introduced by Lord Cranborne, the elder son of the Premier, who is even more zealous in his advocacy of the interests of the Church than his father. The Cranborne Bill, however, unlike the Education Bill, seeks to give no new constitutional advantages or privileges to the Church, and it involves no subsidies from the Imperial Treasury. Its aim is to put an end to frequently recurring scandals, by imposing new conditions on the transfer of what is known as the right to make presentations.

The majority of English Church livings—rectories, vicarages, and perpetual curacies—are private property, and oftentimes go with the landed estates out of which the ecclesiastical parishes are formed. Some English landlords have as many as nine or ten of these livings in their gift. What is meant by "in their gift" is that, when a living becomes vacant, the lord of the manor has the nomination in his hands. He presents to a living, and the new incumbent, having proved himself satisfactory to the bishop of the diocese, is formally admitted. Once admitted, he is in possession for life; and the lord of the manor, or whoever the patron may be, has nothing more to do with the living until the next vacancy occurs. When ecclesiastical patronage is attached to estates in the possession of Roman Catholics, the owners lose their rights to presentation. It is invested for the time being in one or other of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

The great landowners, as a rule, exercise these peculiar rights in connection with the Established Church with care and discretion, and usually with satisfaction to the bishops. There is seldom a scandal in connection with these presentations. Scandal arises in connection with livings in the gift of needy people, who, when a living seems likely to become vacant, turn the right to the next presentation into cash. In connection with livings in such hands there has long existed a regular trade. There are numerous agencies in London which make a specialty of advowsons, and when these agencies have a living on hand they advertise it, in just the same way as estate agents advertise houses and lands. These advertisements can be seen any day in the columns of the "Times" or the "Standard." The expert advertisement-writers of New York could not produce more attractive advertisements than some of those emanating from the brokers in Church livings. The advertisements usually make a central point of the advanced age of the present incumbent. This, of course, is a most important fact for a purchaser; for no one desires to invest money in a living when he may have to wait twenty years before he can present to it. A living is not a marketable property unless the incumbent is advanced in life, and the vacancy may be expected at an early date. The advertisements also describe the character of the Church service, whether it is High or Low.

High Church livings are in greatest demand, and it is always important for a prospective rector or vicar to know the character in this respect of the parish to which he is going. If the incumbent he is to replace has been a Low Churchman, the church wardens will be Low Churchmen too. They stay on after the old incumbent is gone, and may give trouble to a new incumbent of High Church tendencies. The age of the incumbent and the character of the service having been stated, there usually comes in these advertisements of advowsons for sale a glowing description of the parish and the surrounding country. The society of the neighborhood comes in for some notice, and oftentimes stress is laid on the fact that the fishing in the neighborhood is good, and that a pack of hounds meets a few miles away. Occasionally emphasis is laid on the fact that there are no Dissenters in the parish—no Wesleyans, Congregationalists, or Baptists; and that there is no school board.

For years past, sincere and earnest Churchmen have been shocked at the open manner in which the brokerage and auctioneering of Church livings have been carried on. The Cranborne Bill is one of several efforts which have been made to regulate and check the sales. It is not possible to stop entirely the sale of advowsons. They are as much private property as houses or land. But the new law will throw some obstacles in the way of bargains like those common in the past, and will give additional powers to the bishops in dealing with cases where advowsons have been corruptly sold.

The transfer of an advowson with immediate possession is to be prevented by requiring a year's interval to elapse between the acquisition and exercise of a right of patronage. If a vacancy occur within this period, the right to present to the living lapses to the Crown. This is a vital alteration in the law, as it sets up an element of risk which will not be lightly faced by a man who is making the investment solely with a view to the settlement of a son or a son-in-law. Another clause in the bill prevents advowsons from being conveyed to the wife of a clergyman, or to trustees in behalf of a clergyman. This does away with a common method adopted by clergymen of acquiring livings. The new powers conferred on the bishops give them authority to demand detailed information as to the previous history of a clergyman who has been presented to a living; and in case a presentee has not been in orders for two years, or for any other well-established reason is unfitted for the work, the bishop may refuse to induct him into the living. Further powers are conferred on the bishops of dealing with incumbents who, either through infirmity or disloyalty to work, neglect their parochial duties. This clause gave rise to much contention in and out of Parliament, as there is no fund from which an infirm clergyman of the Church of England can be superannuated.

The bill bearing upon the marriage of divorced persons had its origin in the House of Lords. Its author, Lord Halifax, the President of the Church Union, wishes to relieve clergymen of the duty of marrying persons who have obtained divorces in the civil courts.

The other question concerning the Church, now before Parliament, comes up in a singular way. The two divisions of the Established Church are represented by two outside organizations which concern themselves with matters of Church policy and of Church defense, each from its own particular point of view. One of these is the Church Association; the other is the Church Union. The Church Association is composed of Evangelical Churchmen, of adherents of the Church of England who are opposed to the sacerdotalism of the High Church party in the Anglican communion represented by the Church Union. It was the Church Association which in 1889 instituted the abortive prosecution of the Bishop of Lincoln. It lodged allegations of illegal ritualistic practices against the Bishop, and promoted the trial at Lambeth Palace, which occupied the attention of the English Churchmen for more than a year. Since then little has been heard of the Church Association until recently, when it was announced that the Association was about to petition Parliament in regard to Lord Salisbury's appointments to the ecclesiastical bench.

The grievance of the Association is that out of the thirty-four bishops in England, only five are Evangelical Churchmen. The others are ritualists. Lord Salisbury, the Association complains, has appointed sixteen bishops, thirteen of whom are of the High Church party, and hostile, as the Church Association contends, to the good of the Church as a whole. The members of the Association are anxious that a Royal Commission should be appointed to inquire into the way in which Lord Salisbury has bestowed ecclesiastical patronage. Their petition to Parliament is to that end. Little direct result will accrue from the petition. Royal Commissions are appointed at the instance of the Government, and no one anticipates that Lord Salisbury will sanction a Royal Commission charged with the task of reporting upon the way in which he has discharged the most delicate duty of an English Premier. There can be no debate in Parliament on the petition. All that can be done with it is for the member who presents it to demand that its prayer be read from the table by the Clerk. In this way the Church Association will get on the record in the Journal of the House, in the Hansard Reports, and in all the newspapers, its protest against the manner in which the ritualistic party is being allowed to dominate the Church. But to the majority of observant English people this domination is nothing new. One has only to go into rural England and into suburban London to note the all-pervading activity and the aggressiveness of the section of the Anglican Church against which the Church Association for the last forty years has been waging unsuccessful warfare in Easter vestry meetings, on the lecture platform, in the law courts, and occasionally in Parliament.

The Commonwealth

IV.—The Engineer

The secret of modern civilization lies in the fact that God is doing our drudgery for us. Work which used to be done by muscles is now done by machinery. Man is relieved from mere muscular toil that he may think—and by thinking may grow less an animal, more a man. This marks the difference between the Indian paddling his canoe down the river or across the lake, and the American carried over the same waters in the steamboat; between the Puritan maiden with her own arm turning the spinning-wheel, and the modern factory in which a thousand wheels are turned by steam or water. It is true that laborers have sometimes bitterly resisted the introduction of machinery, because they thought it would deprive them of the chance of earning their daily bread; but there is no doubt that machinery has multiplied the demand for labor. A thousand men are employed by the railroad to one employed by the old stage-coach, and the telegraph and telephone have created a new class of workers, before unknown. It is true that Ruskin complains bitterly of machinery because it reduces man to a machine; but there is no doubt that the general effect of machinery has been to raise the intellectual standard of labor as well as to increase the demand for it. The laborer of to-day has to work more with his brain, to be more intelligent, than the workman of an analogous grade in the eighteenth century. Thus machinery has rendered a double service in the development of the race: it has increased the demand for work and the compensation for it, and so has enriched the common people; and it has demanded a higher degree of intelligence, and so has educated the common people.

This is the work of the engineer and inventor. He is enabling us to harness nature to our industries and compel her to do our drudgery for us; rather, he is enabling us to understand and accept her silent offer to put herself and her illimitable strength at our service. Thus he is putting a lever under the race and slowly elevating it. He is emancipating humanity from drudgery and setting it free for intellectual endeavor and so for intellectual development. He is preparing the way for the author, the school-teacher, and the preacher. He is widening their constituency. He is making possible cheap books, cheap newspapers, and cheap periodicals. Not an unmixed benefit, the reader will say. That is true. Few benefits are unmixed with evil; few evils are unmixed with good. But these are the early steps in an education the future of which will be worthier. Who can estimate what Watt and Stephenson, Morse and Edison, Ericsson and Bell, have done for the improvement, not only of the material conditions of life, but of intellectual and spiritual life itself?

The railroad, the steamship, the telegraph, and the telephone have annihilated distances, and so have brought men together. They have prepared for the realization of a brotherhood which before seemed an impossible ideal. The fleet of steamships crossing the Atlantic Ocean unite England and America by invisible bonds, which make war far more difficult than it was a century ago. The iron railways across the continent bring San Francisco nearer to New York than Washington was to Boston in Colonial days. But for the railroad and the telegraph the union of the States would be impossible. With them the danger of separation from misunderstanding and mutual ignorance is almost wholly overcome. And this is but a single and familiar illustration of the service rendered to the Commonwealth by the inventor and the engineer. The steam-engine quickens human activities and enhances human energies, the telegraph condenses speech, the factory compels companionship in labor, the railroad and steamboat conduce to the mobility of the race and so to the erasure of provincialism, the printing-press distributes information. The engineer and inventor are promoters of wealth-distribution, of human leisure, of intellectual development, of industrial co-operation, of universal brotherhood. The importance of their share in building up the Republic of God on the earth is beyond all measurement.

The Art of Living

The law of opposites under which men live is very strikingly brought out in the endeavor to secure a sound and intelligent adjustment to one's time; a relation intimate and vital, and at the same time deliberately and judicially assumed. To be detached in thought, feeling, or action from the age in which one lives is to cut the ties that bind the individual to society, and through which he is very largely nourished and educated. To live deeply and really through every form of expression and in every relationship is so essential to the complete unfolding of the personality that he who falls below the full measure of his capacity for experience and for expression falls below the full measure of his possible growth. Life is not, as some men of detached moods or purely critical temper have assumed, a spectacle of which the secret can be mastered without sharing in the movement; it is rather a drama, the splendor of whose expression and the depth of whose meaning are revealed to those alone who share in the action. To stand aside from the vital movement and study life in a purely critical spirit is to miss the deeper education which is involved in the vital process, and to lose the fundamental revelation which is slowly and painfully disclosed to those whose minds and hearts are open to receive it. No one can understand love who has not loved and been loved; no one can comprehend sorrow who has not had the companionship of sorrow. The experiment has been made in many forms, but no one has yet been nourished by the fruit of the tree of knowledge who has eaten of that fruit alone. In the art of living, as in all the arts which illustrate and enrich living, the amateur and the dilettante have no real position; they never attain to that mastery of knowledge or of execution which alone gives reality to a man's life or work. Mastery in any art comes to those only who give themselves without reservation or stint to their task; mastery in the supreme art of living is within reach of those only who live completely in every faculty and relation.

To stand in the closest and most vital relation to one's time is, therefore, the first condition of comprehending one's age and getting from it what it has to give. But while a man must be in and with his time in the most vital sense, he must not be wholly of it. To get the vital enrichment which flows from identification with one's age, and at the same time to get the detachment which enables one to see his time in true relation to all time, is one of the problems which require the highest wisdom for solution. It is easy to become entirely absorbed in one's age, or it is easy to detach one's self from it, and study it in a cold and critical temper; but to get its warmth and vitality and escape its narrowing and limiting influence is so difficult that comparatively few men succeed in striking the balance between two divergent tendencies.

A man gets power and knowledge from his time in the degree in which he suffers it to enlarge and vitalize him; he loses power and knowledge in the degree in which he suffers it to limit his vision and confine his interests. The Time Spirit is the greatest of our teachers so long as it is the interpreter of the Eternal Spirit; it is the most fallible and misleading of teachers when it attempts to speak for itself. The visible and material things by which we are surrounded are of immense helpfulness so long as they symbolize invisible and spiritual things; they become stones of stumbling and rocks of offense when they are detached from the spiritual order and set apart in an order of their own. The age in which we live affords no concrete illustration of the vital processes in society and means of contact with that society, but it is comprehensible and educative in the exact degree in which we understand its relation to other times. The impression which the day makes upon us needs to be tested by the impression which we receive from the year; the judgment of a decade must be corrected by the judgment of the century. The present hour is subtly illusive; it fills the whole stage, to the exclusion of the past and the present; it appears to stand alone, detached from all that went before or is to follow; it seems to be the historic moment, the one reality amid fleeting shadows. As a matter of fact, it is a logical product of the past, bound to it by ties so elusive that we cannot trace them, and so innumerable and tenacious that we cannot sever them; it is but a fragment of a whole immeasurably greater than itself; its character is so completely determined by the past that the most radical changes we can make in it are essentially superficial; for it is the future, not the present, which is in our hands. To get even a glimpse of the character and meaning of our own time, we must, therefore, see it in relation to all time; to master it in any sense we must set it in its true historical relations. That which to the uneducated mind seems portentous is lightly regarded by the mind which sees the apparently isolated event in a true historic perspective; while the occurrence or condition which is barely noticed by the untrained, seen in the same perspective, becomes tragic in its prophecy of change and suffering. History is full of corrections for the mistaken judgments of the hour; and from the hate or adoration of contemporaries the wise man turns to the clear-sighted and inexorable judgment of posterity. In the far-seeing vision of a trained intelligence the hour is never detached from the day, or the day from the year; and the year is always held in its place in the century.

Now, the man of culture has pre-eminently the gift of living deeply in his own age, and at the same time seeing it in relation to all ages. It has no illusion for him; it cannot deceive him with its passionate acceptance or its equally passionate rejection. He sees the crown shining above the cross; he hears the long thunders of applause breaking in upon execrations which they will finally silence: he foresees the harvest in the seed that lies barely covered on the surface; and, afar off, his ear notes the final crash of that which at the moment seems to carry with it the assurance of eternal duration. Such a man secures the vitality of his time, but he escapes its limitation of vision by seeing it clearly and seeing it whole; he corrects the teaching of the Time Spirit by constant reference to the teaching of the Eternal Spirit imparted in the long training and the wide revelation of history. The day is beautiful and significant or ominous and tragic to him as it discloses its relation to the good or the evil of the years that are gone. And these vital associations, these deep historic connections, are brought to light with peculiar clearness in literature. Beyond all other means of enfranchisement, the book liberates a man from imprisonment within the narrow limits of his own time; it makes him free of all times. He lives in all periods, under all forms of government, in all social conditions; the mind of antiquity, of mediævalism, of the Renaissance, is as open to him as the mind of his own day, and so he is able to look upon human life in its entirety.

The Outlook Vacation Fund

Dear Outlook: I have already contributed to the Vacation Fund what I thought I could afford, but your statement in The Outlook of this week as to your lack of funds leads me to write you this note.

I will send to the Fund between the 20th and 25th of this month $10 in addition to my first contribution. I cannot conveniently send the money now, and I judged from what you said that it might suit you to be able to reckon on this trifle, which I heartily wish were a thousand times more.

Yours sincerely, M. N. P.

The above letter shows the value of a living, active interest as clearly as it can be shown. There is anxiety lest the income to The Outlook Vacation Fund should not meet the demands of the present season. Many girls have been promised a vacation, and if the money does not come to The Outlook these girls must be disappointed. The receipt of one hundred such letters as the above, each guaranteeing $10, would provide for every girl who has been promised a vacation this year. The Outlook hopes that there will be no diminution in the weekly amounts received until after the 15th of September. An average income for the season of $500 a week will enable The Outlook to provide the New York Working-Girls' Vacation Society with the funds it needs.

THE VACATION FUND

Previously acknowledged	$4,069 32
A Friend	1 00
F. J. H., Rockbridge Alum Springs, Va	5 00
B. B., Norwich, Conn	2 00
A. B. and A. B., Stockbridge, Mass	13 00
B. M., Narragansett Pier, R. I	25 00
Lake Placid	50 00
J. W. N., Brooklyn, N. Y	5 00
Miss S. E. W., Holden	5 00
Mrs. A. W. C., Piermont, N. Y	10 00
M. E. C., Foo Chow, China	4 00
The Adirondacks	20 00
L. P. M., Zanesville, O	10 00
A Friend, North Stonington, Conn	10 00
A Friend of the Working-Girl	2 00
Two Friends, W. R	5 00
W., Norwich, Vt	2 00
Three Friends	6 00
Cotocheset Christian Endeavor Society (second contribution)	25 00
Friends at Nazareth, Pa	2 00
M. S. W., Upper Montclair, N. J	2 00
J. M. S., Chicago, Ill	20 00
G., Fremont, O.	10 00
A Friend, Providence, R. I	2 00
Mrs. J. W. F., Homer, N. Y	5 00
J. B., New York, N. Y	10 00
Anonymous, Hartford, Conn	5 00
"In His Name," Moorhead, Minn	2 00
Honesdale	1 00
L. H., Buffalo, N. Y,	10 00
M. E. P., Cambridge, Mass	2 00
G. H. B., South Norwalk, Conn	1 00
M. C. L., Chicago, Ill	5 00
From a Friend, Gardiner	5 00
H. H., Canastota, N. Y	5 00
A Friend	1 50
Friends, Windsor, Conn	15 00
Scatterers of Sunshine	2 00
Teachers of G. S. No. 50	8 00
R. B. S	1 00
A Friend, Bristol, R. I.	3 00
H. and G., Buffalo, N. Y	10 00
A. E. T., Glyndon, Mass	5 00
F. L., Buffalo, N. Y	2 25
R. T., New York, N. Y	2 00
Two Sisters, I. H. N	22 00
M. H. H., New Haven, Conn	18 00
J. A. M., I. H. N	1 00
A Friend, Fall River, Mass.	1 00
Miss C. B., Philadelphia, Pa	2 00
A Friend, Franconia, N. H.	5 00
J. L. F., Baldwinsville, N. Y	4 78
M. P. F. B., Brunswick, Me.	10 00
Another Worker, Oak Park, Ill	5 00
E. S. C., Hamilton	5 00
Mrs. C. M. M., Brooklyn, N. Y	5 00
M. J. H., Portland, Me	2 00
Detroit Friend of the Cause.	2 00
Mrs. M. R. E., Burlington, Vt	10 00
T. J. W	25 00
A Little Mite	1 00
Worcester	10 00
L. and R	25 00
C. M., New York City.	25 00
C. S., Alhambra, Cal	1 00
Mrs. J. P. W., Norwalk, Conn	5 00
X., Fairfield, Conn	10 00
C. C., Council Bluffs, Iowa	25 00
For My Soldier Boy	5 00
I. M. T., Meriden, N. H	5 00
Total	$4,635 85

The Spectator on the East Side

The Spectator was reminded very forcibly the other day of the indignation which patriotic New Yorkers felt at the Federal census-takers of 1890, who did their work in New York City during the summer months, and made out the population to be very much less than was anticipated. "Why," said one of the Spectator's friends at that time, "more than half of the people of this town are out of it by the first of July, and what's the use of taking a census then? Count over the people you know and see how many of them, and especially of their wives and children, are left. I tell you it's only hard-working people, like you and me and the East Siders, that are left; and the East Siders are all at Coney Island on Sundays and holidays." The Spectator recalled this as he strolled about the lower East Side on his last holiday, which he had determined to use in seeing something of this supposedly deserted "other half" of the city. He wished that his friend could have been with him. It is a peculiarity of comfortable optimism that it doesn't go out of its way to see uncomfortable facts. The average New Yorker knows only by hearsay of the East Side. He may indeed occasionally get over into that section, but he confines his attention and his presence to the avenues of travel, and if he should perchance turn into one of the side streets he quickly recognizes the fact that he is in a disagreeable locality, and one where he may attract attention because of his good clothes, and may even rub up against unpleasant shoulders, and he jumps aboard a car and gets away from the place of contamination as soon as possible. This is particularly true of the family of the prosperous New Yorker, who are still less likely to see the East Side in summer, being more happily employed in woods and fields and on hotel piazzas if they go out of town, or in any event finding "slumming" a decadent and doubtful pleasure.

In the Jewish Quarter

Mulberry Bend, from the Five Points

* * *

For the benefit of comfortable optimism the Spectator took along his kodak that holiday afternoon. He is new to the kodak—he places himself in subordination to the instrument here, as is proper in these days of illustrated journalism—and will not say how many of his snap shots were failures, nor does he expect the amateur to view his work with a critic's eye. But the first view will show how far the Spectator's friend was correct in saying that the East Side is at Coney Island on a holiday. A good deal of it is indeed there; but still the impression made upon the Spectator as he walked through the streets was of "a great multitude, which no man can number." There is scarcely ever any thinning out of the East Side's teeming street population; it may be that the houses themselves are less populous on a holiday, though one can scarce look at any row of windows in a five-story tenement without seeing women's and children's faces through the fire-escapes and the plants and boxes and various household stuff that encumber them.

On the Street in His Nightgown

* * *

There is indeed one point—perhaps the Spectator may be pardoned for saying Five Points—which shows a notable diminution of New York's population on this hot day. The neighborhood of the Five Points long ago lost the large criminal population which in bygone years gave it its bad pre-eminence as a haunt of wickedness, but until recently it was one of the most thickly populated sections of the great city. "Mulberry Bend," with its swarms of rookeries and rear tenements, was but a stone's throw from the Five Points, and it was crowded to suffocation with the lowest class of Italians, more expressively known in New York street parlance as "dagoes." Now the Bend is no more, except to history. It is being transformed, by the slow degrees which still characterize certain branches of the city's work, into a public park. The tenements have been razed, the cellars filled up, and the ground leveled. Though the hawkers that used to render the street impassable still abound, with their jargon of cries that are more unintelligible even than those of their American congeners, there is breathing-space all around now. The shopkeepers really seem to be uncomfortable with the open sky before them, and the stranger need no longer fear the wiles of the "puller-in" along the adjacent Baxter Street. The stupendous change in the Bend has made the "old clothes man" lose his bearings and his heart for fitting out the passer-by with a complete outfit of garments "cheaper than you could steal 'em, and shust inside."

Mulberry Bend, from Bayard Street

* * *

Going north on Mulberry Street, however, we seem to find all of the "Bend's" crowded-out population. It is a peculiarity of the streets in the Italian quarter that they are bisected by several business thoroughfares, such as Canal and Grand Streets. The steps of the large buildings on these streets adjacent to the slums form the summer resorts of the tired mothers, driven by the heat from their tenement quarters around the corner. Swarthy, poorly dressed, without head-covering, they are usually far from pretty, but they are not all so poor as one might think, to judge from the heavy gold earrings and chains that they frequently wear. However else they may differ from their more fortunate sisters, they are like them in their love for their babies, and, as in the picture of the young Madonna shown herewith, though the mother be bonnetless, the baby's head is often carefully protected with a pretty cap.

An East Side Summer Resort

* * *

Babyhood ceases quickly, however, on the East Side, and the "bambino" soon learns to walk alone, or more often in the charge of a baby slightly larger than itself. The Spectator wishes he could show a picture of the two little tots who were playing around a street basin used for watering horses, and who greeted him with a bright smile in answer to his cheerful inquiry, "Having a good time, little ones?" though they evidently did not understand the words; or the little lad carrying two babies across the street, one under each arm, apparently afraid to leave either alone. The fountains are surrounded by children, who furtively dip their hands and splash in the cooling fluid when the policeman or the "white angels" of the Street-Cleaning Department are not about. The drinking fountains that dispense warm Croton without money and without price to him who cannot afford the price of a glass of two-cent soda next door are numerously patronized, by the children particularly; while the free ice-water fountain in "Paradise Park" (Five Points) does a bargain-counter business on this summer holiday.

A King's Daughters' Drinking Fountain

* * *

"Rosalina! Rosalina!" the Spectator hears in a childish treble, and sees little five-year-old calling to two-year-old to hasten after three-year-old. They have a tin cart with a string, and are going down through Leonard Street to play on the steps of the gray old Tombs in the late afternoon when the stones are cool. Sometimes the mother follows them with the one-year-old, sitting there on the broad, low steps to nurse her baby and gossip with a neighbor who has joined her in their "outing." And sometimes it is a "little father" who is sent out with the baby to find a cool place where the little one can have a nap. Down on the steps of the Criminal Courts building the Spectator saw the "little father" shown in the picture—a bronzed little fellow he was, coatless and hatless and shoeless, but with a good head and an honest face, and such a warm, warm heart! As the Spectator approached he said to himself, "Now I'll ask the little chap to let me take a picture of baby Tessa, and I'll call it 'A Good Boy and a Good Girl.'" But just as the Spectator came near, the affectionate brother, without noticing his approach, bent over and kissed the lips of the little sleeping sister. The Spectator said nothing, took his picture without attracting any notice, and passed reverently on. Warm hearts and true there are in humble tenements and beneath ragged shirts. God bless the little father and the sleeping baby! says the Spectator for his readers.

A "Little Father"

Little Lord Fauntleroys of the East Side

* * *

Not all East Siders are poor, though. There are silks and diamonds aplenty there. For the East Side is a large district, and the Spectator has taken the reader through only a few streets. Even in the "Bend" there are wealthy bankers and ticket-brokers, to say nothing of prosperous padrones and saloon-keepers. Not far from Roosevelt Street the Spectator came across a couple of veritable "Little Lord Fauntleroys," with ruffles, curls, clean faces, and—that priceless possession of an East Side boy—a bicycle. The Spectator looked around for the stern old Earl when he discovered these boys, but they seemed to be at large in the streets without a keeper, and apparently enjoying themselves in spite of the curls and the cleanliness. On the next block he found some ragged small boys seated astride an iron fence-rail in front of one of the business buildings. "Hey, Misteh! see me ride my bicycle!" said one of them as the Spectator came up. And as the Spectator walked on he wondered whether the aristocracy of the East Side knows how its own other half lives!

An East Side Fire-Engine House

* * *

Public buildings, parks, pavements, and fountains on the East Side all tell the story of the new interest which is being taken in the "nether world" by the rulers of democracy. It is true that one cannot entirely approve of the expenditure of large sums of money upon buildings of a negative usefulness, such as fire-engine houses, when those positive shapers of character, the school-houses, are overcrowded, inconvenient, and often utterly lacking in architectural distinction. To say this, however, is only to exercise a New Yorker's birthright of criticism of the powers that be—a birthright which is, indeed, freely exercised even among the supposedly patient toilers of the East Side. The Spectator was watching with much amusement the gambols of a horde of street gamins around a large fountain in a public square in the Hebrew quarter, when a man by his side said, "That's a great place to put a fountain!" Thinking he meant approval of the idea, the Spectator responded sympathetically. But he found that the citizen was strongly opposed to having the fountain in that place. "You see," he said, "it has car-tracks on all sides of it, and we drivers always has to be on the lookout for the kids, or they'll get run over as they scatter when the police comes. Then the big kids are always duckin' the little fellers, and that makes trouble for their mothers. And at night, when the pressure's on the water, it runs all over the street and makes a muss." The Spectator had been looking with unrestrained satisfaction at the enjoyment of the boys, one of whom had taken his shirt off and given himself a free bath, amid the howls of his mates, but he saw now that nothing good comes without its possible evil. Just then there was a warning cry as a policeman hove in sight, a sudden scattering of the crowd of mischief-makers, and when the policeman came to the fountain the square was almost deserted. Reaching down into the fountain's basin, the policeman dragged out a very small boy who had hoped to escape notice, set him on the pavement, gave him a single spank, and started him off! Truly it seemed that benevolence might mean one thing to the boys and another to the adults of the East Side. But, as the day was extremely hot and the Croton keeps fairly cool to the touch, the Spectator's sympathies as he went home were, on the whole, with the boys—as they always are.

Some English Notes

The selling of academic degrees purporting to come from American colleges is still a trade in England, despite all the exposures of its fraudulency. The following letter has been received by a clergyman there. I copy from the original, verbatim:

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY, U. S. A.

7 Westwick Gardens, W. Kensington Park,
London, 24 Mar., 1896.

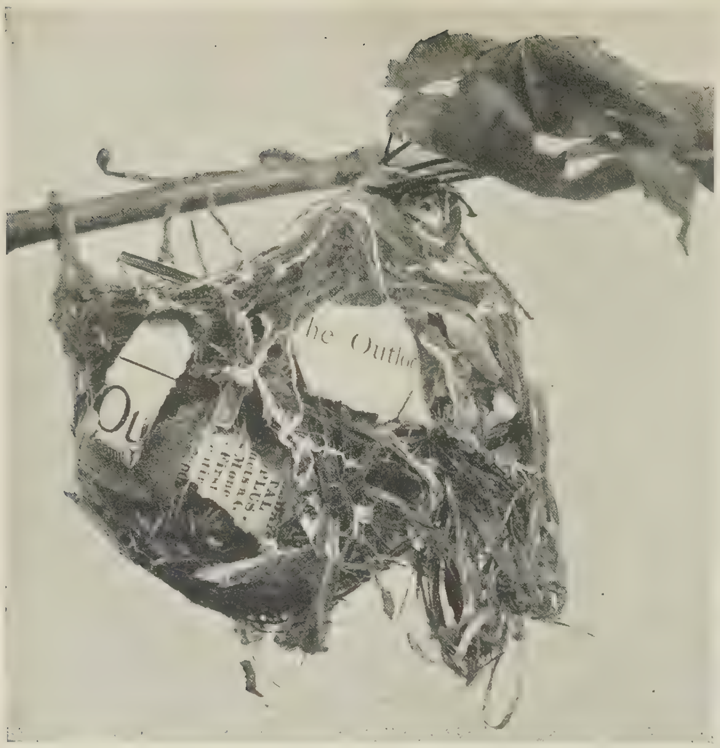
Rev'd Sir: As you are about to change your sphere of duty to the vicinity of ——, I wish to state that, as the Representative of a distinguished and fully chartered University in the U. S. A., I shall be very pleased, in recognition of your great Learning, ability, and Piety to promote you to a Degree and Title of Doctor or Bachelor in any order for which you are evidently eligible. Many Ministers of Denominational Churches have received these nominations with the greatest satisfaction. Perfect confidence is requested and given. I shall be pleased to hear from you. I remain, Rev'd Sir,

Yours faithfully,
C. J. SAYERS, LL.D.

Rev. —— ——.

This precious bit of imposture is accompanied by a printed circular purporting to be the opinion of Flavel S. Thomas, M.D., Ph.D., Professor of Medicine and Surgery, U. S. A., and to be taken from the Boston "Herald," on "The Current Value of University Degrees," both in a professional and a pecuniary view, together with several other recommendations of the goods thus offered for sale. It would be interesting to know whether this traffic is attempted anywhere else than among British investors, with whom too many doubtful American "securities" have been marketed.

Americans who have wondered at the persistency with which the antique style of railroad car maintains itself in England will be interested in the remark of the London "Standard" that nothing acceptable has yet been devised "to make an English railway carriage as safe as an American car, always excepting the risk of being 'stuck up' ["held up" is meant] by a party of armed bandits." This confession is elicited by a recent event which has attracted much remark in England—a ferocious assault on a woman by a man occupying the same compartment on the London and Brighton Railway. Railway carriages in England, being divided up into four or five close compartments, give opportunity for such crimes, and means of signaling to those in charge of the train are not always within reach. The gravity of the situation appears in the fact that the London Board of Trade has addressed the Railway Companies' Association a letter upon the subject, declaring that "the evil assumes in the public mind the proportions of a serious social scandal." The companies are urged to consider what means can be adopted to abate the evil. It is a curious fact that the matter has been discussed since 1864 without result, except to prove the inadequacy of the means that would seem most simple and effective, viz., to reserve certain compartments for ladies only. It is a fact that many ladies decline to use these, on account of the number of mothers with small children whom they find in them. The only remedy which seems to be acknowledged as effective is the adoption of the American style of car in place of the present old-fashioned coach, but the expense of the change is an objection. It appears, moreover, that men now feel themselves at risk in these closed compartments quite as much as women, and strongly object to being alone in them with any unknown female passenger. Men thus circumstanced have had criminal charges falsely brought against them, to their unspeakable misery. Aware of this, a cautious man who finds himself left by his fellow-travelers as the solitary companion of a strange woman prefers to vacate his place for one where there is more company. In view of this state of things, the adoption by some American companies of the English term "coach" as a designation for our totally different style of vehicle is a curious anomaly, and savors strongly of "Anglomania." J. M. W.



A Bird Subscriber to The Outlook

To the Editors of The Outlook:

In these days of sharp competition between rival newspaper publishers to increase their circulation, the wide earth has been scoured to secure new readers for enterprising journals, but The Outlook is the first periodical that has soared above sublunary things, and, by its calm and intelligent discussion of public questions, and especially by the space which it has given to outdoor topics and natural history, has attracted the attention of the inhabitants of the air.

In proof of this statement, which needs no sworn affidavit of your publisher, I inclose a photograph, taken at Twilight Park, in the Catskills, of a nest belonging to a red-eyed vireo—sometimes called the preacher-bird, and, therefore, as a mother, of course, interested in the trend of religious thought and in theological discussion. This bird is in the habit of suspending its nest from the branch of a tree, a custom not common to most birds, while, whenever practicable, it employs newspaper scraps as part material for the structure.

The present nest hung low from a tree, about ten feet above a much-frequented roadway, close to Ledge End Inn, yet the mother bird showed little alarm at the traffic passing directly below her house, which commanded a magnificent and expansive view. The nest was discovered by Mrs. M. J. Donnelly, of Brooklyn, who has spent several seasons in Twilight Park, where her outdoor classes in bird-study have been exceedingly popular with young and old alike. During the present season she has made observations of no less than fifty-five varieties of birds in and around the Park, and within an hour and a half, on the Fourth of July, she counted twenty-one varieties from the porch of Cosy Cabin—my own abiding-place, which has been made musical with the song-birds, no doubt partly attracted by the presence of my wife's Java sparrow in his cage on the piazza, and also by that past-master in bird-lore, John Burroughs, who was a welcome guest at Cosy Cabin on the day in question.

Since the Park was established, in 1887, no one has been allowed to shoot or injure any living thing within its borders, and this, no doubt, will account for the number of birds, squirrels, chipmunks, porcupines, raccoons, and other creatures, who have grown wonderfully tame, the birds nesting under piazza roofs and flying with food to their young across groups of a dozen people without fear, while the chipmunks are so domesticated that they will eat out of your hand, and in one cottage, whose owner is a vegetarian, and who largely subsists on nuts, they climb on the table after every meal and help themselves to the family store.

But to return to our preacher-bird. After watching the progress of the family growth until the nestlings had grown strong enough to fly, Mrs. Donnelly took possession of the nest, and found, as shown in the photograph, that it was largely constructed of extracts from a last year's number of The Outlook. The date of the issue cannot be seen, but on the under side of the largest scrap are advertisements of two boarding-schools, showing that the mother bird had evidently been deeply concerned in the future of her young as well as in their immediate nurture.

The nest is beautifully constructed of strips of the bark of the yellow birch, and it is a work of art in every respect. The red-eyed vireo is a beautiful songster, and John Burroughs praises its melodious efforts in "Wake Robin" and his other writings.

I am sure that you will be glad to number it among your subscribers, and I trust that you will not miss the opportunity of increasing the circle of your bird readers in Twilight Park, where The Outlook is always a welcome guest.

Charles F. Wingate.

Twilight Park in the Catskills.

What the Birds Say

Do you ask what the birds say? The sparrow, the dove,
The linnet and thrush, say, "I love, and I love!"
In the winter they're silent, the wind is so strong;
What it says I don't know, but it sings a loud song.
But green leaves, and blossoms, and sunny warm weather,
And singing and loving—all come back together.
But the lark is so brimful of gladness and love,
The green fields below him, the blue sky above,
That he sings, and he sings, and forever sings he,
"I love my Love, and my Love loves me."

—Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

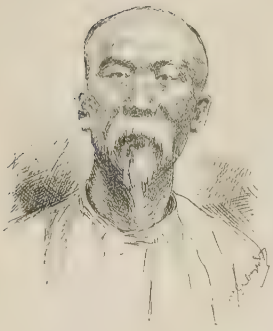
JOHN BURROUGHS WATCHING THE BIRDS

Li Hung Chang and General Grant

By Frederick D. Grant



Li Hung Chang

The visit to the United States of his Highness Li Hung Chang, following his European trip, recalls agreeably to my mind my visit to China in company with my father, General Grant, during the late spring and summer of 1879. It was during this most interesting visit that I made the personal acquaintance of the great Viceroy, as he was General Grant's devoted friend and most hospitable host throughout our stay in China generally, and especially in Tientsin. His Highness seemed to feel that he and General Grant were kindred in spirit and mind. He said as much several times to my father. Li Hung Chang took the greatest pleasure in having his photograph taken with my father's, on various occasions; the collecting of these photographs became, in fact, quite a fad of his. During one of our visits he was heard—in making some comparisons—to say, "General Grant and I have suppressed the two greatest rebellions known in history."

The Viceroy is a superb-looking man, immensely tall. In stature he towered over all of us. He has a massive head and a strong, intellectual face, keen, glittering eyes, and his presence is that of a great prince, accustomed to the homage of his fellowman. He seemed to have the greatest interest and earnest curiosity in meeting my father, whom he received with marked honors and Oriental courtesy. Li Hung Chang's personality grew upon me, and every time I saw him I was more and more impressed with his greatness.

GENERAL GRANT AND LI HUNG CHANG[1]

At Canton, Mr. Holcombe, our Acting Minister to China, brought us the news that the Chinese authorities at Pekin had given orders that General Grant should be received with unusual distinction. On reaching Canton we passed the "Bogue" forts which guarded that great city, and as the Ashuelot was seen approaching with the flag at the fore, which indicated that General Grant was aboard, all the Chinese gunboats fired salutes, which our vessel returned. We reached the Canton dock about 9 o'clock P.M., May 5, where we were received by the American and foreign residents, and were escorted by the American Consul, Mr. Lincoln, to his house. On the following day General Grant and party paid their formal visit to the Viceroy, Liu Kun, at the viceregal palace, the Viceroy having sent sedan-chairs for our conveyance. He had notified Mr. Lincoln that when General Grant came to visit him he wished to order that all the houses of the city be closed and the streets vacated, saying that this was the custom when the Emperor of China passed through a city, and of course it should be done for General Grant. My father immediately said, upon hearing this, that he would feel greatly indebted if such an order would not be issued, as he especially desired to see the people of the country. Therefore it was announced to the people of Canton that the distinguished "foreigner" was coming to do honor to the Viceroy, and that they must do honor to him and his party. Our procession to the viceregal palace was a stately affair. The streets were lined with troops. General Grant went first, in the Viceroy's huge green sedan-chair, which was surmounted by a silver globe, borne by eight coolies, and surrounded by a guard of soldiers who cleared the streets before us. The people filled all available spaces, looking with apparent wonder upon the "foreigner," whom they saluted by clasping their hands in front of their faces in a supplicating attitude. When we left our chairs and entered the court of the palace, the Viceroy was awaiting us at the door, with his court and officials. He received General Grant in a manner which appeared to us reverential. With the Viceroy was the "Tartar General," who is co-equal in rank. Each province of China has a dual head—a Chinese Viceroy, managing the civil affairs, and a Tartar General, commanding independently the troops, and being responsible to the Government at Pekin.

This visit of General Grant was returned on the following day, first by the Tartar General, and then by the Viceroy, each coming in formal state, preceded by trumpeters who announced their arrival, attended by court officials and surrounded by soldiers. Most of General Grant's time in Canton was occupied by these serious formalities and ceremonies. The next day the Viceroy entertained General Grant at dinner. This affair was marvelously and curiously grand, seventy courses being served, each one of which was a revelation to us foreigners. The great features of the feast were "bird's-nest soup," "shark's fins," and

---

[1] We are indebted to the courtesy of the "Review of Reviews" for permission to reproduce this picture, as well as the two portraits of Li Hung Chang on pages 370 and 371.

"eggs which had been buried in the earth for forty years." It was most agreeable to us that cigars were passed freely during the dinner, and as our party had finished dining long before all the courses were served, we sat contentedly smoking, and looking upon the repast with wonder and admiration. The Viceroy apologized to General Grant for not having invited Mrs. Grant to dine, and explained that it was against Chinese etiquette for ladies to be asked to a banquet. He made amends to my mother, however, by sending to her at the Consulate the same courses which were being served to us at the palace.

Leaving Canton on May 9, we returned to Hongkong, stopping on the way at Macao, the last of the Portuguese possessions in the Far East. At Hongkong a great banquet was given by the Governor to General Grant, and two days later, May 12, our party sailed on the Ashuelot for a cruise along the coast of China. The first port that we reached was Swatow, where, after the usual ceremony of salutes, we went ashore and made a tour of the city. The Governor of Swatow presented himself to General Grant, reporting that he was ordered by his Government to pay him every possible honor, and that, as it was the usual custom to bring offerings to distinguished visitors, he had brought a live sheep, six live chickens, six ducks, and four hams for General Grant, deeming food to be the most useful and acceptable gift. My father accepted the presents with proper thanks, but immediately upon the departure of the Governor he gave all these useful souvenirs to the attendants of our party.

Amidst the firing of cannon we left Swatow, and landed next at Amoy, on the Island of Heamun, at the mouth of the Dragon River—an old Portuguese open port, where we were received with a warm welcome, and we left that evening for Shanghai.

RECEPTION OF LI HUNG CHANG BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC

From "L'Illustration"

As we came abreast of the Woosung Forts, the Chinese from each fort fired a "Presidential" salute of twenty-one guns to my father. This was much remarked, as the Chinese salute is of only three guns, even for their Emperor, all persons receiving the same salute, irrespective of rank; but they departed from this custom as an especial honor to General Grant. As we approached the city of Shanghai, the spectacle was a grand one. There were acres of people assembled along the river. I estimated them to be 500,000 in numbers. All ships of war and merchantmen anchored in the harbor "dressed ship" and saluted. The Ashuelot's barge was made ready, and our party pulled ashore at 3 o'clock P.M., amid salvos of artillery. We soon reached the landing, which was carpeted with red cloth, a mark of royal distinction, and proceeded under escort to a large building which had been prepared for General Grant's reception. This building was crowded with the families of the most distinguished residents of Shanghai, and the Chinese Governor, with his retinue of officials, awaited my father. Addresses of welcome were here delivered. From this reception, escorted by a guard of honor, General Grant was taken to the United States Consulate, where the escort was reviewed.

We started on the morning of the 24th of May for the north of China, with the anticipation of meeting the famous Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, at Tientsin. As our ship entered the Peiho River, amid the firing of cannon and the waving of flags, we saw a yacht, carrying the Viceroy's flag, steaming towards us. The yacht came alongside of the Ashuelot, and two Mandarins came on board, bringing the Viceroy's card. Immediately General Grant left the cabin and went to the gangway, with the United States Consul, Judge Denny, and orders were given to prepare the ship for the reception of the Viceroy. In a few moments Li Hung Chang passed over the side of the Ashuelot, and was greeted by General Grant, amid the roar and smoke of the American guns saluting him, and the cheers of the sailors who had manned the yards of the vessels. After this reception, General Grant conducted the Viceroy to the upper deck, where they sat in conversation. This high compliment paid to General Grant by the Viceroy, in coming to meet him before he landed at Tientsin, surprised us all, but we were informed that when the programme of General Grant's reception was brought before the Viceroy he had declared, "I wish to be the first Chinaman to welcome General Grant into my Province."

I have already described the personal appearance of the Viceroy. My father esteemed him as one of the greatest of men. Li Hung Chang is the Viceroy of Pichili, the most important Province of China, as it contains within its boundary the city of Pekin, which is the capital of the Empire, and the open seaport of Tientsin. The Viceroy of this Province has jurisdiction over the population amidst which the Emperor lives, and protects his royal person and residence. Li Hung Chang is the chief of the War Office, and commander of the eastern armies of China. He is especially charged with the coast defenses, and is "Grand Secretary of State," by virtue of which latter office much of the diplomatic intercourse of China with foreign countries is placed in his hands. He is a nobleman, with the rank of "a thousand generations;" high or low rank in China being decided upon according to the number of generations of nobility. Li Hung Chang achieved his greatest fame during the Taeping rebellion in the early '60's, when he, a Chinaman, espoused the cause of the Tartar dynasty. Since that time he has been regarded as the guardian of the throne, and every honor has been thrust upon him, with great responsibilities and power.

After a short conversation with General Grant, the Viceroy inspected the Ashuelot, and seemed to be greatly interested in the large deck-gun with which the boat was armed. Soon after this inspection he returned to his own yacht, being saluted as he retired from our ship.

The Ashuelot continued up the Peiho River, and landed near the foreign settlement of Tientsin, where General and Mrs. Grant were conducted to the house of Judge Denny, the United States Consul. This landing was attended with the same ceremonies with which General Grant had been received since his arrival in China.

On the following day General Grant returned the Viceroy's visit at the viceregal palace, which was located at the opposite side of the city of Tientsin from the Consulate, and was on the Peiho River. The Viceroy's yacht had been sent to convey my father up the river to the palace, and he took with him, as an escort, a naval guard from the Ashuelot. Starting at the designated hour, amid shouts and cheers from all sides, our party proceeded up the river, through the city, the Chinese junks lining up on either side of the river, and all available spaces on the boats and on the banks of the river being crowded with people. The entire population of Tientsin seemed to be out to view the procession. When we arrived at the palace, a regiment of the Viceroy's troops was in line, and "presented arms" to General Grant, as he passed in the Viceroy's large yellow-lined state chair, borne by eight men; and when he reached the palace door, the Viceroy, with his court and mandarins, came forward to welcome him. The Viceroy received General Grant with, as it seemed, enthusiastic pleasure and interest, and escorted him through his palace into the audience-chamber, where they both took seats and remained conversing for some time, with the usual accompaniment of "tea."

Every day during our stay in Tientsin there was some great state function arranged in honor of General Grant, at each of which the Viceroy was present, and during each entertainment he had a photograph made of himself and my father together, occasionally honoring the rest of the company by including them in the picture.

On the second day of our visit in Tientsin the great ceremonial banquet was given to General Grant by the Viceroy, in a large temple. This was a most wonderful entertainment, and when the dinner was ended a speech was read, on behalf of the Viceroy, "welcoming General Grant to Tientsin," and expressing the "honor and happiness which the Viceroy felt in receiving him there," etc., etc. During the reading of this speech and my father's reply the Viceroy and his guests remained standing. When it was finished, General Grant answered at length, expressing thanks to the Viceroy for his welcome and for the special consideration he had received at his hands, and complimenting Li Hung Chang upon his great services to China, and all that he had accomplished for his country, etc.

During this dinner the great delicacy, "eggs preserved for forty years," was served. The Viceroy, on seeing General Grant allow this course to pass him, was disappointed, and with gracious manner turned and took up one of the eggs from his own plate with his chopsticks and placed it between my father's lips. It was quickly swallowed, with the assistance of a glass of sherry!

We made an entertaining tour through Tientsin, of which city the marked feature was the massive wall which surrounds it. After several days we left for Pekin, saying au revoir to our great and hospitable host, the Viceroy Li Hung Chang. We chose the easiest route to Pekin, which was by the Peiho River as far as Tung Chow, a distance of about one hundred and forty-eight miles, thence across country for twelve miles to Pekin. This trip up the Peiho River, which our party made in a fleet of eight vessels, was quite an interesting experience to us, and gave us a more thorough insight into the actual civilization of China than we could obtain during all the rest of our journey in that country. General Grant was met at Tung Chow by the officials, Mandarins with red and blue button, who had been sent from Pekin by Prince Kung, the Prince Regent, to escort him and his party to the Imperial Capital.

Pekin is situated on a large plain, and its towers and walls loomed up before us when we were still a great distance away from the city. We soon reached its great eastern gate, where our escort, which had preceded us, had assembled and was awaiting us. We also found there a concourse of people, among whom were other Mandarins of Prince Kung's court, who had been sent by the Regent with his welcome to General Grant, to receive him into the Imperial City. We entered through the gate, and within the walls found another military escort composed of Tartars, who wore a different uniform from that worn by our guard from Tung Chow. I understood that these were the Imperial Guards. General Grant entered the imperial sedan-chair, which was a massive yellow affair, sent for his use by the Prince Regent, and, with the United States officials, and accompanied by these Chinese guards, he and his party proceeded through Pekin. The streets had been cleared and all the dwellings closed along the route, as would have been the case if the Emperor were entering the city.

PRINCE BISMARCK AND LI HUNG CHANG

From "L'Illustration"

The American residents of Pekin, most of whom were missionaries, came in a body to the Legation to welcome my father, and a few hours later, on the afternoon of our arrival, the members of the Chinese Cabinet, accompanied by the Tartar and Chinese Governors of Pekin, presented themselves in state to pay their respects to the "distinguished foreigner." At the same time the first Secretary of the Cabinet presented the Prince Regent's card, with messages of welcome from his Imperial Highness to General Grant, who returned his thanks to the Prince. This reception was ceremonious, though of short duration, and was attended by the serving of refreshments and "tea," after which these Mandarins, who were among the highest and most distinguished personages of the Empire, made their adieus and retired.

TAKEN AT TIENTSIN, JULY 18, 1895, AFTER LI HUNG CHANG'S RETURN FROM JAPAN

Under the left eye is seen the bullet-mark made by the shot of his would-be assassin

The Emperor was a delicate child, seven years old; consequently General Grant did not request an audience with him, which the Chinese probably considered most gracious on the part of the "foreigner" to whom they were according imperial honors. They call their Emperor the "Son of Heaven," regarding him as a sacred being, and feared that a precedent would be established which could be taken advantage of—foreign ambassadors might also demand audiences. General Grant might have properly requested the audience, as he had been at the head of a great nation, and had himself accredited representatives to other nations. The Chinese have always contended that their Emperor would receive the "rulers of nations," but not their diplomatic "agents."

The day after our arrival General Grant called upon Prince Kung at the "Yamen," where, at the door, we found the Regent, with the Cabinet and his court officials, waiting. He saluted my father in a ceremonious and courtly manner, and all of our party were presented to him. I remember that when he spoke to me he asked me about the uniform I wore—that of a lieutenant-colonel—inquiring my age, and what family I had. When I replied that I had a little daughter named Julia, the Prince condoled with me, and said, "What a pity!" which exclamation I, a happy young father, thought most shocking. Some one, however, explained to me that "in China girls are not counted of importance to human happiness." My natural desire was to argue the question with the Prince, but etiquette forbade. I suppose that he would have congratulated me afterwards if I had announced to him the birth of my son, Ulysses.

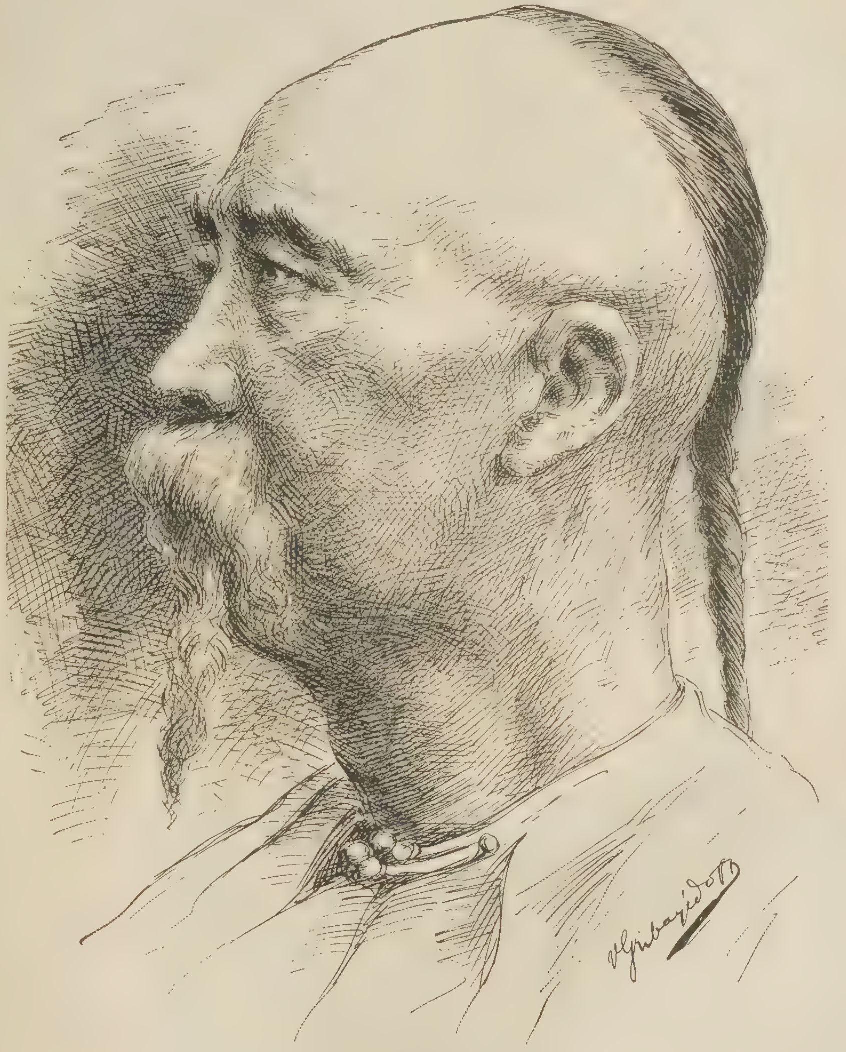
Prince Kung was a most interesting personage, I thought. He was in reality the Emperor of China, and master of four hundred millions of human beings. He was the brother of an emperor and the uncle of an emperor, and was, for the latter, acting as Regent. In presence he was most distinguished, with a finely shaped head and noble physique, being much lighter in complexion than any Chinaman whom we had met. His costume was simple, and his rank designated by the yellow in his apparel and by a yellow silk knot on his hat. His manner was impressive and courtly. After receiving General Grant, the Prince conducted him into an apartment of the palace where a great repast was served in a stately manner, and where they conversed for some time. In the beginning of their discourse the Prince talked to my father in a very ceremonious and complimentary manner, observing his guest closely at the same time; but gradually he became more and more intent and interested in the conversation, and finally threw off all reserve, and, apparently having decided that his guest was worthy of all confidence, he talked to him as a trusted friend and adviser. This gradual change of manner to warmth from that of formal ceremony was most noticeable to all present. During this interview Prince Kung confided to my father that he had received a letter from Li Hung Chang recommending that he should consult General Grant and seek his assistance as an arbitrator between China and Japan upon the question of the sovereignty of the Loochoo Islands, land recently occupied by Japan, though the Prince of these Islands had always paid tribute to and recognized the supremacy of China. This seizure on the part of Japan was considered outrageous by the Chinese authorities, and war was threatened between the two Empires. The quiet interest and open candor of General Grant's manner encouraged Prince Kung to become confiding, and after talking some time upon the subject the Prince said that he would like to discuss the question more in detail later. Having partaken of tea, our call came to an end, and we said au revoir, leaving to make a visit to the Tunguon College, which was under the direction of Dr. Martin, an American.

On the next day Prince Kung came to the Legation to return promptly the call of General Grant, being accompanied by the Under-Secretary of State. After the usual formalities of greeting, the Prince sat down to converse with General Grant further upon the Loochoo question. He spoke with animation and earnestness, repeating the request that my father would arbitrate upon the trouble between China and Japan. He did not fail to mention how "highly esteemed General Grant was by the Chinese," and how the latter "appreciated all the just and kind consideration which they had received during his administrations." General Grant explained that he was simply a private citizen, and traveling for pleasure, having no longer power in the Government, and that he could not, therefore, enforce any decision that might be reached; he, however, expressed great interest in all that the Prince had said to him, and replied frankly that he looked upon war as such a calamity to a country that any sacrifice short of a national humiliation should be made to avoid it, and added that war between China and Japan would cause boundless misfortune.

General Grant agreed to inform himself fully upon the question and lay the matter before the Japanese authorities, and hoped that he could make such suggestions as to bring about an adjustment of the question in a way to avert the calamity of a war. Prince Kung, whose manner had seemed very earnest and overwrought during the interview, became satisfied and pleased with my father's calm and friendly consideration, for which he thanked him repeatedly and took his leave.

Upon General Grant's return to Tientsin, the Viceroy Li Hung Chang secured several long conferences with him upon the same question of the Loochoo Islands, and later, when we reached Japan, General Grant talked upon the subject with the Japanese authorities, and the matter was adjusted through his efforts and suggestions, without the two countries being involved in the horrors of war, much to the satisfaction of both nations. General Grant later received formally the warm thanks of China and of Japan for his friendly intercession.

The Regent, Prince Kung, and the Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, discussed with General Grant many state questions besides that of the Loochoo Islands, the most important one being that which referred to the development of the resources of the Empire. These two statesmen, as well as the Cabinet of China, seemed forcibly struck and amazed with the disinterested reply of General Grant upon this subject. He told them that the developments and improvements of the Empire, to be permanent and not a drain upon their nation, must be accomplished by the Chinese people themselves, without granting charters to aliens, who would use foreign money and open the way for foreign Governments to interfere with the internal affairs of China. This unselfish advice from General Grant won for him their admiration and implicit faith. It was the first time that a foreigner had ever suggested or acknowledged to the Chinese a possibility that railroads, factories, etc., etc., could be built and operated in China except under the guidance and control of foreign nations. Attention may be called here to the fact that at the present time the Chinese are beginning to construct railroads, telegraph lines, and factories, which are owned and operated by themselves.



LI HUNG CHANG

Our stay in Pekin quickly drew to a close, after numerous forms and ceremonies of state, and when we had visited all the places of interest in the city. We returned to Tientsin in our little fleet, reaching there on the early morning of June 12, and General Grant had not yet breakfasted before he received a message that the Viceroy was on his way to call upon him. He received Li Hung Chang as he stepped from his chair, and welcomed him into the Consulate, where sweets and tea were served, and the two Generals conversed together in the most animated manner for several hours. During this conversation, and all others which General Grant had with the Viceroy in Tientsin, the questions of the Loo-choo Islands and of Chinese internal improvement were discussed at length.

When we were in Tientsin the second time, we saw the Viceroy every day, as before, and he was most hospitable and attentive to my father. Many grand functions and entertainments were given for our party, at all of which Li Hung Chang was present. The most interesting and novel of these affairs was an entertainment given by the wife of the Viceroy to my mother, Mrs. Grant. Madam Li, of course, had not been present at any of the other festivities, as she lives in absolute seclusion, and it is difficult for foreigners to understand what a radical step and overthrowing of Chinese customs and etiquette this was in the distinguished lady to give an evening entertainment to Mrs. Grant. No foreign lady had ever been received before in the home of a Viceroy or other great Chinese, nor even seen Madam Li. There was much excitement and talk over this affair among the foreign colony, as well as among the Chinese, and my mother has told me that the entertainment was most interesting and delightful. Mrs. Grant, with the other foreign ladies who accompanied her, went to the palace in sedan chairs, and was received at the door by Madam Li. During the evening, when refreshments were being served, the Viceroy himself came to the door to look on the scene of his wife's entertainment, which was an entirely new and novel affair to him. No other gentleman, of course, was admitted to Madam Li's salon.

Our last visit, as our first one, to Tientsin was most interesting, and I shall ever cherish the pleasantest memories of the days passed there, and of the kind friends who entertained us, among the latter the great Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, being always the most prominent. Our stay in Tientsin ended with Madam Li's entertainment for my mother. The following morning, with our party on board, the Ashuelot steamed down the Peiho River, amidst the booming of cannon and the waving of flags, until we had passed the Waku forts. Lying at anchor some distance out at sea was the United States frigate Richmond, which awaited General Grant and his party to convey them to Japan. Near by was the Viceroy's yacht, surrounded by a fleet of Chinese gunboats. The Viceroy had preceded us to the open sea, having declared that he would bid farewell to General Grant on the extreme boundary of his dominions. Immediately after we had boarded the Richmond, the Viceroy's yacht steamed forward, stopping about two hundred yards from our vessel. The barge of the Richmond was sent to the yacht to bring Li Hung Chang and his high officials for his last visit to General Grant. This final meeting of the two Generals was impressive, and I regret that no picture was made of that memorable scene. As the Viceroy came on our ship he was received by General Grant, surrounded by officers in full uniform, while the sailors manned the yards, and a salute of nineteen guns was fired. The two friends clasped hands, and showed great regret that the time had come for them to part, perhaps never to meet again. They remained together in conversation a long time, and the Viceroy's manner was that of perfect confidence and almost affection. Finally, and reluctantly, Li Hung Chang said farewell and returned to his yacht. With all the ships dressed, flags floating on the breeze, yards manned, and amidst the roar of cannon from the Richmond, Ashuelot, and Chinese fleet, our vessel turned her bow and sailed into the open sea. General Grant had parted from his friend the Viceroy Li Hung Chang—forever.

The Higher Life of St. Louis

By the Rev. John Snyder

Church of the Messiah, St. Louis

ONE Sunday morning Mr. Beecher arose in the pulpit and said, in substance: "I hold in my hand the notice of a bazaar to be held by the ladies of the church. I refuse to read it as it is written. The notice says, 'for the sale of useful and ornamental articles.' I don't like the distinction. All useful articles should be ornamental; all really ornamental articles are useful." So, in the same spirit, I might justly say that it is hard to draw a straight line between the higher life and the lower life of a great city. The simplest material things may really contribute to the former; while things that are meant to be moral and spiritual in nature may stand as obstructions in the way of a city's better growth. Colonel Waring's "white angels" furnish a perpetual object-lesson to the great metropolis of what the humblest untrained toil may do to advance the best interests of a great city.

Who sweeps a room as by God's law
Makes that and the action fine.

Bear with me, then, if I seem at times to be wandering from my text.

In these days of extreme individualism we have almost lost the sense of corporate personality. We forget what was so plain to the ancients, that the city has a distinct life of its own, apart from, or rather born out of, the individual character of its people. And nothing is of more interest than to trace this corporate life back to its roots. St. Louis, as part of the Louisiana purchase, is of pure French origin, but the traces of its parentage survive almost entirely in the social complexion of the city, rather than in the structure of its permanent character. I think it may be justly said that no representative of the distinguished French families that ruled the social life of the city at the beginning of this century impressed himself strongly and vitally upon its intellectual, its educational, its political, or its spiritual character. Socially, the French element has been dominant, and its influence has produced that ineffable charm of social intercourse, that delightful spirit of hospitality, that refinement and geniality in domestic life, that blending of social dignity and simplicity, which are apt to characterize French people of intelligence and culture wherever found. But, for some unknown reason, the French have never been good colonists. In St. Louis, as in all other parts of the American continent, while they are thrifty, temperate, and valuable citizens, their distinct contributions to the higher intellectual life of the city have not been very great. Of course this judgment must be modified by a grateful recognition of the service rendered to the cause of religious education by the devoted, disinterested, and untiring labor of the ubiquitous disciples of Loyola and St. Xavier.

THE HUMBOLDT MONUMENT, IN TOWER GROVE PARK
The Gift of Henry Shaw

IN SHAW'S GARDEN

But the dawning life of the city was not entirely French. We find in the earliest records of the land office a few names that are distinctively Irish. Representatives both from the north and south of Ireland soon began to mingle in the stream of municipal life. Then came people from Kentucky and Virginia. Since '48 Germany has sent to St. Louis an increasing number of university-bred men, whose thirst for education, love of liberty, and alertness of intellectual life have been of incalculable value. While I recognize that "comparisons are odorous," yet I cannot withhold the expression of my conviction that in no other city have the citizens adopted from Germany been of so high a type. The stamp of slavery on Missouri frightened away many of the hardy and enterprising pioneers from New York, Ohio, and the New England States, who either remained in Illinois or hurried through to Kansas and Nebraska; while the "Alton riots" not only paralyzed that infant city, but incalculably damaged the immediate future of the metropolis of the Mississippi Valley. Nevertheless, New England sent some rare men to us, and the "Yankee schoolmarm" was almost as ubiquitous and quite as devoted as the Jesuit priest. This mingling of metals made the Corinthian bronze of our municipal character.

GOVERNMENT

Samuel Tilden once said, in substance, that the man who helped to give a good government to mankind did better service than the one who gave his country a hundred eleemosynary institutions. The remark was wise. Surely the art

---

[1] Previous articles in this series have been: "The Higher Life of American Cities" (introductory), by Mr. Theodore Roosevelt (The Outlook for December 21, 1895); "The Higher Life of New York City," by Albert Shaw (January 28, 1896); "The Higher Life of Chicago," by Melville E. Stone (February 22); "The Higher Life of Boston," by Edward Everett Hale (March 28); "The Higher Life of New Orleans," by Grace King (April 25); "Buffalo, the City of Homes," by the Rev. W. Burnet Wright, D.D. (June 27); and "The Higher Life of Philadelphia," by Talcott Williams (July 25).

of living together in peace and justice is the highest result of social evolution. How has St. Louis solved the problem of civic government? Only indifferently well. We have as good a government as we deserve; very probably, as good as we desire. St. Louis is unique among American cities in being a free city. It received in 1875, from a Constitutional Convention, the gift of municipal freedom. But the very novelty of the condition has served to partially deprive the city of many of the advantages which the "scheme and charter" were designed to bestow. Several notable decisions of the Supreme Court have curtailed its privilege. And the absence of any purely municipal politics, separated from State and National partisanship, has left the city largely in control of the managers of the two great political organizations. Like most American cities, we suffer from the lack of a wholesome public spirit. We select our Mayor and our street-sweepers from the body of our fellow-citizens who agree with us upon the subjects of "tariff" and "free silver"! The adoption of such an astute principle in the conduct of private business would subject a man to the suspicion of lunacy, but very few people seem to object to it in public affairs. Quite recently we held an election for members of the School Board, and the Republican "bosses" forced the nominees to publicly promise to submit their official action to the decision of the Republican caucus. Upon the day of the election the voters went to the polls and solemnly gave these caucus-tied gentlemen the absolute control of the educational interests of the city. Soon after this the Supreme Court of the State made an order which these same gentlemen saw fit to disobey. The Court promptly fined and imprisoned them for contempt. Upon their return to the city an attempt was made by the "bosses" to honor them with a public reception in recognition of the service they had rendered their party in gracefully accepting constructive martyrdom at the hands of a tyrannical Democratic court. Fortunately the scheme fell through, largely, perhaps, because of the dignified and manly protest uttered by Mr. Charles Nagel, the honored President of the Council. We hear much general and spasmodic denunciation of municipal corruption, but when gentlemen of unimpeachable business integrity are willing to pay secret money for public franchises and justify their action on the ground that what they seek is for public good as well as private profit, I think I am justified in saying that we have a government as good as we deserve. Now let me hang the picture in a different light. I believe that St. Louis will be one of the first of the large American cities to adopt and work a sensible and efficient civil service reform. We have no great and arrogant political "rings" which it would require gigantic effort to throw off. Generally speaking, our "bosses" are men of little education and intellectual force. They have simply grasped at power and privileges which we have cast aside in supine indifference. As Cassius says of Cæsar:

THE FOUNTAINS AND RUINS IN TOWER GROVE PARK

> Poor man! I know he would not be a wolf.
> But that he sees the Romans are but sheep.

Substantial reform has already been achieved, and more is promised. We move slowly because the old French conservatism is in our blood. Both in its legislative and executive departments St. Louis can count a gradually increasing number of men who care more for duty than party. The Civic Federation has recently been resurrected, and, under the leadership of the Rev. W. W. Boyd, D.D., shows signs of vigorous life. The effort is being made to organize the young men of the churches and synagogues and ethical culture clubs into societies for the study of the sacred duties of citizenship. Those of us who believe that it is as absurd to shut a minister out of politics as it would be to shut a physician out of a hospital are trying to teach that religion is designed to transform this world into the kingdom of God instead of making the churches mere post-mortem emigration societies.

EDUCATION

Unlike the New England States, Missouri took to the public school but slowly. For more than thirty years after its entrance into the Federal Union the free-school system of the principal cities of the State was in a very weak and disorganized condition. In the year 1857, Ira Divoll was made Superintendent of the Public Schools of St. Louis, and he may be justly called the Father of our Public Schools. His genius gave them organic life. His untiring zeal commended them to the care and tardily awakened enthusiasm of a rapidly growing city. Upon the foundation he so wisely built, Professor W. T. Harris was, perhaps, mainly instrumental in rearing a splendid educational structure. Professor Harris has since achieved an international reputation as a teacher and philosophical scholar, and the corner-stone of that reputation was laid in the work of perfecting the school system of St. Louis. Of course the arduous and admirable work of Divoll and Harris was ably seconded by a body of noble instructors and devoted laymen. Men like W. G. Eliot, Wayman Crow, George Partridge, Hudson E. Bridge, John Cavender, John O'Fallon, Colonel Thomas Benton, David Armstrong, Colonel Richardson, Dr. Carr Lane, and a host of others, gave an unstinted measure of unpaid toil. And, not behind these in skill, devotion, and intelligence, there were of valuable women "not a few." To St. Louis belongs the enviable distinction of being the first city of this country to embody the ideas of the brilliant Froebel in its public-school system. Miss Susan E. Blow established in this city the first public kindergarten in America. This was in 1873. We now have fifty-eight schools of this character, in which 9,000 children are enrolled. Six of these schools are for colored children, in charge of carefully trained teachers of their own race. Under the admirable supervision of Miss Mary C. McCulloch this department of instruction constantly increases in efficiency. At present our school system is under the superintendency of Professor Soldan, whose brilliant scholarship and rare executive ability afford a notable illustration of the great debt the city owes to its educated German population.

STATUE OF HENRY SHAW, IN SHAW'S GARDEN

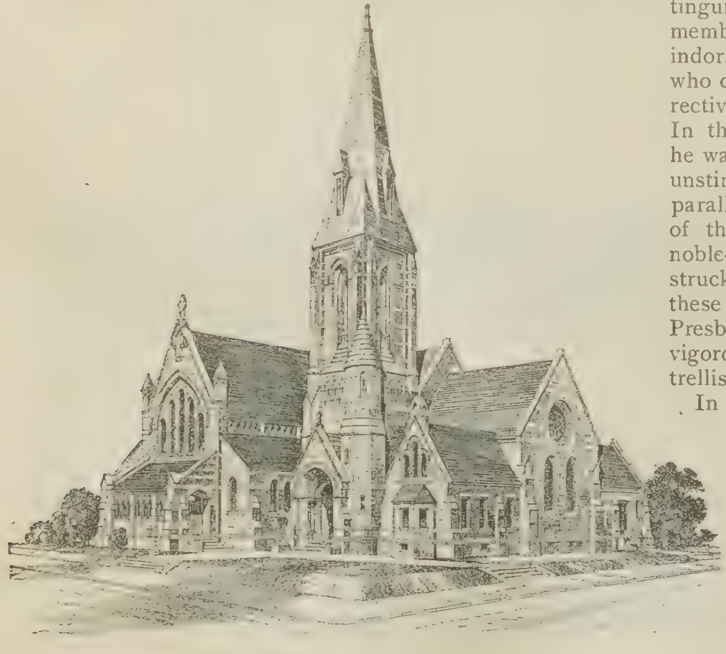
ST. LOUIS SCHOOL OF FINE ARTS

Very early in its history the prelates of the Catholic Church began to display a profound interest in the educational affairs of the city. In 1818 Bishop Dubourg made strong efforts to establish a Catholic college for the training of young men. The enterprise languished, and was abandoned in 1826. The effort was renewed in 1828, and the St. Louis University finally established. It numbered among its professors the celebrated Father DeSmet. Fostered by Bishop Rosatti, and the venerable prelate to whom we were proud to give the name of the "Great Archbishop" Kenrick, the University is in a highly prosperous condition.



THE CHURCH OF THE MESSIAH

Despite the fact that the public-school system of St. Louis is exceptionally fine, the city swarms with private schools, secular, Catholic, and Protestant. The chief of these is, of course, Washington University, so closely identified for many years with one of the most remarkable men in the history of the city's higher life. About the year 1834 a young minister came to St. Louis from Massachusetts for the purpose of establishing a Unitarian church. The presence of a very few New England families furnished a possible constituency for a movement which was then regarded as a subtle form of infidelity. This young man was William Greenleaf Eliot. Despite the damaging fact that he was both a "Yankee" and a Unitarian, he early identified himself with the developing spiritual and ethical life of the city, and for more than half a century he was the acknowledged center of every movement for advancing the higher interests of St. Louis. His influence was seen in the progressive legislation that perfected our common-school system. He was vitally associated with the establishment of every secular and Protestant philanthropic institution. He challenged the wisdom and morality of the infamous "Social Evil Law," and, almost single-handed, created the influences that wiped it from the statute-books. In this he was bitterly opposed by certain "practical" moralists, but he was backed by the ablest lawyers, prominent among whom were the Hon. Henry Hitchcock and Governor Charles T. Johnson, the most distinguished criminal lawyer in the State, and at that time a member of the State Legislature, while his judgment was indorsed by the present Chief of Police, Major Harrigan, who declared the law to be not only inefficient as a corrective of evil, but a pregnant source of official corruption. In the great work which Dr. Eliot achieved for St. Louis he was surrounded by a body of men and women whose unstinted liberality and consecrated labor can scarcely be paralleled in the history of any other American city. Most of these people were members of his own church, but noble-hearted men and women of other communions freely struck hands with him in the good work. Notable among these was James E. Yeatman, a great-souled Tennessee Presbyterian, whose genial and beneficent religion, like a vigorous morning-glory, refused to be confined to the trellis of any creed!

In 1853 the Hon. Wayman Crow, then a member of the State Senate, secured a charter for an educational institution to be known as the Eliot Seminary. A year later the school was formally organized, changing its name, at Dr. Eliot's suggestion, to Washington Institute. Three years later it became the Washington University. It is the vigorous mother of a brood of hardy educational children. Its first offspring was the night-school system, sustained at first by the gifts of Ralph Sellew, a member of the Church of the Messiah. This child was afterwards adopted by the State. In 1856 the Smith Academy was formed, bearing the honored name of James Smith. Then followed quickly the Mary Institute, an annex for the education of girls; the Law School, the Manual Training School, the St. Louis School of Fine Arts, the Medical College, and the School of Botany. Of these comely and vigorous children the School of Fine Arts, the Manual Training School, and the School of Botany are the most picturesquely interesting. The Training School enjoys the enviable distinction of being the first of its kind on the American continent. I may go even further, and say that it was the first purely manual training school in the world. It is housed in a building given by Edwin Harrison; it is largely furnished and endowed by Ralph Sellew, Gotlieb Conzelman, and Samuel Cupples, while it has been nourished by the means of Dr. Eliot, William L. Huse, William Brown, and Ralph Sellew. So much for its healthy body. Its soul was bestowed by Professor C. M. Woodward and his able corps of assistants. The School of Fine Arts is housed in a handsome building which is the gift of Wayman Crow. It cost $135,000, and is a monument erected in memory of his only son, who died in earliest manhood. In the threshold you find a splendid bust of the creator of the school, from the chisel of Harriet Hosmer—"a gift of gratitude" from the brilliant genius whom Mr. Crow educated in art. It is under the control of Professor Ives, who was the efficient director of the Art Department of the Columbian Exposition, and who finds time to play a valuable part in the municipal government in addition to his arduous professorial duties. He is a wholesome "object-lesson" to those educated business men who cannot spare enough labor from the pursuit of the private dollar to give personal care to the supreme interests of public business.

SPECIMENS OF ST. LOUIS DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE

ST. LOUIS HIGH SCHOOL

The School of Botany, under the care of Professor Trelease, is the magnificent gift of Mr. Henry Shaw, and is known to the world as Shaw's Garden. Mr. Shaw was one of those few wise rich men who believed that the "deed is better than the will." He did not "heap up riches," knowing "not who should gather them." In his own lifetime he began to build his perpetual monument, and each springtime sees his epitaph freshly written in brilliant flowers beside his quiet resting-place. Very early in his career in St. Louis, Mr. Shaw began to plan for the beautifying of his adopted home. His original gift of fifty acres for the establishment of a botanical garden was surrounded by a valuable tract of land, which is leased for the maintenance of this magnificent trust. As a pure "show garden" it is not surpassed by any other garden of the type in this country. As an instrument of botanical education its value cannot be overestimated. It is not only educating scientific botanists, but it has a school for practical instruction in the homely pursuit of market gardening. Professor Trelease tells me that no botanist living can become acquainted with the genealogy and the living representatives of that interesting but unattractive family, the cacti, without coming to Shaw's Garden. Subsequently Mr. Shaw gave the city more than 250 acres for the establishment of Tower Grove Park. The landscape gardening of this park is beyond praise, while Mr. Shaw has further enriched it with two really magnificent pieces of bronze—the statues of Shakespeare and Humboldt. The generous donor of all these objects of beauty and instruments of the higher education provided in his will that an annual sermon should be preached upon some aspect of God's goodness as revealed in nature; and that two banquets should be given every year, at which should be gathered those who, like himself, were interested in this expression of the city's higher life. Surrounded by the objects of beauty which his own generosity created, Mr. Shaw lived to a ripe and honorable old age, conscious that the coming generations would be infinitely richer because he had lived and labored for the common good. Rich men have lived and died in St. Louis, and their memories have been kept green only by the legal quarrels of their squabbling heirs. Each passing year makes Henry Shaw more of a living presence among us.

In all of the great educational and philanthropic enterprises of St. Louis one is surprised to find the same names constantly reappearing, and this surprise is deepened when one reflects upon the comparative fewness of their number. I presume this is true of every large city, but it seems to be peculiarly true here. The great body of us build our private fortunes and live our self-centered lives of good, honest citizenship, while a few disinterested men and women bear the common burden and keep alive the wholesome public spirit.

THE PEOPLE'S UNIVERSITY

Under this head I would group all of the agencies that daily contribute to the education of the masses—of those people who are but indirectly touched by the commonly recognized instrument of instruction. Among these the newspaper easily takes first rank. St. Louis is peculiarly rich in this kind of literature. The St. Louis "Republic" is eighty-eight years old, but it has recently re-

Henry Shaw

Frederic M. Crunden
Librarian of the Public School Library

Miss Mary C. McCulloch
Supervisor of Kindergartens

James E. Yeatman

newed its youth, and is filling a constantly enlarging place in the political and social life of the people. The "Globe-Democrat," presided over by one of the most unique figures in American journalism, Mr. J. B. McCullagh, has an astonishingly large circulation in the Democratic States of the Southwest, mainly due to the fact that while its editorial columns are strictly partisan, and sometimes partial and misleading, its news columns are always filled with full and impartial accounts of passing events. I know of no partisan journal in this country that, during a campaign, contains so many of the fully reported speeches of its distinguished political opponents. Our German press, led by such able men as Carl Daenzer and Dr. Preetorious, is exceptionally high in grade. I think there is but one French journal published in the State. Our two great libraries are rapidly growing in value and importance. Dr. Shaw truthfully says that "in Mr. Frederic M. Crunden, the public librarian, St. Louis possesses one of the most highly accomplished library administrators in the world." Since the library has been made entirely free, and has established sub-stations in various parts of the city, its circulation has been immensely increased. It is housed in the upper stories of a building erected for the offices of the public-school system, but its directors are beginning to agitate for a new building that shall cost a million dollars. We are daily hoping that some rich man will desire to emulate Henry Shaw, or Wayman Crow, or James Smith, and thus secure for himself a crown of civic immortality. I could easily pick the man, but it would not be fair thus to discriminate among those who may wish to be generous rivals in securing such an enviable distinction. The Mercantile Library is governed by Mr. Horace Kephart, who has a rare genius for this type of work. Washington University plays a noble part in what may be called the system of popular university extension. Each year the institution furnishes the public, at low rates, courses of lectures by such men as John Fiske, Professor Lyon, and others, and the Ethical Culture Society, under the energetic leadership of Mr. W. L. Sheldon, has established, in various parts of the city, Wage-Earners' Self-Culture Clubs and Domestic Economy Schools for both sexes. The ablest specialists in the city keep up in these schools perpetual lectureships, and, I think, the kind of work done is peculiar to St. Louis. I know of no other similar work in any other part of the country. Most of the Protestant churches are showing an increased interest in this kind of educational activity. The "Eliot Society" of the Church of the Messiah, and the "Novel Club" of the Non-Sectarian Church, furnish excellent illustrations. Foremost among the instruments of popular education are the public parks. As Dr. Shaw has said, St. Louis has neglected its eighteen miles of river front, which should have been largely utilized for public parks, and it has, within my recollection, destroyed at least two of the breathing-places of the city to make room for public buildings. But the city is growing so rapidly, and its abundant car service is so cheap, that the great mass of the people can easily and frequently reach its semi-suburban parks. Forest Park, with its 1,375 acres, will in a few years be almost as close to the heart of the city as the "Common" is to the heart of Boston. Only a few weeks ago we possessed, I think, the loveliest park of its size in this country. It was in the very heart of the southern part of the city. The terrible cyclone came, and in ten minutes the fair work which nature had been building for half a century was all destroyed, and our beautiful Lafayette Park looked like a frost-blighted or locust-eaten bit of Kansas desert! In the very midst of this desolation stands Harriet Hosmer's masterly statue of Thomas Benton, its bowed head seeming to express a people's sorrow over the "cureless ruin" of this exquisite spot.

THE WORK OF THE ARTIST

St. Louis possesses several private picture galleries of very great interest. In the residences of Colonel George E. Leighton, Messrs. J. G. Chapman, Charles Parsons, Daniel Catlin, and others, may be found gems from the pencils of some of the greatest of the modern

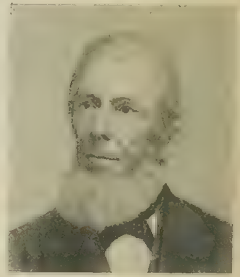
W. T. Harris

The late Most Rev. Peter Richard Kenrick

N. O. Nelson

George Partridge

Prof. C. M. Woodward
Head of the Manual Training School



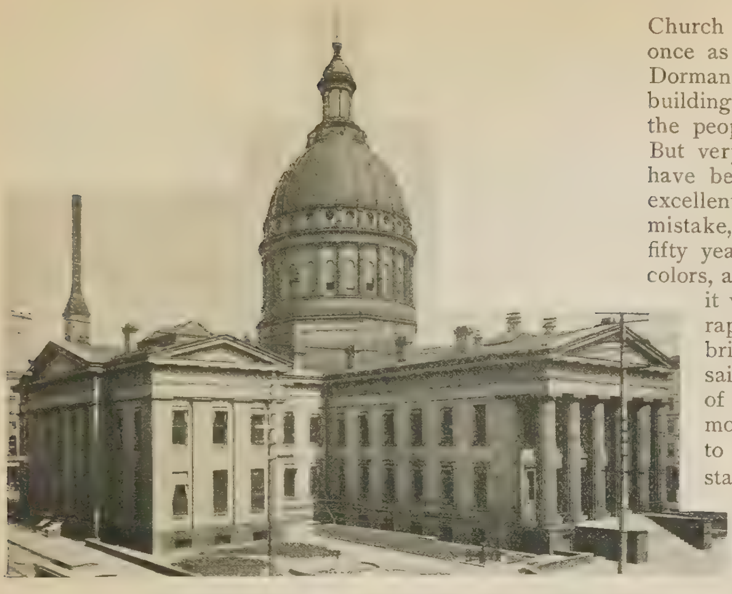
Rev. W. G. Eliot, D.D.

Wayman Crow

George E. Leighton
Late President of the Commercial Club of St. Louis

Charles Nagel
President of the Council

Rev. W. W. Boyd



ST. LOUIS COURT-HOUSE—A TYPE OF THE OLD ARCHITECTURE

masters. The finest work of the celebrated Wimar is to be found here, together with interesting examples from the brush of the man who exceeded, in pure native genius, I think, all other American portrait-painters, Chester Harding. Harding lacked technical education, but he was a brilliant colorist, and possessed a rare faculty for securing likenesses. The Art School, under Professor Ives, is gradually laying the sure foundation for a great public art gallery, and has been instrumental in sending to the art schools of Europe many promising students. In the field of architecture, St. Louis has "suffered many things of many" architects. In its earlier days it adopted for domestic purposes a modification of the stately houses found on the old Southern plantations. Such dwellings were interesting to the eye and suited to our climate. But alongside of these were created a multitude of the ugliest and most uniformly unattractive houses that ever afflicted a patient people. Some of the older public buildings were handsome and interesting. For instance, the dome of the old Court House is dignified and stately, and is made more interesting by interior decorations from the pencil of Wimar, while the Episcopal Cathedral needs but a tower and spire to make it a most acceptable specimen of Gothic work. But, with a few exceptions, the public buildings and churches of St. Louis were depressing in their plainness. About fifteen years ago we enjoyed a radical conversion, architecturally speaking. Peabody and Stearns, of Boston, built the Crow Memorial Hall and the Church of the Messiah. The latter was recognized at once as the handsomest building in the city. The Hon. Dorman B. Eaton says it is the handsomest church building on this continent. Since then the demand of the people for architectural beauty has never languished. But very few distinctly ugly buildings, public or private, have been erected. The newer churches are especially excellent. The new City Hall is a serious artistic mistake, but competent judges tell me that, inside of fifty years, when age has partly obliterated its startling colors, and the growing trees have half hidden its shape, it will be quite endurable. As an evidence of our rapidly growing artistic taste I need but give a brief history of one office building. The architect said that he was going to erect a building the like of which could not be found west of New York. He more than redeemed his promise. I do not know to what school this building belongs. It bore a startling resemblance to the stately ruins of Stonehenge, if that prehistoric pile should be restored by the plentiful use of white pine painted. If architecture is "frozen music," this building might be aptly described as a petrified nightmare. It stood for several years to blast the vision of mankind, and then its ghastly front was voluntarily covered by its owner with a mask of warm and pleasing brick! Domestic architecture is making multitudes of converts every year among us. Few houses, even of the cheapest kind, are being erected simply for shelter. They all bear the touch of real or intended beauty. In its love and appreciation of music, St. Louis reveals the very strong influence of its German population. Its musical conservatories not only furnish the highest type of vocal and instrumental instruction, but the city furnishes a large musical constituency for the support and encouragement of the best quality of classical art. In connection with our annual Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Exposition, we have for six consecutive weeks three daily cheap concerts, aggregating, perhaps, a daily attendance of nearly 10,000 people.

THE ST. LOUIS UNION STATION

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION BUILDING

CLUBS

St. Louis is well supplied with purely social clubs. The Mercantile is the largest, and has the somewhat unique feature of being open, at all hours and every day, to the wives, mothers, sisters, and sweethearts of its members. The Noonday is simply a dining club. The St. Louis Club occupies a very handsome building designed by Peabody and Stearns. The University Club is just about moving its quarters to the western center of population. The Jews have a magnificent club-house in the fashionable part of the town, and the Germania was for a generation the principal German club. Perhaps no organization of like character has done so much and designs to do so much for the better life of the city as the Commercial Club. Our whole system of reconstructed streets was based upon a report offered to this club by Colonel George E. Leighton. The club has shown a profound and intelligent interest in every scheme of municipal and national reform. Colonel Leighton's papers on Currency and Coinage and the National Banking System were models of exhaustive treatment of these vexed questions; while other members have been equally active in giving to the world through this club the fruits of their commercial, political, scientific, and professional studies. But no institution in the city has been more intelligently active in its educational, artistic, scientific, sociological, and philanthropic interests than the Wednesday Club, which is formed and controlled entirely by women. It would require an entire article to do fair justice to this flourishing organization. Suffice to say that in the public and private kindergartens, in the Training School for Nurses, in all the penal and philanthropic institutions, in the art schools, in every place where intelligent and self-denying public spirit is demanded, there you find a representative or a committee of the Wednesday Club.

A UNIQUE CHARITY

St. Louis has one form of beneficence which keeps alive the memories of that bitter civil strife, the perils and hardships and heartburnings of which she felt, perhaps, more than any other city in the land. But that memory is kept green in the blessed spirit of the Gospel. In the early stages of the Rebellion a number of devoted men and women, anticipating the terrible suffering of that unhappy time, formed the Western Sanitary Commission. Under the order of General Fremont, the Commission consisted of James E. Yeatman, Carlos Greeley, Dr. J. B. Johnson, George Partridge, and Dr. Eliot. Contributions of money and sanitary stores passed into the hands of the Commission amounting to more than $4,000,000. At the close of the war Mr. Greeley, the Treasurer, held about $230,000, which, by judicious investment, was increased to $335,000. Of this amount about $86,000 went to the purchase and maintenance of the Soldiers' Orphan Home, and about $15,000 to the support of soldiers' orphans who were not in the Home. These contributions were strictly germane to the object for which the fund was created. In the further discharge of its trust the Commission gave $7,800 to the Female Guardian Home, $13,000 to the Woman's Christian Home, $9,000 to the Workingwoman's Home, $13,000 to the Nurses' Training School, $7,500 to the Provident Association, $14,000 to the Colored Orphans' Home, $22,800 to the Memorial Home for the Aged, $30,000 to provide scholarships especially for the children of soldiers in Washington University and $10,000 towards its Sustentation Fund, and $18,000 to the Lincoln Freedman Monument Fund. This leaves a permanent fund of $50,000. The administration of this money for all noble purposes remains in the hands of the Commission, of which the revered James E. Yeatman is still the head. A story of rare and touching interest is attached to the last contribution mentioned in the list. Soon after the murder of Abraham Lincoln, Charlotte Scott, an emancipated slave, gave her former master, then a Union refugee from Virginia, the sum of five dollars, her first earnings as a free woman, begging that it might be used "to make a monument to Massa Lincoln, the best friend the colored people ever had." This money was sent to General T. H. C. Smith, who forwarded it to Mr. James E. Yeatman, with this letter:

James E. Yeatman, Esq.:

My Dear Sir—A poor woman of Marietta, O., one of those made free by President Lincoln's proclamation, proposes that a monument to their dead friend be erected by the colored people of the United States. She has handed to a person in Marietta five dollars as her contribution for the purpose. Such a monument would have a history more grand and touching than any of which we have account. Would it not be well to take up this suggestion, and make it known to the freedmen?

Yours truly,

T. H. C. SMITH.

St. Louis, April 26, 1865.

The suggestion was acted upon, and nearly $17,000 was received from the colored people. This sum was put to interest. In 1869 Dr. Eliot was in Florence, where he saw in the studio of Thomas Ball a group in marble representing the Emancipation Act. Dr. Eliot told the touching story of the poor colored woman, and Mr. Ball generously agreed to have the group cast in bronze, charging only for the actual labor of the Munich foundry. In the original group there was the ideal figure of a slave. This was changed, at Dr. Eliot's suggestion, and in the noble work as it now appears in Washington is the "counterfeit presentment" of Archer Alexander, the last slave ever captured in Missouri under the Fugitive Slave Law. Archer was for many years a consistent member of the Church of the Messiah, whose noble pastor had rescued him from the house of bondage, and made him the representative of his race in a work which commemorates the noblest deed done by his country's noblest man.

The Ground-Robin

By Richard Burton

From a low birch-tree just outside my window,
Here in the wind-fresh green New Hampshire country,
All through the day, and even at the nightfall,
Cheery, distinct, his heart a home for hope,
His throat full swollen with desire of music,
A little ground-robin sits and sings,
Symbol of summer, neighbor dear to me.

I never hear his note in other places;
But when June comes, and I return to live
Among the birches and memorial pines,
Lo, faithful to the tryst, alert and buoyant,
His strain familiar greets my welcoming soul,
And seems the type of all time-keeping things,
Rebuking chance and change. Illusion sweet
Uprises with the sound: of all the birds
I know, this songster speaks most plain to me,
Making impermanence a very myth.

So carol on, ground-robin! each green year
I listen for you, and 'twould be a grief
Beyond mere words, some June, some fragrant morrow,
To sit and hearken by the open window
In vain, for in a flood of fond regret
Would come a sense of loss, of unrequited
Love, of faith broken at length, of fickle
Friendship, and joy too beautiful to last:
Sing on, ground-robin, sing!

Bits of Wisdom

Let us have faith that right makes might, and in this faith let us, to the end, dare to do our duty, as we understand it.—Abraham Lincoln.

An obstinate man does not hold opinions, but they hold him; for when he is once possessed with an error, it is, like a devil, only cast out with great difficulty.—Bishop Butler.

Of an idle, unrevolving man destiny can make nothing more than a mere enameled vessel of dishonor, let her spend on him what coloring she may. Let the idle think of this.—Carlyle.

A hundred years hence what difference will it make whether you were rich or poor, a peer or a peasant? But what difference may it not make whether you did what was right or what was wrong?—"Architects of Fate."

He who opposes his own judgment against the consent of the times ought to be backed with unanswerable truths; he that has truth on his side is a fool, as well as a coward, if he is afraid to own it because of the currency or multitude of other men's opinions.—De Foe.

Longfellow once said to Mary Anderson: "See some good picture—in nature, if possible, or on canvas—hear a page of the best music, or read a great poem daily. You will always find a free half-hour for one or the other, and at the end of the year your mind will shine with such an accumulation of jewels as will astonish even yourself."

THE NORTHFIELD SEMINARY GROUNDS

Moody the Evangelist

By the Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, D.D.

Vicar of St. Paul's, Onslow Square, and Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral, London

AN American judged from an Englishman's standpoint may, by some, be expected to receive but scant justice; as, unfortunately, the idea has of late become prevalent that the two nations do not understand each other, and that neither can rightly appreciate the other. A more foolish—we might say fatal—notion could hardly be set on foot, and the sooner it is confined to its proper "limbo" the better. Who should be able rightly to estimate or appraise the virtues and faults of their fellow-men if Americans and Englishmen cannot do this for one another? Cousins—may we not say brethren?—by birth; speaking one language; inheriting common traditions and customs; trained in similar habits of life; approximating ever more and more closely to one another through the advances of science and the general habits of society; and, above all, enjoying, for the most part, the greatest and most glorious advantage of an open Bible, and of the blessed religion deduced therefrom; and yet having, what so few European nations enjoy, the opportunity of judging one another from a distance, and of considering one another's merits or demerits without reference to national rivalries (either in politics or in social matters), none should, we imagine, be better able to do justice to one another than members of the English and American nations.

Strange, therefore, as it may appear at first sight to the American readers of this journal that an Englishman should have been asked to survey an American work, and a clergyman of the Church of England to write upon an American evangelist, who (though with a wondrously universal spirit of brotherhood toward all Protestant churches) yet distinctly claims to be a Congregationalist, it may, after all, be considered, we hope, that, so far as opportunities of observing Mr. D. L. Moody have been given to him, the writer of this article can do justice to the great American preacher and organizer whom Northfield and Chicago both claim as their evangelist.

In no sense is it proposed to offer a new biography of Mr. Moody. Already a number of these exist, and the columns of a weekly periodical like The Outlook may hardly offer space for any but the briefest sketch of such a man, whose life from its very commencement has been filled with both incident and interest. The object with which we here call attention to Mr. Moody is that, as his work has now been carried on for what is called "a generation," the general bearings of that work and its prospects of enduring may be calmly and faithfully considered by the public.

All work must be initiated by an individual man, but all works do not prove to be really great, nor do they stand the test of time: while of the individuals who initiate works in this world, few indeed live long enough to allow of their works being tested by the crucial test of time, and fewer still of those who survive to see the works which they initiated become effective and powerful have that real greatness of soul which will enable them to let the works be spoken of as "great" while they themselves remain "small," and are content to remain exactly what they were at the beginning—viz., mere instruments whom God is pleased to adopt and employ, and who never think of claiming either credit or glory for themselves. Wherever the instrument has been exalted, even in the smallest degree, then, and to that extent, the work has proportionately suffered. This is acknowledged, theoretically, by all, and yet whither shall we turn to discover more than one in a thousand who can see great results from their works without claiming greatness for themselves? This seems to be the touchstone of human effort upon earth; and, judged by this standard of excellence, few indeed can bear the scrutiny even of their faulty comrades in the struggle.

D. L. MOODY

NORTHFIELD CAMP

The first thing which strikes the observant visitor to Northfield, East Massachusetts, is that the whole place is governed by one dominant mind, and exists as a township for one definite purpose. Other places are known for their natural attractions, and people confessedly visit them for the sake of enjoying these attractions. Surely Northfield stands out preeminently among the townships of America as one of the most beautiful spots in the "Home" States of the East. The Connecticut River, flowing between Northfield and Mount Hermon, gives both grace and beauty of a remarkable kind to the whole valley. The magnificent avenue which runs for one and one-half miles through the township gives one of the finest drives that can be seen in any land—the long line of villas lying on either side of the avenue makes the place an ideal residence for the wealthy and the weary—and yet, of all this, the visitor hears and thinks little, until he finds how it enhances the delights of his visit; but what he does hear and think of is that Northfield, with its neighboring settlement of Mount Hermon on the west bank of the Connecticut, is, in its present condition, practically the creation of one man, and a place where everything, spiritual, social, and material, is literally made to subserve the one end for which that man lives and works without ceasing—viz., the glory of God in the saving of souls, by bringing them to accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour. To this one single law of life there is hardly an exception; for, while there are both a Unitarian church and a Roman Catholic church in Northfield, and some of the inhabitants are, of course, busily occupied with agriculture and trade, there is one man who confessedly dominates the place by his purposes; and, while Unitarians and Roman Catholics are, of course, engaged in their own works, and seeking to advance their own principles, so completely has D. L. Moody won his way into the hearts of his own townspeople that, instead of bitter opposition to his institutions and to his work, the stranger hears of nothing but love and good will, even from those who do not agree with him doctrinally and theologically.

THE MOODY HOME

Of Mr. Moody's work as an evangelist in every part of the world, or of his grand educational establishments at Northfield and Mount Hermon, it is not the writer's province to speak in detail. The incidents and the statistics connected with these are the common property of all English-speaking people both in America and in Europe.

That to which we would now call attention are the three remarkable facts, first, that Mr. Moody is more highly esteemed in his own native town than in any other part of the world (if this be possible); secondly, that the wonderful monuments of his shrewdness and determination which greet the stranger in Northfield and Mount Hermon, and which represent an enormous capital in money, with a magnificent display of wisdom in their location and arrangement, are the work of a man who neither professes to have had an education preparing him for such results, nor claims at the present moment to enjoy wisdom or learning qualifying him to build and order such enormous establishments; and, thirdly, that while the whole township would seem to be subject to Mr. Moody's dictation and arrangement, everything is so ordered as to be for the general welfare of the inhabitants, and no one would even dare to suggest that all is not done for the common weal. This one man is the fons et origo of the whole; of the social, the moral, and the spiritual prosperity of the place, which are sufficiently marked to provoke the admiration and wonder of any thoughtful visitor to Northfield.

AN OUTDOOR MEETING, KINSMAN, OHIO

The educational establishments for some seven hundred young ladies and gentlemen, which have already sent forth their thousands of devoted Christian laborers to engage in the Master's work in all parts of the world, are in themselves a very miracle of enterprise, courage, and generosity. The striking methods adopted, both in the education of the students and for the obtaining of money for those who lack means, by utilizing their services during the vacations, when Northfield is filled with visitors for the conventions, are a constant theme of admiration to all who visit the place; while the moral and spiritual force displayed at all points, in the seminaries, in the boarding-houses, in the hotel life, and in the township, is such as not only to compel the admiration of onlookers, but to evoke the declaration of those who study it most closely: "This counsel and this work must be of God and not of men."

And yet, one man, D. L. Moody, is evidently the moving spirit of the whole, and he rules "with an iron hand well covered with velvet."

What, then, is the secret of this man's success here in social and educational organization, as everywhere else in evangelistic and spiritual labors? And will the works which have so marvelously grown under his hand stand the test of time and experience?

It may appear presumptuous for a stranger to speak with confidence upon these points, but as the answer to the first question secures a safe answer to the second, we think that even here a stranger may dare to prophesy with boldness.

Mr. Moody's work, whether at home or abroad, has been upreared upon three foundations, which, if anything can make a human work indestructible, will certainly guarantee the after results of his toil.

(1) Every stone has been laid upon the solid basis of prayer. God's grace, God's guidance, God's glory, have been sought without ceasing; and before one step has been taken, whether at Northfield or Chicago, it has been made as certain as prayer and its wonderful answers can make it that the favor of the Almighty was upon the undertaking. Let those who will scoff at the power of prayer, D. L. Moody and his work are magnificent testimonies to all who have the humility and the will to be convinced that God is indeed a prayer-answering God, and that they who put their trust in him shall never lack for wisdom or for supplies. The first power in Northfield is the power of prayer.

(2) Upon every soul with whom Mr. Moody has had to deal he has unceasingly and with courageous determination impressed his simple, scriptural Gospel, which tells of the infinite love of God, of the perfect atonement wrought for sin by the death of the Lord Jesus Christ, of the absolute necessity of a new birth by the Spirit, and of the wondrous power of that Holy Spirit to sanctify all who receive him into their souls.

There is no uncertainty about D. L. Moody's evangelism, and, while Mr. Sankey and others should be never forgotten, but honored and rejoiced over as God's power in song, and while multitudes owe to the sweet singers a debt of infinite gratitude, it is quite certain that the rock upon which all the educational and evangelistic results of these brethren have been based is that solid rock of the atonement, or the Gospel of substitution, so freely announced by Mr. Moody and his co-workers, whether as preachers or as singers of the Gospel.

But not only have the divine aid been sought and the divine counsel been declared at every step of Mr. Moody's work, but we must, if we would learn the real secret of its success, notice that

A NORTHFIELD STREET

(3) The Divine Being has in everything and at all times been acknowledged as the author or giver of all good gifts—wisdom, money, power, and success; as the Lord, for whose glory every step must be taken; and as the Master to whose guidance every detail must be submitted.

At Northfield no man is allowed to glory in men. The work is the Lord's; he must rule at all points, and receive the full honor for all that succeeds. Mr. Moody would be the first to acknowledge that he owes an incalculable debt to his mother and to his wife, who have so long been the blessed home spirits of his life. In Mr. Moody's children the father has living monuments of his wisdom and power in the home—and yet not for one moment, either in Northfield or Chicago, is any ruler acknowledged or spoken of but Jehovah.

These are the secrets or grounds of the success which God has so graciously given to his servant. In this man, to a most remarkable degree, has been exemplified the words of the Apostle to the Corinthians, "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence."

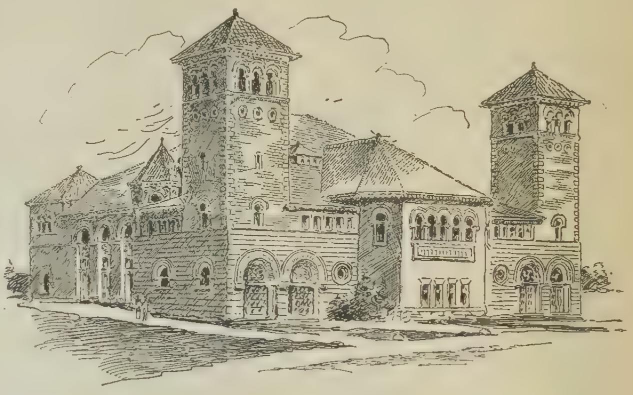
And herein lies the answer to our second inquiry—Will the works now centered in Mr. Moody stand? "Upon this Rock," i. e., upon the true confession of Christ, the Lord Jesus promised that "he would build His Church, and that the gates of hell should not prevail against it." Whatever else may fail, the Lord's word can never "pass away." Just so long, therefore, as these three great foundations of Prayer, Truth, and Humility are preserved intact in our brother's work at Northfield and Chicago, so long is it certain that "the blessing of the Lord which maketh rich, and to which no sorrow is ever to be added," shall attend and crown the labors of D. L. Moody, to whom we all of us wish a very hearty "Godspeed."

A CORNER IN MR. MOODY'S STUDY

Mr. Moody's Life and Work

By James M. Whiton

Mr. Moody is now fifty-nine years of age. Forty of these years, since he first went to Chicago, have been crowded with labors whose record is writ in lives reclaimed, inspired, ennobled. Farm work invigorated his body; the village school began his education; active life in touch with his fellow-men and their divinest interests gave him his collegiate and university course; his Sunday-school teacher gave his life its direction to the glory of God in the service of men. So crude and immature at first that the church in Boston deferred his admission to membership for a six months' interval, he was presently gathering a Sunday-school of 1,000 in a year, while beginning life in Chicago as a clerk. He at once rented four pews in the Chicago church, and devoted himself to filling them with young men, but was so poor a talker in prayer-meetings that he was counseled to let others talk while he brought in the hearers. Recruiting was his forte. He worked in hard neighborhoods among hard characters. Evenings and Sundays were given to it. He built up a dozen Sunday-schools. During the war he worked efficiently in the Christian Commission. Such was his apprenticeship. By and by a church was built for him, which he filled with the eloquence born of the passion for souls which such an experience had fed and trained.



THE NORTHFIELD AUDITORIUM

The debt which America owed to England for Whitefield, in the last century, was soon repaid with interest by Mr. Moody. In company with Mr. Sankey, he visited Great Britain in 1873. Beginning at Edinburgh, they went through all parts of the country, ending with a thirty days' meeting in London in 1875. Coldness melted before them into enthusiasm. Hostile criticism changed to friendliness and admiration. The crowd was transient; the impression was permanent. Scotland, says Professor Drummond, who followed Mr. Moody's work for a year, would not have been what it is to-day but for him. There are now, in all parts of the United Kingdom, buildings and institutions, both religious and philanthropic, which owe their existence to him. Returning to this country, the two evangelists carried the same work through the large cities, amid the same popular interest.

It is as an evangelist, an itinerant preacher of the Gospel, that Mr. Moody has given the public its superficial impression of him. Among men of that class he has had a wider hearing and influence than any other in our time. The evangelist passes on and leaves to others the care of giving permanence to his work. Mr. Moody has undertaken to do that himself, and in so doing has become an evangelist of a new type. Experience revealed to him the need of an educational basis for permanent religious betterment. "Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge." He had done his work in cities. The sparse population of country districts needed such work just as much. Northfield, in Massachusetts, had been his early home. Here was the place to begin.

Fixing his home here again in 1875, and interesting others in his scheme, the Northfield Seminary for girls was opened in 1879, and in 1881 the Mount Hermon School for boys and young men. The supreme aim in these schools is a Christian character coupled with the general training given in a rural academy. With this end in view, more study is given to the Bible than to any other one book. In its light, as the great Christian classic, all other studies are pursued. In 1892 there were only about 5 per cent. of the pupils in the Seminary who were not communicants. Very many became communicants while in attendance. These two institutions, about four miles apart, on the east and west side of the Connecticut, have now, we believe, about fifty buildings, a thousand acres of ground, more than seven hundred pupils, and far more applicants than they have room for. Pupils come to Northfield mainly from the States and Canada. In Mount Hermon many races and nationalities have been represented. Their graduates are found in many homes and many vocations; many enter college; many become teachers and missionaries.

Besides these two academical schools, Mr. Moody has established two others of a semi-professional kind. The Bible Institute in Chicago, for men and women, was opened in 1889; the Northfield Training School, for women, in 1890. The object of these is to raise up trained Christian workers for service among the unchurched, the poor and outcast, both in cities and in country districts. All four of Mr. Moody's schools are characteristically Bible schools, but in these two about half of the whole time is devoted to Bible study, with a view to its effect upon those who live by it, and on those whom they can reach and help thereby. Practical service in various kinds of mission work is joined with this as a course in "Gospel clinics," and in the Training School instruction is given in the fundamental domestic arts. From the Institute 167 students have become pastors; 103, missionaries of various kinds; 103, evangelists; 161 are studying theology or medicine in preparation for pastoral or missionary work.

Thus magnificently has Mr. Moody multiplied himself as no other evangelist ever did. It is his maxim, "Better set ten men to work than do the work of ten men." It is truly said that "no other living man has done so much to set so many other people to work and develop latent talents and powers."

MR. MOODY'S MOTHER

To set these four schools on foot, and meet the requirements of their rapid growth, large giving has been necessary. Mr. Moody makes large givers, and is a royal giver himself. He was obliged to print his hymn-book at his own expense, because no publisher would take the copyright gratis. It has yielded him a fortune, and this has all been turned in to meet the expenses of this educational work, which still outgrows his resources. It also requires first-class executive ability to be such an organizer. Mr. Moody ranks as high in the qualities of insight, promptness, and energy, which make great administrators of business, as in those which make the successful evangelist. Of these he gave a splendid demonstration in the organizing, financing, and direction of the six months' evangelistic campaign in Chicago during the World's Fair. And yet no man ever had a more humble estimate of himself. If he can get others to speak, he prefers to listen.

He values the printed page also, and has been busy with his pen in producing quite a library of books and booklets, some two dozen in all, some of which have sold far above a hundred thousand copies. What General Booth's books are for his Army, these are for the host whom Mr. Moody has inspired. Some of them have been translated into Swedish, German, and Danish-Norwegian. Nor are they allowed to wait for buyers. He has organized a Colportage Association to spread the sale of these and similar books. The profits support the workers in their work. One book in the list is especially characteristic of the man—the Northfield edition of Bagster's Bible, specially prepared according to Mr. Moody's suggestions for the use of his students.

But no account of Mr. Moody's wide-branching organization of his work would be complete without mention of the Bible conventions held yearly at Northfield. What the Chautauqua assemblies have been to students in the Chautauqua courses, these summer Bible-schools have been to those who have been taught and trained in Mr. Moody's lines. Here, where some of the ablest men in the various churches are brought together to discourse on the vital themes of Biblical teaching, is the home hearth where their bond of union is strengthened, a focus of fresh inspiration for intelligence and for zeal.

Those who attribute a certain decline of popular interest in Mr. Moody's preaching to the theological changes which are going on seem to us mistaken. As to this, the observations are in point which a distinguished Unitarian of the radical school, the Rev. W. C. Gannett, made in 1877: "Not all men carry ideas, not all men carry feelings, which can be moved by a word said to them in common; but every man who goes to the Tabernacle carries a conscience, and knows what Moody means when he says straightforwardly: 'You are a sinner; you need cure, you feel mighty little power to cure yourself; there's a power that can cure you; lay hold of it—here it is—and be well.' He knows what he is talking about, and you know too, be the doctrine what it may. Two or three great moral facts of religion, phrased in the Christian symbols, are there. The fact of sin, the need of a changed heart, of a new birth, the sure moral judgment, the possibility of forgiveness, the strength that comes to the penitent—this you and I know all about, though our symbols for it are different."

The "Andover Review" remarked in 1891 that a new era in evangelism began with Mr. Moody. The older evangelists dwelt alternately upon the Sovereignty of God and the responsibility of man. But "Moody virtually established a new school by making prominent the love of God. The safeguard to his preaching lay in its intensity."

The love of man has been as permanent in Mr. Moody's life as the love of God has been in his preaching. In his early Sunday-school work a score of poor children, it is said, would appear at his shop in a body to be provided with new shoes. He haunts the railroad station at Northfield to welcome newcomers at the term opening. When his Roman Catholic neighbors were building a church he subscribed to it, and gave them an organ, requited by them with a gift of building-stone for his school extension. Loving and beloved, no man of our time, it has been said, "has done so much to unite man with man, break down grudges and sectarian barriers, harmonize diverse views and dispositions, and raise money for other people's enterprises."

YOUNG WOMEN'S SEWING CLUB—ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S PARISH HOUSE

The Institutional Church and its Work

By Rufus Rockwell Wilson

THE Institutional Church stands for a form of religious activity developed during the last ten years, which, although still in its infancy, promises to play a potential part in the solution of many of the problems that press upon modern society. It magnifies the personal element, and aims to minister to the social, physical, and mental as well as the religious wants of those whom it seeks to reach. Its doors are open seven days in the week, and in its most ambitious form it has in its care, and as a part of its regular work, institutions, social, amusemental, educational, and evangelistic, for the ministry to the whole man. It had its birthplace in New York, and has reached its most perfect development here, especially in churches that by reason of their location face the pitiful conditions of life in the poorer portions of the city.

St. George's Episcopal Church, situated on the edge of the crowded East Side, was the first to enter the field, and the story of what it has accomplished therein is a most interesting and impressive one. Next door to the church edifice on Stuyvesant Square, but fronting on East Sixteenth Street, stands its Memorial House, a roomy structure whose five floors are admirably adapted to the work in hand, and serve as a center of social life. On the fifth floor are a large reception-room and the private apartments of the assistant clergy, four in number, who make their home in the building. The floor below is given up to club-rooms for men and to a gymnasium. On the second and third floors are the chapel and Sunday-school, while the ground floor contains eight large rooms used on Sunday for primary and infant classes and on other days for club and kitchen-garden work. It is the aim of St. George's to extend the hand of helpfulness to every one who suffers for the need of it, and, the Memorial House having already been found inadequate to the needs of its rapidly growing work, the church multiplies its influence by working from other centers. Opposite the Memorial building is the Deaconess House, and over on Avenue A are mission rooms used during the week for a large kindergarten. Further down-town are the Old Epiphany House and the Essex Street Community House.

Dr. W. S. Rainsford, pastor of St. George's, thinks the CARPENTER CLASS AT ST. GEORGE'S EVENING INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL "supremely important work of the Christian Church to-day is to make man acquainted with man," for "in studying man we most learn to know God. In serving man we serve our Father. In saving man we are in abiding relationship with our Saviour." These words indicate the character of the work at St. George's. The most earnest efforts are devoted to the children, reached through the kindergarten and the boys' and girls' clubs, in which every helpful means is made use of to gain and hold the interest of the members. In the Battalion Club, made up of youths from fifteen to eighteen years of age, military and athletic exercises are introduced, while a Men's Club of several hundred members forms the last link in the chain by which the church tries to guard the boy against adverse influences and help him to the right kind of manhood.

Rev. David H. Greer
St. Bartholomew's Church (P. E.), New York.

Similar methods are applied in the work for the girls, and the other branches of the church's activity leave scarcely any side of life untouched. Among other things, it supports a cottage at Rockaway Park, and last summer gave over 12,000 persons an outing by the sea. But in some respects the most interesting and suggestive phase of its work is the Industrial School which it maintains in East Eleventh Street. Opened in 1892, this school has from the first gained steadily in scope and influence. Only carpentry and drawing were taught in the beginning, but soon plumbing, printing, and telegraphy were added, and manual training for boys as yet too young to essay the trades. Now two hundred and fifty boys work six nights a week in the school, and as many more regret that lack of room deprives them of the benefit of the instruction given there. Many of the pupils are employed during the day, but gladly work at the trade-school benches at night, that they may soon be able to earn an artisan's wages. The directors of all the classes are experts in their respective lines, and the instruction given is of the best. Proofs are not wanting that the boys know its value. In 1894 three scholarships were awarded in the New York Trade School. The recipients, however, declared that they learned more in St. George's school, and last year the scholarships were refused, the winners preferring to remain in the Eleventh Street institution.

Rev. R. H. Conwell
Grace Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

Rev. Everett D. Burr
Ruggles Street (Baptist) Church, Boston, Mass.

Rev. R. Albertson
Lagonda Ave. Congregational Church, Springfield, Ohio

Rev. Henry H. Kelsey
Fourth Congregational Church, Hartford, Conn.

St. Bartholomew's (Dr. David H. Greer, rector) claims second place among the institutional churches of New York. Its activities are even more varied than those of St. George's. It maintains a splendidly equipped parish mission-house, and conducts, among other things, a loan bureau, which advances money to deserving people on their furniture at a low rate of interest, thus standing between them and the usurers that abound in every large city; an Oriental mission for the education of members of the Asiatic races; a rescue mission for the reclamation of fallen men and women; a lodging-house for deserving men; a kitchen where meals and cooked food and groceries are sold in bulk at actual cost to the poor; an employment bureau; a fresh-air mission that annually does a great work among the poor children of the East Side; a farm near Bridgeport, Conn., where hundreds of children are cared for every summer; and a cottage at the seaside for the accommodation of forty children. To these are to be added a penny provident fund and kindergarten; a comprehensive system of tenement-house visitation; sewing, cooking, and physical culture classes for women and girls; an eye and ear dispensary, and a surgical clinic; clubs for boys and girls, each with over 1,000 members; depots for the free distribution of coal, wood, and clothing; a boys' military brigade and industrial school; a well-stocked library, and a fine gymnasium.

Columns would be required to deal adequately with these several agencies for good, but all agree in one thing, and that is in giving help only to those who help themselves. The meals furnished are good and cheap, but they are not free, and there are nominal dues for membership in all the clubs and organizations. Dr. Greer exercises a general supervision over all the work, and there are five assistant rectors and a large number of lay helpers. The loan bureau, by reason of its novel character, has attracted much attention, but in the amount of direct good accomplished is easily superseded by the employment bureau and the surgical clinic. The employment bureau was organized two years ago, and the fact that it finds employment on an average for 250 persons every month shows what a power it has become. Five people give their entire time to its affairs. They canvass, personally, by letter, and through the newspapers, for both employees and situations for them in factories, stores, boarding-houses and hotels, and on farms. No distinctions are made among applicants for work, and they embrace men and women of almost every nationality and belief. The clinic is composed of three divisions—the medical and gynecological division, the surgical clinic, and the night clinic for diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat. More than 7,600 patients received treatment in the first two divisions last year. In the third division there were treated 3,145 new patients, each patient making an average of eight visits. These patients were questioned in every case, and it was found that they were unable to pay a doctor for services, and in the majority of cases could not attend institutions whose sessions were held in the daytime, as they were compelled to work then.

Prominent among the other institutional churches of New York City are the Judson Memorial Baptist Church in Washington Square, and the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church, at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street. A peculiar interest attaches to the first named from the fact that it is a monument to Adoniram Judson, the pioneer missionary, and contributions for its erection have come from Baptists all over the country. The location is a strategic one for influencing and upliting lower New York, and the church, under the direction of Dr. Edward Judson, prosecutes a work as many-sided as it is admirable. The westerly half of the handsome edifice is devoted to a home for twenty-four children, and to a large apartment and boarding house which yields the church a handsome revenue. The easterly half includes an auditorium devoted exclusively to worship; a memorial hall used for Sunday-school and week-night services, and for lectures, concerts, and social gatherings: and young men's headquarters, consisting of social and reading rooms, library and gymnasium, open every night. Classes in physical culture for children and adults of both sexes, a day nursery and kindergarten, a large and well-drilled choir of one hundred voices: a dispensary, to which come scores of applicants every week, a nominal charge of ten cents being remitted when patients are unable to pay; fresh-air and flower missions for the sick and disabled: sewing-classes and mothers' meetings, with talks on domestic hygiene, are features of the work prosecuted by this broad and progressive church. During the winter months much relief is extended to the poor, often as many as fifty or seventy-five persons applying for help in a single afternoon.

YOUNG WOMEN'S COOKING CLASS—ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S PARISH HOUSE

CLASS IN MECHANICAL DRAWING AT ST. GEORGE'S SCHOOL

The Collegiate Church carries on its work in the new memorial building of the Helping Hand Association in West Fifty-fourth Street, which it has leased for a period of eight years, and which is perfectly adapted to the task in hand. In the basement are a gymnasium, drill-room, baths, and a bowling-alley. On the ground floor is an audience-room, with a seating capacity of about five hundred. On the second and third floors are apartments for a boys' club, girls' club, sewing-school, and library. The weekly calendar begins on Monday afternoon with a cooking-class for women and a meeting of the Junior C. E. Society. On Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons a kitchen-garden class receives instruction. A junior club for boys meets Tuesday afternoon, and in the evening there is a military drill for the older boys and a meeting of a junior club for girls. On Wednesday evening there is a social gathering for boys and girls, with an interesting programme of music and recitations made up of volunteer talent. Thursday afternoon is devoted to a mothers' meeting, and the evening to a meeting of the girls' club. On Saturday morning there is a sewing-class for girls and boys, and on Saturday evening the girls' club holds its second meeting for the week. The boys' club, a flourishing organization, meets every night in the week, and the gymnasium, baths, and bowling-alleys are always crowded. An active though not obtrusive missionary impulse is noted in all branches of the work.

A word should also be given, in passing, to the work of the Helping Hand, which is carried on under the same roof. This Association aims to improve the condition of the poor women of the district in which it works, and it accomplishes its mission by means as simple as they are effective. Every Friday afternoon from two hundred to three hundred women meet at the rooms of the Helping Hand to sew, and to obtain articles of wearing apparel, and tickets for coal, groceries, and other necessities, which are sold to them at cost. Each woman is paid thirty-six cents for her afternoon's work, this sum being credited on a card and the workers being paid with the garments they make and with groceries. A salaried visitor keeps the Association in close personal touch with those whom it aims to benefit, and the plans for future work include a day nursery and temporary lodgings for the needy and friendless. Opposite the building which bears its name the Helping Hand owns and conducts a model tenement-house, supplied with all modern improvements, in which apartments are rented to respectable applicants at very moderate prices.

The Jersey City Tabernacle (John L. Scudder, pastor) is one of the oldest institutional churches outside of New York. The distinctive feature of its work is the People's Palace, opened five years ago, and providing facilities for amusement and profit, such as baths, bowling, amateur theatricals, billiards, a temperance bar, military drill for both sexes, physical culture classes with a fine gymnasium in which to work, and educational and industrial classes. In summer outdoor sports

THE GYMNASIUM CLASS—HELPING HAND ASSOCIATION

YOUNG WOMEN'S PHYSICAL CULTURE CLASS—ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S PARISH HOUSE

sports are projected and indulged in by pastors and officers, as well as by the young men, while for the women there are cooking-schools, mothers' meetings, sewing-classes, and kindred attractions.

Other admirable examples of the institutional church in cities of moderate size are the Fourth Church of Hartford, Conn., and the Pilgrim Church of Worcester, Mass. The work begun in Hartford some ten years ago by the pastor, Dr. Graham Taylor, and continued by his successor, the Rev. H. H. Kelsey, includes the Yokefellows' Band, a most efficient instrument for reaching and holding men, and a thorough system of visitation. While the church is made the social and religious center, much is done outside in the maintenance of cottage meetings and neighborhood missions, and in sustaining open-air preaching during the summer, the Hartford Seminary students and professors co-operating heartily in the work. The institutional work of the Pilgrim Church began in 1887 with a boys' club, to which have since been added other social, athletic, literary, and religious associations, composed of boys, girls, and adults. A gymnasium with baths, a reading-room with games and familiar practical talks, a sewing-school and kitchen-garden for girls, and industrial classes for boys are distinctive features of the work.

However, in the number and importance of its institutional churches, Boston, as might be expected, is the city which most closely rivals New York. Two of the Boston churches, Berkeley Temple and the Ruggles Street Baptist Church, especially merit notice. An important feature of the work prosecuted by Berkeley Temple (the Rev. C. A. Dickinson, pastor) is an organization called the Young Men's Institute, which has literary, industrial, and physical culture departments, and a lecture and entertainment course. A well-stocked reading-room is open at all hours, and an excellent parish library furnishes additional reading matter. But its temperance guild is in some respects the most interesting branch of the Institute. Large numbers have been redeemed from drinking habits through its agency, and its efforts are now supplemented by an asylum at Westminster, Vt., where those addicted to liquor, morphine, and tobacco receive scientific treatment. The proceeds of this asylum are devoted to a near-by orphanage, wherein waifs from the city slums receive all the advantages of a city home. At Westminster the Temple also supports a vacation home for working-girls, while from its church kitchen in Boston hot coffee and rolls are supplied daily to the teamsters who congregate in the neighborhood. The Temple's work for women and girls is carried on by an organization called the Dorcastry. The Temple also supports a kindergarten, which meets every morning except Saturday, and in which some fifty little folks, for whom a lunch is provided, are trained in all the lines of domestic service usually taught in such schools. The Ruggles Street Baptist Church (the Rev. E. D. Burr, pastor) works on lines somewhat different from but no less fruitful than those followed at the Temple. It probably does more than any other church in Boston in relief lines, regularly assisting hundreds of families with food and clothing. During 1895 over two thousand six hundred patients were treated at its dispensary. On its medical staff are nine physicians, with an apothecary and a dentist.

Other noteworthy institutional churches are the Pilgrim Church, Cleveland, O.; Plymouth Church, Milwaukee; People's Church, St. Paul; Grace Baptist Church, Philadelphia; and the Lagonda Avenue Church, Springfield, Ohio. The more familiar name of Grace Baptist Church (the Rev. R. H. Conwell, pastor) is the Temple, and its most conspicuous feature is Temple College. Two thousand pupils attend it, and have completed instruction in a broad range of studies. The allied departments enroll enough more students to swell the total to 3,500. A new building connected with the Temple is the home of a network of organizations, including musical and other associations, and a woman's congress of household science and art. The Samaritan Hospital accommodates twenty patients, and the Young Men's Congress, organized on the basis of the Federal Congress, discussing the same subjects and governed by the same rules, meets weekly.

KATE CARNEGIE[1]

By Ian Maclaren

Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush," "The Days of Auld Lang Syne," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XVII.—SMOLDERING FIRES

It is the right of every Scot—secured to him by the Treaty of Union and confirmed by the Disruption—to criticise his minister with much freedom, but this privilege is exercised with a delicate charity. When it is not possible for a conscientious hearer to approve a sermon, he is not compelled to condemnation. "There wes naething wrang wi' the text" affords an excellent way of escape, and it is open to suggest efficiency in another department than the pulpit. "Mister MacWheep michtna be a special preacher, but there's nae doot he wes a graund veesitor." Before Carmichael left the West Kirk, Edinburgh, where he served his apprenticeship as an assistant, a worthy elder called to bid him good-by, and spoke faithfully, to the lad's great delight.

"You have been very acceptable, wonderfully so for a young man, and we shall follow your career with much interest. It is right, however, to add, and you will accept this in a right spirit, that it was not by preaching that you commended yourself to our people, but by your visiting. Your sermons are what I might call . . . hazy—you will get a hold of the truth by and by, no doubt—but you have a gift for visitation."

The exact quality and popularity of this gift was excellently stated by the wife of a workingman, who referred with enthusiasm to the edifying character of the assistant's conversation.

"Tammas misses Maister Carmichael juist terrible, for he wud come in on a forenicht an' sit, an' smoke, an' haver wi' the gudeman by the 'oor. He wes the maist divertin' minister a' ever saw in the West Kirk."

It will be evident that Carmichael's visitation belonged to a different department of art from that of Dr. Davidson. He arrived without intimation, by the nearest way that he could invent, clothed in a shooting-jacket and a soft hat, and accompanied by at least two dogs. His coming created an instant stir, and Carmichael plunged at once into the life of the household. It is kept on fond record, and still told by the surviving remnant of his flock, that on various occasions and in the course of pastoral visitation he had turned the hay in summer, had forked the sheaves in harvest-time, and sacked the corn for market, and had driven a gudewife's churn. After which honorable toil he would eat and drink anything put before him—except boiled tea, against which he once preached with power—and then would sit indefinitely with the family before the kitchen fire, telling tales of ancient history, recalling the old struggles of Scottish men, describing foreign sights, enlarging on new books, till he would remember that he had only dropped in for an hour, and that two meals must be waiting for him at the manse. His visits were understood to be quite unfinished, and he left every house pledged to return and take up things at the point where he had been obliged to break off, and so he came at last in this matter of visitation into a condition of hopeless insolvency. His adventures were innumerable and always enjoyable—falling off the two fir-trees that made a bridge over our deeper burns, and being dried at the next farm-house—wandering over the moor all night and turning up at a gamekeeper's at daybreak, covered with peat and ravening with hunger—fighting his way through a snow-storm to a marriage, and digging the bridegroom out of a drift—dodging a herd of Highland cattle that thought he had come too near their calves, or driving off Drumsheugh's polled Angus bull with contumely when he was threatening Mrs. Macfadyen. If he met the bairns coming from school, the Glen rang with the foolery. When Willie Harley broke his leg, Carmichael brought his dog Jackie—I could tell things of that dog—and devised dramatic entertainments of such attraction that Jamie Soutar declared them no better than the theater, and threatened Carmichael with a skep of honey as a mark of his indignation. As for the old women of the Glen, he so got round them that they would gossip with him by the hour over past days, and Betty Macfarlane was so carried by the minister's sympathy that she brought out from hidden places some finery of her youth, and Carmichael was found by Miss Carnegie arranging a faded Paisley shawl on Betty's shoulders. And was it not this same gay Free Kirkman who trained an eleven to such perfection on a field of Drumsheugh's that they beat the second eleven of Muirtown gloriously?—on which occasion Tammas Mitchell, by the keenness of his eye and the strength of his arm, made forty-four runs; and, being congratulated by Drumtochty as he carried his bat, opened his mouth for the first time that day, saying, "Awa wi' ye!"

So it came to pass that, notwithstanding his unholy tendency to Bibical criticism and other theological pedantry, Drumtochty loved Carmichael because he was a man; and Dr. Davidson, lighting upon him in Hillocks' garden, with the family round him full of joy, would threaten him with a prosecution for ecclesiastical poaching under the Game Laws, and end by insisting upon his coming to dinner at the manse, when he might explain his conduct. Drumtochty loved him for his very imperfections, and follows his career unto this day with undying interest, recalling his various escapades with huge delight, and declaring to strangers that even in his callow days they had discovered that Carmichael was a preacher.

Carmichael had occasional fits of order, when he repented of his desultory ways, and began afresh with much diligence, writing out the names of the congregation with full details—he once got as far as Menzies before he lost the book—mapping the parish into districts, and planning an elaborate visitation. It may have been an accident that the district he chose for experiment embraced Tochty Lodge—where the Carnegies had just settled—but it was natural that his first effort should be thorough. There were exactly ten Free Kirk families from Tochty Lodge eastward, and some of these still speak with feeling of the attention they received, which exceeded all they had ever known before or since.

"It wesna that he sat sae lang as a've heard o' him daein' in the heich Glen, but it wes the times he cam'," Mrs. Stirton used to expatiate, "maybe twice a week for a month. He hed a wy o' comin' through Tochty Wood—the shade helpit him tae study, he said—an' jumpin' the dyke. Sall, gin he didna mak a roadie for himsel' through the field that year! A' wudna say," she used to add in a casual tone, "but that he micht hae gi'en a cry at the Lodge, but he cudna dae less, passin' the door."

Carmichael was astonished himself at the number of times he was obliged to see General Carnegie on business, of one kind or another. Sometimes it was about the Flower Show, of which the General had become a patron; sometimes it was the Highland Games, when the General's help would be of so much use; sometimes it was the idea of repairing the old bridge; sometimes—and Carmichael blushed when it came to this—to get the General's opinion on a military question in the Bible. The least he could do in laying such a tax on a good-natured man was to bring a book for his daughter's reading, or a curious flower he had picked up on the hill, or a story he had heard in his visiting. Miss Carnegie was generally gracious, and would see him on his way if the day were fine, or show him some improvements in the "Pleasaunce," or accompany him to Janet's cottage to have a taste of that original woman's conversation together. It came upon Carmichael at a time that he was, inadvertently, calling too frequently at the Lodge, and for a week he would keep to the main road, or even pass the corner of the Lodge with an abstracted air—for he loathed the thought of being deflected from the path of duty by any personal attraction—and used to change the subject of conversation after Janet had spoken for half an hour on Kate.

---

[1] Copyright, 1896, by John Watson.

People were speculating in a guarded manner regarding the possibility of news, and Janet had quarreled furiously with Donald for laughing such unworthy rumors to scorn, when the parish was almost convulsed by the historic scene in the Free Kirk, and all hope of a romantic alliance was blasted. Archie Moncur, elder, and James Macfadyen, deacon, were counting the collection in the vestibule, and the congregation within were just singing the last service of their first psalm, when General Carnegie and his daughter appeared at the door.

"Has service begun?" whispered Kate, while her father reverently bared his head. "I'm so sorry we are late, but you will let us in, won't you, and we shall be as quiet as mice?"

"A'll open the door," and Archie explained the geography of the situation, "an' ye 'ill juist slip intae the manse pew; it's in the corner, wi' curtains roond it, an' naebody 'ill see ye, naither minister nor people;" and so Carmichael went through the service, and had almost reached the end of his sermon before he knew that Kate was in the church.

She was very conscious of him and keenly observant of every detail—his white silk hood thrown into relief by the black Geneva gown, his fair flushed face touched with tenderness and reverence, a new accent of affection in his voice as one speaking to his charge, and especially she noted in this Free Kirkman a certain fervor and high hope, a flavor also of subtle spirituality, that were wanting in Dr. Davidson. His hair might have been better brushed, and his whiskers were distinctly ragged—but those things could be easily put right; then she tossed her head in contempt of herself. It had come to a fine pass when a girl that had carried her heart untouched through Simla should be concerned about the appearance of a Highland minister. The General was well acquainted with that proud motion, and began to regret that they had come. It was Davidson's blame, who had sent them to hear a good sermon for once, as he said, and now Kate would only find material for raillery. He tugged his mustache and wished that they were again in the open air.

When the sermon came, the occupants of the manse pew composed themselves for fifteen minutes' patient endurance, after the well-bred fashion of their Church, each selecting a corner with a skill born of long experience. They were not, however, to rest in peace and detachment of mind till the doxology (or its corresponding formula in the Scottish Kirk) summoned them back, for this was to be a quite memorable sermon for them and their fellow-hearers and all Drumtochty.

Carmichael had been lecturing through Old Testament history, and, having come to the drama of Elijah and Jezebel, had laid himself out for its full and picturesque treatment. He was still at that age when right seems to be all on one side, and a particular cause can be traced down the centuries in all lands and under all conditions. For the most part of two days he had wandered over the moor in the bright, cold November weather reconstructing the scene in Israel on Scottish lines, and he entered the pulpit that morning charged with the Epic of Puritanism. Acute critics, like Elspeth Macfadyen, could tell from Carmichael's walk down the church that he was in great spirits, and even ordinary people caught a note of triumph in his voice as he gave out the first psalm. For the first few sentences of his sermon he spoke quietly, as one reserving and restraining himself, and gave a historical introduction which allowed the General to revive some ancient memories of India without interruption. But Kate caught the imperial tone of one who had a message to deliver and was already commanding people to listen. She was conscious of a certain anxiety, and began to wish that she were in front and could see his face, instead of only the side of his head. Then Carmichael threw back his hair with the air of one taking off his coat, and plunged the congregation into the midst of the battle, describing Elijah's forgetfulness of self, profound conviction of righteousness, high purpose for his nation and devotion to the cause of Jehovah, till Burnbrae and the Free Kirkmen straightened themselves visibly in their pews, and touching so skillfully on the Tyrian princess in her beauty, her culture, her bigotry, her wiles, her masterfulness, that several women—greatly delighting in the exposure of such a "trimmie"—nodded approval. Kate had never given herself to the study of Old Testament history, and would have had some difficulty in identifying Elijah—there was a mare called Jezebel, of vicious temper—but she caught the contagion of enthusiasm. If the supreme success of a sermon be to stimulate the hearer's mind, then Carmichael ought to have closed at this point. His people would have been all the week fighting battles for conscience' sake, and resisting smooth, cunning temptation to the farthest limits of their lives and in unimaginable ways. Kate herself, although a person quite unaffected by preaching, had also naturalized the sermon in her life with much practical and vivid detail. Carmichael was Elijah, the prophet of the common people, with his simple ways and old-fashioned notions and love of hardness, only far more gentle and courteous and amusing than that uncompromising Jew; and she—why, she would be Jezebel just for the moment, who had come from . . . India into the Glen, and could bring Elijah to her feet if she chose, and make him do her will, and then. . . . The girls in the choir before the pulpit noticed the look on Kate's face, and wondered whether the Carnegies would join the Free Kirk.

Carmichael had an instinct that he ought to fling over the remaining four pages of his sermon and close the service with a war psalm, and he told me when I was staying with him last week that he sacrifices the last head of his sermon almost every Sunday in his city pulpit. But he was only a lad in Drumtochty, and, besides, was full of a historical parallel, which, after a scientific illustration, is most irresistible to a young minister. No one had ever seen it before, but of course Elijah was John Knox, and Jezebel was Queen Mary of Scots, and then Carmichael set to work afresh, with something less than conspicuous success. Scottish people are always ready for a eulogium on John Knox in church, or on Robert Burns out of church, but the Reformer is rather the object of patriotic respect than personal devotion. Netherton snuffed in quite a leisurely way, and the women examined the bonnet of the manse housekeeper, while Knox stood in the breach for the liberties of Scotland, and when Carmichael began to meddle with Mary he distinctly lost the sympathies of his audience and entered on dangerous ground. Scots allow themselves, at times, the rare luxury of being illogical, and one of the occasions is their fondness for Queen Mary. An austere Puritan may prove that this young woman was French in her ways, an enemy to the Evangel, a born and practiced flirt, and art and part in the murder of Darnley. A Scot will not deny the evidence, and if he be thrust into the box he may bring the prisoner guilty, but his heart is with the condemned, and he has a grudge against the prosecutor. For he never forgets that Mary was of the royal blood and a thorough Stuart, that her face turned men's heads in every country she touched, that she had the courage of a man in her, that she was shamefully used, and if she did throw over that ill-conditioned lad, well . . . "Puir lassie, she hed naebody tae guide her, but sall, she focht her battle weel," and out of this judgment none can drive an honest Scot.

"Yon wes a graund discoorse the day, gudewife," Jeems hazarded to Elspeth on the way home, "but a' thocht the minister wes a wee hard on Queen Mary; there's nae doot she wes a Papist, an' micht hae gien Knox a bit twist wi' the screws gin she cud hae gruppit him, but a' dinna like her misca'd."

"A've heard him wi' ma ain ears crackin' her up by the 'oor, an' a' canna mak oot what set him against her the day; but he's young," remarked Elspeth, sagely, "an' wi' his age it's either saint or deevil, an' ae day the one an' the next day the ither; there's nae medium. Noo maist fouk are juist half an' between, an' Mary hed her faults."

"Ma word, Jeems," continued Elspeth, with much relish, "Mary wud sune settled the minister gin she hed been in the kirk the day."

"Aye, aye," inquired Jeems, "noo what hud the hizzie hae dune?"

"She wud juist hae sent for him an' lookit wi' her een, an' askit him what ill he hed at her, an' gin that wesna eneuch she wud hae pit her handkerchief tae her face."

"Of coorse he cudna hae stude that; a' micht hae gien in masel'," admitted Jeems, "but Knox wes stiff."

"Maister Carmichael is no a Knox, naither are ye, Jeems, an' it's a mercy for me ye arena. Mary wud hae twistit Maister Carmichael roond her finger, but a'm judgin' he 'ill catch it as it is afore mony days, or ma name's no Elspeth Macfadyen. Did ye see Miss Carnegie rise an' gae oot afore he feenished?"

"Div ye mean that, Elspeth?" and her husband was amazed at such penetration. "Noo, a' thocht it hed been the heat; a' never held wi' that stove; it draws up the air. Hoo did ye jalouse yon?"

"She wes fidgetin' in her seat when he yokit on Mary, an' the meenut he named her 'our Scottish Jezebel' the Miss rose an' opened the seat door that calm, a' knew she wes in a tantrum, and she gied him a look afore she closed the kirk door that wud hae brocht ony man tae his senses.

"Jeems," went on Elspeth with solemnity, "a' coont this a doonricht calamity, for a' wes houpin' he wud hae pleased them the day, an' noo a'm sair afraid that the minister hes crackit his credit wi' the Lodge."

"Div ye think, Elspeth, he saw her gang oot an' suspeckit the cause?"

"It's maist michty tae hear ye ask sic a question, Jeems. What gared him mak' a hash o' the baptism prayer, and return thanks that there wes a leevin' father, instead o' mither, and gie oot the 103d Paraphrase? Tak' ma word for't, he's wishin' by this time that he'd lat puir Mary alane."

It was just above Hillocks' farm that the General overtook Kate, who was still blazing.

"Did you ever hear such vulgar abuse and . . . abominable language from a pulpit? He's simply a raging fanatic, and not one bit better than his Knox. And I . . . we thought him quite different . . . and a gentleman. I'll never speak to him again. Scottish Jezebel! I suppose he would call me Jezebel if it occurred to him."

"Very likely he would," replied the General, dryly, "and I must say his talk about Queen Mary seemed rather bad taste. But that's not the question, Kate, which is your conduct in leaving a place of worship in such an . . . unladylike fashion."

"What?" for this was new talk from her father.

"As no Carnegie ought to have done. You have forgotten yourself and your house, and there is just one thing for you to do, and the sooner the better."

"Father, I'll never look at him again . . . and after that evening at Dr. Davidson's, and our talking . . . about Queen Mary, and . . . lots of things."

"Whether you meet Mr. Carmichael again or not is your own affair, but this touches us both, and you . . . must write a letter of apology."

"And if I don't?" said Kate, defiantly.

"Then I shall write one myself for you. A Carnegie must not insult any man, be he one faith or the other, and offer him no amends."

So Donald handed in this letter at the Free Kirk manse that evening, and left without an answer:

Tochty Lodge.

Sir: Your violent and insolent attack on a martyred Queen caused me to lose self control in your church to-day, and I was unable to sit longer under such language.

It has been pointed out to me that I ought not to have left church as I did, and I hereby express regret.

The books you were so good as to lend me I have sent back by the messenger.

Yours truly,
CATHERINE CARNEGIE.

When Carmichael called next day, Donald informed him with unconcealed satisfaction that Lord Hay was lunching with the family, and that the General and Miss Carnegie were going to Muirtown Castle to-morrow for a visit; but Janet had not lost hope.

"Do not be taking this to heart, my dear, for I will be asking a question. What will be making Miss Kate so very angry? it is not every man she would be minding, though he spoke against Queen Mary all the day. When a woman does not care about a man, she will not take the trouble to be angry. That is what I am thinking; and it is not Lord Hay that has the way, oh no, though he be a proper man and good at shooting."

CHAPTER XVIII.—LOVESICKNESS

College friends settled in petty lowland towns, and meeting Carmichael on sacramental occasions, affected to pity him, inquiring curiously what were his means of conveyance after the railway ceased, what time a letter took to reach him, whether any foot ever crossed his door from October to May, whether the great event of the week was not the arrival of the bread-cart. Those were exasperating gibes from men who could not take a walk without coming on a coal-pit, nor lift a book in their studies without soiling their hands, whose windows looked on a street and commanded the light of a grocer's shop instead of a sunset. It ill became such miserables to be insolent, and Carmichael taught them humility when he began to sound the praises of Drumtochty; but he could not make townspeople understand the unutterable satisfaction of the country minister, who even from old age and great cities looks back with fond regret to his first parish on the slope of the Grampians. Some kindly host wrestles with him to stay a few days more in civilization, and pledges him to run up whenever he wearies of his exile, and the ungrateful rustic can hardly conceal the joy of his escape. He shudders on the way to the station at the drip of the dirty sleet and the rags of the shivering poor, and the restless faces of the men and the unceasing roar of the traffic. Where he is going the white snow is falling gently on the road, a cart full of sweet-smelling roots is moving on velvet, the driver stops to exchange views with a farmer who has been feeding his sheep, within the humblest cottage the fire is burning clearly. With every mile northward the Glenman's heart lifts; and as he lands on his far-away little station he draws a deep breath of the clean, wholesome air. It is a long walk through the snow, but there is a kindly, couthy smell from the woods, and at sight of the squares of light in his home, weariness departs from a Drumtochty man. Carmichael used to say that a glimpse of Archie Moncur sitting with his sisters before the fire as he passed, and the wild turmoil of his dogs within the manse as the latch of the garden gate clicked, and the flood of light pouring out from the open door on the garden, where every branch was feathered with snow, and to come into his study, where the fire of pine logs was reflected from the familiar titles of his loved books, gave him a shock of joy such as he has never felt since, even in the days of his prosperity.

"The city folk are generous with their wealth," he was saying to me only last week, when I was visiting him in his West End manse and we fell a-talking of the Glen, "and they have dealt kindly by me; they are also full of ideas, and they make an inspiring audience for a preacher. If any man has a message to deliver from the Eternal, then he had better leave the wilderness and come to the city; and if he has plans for the helping of his fellow-men, let him come where he can get his agents and his laborers.

"No, I do not repent leaving the Glen, for the Divine Hand thrust me forth and has given me work to do, and I am not ungrateful to the friends I have made in the city; but God created me a country man, and"—here Carmichael turned his back to me—"my heart goes back to Drumtochty, and the sight of you fills me with . . . longing.

"Ah, how this desiderium, as the Rabbi would have said, comes over one with the seasons as they come and go! In spring they send me the first snowdrops from the Glen, but it is a cruel kindness, for I want to be where they are growing in Clashisgarden. When summer comes, people praise the varied flower-beds of the costly city parks, but they have not seen Tochty woods in their glory. Each autumn carries me to the harvest-field, till in my study I hear the swish of the scythe and feel the fragrance of the dry, ripe grain. And in winter I see the sun shining on the white sides of Glen Urtach, and can hardly keep pen to paper in this dreary room.

"What nonsense this is!" pulling himself together; "yes, that is the very chair you sat in, and this is the table we stuck between us with our humble flask of Mosel wine of a winter's night . . . let's go to bed; we 'ill have no more good talk to-night."

When he had left me, I flung open my window in search of air, for it seemed as if the city were choking me. A lamp was flaring across the street, two cabs rattled past with revelers singing a music-hall song, a heavy odor from many drains floated in, the multitude of houses oppressed one as with a weight. How sweet and pure it was now at the pool above Tochty Mill, where the trout were lying below the stones and the ashen boughs dipping into the water!

Carmichael once, however, lost all love of the Glen, and that was after Kate flung herself out of the Free Kirk and went on a visit to Kilspindie Castle. He was completely disenchanted, and saw everything at its poorest. Why did they build the manse so low that an able-bodied man could touch the ceiling of the lower rooms with an effort and the upper rooms easily? What possessed his predecessor to put such an impossible paper on the study, and to stuff the room with book-shelves? A row of Puritan divines offended him—a wooden, obsolete theology—but he also pitched a defense of Queen Mary into a cupboard—she had done enough mischief already. The garden looked squalid and mean, without flowers, with black patches peeping through the thin covering of snow, with a row of winter greens opposite the southern window. He had never noticed the Glen so narrow and bare before, nor how gray and unlovely were the houses. Why had not the people better manners and some brightness?—they were not always attending funerals and making bargains. What an occupation for an educated man to spend two hours in a cabin of a vestry with a dozen laboring men, considering how two pounds could be added to the Sustentation Fund, or preaching on Sunday to a handful of people who showed no more animation than stone gods, except when the men took snuff audibly! Carmichael was playing the spoiled child—not being at all a mature or perfect character, then or now—and was ready to hit out at anybody. His bearing was for the first and only time in his life supercilious, and his sermons were a vicious attack on the doctrines most dear to the best of his people. His elders knew not what had come over him, although Elspeth Macfadyen was mysteriously apologetic, and in moments of sanity he despised himself. One day he came to a good resolution suddenly, and went down to see Rabbi Saunderson—the very thought of whose gentle, patient, selfless life was a rebuke and a tonic.

When two tramps held conference on the road, and one indicated to the other visibly that any gentleman in temporary distress would be treated after a Christian fashion at a neighboring house, Carmichael, who had been walking in a dream since he passed the Lodge, knew instantly that he must be near the Free Kirk manse of Kilbogie. The means of communication between the members of the nomadic profession is almost perfect in its frequency and accuracy, and Saunderson's manse was a hedge-side wood. Not only did all the regular travelers by the north road call on their going up in spring and their coming down in autumn, but habitués of the east coast route were attracted and made a circuit to embrace so hospitable a home, and even country vagrants made their way from Dunleith and down through Glen Urtach to pay their respects to the Rabbi. They had careful directions to avoid Barbara—expressed forcibly on five different posts in the vicinity and enforced in picturesque language, of an evening—and they were therefore careful to waylay the Rabbi on the road, or enter his study boldly from the front. The humbler members of the profession contented themselves with explaining that they had once been prosperous tradesmen, and were now walking to Muirtown in search of work—receiving their alms in silence, with diffidence and shame; but those in a higher walk came to consult the Rabbi on Bible difficulties, which were threatening to shake their faith, and departed much relieved—with a new view of Lot's wife, as well as a suit of clothes the Rabbi had worn only three times.

"You have done kindly by me in calling"—the vagabond had finished his story and was standing, a very abject figure, among the books—"and in giving me the message from your friend. I am truly thankful that he is now laboring in iron—did you say?—and I hope he may be a cunning artificer.

"You will not set it down to carelessness that I cannot quite recall the face of your friend, for, indeed, it is my privilege to see many travelers, and there are times when I may have been a minister to them on their journeys, as I would be to you also if there be anything in which I can serve you. It grieves me to say that I have no clothing that I might offer you; it happens that a very worthy man passed here a few days since most insufficiently clad, and . . . but I should not have alluded to that; my other garments, save what I wear, are . . . kept in a place of . . . safety by my excellent housekeeper, and she makes their custody a point of conscience; you might put the matter before her. . . .

"Assuredly it would be difficult, and I crave your pardon for putting you in a . . . difficult position; it is my misfortune to have to-day neither silver nor gold;" catching sight of Carmichael in the passage, "this is a providence. May I borrow from you, John, some suitable sum for our brother here who is passing through adversity?"

"Do not be angry with me, John"—after the tramp had departed, with five shillings in hand and much triumph over Carmichael on his face—"nor speak bitterly of our fellow-men. Verily theirs is a hard lot who have no place to lay their head, and who journey in weariness from city to city. John, I was once a stranger and a wayfarer, wandering over the length and breadth of the land. Nor had I a friend on earth till my feet were led to the Mains, where my heart was greatly refreshed, and now God has surrounded me with young men of whose kindness I am not worthy, wherefore it becometh me to show mercy unto others," and the Rabbi looked at Carmichael with such sweetness that the lad's sullenness began to yield, although he made no sign.

"Moreover," and the Rabbi's voice took a lower tone, "as often as I look on one of those men of the highways, there cometh to me a vision of Him who was an outcast of the people, and, albeit some may be as Judas, peradventure one might beg alms of me, a poor sinful man, some day, and, lo, it be . . . the Lord himself in a saint," and the Rabbi uncovered his head and stood a while much moved.

"Rabbi," after a pause, during which Carmichael's face had changed, "you are incorrigible. For years we have been trying to make you a really good and wise man, both by example and precept, and you are distinctly worse than when we began—more lazy, miserly, and uncharitable. It is very disheartening.

"Can you receive another tramp and give him a bed?—for I am in low spirits, and so, like every other person in trouble, I come to you, you dear old saint, and already I feel a better man."

"Receive you, John? It is doubtless selfish, but it is not given to you to know how I weary to see your face, and we shall have much converse together—there are some points I would like your opinion on—but first of all, after a slight refreshment, we must go to Mains: behold the aid to memory I have designed"—and the Rabbi pointed to a large square of paper hung above Chrysostom, with "Farewell, George Pitillo, 3 o'clock." "He is the son's son of my benefactor, and he leaves his father's house this day to go into a strange land across the sea: I had a service last night at Mains, and expounded the departure of Abraham, but only slightly, being somewhat affected through the weakness of the flesh.

"There was a covenant made between the young man and myself that I should meet him at the crossing of the roads to-day, and it is in my mind to leave a parable with him against the power of this present world."

Then the Rabbi fell into a meditation till the dog-cart came up, Mains and his wife in the front and George alone in the back, making a brave show of indifference.

"George," said the Rabbi, looking across the field and speaking as to himself, "we shall not meet again in this world, and in a short space they will bury me in Kilbogie kirkyard, but it will not be in me to lie still for thinking of the people I have loved.

"So it will come to pass that I may rise—you have ears to understand, George—and I will inquire of him that taketh charge of the dead about many and how it fares with them.

"'And George Pitillo?'

"'Oh, it's a peety you didna live langer, Mr. Saunderson, for George hes risen in the warld and made a great fortune.'

"'How does it go with his soul, Andrew?'

"'Well, you see, Mister Saunderson, George has had many things to think about, and he maybe hasna hed time for releegion yet, but nae doot he 'ill be turnin' his mind that wy soon.'

"Poor George, that I baptized and admitted to the sacrament and . . . loved, exchanged his soul for the world."

The sun was setting fast, and the landscape—bare stubble fields, leafless trees, still water, long, empty road—was of a blood-red color fearsome to behold, so that no one spake, and the horse chafing his bit made the only sound.

Then the Rabbi began again.

"'And George Pitillo—tell me, Andrew?'

"'Weel, ye see, Mister Saunderson, ye wud be sorry for him, for you and he were aye chief; he's keepit a gude name an' workit hard, but hesna made muckle o' this warld.'

"'And his soul, Andrew?'

"'Oo, that's a' richt; gin we a' hed as gude a chance for the next warld as George Pitillo, we micht be satisfied.'

"'That is enough for his old friend; hap me over again, Andrew, and I'll rest in peace till the trumpet sound.'"

Carmichael turned aside, but he heard something desperately like a sob from the back of the dog-cart, and the Rabbi saying, "God be with you, George, and as your father's father received me in the day of my sore discouragement, so may the Lord God of Israel open a door for you in every land whithersoever you go, and bring you in at last through the gates into the city." The Rabbi watched George till the dog-cart faded away into the dusk of the winter's day, and they settled for the night in their places among the books before the Rabbi spoke.

It was with a wistful tenderness that he turned to Carmichael and touched him slightly with his hand, as was a fashion with the Rabbi.

"You will not think me indifferent to your welfare because I have not inquired about your affairs, for indeed this could not be, but the going forth of this lad has tried my heart. Is there aught, John, that it becometh you to tell me, and wherein my years can be of any avail?"

"It is not about doctrine I wished to speak to you, Rabbi, although I am troubled thus also, but about . . . you remember our talk."

"About the maid, surely; I cannot forget her, and indeed often think of her since the day you brought me to her house and made me known unto her, which was much courtesy to one who is fitter for a book-room than a woman's company.

"She is fair of face and debonair, and surely beauty and a winsome way are from God; there seemed also a certain contempt of baseness and a strength of will which are excellent. Perhaps my judgment is not even because Miss Carnegie was gracious to me, and you know, John, it is not in me to resist kindness, but this is how she seems to me. Has there been trouble between you?"

"Do not misunderstand me, Rabbi; I have not spoken one word of love to . . . Miss Carnegie, nor she to me; but I love her, and I thought that perhaps she saw that I loved her. But now it looks as if . . . what I hoped is never to be," and Carmichael told the Queen Mary affair.

"Is it not marvelous," mused the Rabbi, looking into the fire, "how one woman, who was, indeed, at the time little more than girl, did carry men, many of them wise and clever, away as with a flood, and still divideth scholars and even . . . friends?

"It was not fitting that Miss Carnegie should have left God's house in heat of temper, and it seemeth to us that she hath a wrong reading of history, but it is surely good that she has her convictions, and holdeth them fast like a brave maid.

"Is it not so, John, that friends and doubtless also . . . lovers have been divided by conscience and have been on opposite sides in the great conflict, and doth not this show how much of conscience there is among men?

"It may be this dispute will not divide you—being now, as it were, more an argument of the schools than a matter of principle; but if it should appear that you are far apart on the greater matters of faith, then . . . you will have a heavy cross to carry. But it is my mind that the heart of the maiden is right, and that I may some day see her . . . in your home, whereat my eyes would be glad."

The Rabbi was so taken up with the matter that he barely showed Carmichael a fine copy of St. John of Damascus he had secured from London, and went out of his course at worship to read, as well as to expound with much feeling, the story of Ruth the Moabitess, showing conclusively that she had in her a high spirit, and that she was designed of God to be a strength to the house of David. He was also very cheerful in the morning, and bade Carmichael good-by at Tochty woods with encouraging words. He also agreed to assist his boy at the Drumtochty sacrament.

It was evident that the Rabbi's mind was much set on this visit, but Carmichael did not for one moment depend upon his remembering the day, and so Burnbrae started early on the Saturday with his dog-cart to bring Saunderson up and deposit him without fail in the Free Kirk manse of Drumtochty. Six times that day did the minister leave his "action" sermon and take his way to the guest-room, carrying such works as might not be quite unsuitable for the old scholar's perusal, and arranging a lamp of easy management, that the night hours might not be lost. It was late in the afternoon before the Rabbi was delivered at the manse, and Burnbrae gave explanations next day at the sacramental dinner.

"It wes juist ten when a' got tae the manse o' Kilbogie, an' his hoosekeeper didna ken whar her maister wes; he micht be in Kildrummie by that time, she said, or half wy tae Muirtown. So a' set oot an' ransackit the pairish till a' got him, an' gin he wesna sittin' in a bothie takin' brose wi' the plowmen an' expoundin' Scripture a' the time.

"He startit on the ancient martyrs afore we were half a mile on the road, and he gied ae testimony aifter anither, an' he wesna within sicht o' the Reformation when we cam tae the hooses; a'll no deny that a' let the mare walk bits o' the road, for a' cud hae heard him a' nicht; ma bluid's warmer yet, freends."

The Rabbi arrived in great spirits, and refused to taste meat till he had stated the burden of his sermon for the morrow.

"If the Lord hath opened our ears, the servant must declare what has been given him, but I prayed that the message sent through me to your flock, John, might be love, for it hath pleased the Great Shepherd that I should lead the sheep by strange paths. But I desired that it be otherwise when I came for the first time to Drumtochty.

"Two days did I spend in the woods, for the stillness of winter among the trees leaveth the mind disengaged for the Divine word, and the first day my soul was heavy as I returned, for this only was laid upon me, 'vessels of wrath, filled for destruction.' And, John, albeit God would doubtless have given me strength according to His will, yet I was loth to bear this awful truth to the people of your charge.

"Next day the sun was shining pleasantly in the wood, and it came to me that clouds had gone from the face of God, and as I wandered among the trees a squirrel sat on a branch within reach of my hand and did not flee. Then I heard a voice, 'I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.'

"It was, in an instant, my hope that this might be

God's word by me, but I knew not it was so till the evangel opened up on all sides, and I was led into the outgoings of the eternal love after so moving a fashion that I dared to think that grace might be effectual even with me . . . me.

"God opened my mouth on Sabbath on this text unto my own flock, and the word was not void. It is little that can be said on the sovereign love in two and it may be a few minutes; yet even this may be more than your people are minded to bear. So I shall prætermit certain notes on doctrine; for you will doubtless have given much instruction on the purposes of God, and very likely may be touching on that mystery in your action sermon."

During the evening the Rabbi was very genial—tasting Sarah's viands with relish, and comparing her to Rebecca, who made savory meat, urging Carmichael to smoke without scruple, and allowing himself to snuff three times, examining the book-shelves with keen appreciation, and finally departing with three volumes of modern divinity under his arm, to reinforce the selection in his room, "lest his eyes should be held waking in the night watches." He was much overcome by the care that had been taken for his comfort, and at the door of his room blessed his boy: "May the Lord give you the sleep of His beloved, and strengthen you to declare all His truth on the morrow." Carmichael sat by his study fire for a while and went to bed much cheered, nor did he dream that there was to be a second catastrophe in the Free Kirk of Drumtochty which would be far sadder than the first, and leave in one heart lifelong regret.

[To be continued in the September Magazine Number of The Outlook]

The Religious World

The Doshisha

We have already referred to the deplorable separation of the Japanese Doshisha University at Kyoto from the American Board and from all missionary influence. The Doshisha's declaration of absolute independence has been followed by the withdrawal of the missionary teachers in the University. The Trustees of the University, in severing relations with the American Board, expressed a desire that the missionary teachers should continue as instructors independently of the Board. In reply to this request a letter was sent in behalf of the Kyoto Mission signed by the Rev. Dr. M. L. Gordon and the Rev. Dr. D. W. Learned. In this letter, which was dated July 7, the missionaries, after acknowledging their appreciation of the Trustees' request, stated that "the American Board has specifically instructed us to enter into no relations in which we cannot be recognized as its representatives. Even in the absence of specific instructions we should hesitate to assent to such form of co-operation. If this were an entirely new work, having no history behind it, the case might be different; but, in view of your action severing the Doshisha from its long-standing relationship to the American Board, it would certainly be difficult to avoid at least the appearance of disloyalty to our constituency." Further on in the letter the root of the trouble is plainly disclosed. The writers of the letter call attention to the fact that the present teachings of the University differ from those of Dr. Neesima, who was in the closest sympathy with American Christianity. The letter continues:

> The fundamental principles of Christianity which were dear to the hearts of the founders of the Doshisha, to those of the American friends who have given hundreds of thousands of dollars for its support, and which are not less dear to the hearts of all the members of our Mission, have been publicly assailed or ridiculed from the platform of the school and in other ways by persons connected with the administration; and instead of listening to the earnest protests of the representatives of the Mission, the Trustees have in one instance promoted an instructor who had been most active in assailing the Christian foundations of the institution to be the head of an important department. The Trustees have also said in their reply to the Report of the Deputation, in speaking of our protests, "the opinions considered so heretical by the missionaries are not so in our view." There is no longer a unity of feeling and practice in the Doshisha, but rather such a wide divergence as to render it unwise, if not impossible, for any of our number to continue to co-operate as teachers in the school.

The English paper published in Yokohama called the "Japan Gazette" declares that many Japanese Christians are as dissatisfied with the present teachings of the Doshisha, and that eight Japanese professors have left the school within a year. Somewhat cynically, the "Gazette" comments as follows:

> There is a story current, something of a chestnut in flavor, of two people entering into partnership, the one providing brains and the other money. At the end of a certain period the man with the brains had become possessed of the money, while the other was poor in pocket but rich in experience. The letter of the American missionaries to the President of the Board of Trustees of the Doshisha University brings the story to remembrance. The Japanese have the University; the missionaries are sadder, we hope they are wiser, men.

Brotherhood of the Kingdom

The fourth annual Conference of the Brotherhood of the Kingdom was held this year at Marlborough-on-the-Hudson, from August 3 to 8, inclusive. There is no diminution of interest nor lessening of attendance as the years go on. The papers that were read and the addresses made this year showed maturity of thought and that fearless conservatism which results from undivided purpose and painful experiential tests. The hours of the sessions of the Conference were apportioned to the intellectual and the devotional life of the Christian social movement. The Conference began with a reception and devotional meeting on Monday evening. The meeting was conducted by Mornay Williams, Esq. On Tuesday morning, after a devotional and a private business meeting, the public session was held at 10:30, and at this hour the initial paper of the Conference was read by the Rev Charles James Wood, of York, Pa. The topic of the paper was "The Historic Manifestation of Christ." The purpose of the paper was to demonstrate that neither the Incarnation nor the social religion of Jesus were fortuitous, but had been eternally and essentially necessary, because always divine. Some attempt was made to show also the applications of this principle to life and literature, to commerce and politics. In the afternoon of the same day the Hon. Ernest Howard Crosby read a paper on "The Reign of Peace." Mr. Crosby is the most practical exponent of Tolstoï. Mr. Mornay Williams touched upon some legal points in a paper on "The Relation of the Citizen of the Kingdom to Existing Laws." Mr. Williams's ideas gave rise to some debate. Upon Wednesday and Thursday, respectively, came essays on "The Teaching of Christ" and "The Works of Christ," the former by the Rev. E. T. Root, of Baltimore, and the other by the Rev. Professor W. N. Clark, of Colgate University. As interpretations, both essays were suggestive and inspiring. Professor Nathanael Schmidt's study of "Hosea" gave the results of scientific untrammeled scholarship brought to bear upon social ethics. The Rev. Mr. Rauschenbush followed with a paper on "The Modern Apostolate." In line with this were the addresses of Superintendent J. W. Kelgaard and Director George T. Powell. These were given at the large farmers' meeting on Saturday afternoon. On Friday the subjects were prospective and the speakers prophetic. The Rev. J. W. Hegeman was singularly original in writing of "The Future Christ." The Rev. Messrs. W. T. Brown wrote on "Christian Union," and E. E. Chivers, D.D., on "The Social Aspects of World Missions." It is to be hoped that the essays presented at this Conference may find publication, for they were careful, thoughtful, practical, and original. The Brotherhood is made up of Christian thinkers and workers from all the Churches, and its platform is roomy—even the Christian Socialist is allowed to utter his thoughts. It is reverently fearless. The effect of its work in the way of social amelioration, both in New York and elsewhere, has already been felt by those who guessed not the source. While determined in its propaganda, it never forgets to keep the spiritual life nourished. It is constantly at its work in the endeavor to realize its ideals. For bare intellectualism it has no sympathy, yet the intellectual quality of the Conferences is exceptionally fine and strong.

Education in the Y. M. C. A.

The prospectus of the New York Young Men's Christian Association for the coming year, which has just been issued, contains some novel features and indicates that a strong effort is to be made to lay additional stress on the educational side of the work of the Association. A new step, and one of great importance, is the introduction of the syllabi of educational courses adopted by the International Committee. This forms a basis for uniform study on a distinct line of development. It is expected that 25,000 students will be enrolled this year under the different branches of the International League. An advisory board has furnished syllabi of topics in ten selected subjects; examinations are to be held simultaneously in all the branch Associations, and certificates will be issued which will be accepted in place of examination by the training-schools in Springfield and Chicago, and probably, later on, by other institutions. In short, the Association is planning systematically to make its educational courses approach more nearly to university work, and to lay down an educational system which shall be comprehensive and of thoroughly practical value.

Brigade Boys' Encampment

One of the chief events of the year in the experience of the Boys' Brigade, in the many churches where the order has grown so popular, is the annual encampment of the companies, battalions, or regiments, at the seaside or some other quiet and restful place. Among the many Brigade

Encampments this summer, perhaps none have enjoyed the camp experience more than the one hundred and fifty boys of the United Boys' Brigade in camp at Boynton Beach. They constitute the First New Jersey Battalion of the United Boys' Brigade, and include six companies, three from churches in Jersey City, one from Jersey City Heights, and two from Hoboken, under command of Major Thomas P. Wightman, of Jersey City. They represented two Presbyterian churches, two Reformed churches, and one Methodist church. A large number of visitors have called upon the boys in camp, but their special guest was the Rev. Dr. Cornelius Brett, of the Bergen Reformed Church, who in former camps has so endeared himself to them that when he went to camp they insisted that he should remain with them until they should break camp. This indicates one of the underlying reasons for the organization—the molding influence of good men brought to bear upon the character and life of boys in the Brigade, until they are permanently fixed in good habits of thought and action. The strict observance of the day's routine, including the regular calls and drills of the military camp, morning and evening devotions, domestic duties about their tents, and the general cultivation of the comrade spirit, have a tendency to develop manliness in the boys. Objections are frequently urged against the Brigades on the ground that the order tends to foster the soldier spirit. No doubt the objection is well grounded, but in the hands of skillful managers the order can be made one of the most effective agencies for the training of boys in the arts of peace, the principles of manhood, and the spirit of genuine devotion to the pure and good in religion and life.

Ocean Grove Missionary Anniversary

On Saturday and Sunday, August 15 and 16, the twenty-fourth anniversary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was held at Ocean Grove, and was largely attended both by visitors and missionaries from the foreign field. The reports of President Mrs. E. H. Stokes, Secretary Mrs. M. S. Wheeler, and Treasurer Mrs. R. Van Kirk were eloquent with the evidences of progress, and were received with delight. The feature of the Saturday afternoon session was a symposium including representatives of various mission countries in their peculiar costumes, led by Mrs. S. L. Baldwin, of China. Mrs. S. M. Butler, of India, then delivered an inspiring address on Gospel work in that land. Saturday evening was devoted to an enthusiastic missionary love-feast conducted by Dr. E. H. Stokes, President of the Ocean Grove Association, in which a large audience took part. Sunday was a high day, noted in the annual conventions at Ocean Grove as "Missionary Sabbath." All the services that day were devoted to the cause of foreign missions, and were under the auspices of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Thousands of people took part in the holiness meeting led by Dr. R. J. Daniels, and the young people's meeting conducted by the Evangelist C. H. Yatman. At the morning service Miss Ruth Marie Sites, recently returned from China, made an address, as also did Miss Marguerite Wong, of Foo Chow, China, the daughter of a high Chinese official, recently converted from Confucianism, who spoke in her native tongue, Miss Sites acting as her interpreter. Several returned missionaries from China, India, and Syria spoke briefly, and Oriental converts, in costume, sang and spoke in their native tongues. At the afternoon meeting twenty returned missionaries occupied the platform, and a collection of about $1,000 was taken in the interest of missions. It was pronounced one of the greatest missionary days in the history of Ocean Grove. Ten thousand people attended the closing services.

Bethany Assembly Encampment

The annual encampment of Bethany Assembly for the season of 1896 was held on the beautiful grounds of the Association at Brooklyn, Indiana, twenty miles west of Indianapolis, July 23 to August 17. For many years the Disciples of Christ in Indiana, which is one of their strongholds, have been accustomed to spend three or four weeks in a summer assembly at Bethany Park, considering the interests of the cause of Christ in that State. At first it was simply and only missionary in character; but with the passing years the Assembly has grown into a much wider scope, until it includes many features of entertainment, amusement, and class instruction, the latter of which was added this summer. The encampment which has just closed devoted the first week very largely to Christian Endeavor interests. Professor G. P. Coler, of Ann Arbor, conducted a Christian Endeavor Training-School, and Miss Mattie M. Botler, editor of the "Lookout," lectured each morning to the young people, giving them, in her happy literary style, many valuable lessons. The latter part of the same week was occupied by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, which presented an attractive programme, and whose reports told a story full of devotion and success. The second week the Sunday-School Association held a three days' convention; Butler University, located at Irvington, observed "Butler University Day," which is always a time of literary feasting and gladness; and "Christian Union Day" proved that the Disciples have lost none of the old-time zeal in their fervent advocacy of this issue. During this week Dr. B. B. Tyler, of New York, gave six lectures on "Some of the Great Preachers of the Metropolis." The third week was devoted largely to State, general, and foreign missionary matters, and to the Ministerial Association of Indiana. At this time President D. R. Dungan, of Cotner University, favored the preachers with six strong lectures on questions particularly related to their work. There were two series of special lectures each day, besides a number of sacred concerts, in addition to the regular conventions and special day celebrations. The attendance was large from several States, the interest deep, and the results full of promise for greater efficiency in Christian service.

Thirty Years a Prison Chaplain

The experiences of the Rev. Dr. Job Bass, the thirtieth anniversary of whose installation as Chaplain of the Kings County Penitentiary, Brooklyn, was celebrated on Sunday afternoon, August 16, is full of pathetic and interesting incidents. At the request of Samuel Booth, then Mayor of Brooklyn, Dr. Bass was in 1866 ordained Chaplain of the Penitentiary at Crow Hill. Previous to his chaplaincy he had charge of several Methodist Episcopal churches in New York, Brooklyn, and New Orleans; and during the Civil War he was Chaplain of the Ninetieth Regiment of New York Volunteers. Since 1865 Dr. Bass has been connected with the City Mission and Tract Society, and has been engaged in many endeavors of a philanthropic and humanitarian nature. He has made a special personal study of hundreds of convicts, with the object of helping them morally and spiritually while in prison, and of providing them with an honest means of living upon their release. He also conducts correspondence for many, acts as banker for others, and in a number of cases has accepted the burden of supporting the families of prisoners. It has been his rule to provide bountiful dinners on Thanksgiving and Christmas Day for those families entirely dependent. He says the most interesting class of convicts are the Federal prisoners, of whom there are about 400 at Crow Hill. Among the 700 convicts who attend chapel services regularly, almost every nationality and religious sect under the sun is represented—there are a dozen Jews, one Mussulman, and two Chinamen. Among the Federal prisoners from the mountains of Tennessee, Texas, and the Indian Territory there are some who never saw a Bible until they entered the Kings County Penitentiary. While Dr. Bass would not advocate a term in the penitentiary as the best theological training, it is a fact, nevertheless, that four men who only recently wore the stripes at Crow Hill are now regularly ordained ministers of the Gospel. So unselfish have been the services of Dr. Bass that his friends presented him with a purse of $1,000 as a token of the esteem in which he is held.

A New Departure

The wide-awake pastor in a thriving little city of 20,000 people has, according to a Chicago paper, instituted what he calls a "conversazione" in his church, with the primary object of rendering moral and intellectual benefit to the community at large, and indirectly to reach and redeem many of the non-church-goers. His plan is to invite, by printed cards, about two hundred people to the church parlors once a month. The young members of the church are made useful as special distributers of invitation-cards, and have been found quite adapted to the work, which they very much like. The pastor selected those things pertaining to the welfare of the community, and encouraged the utmost freedom of expression of opinion both by those specially invited to speak and those taking part in the general parliament. Special effort was made to secure the attendance of some of the leading labor people, who led in the discussion of the labor unions and their attitude toward organic morality and religion. Such questions as local railway service, the public schools, kindergartens, highways, the public health, and other things in which the community in general are interested were discussed. Several of these parliaments were held during the past winter, with even better results than this sanguine pastor anticipated. We see no reason why this plan could not be made of great service in many churches.

Brief Mention

St. Augustine's Benedictine Priory at Ramsgate, England, has been made an Abbey by the Pope. It is the first Abbey of Benedictines established in England since the Reformation.

Next November the first Catholic Congress ever held in Peru will open its sittings at Lima. A committee, specially appointed by the clergy of the republic, has informed President Pierola to that effect, and he has readily approved the project.

St. Paul's Methodist Church of New York is one of the most desirable pastorates in that denomination in the country, and is now, since the appointment of the Rev. A. J. Palmer as Secretary of the Missionary Society, without a pastor. Considerable interest very naturally is taken in the question of filling the vacancy. Some of the ablest men in the denomination have served St Paul's.

Books and Authors

Essays on Poetry [1]

When one sets out to criticise the criticisms of poetry, which itself is nothing less than the "criticism of life," he feels that he is dangerously near the performance of that supererogatory work of painting the lily and adorning the rose. The temptation then comes to fortify one's courage by peering into some book of necromancy to find out how to conjure up the shades of Sainte-Beuve and De Quincey, the finest of critics, to serve as protectors on this side and that. The Browning Society was a conspiracy to apotheosize a poet before he was dead. It appears that the poet bore up bravely under the embarrassment; he required only one thing of these open-mouthed devotees—that they should not bother him with inquiries as to whether they were correct in their guesses about his meaning. To find out the poet's meaning was the proper business of the Browning Society, not of Mr. Robert Browning. Clearly the members of this Society have attended strictly to their business, and the balance-sheet, "Browning Studies," shows an opulent percentage on the investment. The book contains over twenty essays upon Browning's poetry, and every paper is worth reading. They will never persuade the world that Mr. Browning always used the poetic form, but they ought to convince the candid mind that he had more poetic thought than any English writer since Shakespeare. Browning, like Shakespeare, was a theologian. When we lay aside our St. Thomas of Aquin, we resort to Robert of Asolando. Most of the essayists of this volume exhibit, however unconsciously, this principal purport of his poetry. Thus we find Professor Corson, who deals with Browning's idea of personality, saying at the start: "A cardinal idea in Browning's poetry is the regeneration of men through a personality who brings fresh stuff for them to mold, interpret, and prove right—new feeling fresh from God—whose life reteaches them what life should be, what faith is, loyalty and simple-mindedness, all once revealed, but taught them so long since that they have a mere tradition of the fact—truth copied falteringly from copies faint, the early traits all dropped away." Mr. Bury, in a carefully written paper, shows how the idea of God is the fundamental point of Browning's thought, and Miss Beale, in her paper on the religious teaching of Browning, maintains that it is this idea alone that "first calls out in us the sense of poetry." To illustrate this thesis Miss Beale gives an illuminative analysis of "Saul." Professor (now Bishop) Westcott's paper on "Browning's Views of Life" is not as full as the subject requires, but the author atones in a measure for this lack by some valuable intuitions. And so the book goes on, with a wealth of serious, solemn, and scintillating thoughts that will be valuable for several generations. Most of the essays have the added interest of not being professional criticism, thus lacking that air of perfunctoriness, of editorial omniscience, that cultured Weltschmerz, to be found in the columns of literary criticism of most papers.

Professor Walker studies Browning as he does Tennyson and Arnold, according to the process of the intellectual and spiritual evolution of each. He traces the rise of the dramatic method of Browning's thinking to its mergence in the metaphysical in his later poems. Professor Walker therein slightly exaggerates. Mr. Browning himself is always the chief character in his poems; and as life drew toward its close, and as he had solved life's problems to his own satisfaction, his utterances attained a unity that Mr. Walker calls subjectivism. As for Arnold, Mr. Walker's opinion is true enough. Arnold was born into an age too perplexed and anxious for him. Arnold mirrored the minds of "feeble and restless youths born to inglorious days." He had the poetic form of the Greek, more than Tennyson, a preciosity of phrase that speaks at once of desultory reading and privileged classes. The chapters on the influence of science and social agitations over the poetry of Browning, Tennyson, and Arnold are brilliant—in places more brilliant than true. Mr. Walker will at times sacrifice accuracy upon the altar of rhetoric. But this, in literary criticism, the casuist pronounces to be only a venial sin, because it is always occurring.

Mr. Benson's essays on Gray, Bourne, and Marvell are miracles of fine perception and of delicate phrasing. Blake he is not the man to understand, for Mr. Benson has no feeling of mysticism; also the strictures upon Keble's poetry are contrary to the consensus of the wide world. Keble is not a poet's poet; he is dry, he is formal, and at times ridiculous, but is it not true that he reached the heart of the people? Of the poet Gray Mr. Benson writes: "The stately pathos of such a life is indisputable. The pale little poet, with greatness written so largely on all his works, with his keen, deep eyes, the long aquiline nose, the heavy chin, the thin, compressed lips, the halting, affected gait, is a figure to be contemplated with serious and loving interest—spoiled for life, as he said, by retirement. How he panted for strength and serenity! How far he was from reaching either! Yet the bitter dignity of his thought, the diffident and fastidious will, are of a finer type than we often meet with. We cannot spare the men of action, it is true; yet the contemplative soul, with the body so pitifully unequal to sustain its agonizing struggle, is an earnest of higher things. In the valley of shadows he walked, and entered the gate without repining. All are equal there; and the memory that he left, and the characters that he graved on the rock, while they move our pity, stir our wonder too." In its curious felicity this passage might stand face to face and unashamed with pages from the prose of Pater or of Symonds. Mr. Benson has a vocabulary so large as to permit him to express himself accurately; this we say though mindful of Southey's severity towards the Turkish verb. This essayist studies his subjects carefully, and regards form rather than spirit. A sane, reasonable fastidiousness characterizes his criticism. To him life is a choral dance, or a dithyrambic revel, or a courtly minuet, but not "the soul's sphere of infinite images." He sees gracefulness and graciousness in the world, but not Grace, just as one, in fingering one of Bach's fugues correctly, misses entirely the melody.

When we approach Mrs. Belloc, we enter another world—one that has survived from an obsolete social condition. The walls of this garden of hers are perhaps the walls of the Vatican. It is curious to see how her point of view in every one of these sketches is distinctly Roman Catholic. Mary Howitt, Lady Georgiana Fullerton, Adelaide Procter, and Manning were "'verts;" most of her other people are of the same denomination. Apart from this unripeness that generally characterizes those who have entered the Roman Church in adult years, Mrs. Belloc's simple biographical sketches are pleasing, for the people that she writes about she for the most part personally and intimately knew, and her revelations of intimate matters carry with them all the charm of any betrayal of confidence. However, all the people are now dead.

Mr. Hallard's essays on French writers are well digested and trustworthy, especially that on Racine. He is not so happy, however, in his criticism of Keats and Swinburne. The essay on De Musset is clever, but, like its subject, a trifle depraved. He reveled in that "twilight where virtues are vices." Touching his earlier poems, Mr. Hallard writes so well that we take his words for an ending: "Heretical as these early poems are, most of them have a sad and tragic ending, by which De Musset did not by any means wish to point a moral, but only to adorn a tale. The sadness is but the luxury of grief which young poets affect. He felt, like Edgar Allan Poe, that love and death are the two most poetical things that be, and so he made his lovers come to dust at the end."

The conclusion that we draw from this survey of our poets is that the world is now too much with them. They have not the leisure to reap the harvest of a quiet eye, but are distracted with the unrest of our days.

* * *

The Outlook has always sincerely welcomed Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's books of poems, because there is genuinely good stuff in his poetry. Now that all his poems are collected into one volume, and published by the Century Company, we hope that they will be even more widely appreciated and read. There is a notable variety of style and sentiment in these pages. Some remind the reader of Browning's thoughtfulness, others are artless and have the free air of outdoor life. "The Cup of Youth" and "François Villon" bear marks of maturity. By the way, the latter poem contradicts the tradition about Villon's death. Dr. Mitchell is dramatic rather than lyric, yet one lyric, "The Mother," is touching and strong in thought as well as sentiment. After all, "The Mother" is dramatic in its idea. The sonnet is not a congenial form for this verse-maker; "the sonnet is a moment's monument," said Rossetti, and he was right. Dr. Mitchell is too reflective for a sonnetteer; the sonnets in this book are fragments of thought rather than the flow and ebb of a single impression. As for the rest, there is a multitudinous felicity of phrasing in his lines. It is to be hoped that the critics, who are said to be minor poets every one, will be benignant to this minor poet, for the sake of "love and the gentle heart."

Sir William Dawson is a plausible writer, and he is painfully orthodox. After reading his latest book, Eden Lost and Won, we murmur, as sadly as the poet's advice will warrant, "It might have been." The beauty about the case is that if the higher critics indulge themselves

---

[1] Browning Studies. Being Select Papers by Members of the Browning Society. Edited, with an Introduction, by Edward Berdoe, M.R.C.S. Macmillan & Co., New York. $1.75.

The Greater Victorian Poets. By Hugh Walker. Macmillan & Co., New York. $2.50.

Essays. By Arthur Christopher Benson. Macmillan & Co., New York. $2.

In a Walled Garden. By Bessie Raynor Belloc. Macmillan & Co., New York. $1.75.

Gallica, and Other Essays, By James Henry Hallard. Longmans, Green & Co., New York. $2.50, with such utter abandon in conjecture, the conservative has as good a right—and better. Let us direct our chef of the critical cuisine to serve up the goose and the gander with the same sauce. Sir William delights in cataclysms—of the past. They give large room for the excursions of the "scientific use of the imagination," even to the extent of confirming Sir William's rather narrow interpretation of the Hebrew Scriptures. Dr. Paul Haupt, in an exceedingly absurd theory, locates Paradise, according to the geography of 640 B.C., by making the Nile flow across the Red Sea. Sir William locates Eden on the western frontier of Persia. Both savants are deceived by a childish literalism. Next we shall have a map of Asgard, and a verification of the location of the Hesperides, with the precise spot where grows the serpent-guarded apple-tree. Sir William's work is well meant, but is to be classed with the equally well-intentioned efforts of Ignatius Donnelly and Dr. W. F. Warren, who constructs (with the assumption of cataclysms) an equally irrefutable argument to the effect that Eden is situated at the North Pole. Some people like to read books about the Ten Lost Tribes and the Beast of the Apocalypse and the Lost Dauphin and the place of Paradise. They will enjoy this book, which may be obtained of the Fleming H. Revell Company, of this city.

Not until we took up The Secret of Mankind did we suspect that mankind had any secret from man. The puzzling thing about the literature of life is that continually man walketh in a vain shadow. This is not intended to be a confession of faith in Berkeleyan metaphysics, but as a sigh of fatigue. Our old men will persist in seeing visions, and our young men in dreaming dreams, and it is all patented and copyrighted. Such is not the customary fashion of the exercise of the vision and faculty divine. It looks darkened by the communal sin. Nevertheless, when we read this portentous work, "The Secret of Mankind," we find that it is an apocalypse that we see before us. In fact, the narrative begins precisely at the article of death. It has not the gracefulness of the "Little Pilgrim to the Unseen," nor the scientific interest of Flammarion's "Stories of Infinity," which it somewhat resembles. Through traveling from planet to planet, and holding sweet converse with Pythagoras, Milton, Laotze, and Napoleon, the author, who is too modest to put his name to his book, like John the Theologian—the author, we repeat, in the ghost-world learned the "secret of humanics." If we told the populace that secret, the populace would not buy the book. As we cannot be sure that the writer will get glory from exposing his vision and revelation, we shall help him to get gain. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)

Every one knows that Paul Gerhard was the second Luther and a man of amazing learning, also of some talent—certainly with the talent for study. His writings were voluminous. When quite a young man he wrote a book of pious meditations that have been reckoned as belonging with Thomas à Kempis's "Imitation" and St. Augustine's "Confessions." A new translation of Gerhard's Sacred Meditations has been executed by the Rev. C. W. Heisler, and issued from the press of the Lutheran Publication Society of Philadelphia. To our mind the world has moved further away from the mental standpoint of Dr. Paul Gerhard than from that of Augustine. The peculiar theology of the early reformers saturates these meditations, making them unreal to any but the more conservative German Lutheran. How few sincere souls to-day could be edified and consoled by this meditative emotion: "Consider, O faithful soul, the blazing wrath of God!" and again: "The bodies of the damned shall be hideously deformed, sluggish and unwieldly!" One can only conjecture how the good Dr. Gerhard found out this latter fact. Quien sabe? As a matter of course, there is no question of the piety of the author and of his book, but it seems a thought out of adjustment with the temper and terminology of our time.

New Books

[The books mentioned under this head and under that of Books Received include all received by The Outlook during the week ending August 14. This weekly report of current literature will be supplemented by fuller reviews of the more important works.]

No more readable story has appeared among recent novels than Black Diamonds, by the veteran Hungarian romancer, Maurus Jókai. The fertility of invention and imagination are wonderful. As with Dumas the elder, whom Jókai in some ways resembles, improbabilities and even impossibilities are merrily taken at a leap; the marvelous hero's unfailing wisdom, knowledge, courage, and power surmount every difficulty; half a dozen story-threads are kept spinning without interference with one another; love, stock-gambling, political intrigue, scientific discovery, coal-mining and mining disasters, industrial strikes, dueling—all are utilized in the most vivacious and entertaining way. We are not certain whether this is a recently written book; certainly it is at least the equal of any of Jókai's novels accessible. The translation by Frances A. Gerard is good, though with an occasional lapse into bad English. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)——Gabriele d'Annunzio has been received by some French critics as the greatest of recent Italian imaginative writers. He is introduced to American readers in Myrta L. Jones's translation of Episcopo and Company. M. de Vogüé declares that D'Annunzio is never "vulgar," but his present translator speaks of some of his works as "daringly erotic," and of others as not translatable into English. "Episcopo and Company" may not be of evil intent, but it is feverish, a study of degradation of the most repellent kind, and, while it has a certain power, we can see neither pleasure nor intellectual profit in it. (H. S. Stone & Co., Chicago.)——In A Story of the Heavenly Camp-Fires, by "One with a New Name," Dante, Milton, Cromwell, Bunyan, and other great men in the world of spirits discuss religion, philosophy, life, immortality, war, and much else. Only a rare genius could use this form of presenting thought attractively, and though the thought is often suggestive, we fear the medium used will repel many readers. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)——Without Sin, by Martin J. Pritchard, might have had value as a study of the life of the more cultivated circles of Jewish society in London, had the author rightly developed this side of his book. It is fairly well written, and, considering its main subject, not overstrained or intentionally objectionable. That subject is the delusion of a wealthy and intellectual Jewish maiden that through her the Messiah will come, and the birth and death of a child of whom she is the mother, and whom she regards until its death as that Messiah. The inherent improbability of the plot is as great as is its unsuitability for purposes of fiction. (H. S. Stone & Co., Chicago.)

The fifth edition of How Marcus Whitman Saved Oregon, by Oliver W. Nixon, with an introduction by the Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus (Star Publishing Company, Chicago), has just been published.

The love of learning is growing in America. The people reach out after knowledge, as witnesses the marvelous growth of societies and associations the end of which is to make an education possible to adults who have not had educational opportunities. Added to the list of books wisely written and designed to aid in rending the veil of ignorance is The Pith of Astronomy, by Samuel G. Bayne. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

To have the author of a book hold up to theological students West Point discipline in the matters of dress, habits of cleanliness and deportment, and boldly assert that the manners of clergymen are rarely as good as they should be, is encouraging. The author of Our Seminaries, the Rev. John Talbot Smith (William H. Young, New York), has courage. He sees what too often exists, that the lack of manner and sloppiness in dress and habits greatly limit the influence of the pulpit.

Literary Notes

—The original of "Jess," in "A Window in Thrums," died recently at Kirriemuir.

—The London "Globe" says that M. Zola's next romance, "Paris," will not be ready for fifteen or sixteen months to come.

—Mr. Kipling's new volume of ballads, "The Seven Seas," to be published in October, will contain some new ballads as well as many which have appeared in periodicals since the publication of his last book of verse.

—Mrs. Burton Harrison will edit the new edition now in press of Mrs. Martha J. Lamb's "History of the City of New York," and will add a chapter on the "Externals of the Modern City," taking up the narrative where Mrs. Lamb left off and bringing it down to date. The work is published by A. S. Barnes & Co.

—A meeting of newspaper men was held in St. Louis recently to arrange for the collection of a fund for a monumental tribute to the memory of Eugene Field. It was agreed that the contributions of newspaper men should not exceed $5 each, while the entire fund should not be less than $1,000. Public acknowledgment is to be made of each contribution.

—"Oliver Optic," the writer of boys' stories, who is now at work on a volume that will number up in the second hundred, celebrated his seventy-fourth birthday lately. "Oliver Optic" (W. T. Adams) has crossed the Atlantic twenty-one times and the Pacific once, and has visited every country in Europe and many of those of Asia, in search of literary material for his stories, of which over 1,100,000 copies have been sold.

—The manuscript of "Trilby" is preserved in a locked glass case in the rooms of the London Fine Arts Society. It is said that Du Maurier sold it for a sum larger than most authors get for the serial rights of a novel. The story is written in little exercise-books, but in various handwritings. Du Maurier has a pet theory that all members of his family must take part in the production of his works, and each one wrote at his dictation portions of the remarkable story.

—The autumn list of announcements of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. contains a number of notable new books and new editions, among which may be mentioned the "Letters of Victor Hugo," Woodrow Wilson's "Essays," new and complete editions of the works of Mrs. Stowe and Bret Harte, elaborate illustrated editions of Fiske's "American Revolution" and Thoreau's "Cape Cod," and new volumes by Dr. Lyman Abbott, Mr. Aldrich, John Burroughs, Joel Chandler Harris ("Uncle Remus"), Henry James, Miss Jewett, Miss Phelps, Miss White, Mrs. Whitney, and Mrs. Wiggin.

Books Received

For week ending August 14, 1896

THE J. H. DEWEY PUBLISHING CO., NEW YORK

Dewey, John Hamlin, M.D. Sons of God and Brothers of Christ. 25 cts.

HARPER & BROS., NEW YORK

Jókai, Maurus. Black Diamonds. Translated by F. A. Gerard. $1.50.
One with a New Name. A Story of the Heavenly Camp-Fires. $1.25.
Bayne, Samuel G. The Pith of Astronomy. $1.

STAR PUBLISHING CO., CHICAGO

Nixon, Oliver W., M.D., LL.D. How Marcus Whitman Saved Oregon. $1.75.

HERBERT S. STONE & CO., CHICAGO

Pritchard, Martin J. Without Sin. $1.25.
D'Annunzio, Gabriele. Episcopo and Company. Translated by M. L. Jones. $1.25.

WILLIAM H. YOUNG & CO., NEW YORK

Smith, Rev. John Talbot, LL.D. Our Seminaries. $1.

For the Little People

The Queen's Approach

By Mary Chase Thurlow

Sweet Summer sent her heralds out
To bear the news around
That she, the Queen, was on her way
To her green camping-ground.

First went the bee, a doughty wight,
With his big buzzing drum.
He called to all to deck the ways
By which the Queen should come.

Then flew the jay, a handsome knight,
In mantle bright and blue.
He had a trumpet sharp and shrill;
He told the glad news, too.

The locust came with fiddle-notes;
He drew a single string,
A humming tone that filled the air
And made the woodland ring.

Then all the flower-folk began,
For this, their festive day,
To trim the roads, adorn the paths,
Where Summer takes her way.

Then all the trees their banners hung
Of white and pink and green.
The rose with red festooned her bush,
So fairy-like the scene.

And by the brook the cardinal-flower
In uniform of red,
The pickerel-weed in serried lines,
Their gay battalions led.

Each flower that had a Sunday hat,
A dress of gorgeous dye,
Put on the best that she could find
For Summer's passing by.

And last of all the graceful ferns
And tiny loving moss
Across the spot her foot must touch
A velvet carpet toss.

Now all is done; the roads are gay
With trumpet tones and drum;
In every flower's throat the song,
"Now, dear Queen Summer, come!"

A Story about Torota

By Helen C. Chapin

I am going to tell you of a little girl I once knew. Her skin was not white, like yours or mine, but light brown; and her eyes, and the soft dusky hair that was braided in two funny tails and tied with little bits of red flannel, were brown also.

She was about four years old when I saw her first, and although her little eyes shone, and she showed every little white tooth in a bright smile, she could not talk to me, or I to her. You see, Torota—don't you think she had a pretty name?—was an Indian and spoke no English, while I am an American and speak no Indian. So we just smiled at each other and became friends that way.

All summer Torota had lived in a tent, or tepee, as the Indians call it, with her grandmother, who was quite old and nearly blind. One day, when Torota's uncle was away from home, and only the old woman and Torota were near the tepee, a strange squaw came slowly riding by on a little Indian horse. No one noticed her or saw her go, but when grandma called for Torota to come and bring her some water in the old cup, the little girl did not answer; and though she called a long, long while, and when her son and his wife came home they, too, called and hunted, they could not find their little girl.

Now, the strange squaw was Torota's own mother, although the little girl did not know her, for the grandmother had taken Torota away when she was a little, little baby. Torota's mother could not keep the little girl, now that she had gotten her, but she rode quickly and quietly on, urging the pony around the foot of a mountain, across a sandy plain, and over a river, until she came to a large frame building. This was a school for Indian children, and it was here that I first saw Torota.

How do you suppose a little brown squirrel that was used to scampering up a tree and down again, scurrying here and there through the grass wherever he liked all the happy summer through, would like to be caught and kept in the house day in and day out, made to crack nuts for other people, and when he did go out, only go so far? I don't believe he would like it at all, do you? That's the way it was with Torota. She was like a little wild thing for a great many days after her mother brought her. She was a good little girl, though, full of fun and gayety. Almost the first thing she learned was one of the kindergarten songs, and how she did love Miss Strong, the pretty young girl who taught her, though the only way Torota could show her love was to run and grasp Miss Strong very close around the knees!

She was always so happy and bright that Miss Strong and I were sorry and surprised when we found her standing on the walk one day, with great tears rolling down her cheeks. She could not tell us what was the matter, and, although we guessed everything we could think of, she could not understand, and only shook her head. That same evening Mrs. Percy heard some one sobbing in the hall, and went out to see what it was about. There was poor Torota, curled up in a heap on the floor, crying as though her heart would break. Mrs. Percy picked her up in her arms and carried her into her own room, where she tried to comfort this poor little brown baby and find out what was the matter. At last, Torota said, as the tears rolled down her fat little face, "I'm lonesome; I'm so lonesome!" Good Mrs. Percy rocked her a long time and gave her an apple—oh! such a good one—so that when Torota at last got down, the tears were all gone away. They didn't stay away, though. Oh, dear, no! Almost every day for a week Torota cried and cried because she was lonesome. We couldn't tell what to do for her, or what made her lonesome, until Saturday, the day when every one got a bath, came, and then Mrs. Percy found out all about it.

What do you suppose Torota meant by "lonesome"? Two very sore feet! You know Indians wear shoes made of deerskin called moccasins, which are as comfortable to their feet as stockings. This makes it very hard for them to wear heavy shoes, and poor Torota's feet were badly blistered. "Lonesome" was the only English word she knew that people said in a very sorry way, so she tried to tell us how she felt as best she could.

Mrs. Percy was a very wonderful woman, with as many boxes and bottles on the shelves in her room as a doctor, and among them was a box of the best kind of salve. Some of this salve went on to Torota's feet quickly, I can tell you, and in a day or two she could run around, no longer "lonesome," but happy as a bird, with Mrs. Percy's moccasins tied on her feet with bright ribbons.

Jenny Afloat

The other day there was a collision in New York Harbor between a big European steamer and a grain elevator. A grain elevator is built sometimes on a boat which goes about from dock to dock where there are steamers to be loaded with grain, or unloaded, and by the help of the machinery that is in the elevator the ship is loaded or unloaded in very much less time than it could possibly be done by hand. When this collision took place, there was a great deal of excitement, for a grain elevator is like a high tower built on a boat, and when it was struck it reeled in such a way as to threaten partial destruction to the steamer that struck it. On board of the grain elevator was a cat named Jenny, and when the crash came, Jenny, who had been awakened from a comfortable nap, was very much frightened. The grain elevator sank, but the bag of shavings on which Jenny had been sleeping floated off, with poor Jenny mewing pitifully. Fortunately, a tugboat was not far away, and on it were some men who are fond of cats, and one of them said, "I am going to rescue that cat," and the tugboat started after the bag of shavings and its frightened passenger, and soon rescued both. The captain of the grain elevator says that he will have that cat back, no matter what happens; but the newspapers have not told us whether the captain of the tugboat has yet surrendered his passenger.

The Emigrants

A church not far from a great railroad station has recently been torn down. The belfry was found to be the home of doves and sparrows, who were greatly startled when the workmen began tearing down the church. They flew about in great excitement for a time, and then it was discovered that they had emigrated to the towers, turrets, and roof of the great station. Why is it that they chose this noisy spot? At a point near the station a line of carriages stand all day in waiting for the passengers from the trains. The horses are fed here, and while feeding they spill oats from their nose-bags. The doves come for these oats, and the sparrows for what the doves leave. Some cats have discovered that this is the birds' feeding-ground, and sometimes a bird that flies down for his breakfast does not fly back.

Painted Corners

A story is told of Sir Edward Burne-Jones, the artist, which shows that he loves children very dearly. The story is told that when his small children are naughty, their mamma punishes them by standing them for a few minutes in the corner with their faces to the wall. This seemed to be quite severe punishment to their beauty-loving papa, so he has painted in the corners where his children are punished sprays of flowers, saying, "If he has to go to the corner, I am determined he shall enjoy himself there." It is also said that the artist, when visiting, found the child of his host receiving the same punishment, and that he quickly sketched with pencil flying birds in the corner where the small boy stood.

Pansies

"I love almost all flowers that blow,"
Said dainty Kitty, airily.
"But pansies, when your vase you fill,
They'll make you think 'tis winter chill,
And fairly shiver, just to see
How, close and tight as they can be,
They creep, and creep, and huddle so!"

"The very prettiest flowers that blow,"
Said Sally, "are the pansies dear.
Their little faces blink and wink,
They really seem almost to think;
And when in dish or vase they dwell,
Their thoughts they must each other tell,
They cheek to cheek will cuddle so!"

—The Bookman.

On a Hot Day

One of the New York daily papers recently told of a boy who was passing one of the large hotels when ice was being delivered there. In handling the ice a large block broke and several pieces were left on the sidewalk. The boy stood still and watched the icemen until he decided they were not going to pick those pieces up. He went to one of the men and asked if he might have the ice. He was told he could. He gathered the pieces up and carried them to a trench where some workmen were at work in the sun, and gave the pieces to them. The men were astonished at the offer, and then eagerly grasped the ice. The boy walked on whistling.

Correspondence

Maintain the Gold Standard

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Admitting that it is true, as claimed by the believers in "bimetallism," that the measure of value is steadily increasing in purchasing power, it is yet demonstrable that this works to the benefit of mankind. There are two arguments in support of this theory—(a) the wages of the laboring man will purchase him more of the world's products; and (b) the appreciation of the value of money will enable the men who own money—the men who move the industrial world—to do very much more with that wealth which they possess. Men with money do not to-day lavish it on themselves. The Emperor Nero spent three millions of dollars for one royal banquet. To-day, rather than that waste, our kings of finance would dam Niagara or tunnel the Rockies, or, perchance, build universities or libraries.

Money is spent for mankind to-day. The objection to the concentration of wealth is that the possessor of it may not be a man of wise planning for mankind in his enterprises, or may by his timidity withhold his wealth while production suffers for a way to the consumer, and labor is idle and destitute.

The cry of the farmers! It is doubtful if the farming classes will ever be satisfied with conditions, be they what they may. Farmers must learn to adapt themselves to the changing conditions. They must learn to employ less labor, and to pay less wages to what they do employ. It is absurd to upset the established systems of finance in order that the farmers should receive fictitious prices for their produce. The farming interests of the United States are not the very great proportionate interests that they once were. They no longer can justly demand primary consideration. What our farmers need to learn to-day is to produce cheaply, to keep out of debt, and to live within their incomes, be they what they may. These are simple rules of business, and it is strange that the farmers cannot see it and adopt them.

J. E. W.

Some Questions About Silver

To the Editors of The Outlook:

On the silver question I would like to propound a few questions, which are perhaps the kernel of the argument we offer:

1. Is it not true that if two products have precisely the same uses, their relative value (commercial ratio) will depend upon their relative available quantities?

2. Is it not true that the silver and gold available for coinage in the world amounts to about four billions of dollars of each, coined at a ratio of 15½ to 1 or 16 to 1?

3. Is it not true that for a period of seventy years, from 1803 to 1873, the ratio between gold and silver fluctuated very slightly, compared to the fluctuations since 1873?

4. During that period were not France and the United States coining freely at a ratio not less than 15 to 1 nor more than 16 to 1?

5. During that period were not the mints of England closed against the free coinage of silver? (As they are to-day.)

6. Admitting the statement first made, is not the fall in the price of silver due to the destruction of one of its uses, and not to its increased production, compared with gold?

7. If all the world should demonetize gold to-day, and make silver sole legal tender, would an ounce of gold buy as many ounces of silver as it now does?

8. If not, why not?

9. Will a Mexican silver dollar not buy just as much of any given list of commodities to-day as it would when silver was worth $1.29 an ounce?

10. Will a gold dollar buy only as much to-day as it would ten or fifteen years ago?

The above is our defense. Now for our attack.

11. What rule of honesty requires the United States Government to pay gold for obligations calling for coin?

12. What rule of honesty is violated if the dollar I tender in payment of a debt will buy just as much as the dollar I borrowed?

13. If taxes are not payable in gold, and a few men wish to corner gold, where will the United States Government get gold to pay out when paper is presented for redemption?

14. If from the sale of bonds, just about how long will this bond-selling continue, and how many billions of debt will it load upon us?

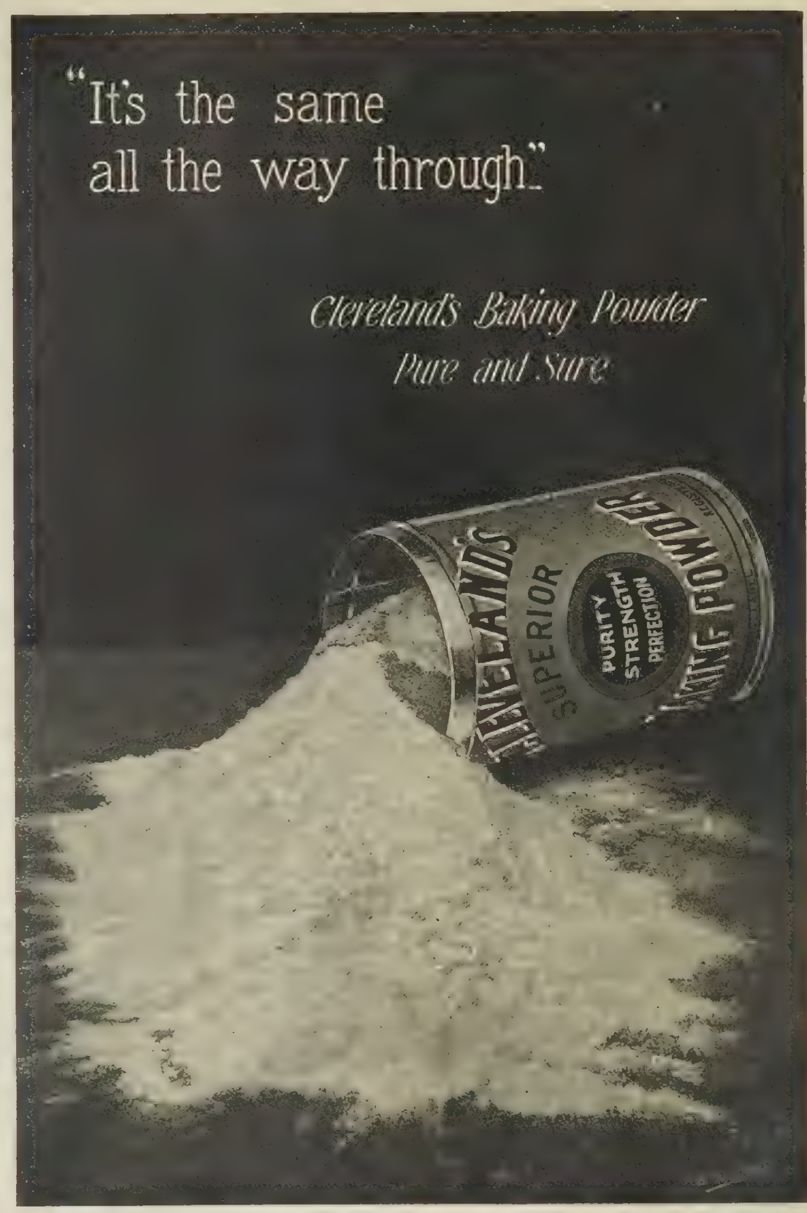
15. If free coinage should bring a flood of silver to our shores, what will become of the silver after it is coined?

17. If it is used to buy our commodities, will that make a panic? Did any nation ever go to disaster because it had too much specie?

18. The mine-owners are alleged to be making large contributions to the campaign fund of the Democratic-Populist party. I believe they are. But what will it profit them if silver does not go up?

19. If it does go up, who talks of a 53-cent dollar?

Lincoln M. Stearns,
Silver Republican.



A Western View

To the Editors of The Outlook:

The silver advocates simply claim that an appreciated currency is as dishonest as a depreciated one, and that in so far as money has appreciated (and no thoughtful student of the question denies that it has) by the demonetization of silver, in just so far is the present standard dishonest to him, her, or it who contracted his, her, or its debt before the change, or rather the effect therefrom was felt, which was not and could not be until the final repeal of the substitute acts for free coinage—viz., the Bland-Allison Act and the Sherman Law.

Since 1893 property in a large proportion of the West, except money and its equivalent, as well as our products, has depreciated from 25 to 75 per cent., measured by the present standard: or, in other words, the dollar has increased in its purchasing power 25 to 75 per cent.

The average farm in the central agricultural States consists of one hundred and sixty acres. One-half the product of such a farm prior to 1893 would ordinarily pay the interest upon the mortgage, the taxes, and possibly a little more. To-day the entire product of the whole one hundred and sixty acres is little more than adequate to meet the interest and taxes.

In Kansas, potatoes delivered at the depot, sacked and ready for shipment, are worth only twenty-five cents per hundred pounds, corn but ten cents per bushel, and oats twelve cents—less than one-half what they ordinarily brought prior to 1893; and this difference in the market value is not due to overproduction, nor to a diminished demand, for in large part the crops were a failure by reason of the drought for the three years last past, and as a natural result this year the demand should be greater and the prices higher. There has not been an over-production, and statistics will fully sustain the claim.

The time to correct a wrong which you admit has been done to the people of the South and West by the demonetization of silver is immediately upon the ascertainment of the fact, but, of course, in that way which will do the least possible harm to all concerned; but to postpone it is but to increase the injury, for then the values will have again become fixed upon a different scale, and then the argument advanced by Dr. van Dyke as to honesty would become many times more potent, and it cannot now be made with any degree of grace on the part of

[Continued on page 400]

First

Last, and always advertised as a true blood purifier, the most wonderful cures on record are made and the greatest sales won by

Hood's
Sarsaparilla

The best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The Home Club

Domestic Training

The experiment of a domestic training school is being attempted in Chicago. Cooking will take up the greater part of the course, though all kinds of work will be taught. The plan to be followed is somewhat that of the trained nurses' schools. The pupils' uniforms—that is, dresses, caps, and aprons—will be provided by the school. The first six months no wages are paid; the students receive their board and lodging only. The second six months they are paid three dollars a month. The second year there will be a slight increase over the second six months in wages, and on graduation each student will receive one hundred dollars. A house near the school has been secured as the home for the students, in which they will do all the work. A home and training-school for young girls was established many years ago in Brooklyn. The system inaugurated there seems practicable. The students, or rather the inmates of the home, were girls placed there by their families because they could not control them, or girls who had lost their mothers; and in some instances the girls were committed to the home by magistrates. Doubtless it was this diversity in the class of inmates that prevented the home from being the success that its projectors hoped. The idea of training was sound, because every girl received an all-round training. She worked one week in the laundry, the next week in the kitchen, the next week in the dining-room, the next week in the chambers; and for the entire time that she was an inmate of the home her work was rotated in this way, so that a girl was supposed to become familiar with all kinds of housework. No attempt was made at turning out professional cooks. The idea was to develop the all-round housemaid. It is this class of servants that is the greatest need of the American households to-day, for in the vast majority of American households but one servant is kept. It is the misfortune of the American housekeeper that this one servant is usually untrained, and any system that will equip a girl to meet the requirements of this class of American households is a system that will meet with warm and hearty approval. It is worth the experiment to try the plan of paying small wages, but the inmates should never be incorrigible, never should be girls committed by a magistrate, but rather girls of from fifteen years up, whose mothers would prefer that they should be trained to domestic service; and such mothers can be found.

Scientific Housekeepers

It is not possible for every woman to take a course in domestic science before she becomes a housekeeper. Nor is it possible for every handicapped housekeeper to attend the lectures designed for her benefit. Many more could attend than do. Consciousness of ignorance is the mark of intelligence. There is not a shadow of doubt that if the economic value of a knowledge of domestic science were more fully realized by American housekeepers, the opportunities for increasing their knowledge would be seized by many more than now avail themselves of these opportunities. In no department of knowledge has there been the growth that there has been in the lines of food investigation, and yet this knowledge has not been used to increase the wage-earning capacity nor the bank account of families living on small incomes. Physicians are preaching constantly on the importance of foods to health, but they speak to deaf ears because the mass of the housekeepers in this country are not progressive, intellectually. The women who know how to preserve the health of the family are few. When sanitation and chemistry in relation to foods become a part of every girl's education, the waste by sickness and disease and death will be greatly lessened. The woman who cannot attend lectures on domestic science has no excuse for ignorance, for books are published at a small price representing the highest knowledge in this line. These books contain information in the simplest, most direct form. Among them is "Home Sanitation," a manual for housekeepers, edited by Ellen H. Richards and Marion Talbot (Home Science Publishing Company, Boston, Mass.). Drainage, ventilation, heating, lighting, furnishing, clothing, food, and drink are all treated in a way that will help the housekeeper of progressive mind. The following motto is given for every housekeeper: "Any invention intended to be a substitute for watchfulness will prove a delusion and a snare."

Reading for Girls

Will you kindly give me a list of books by the best authors adapted to little girls from eight to ten years old—those treating of history, poetry, or fiction of the best order? Can you tell me also of any book relating to the childhood of famous men and women? L. R. W.

"The Life, Letters, and Diary of Lucy Larcom" would offer many pages of delightful reading to a girl of ten. The series known as the "Types of Womanhood" and "Life of Girls who Became Famous," by Sarah K. Bolton, and "Historic Boys" and "Historic Girls," by Elbridge S. Brooks, are designed for the younger readers. There are, also, lives of Miss Alcott that will, in part at least, prove interesting to young readers. "Dorothy Wordsworth" may be too old for these girls, but they should soon be introduced to her. There is a collection of poetry, "The Open Sesame," published by Ginn & Co., of Boston, which should be in every child's library; the first volume is for children from four to twelve years old. For fiction it is most difficult of all to decide. Dickens and Scott should be read at the ages you mention; so should Louisa M. Alcott's books. "Betty Alden," by Mrs. Jane G. Austin, is fiction and history happily blended. Mrs. Ewing has written some charming stories for children. Mrs. Lucy C. Lillie's "Nan" and "The Colonel's Money;" Kipling's Jungle Stories; the "Tales from Shakespeare" and "Mrs. Leicester's School," by Mary and Charles Lamb; "Timothy's Quest," "The Story of Patsey," and "The Birds' Christmas Carol," are all excellent. Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney is interesting to girls of twelve and older. "Alice in Wonderland," "Grimm's Tales," and the "Blue Fairy Book" will interest the younger girls. As far as possible keep the reading for the girls in right relation to school work.

"Reading for the Young," compiled by John A. Sargent, is a valuable catalogue of books for young readers. This catalogue is published by the Library Bureau, Boston, Mass. We may add to the list above given: "Five Little Peppers," by Margaret Sidney; "Century Book for Young Americans;" "Black Beauty;" "Boyhood of Lincoln," by H. Butterworth; "Loyal Little Red-Coat;" "Donald and Dorothy," by Mary Mapes Dodge; "The Bodley Books," by Horace E. Scudder; Mark Twain's "The Prince and the Pauper;" Hawthorne's "The Wonder Book."

Protect the Children

Summer vacation work is becoming more popular with every summer season. One of the serious mistakes that has been made in this world has been the encouraging of small children to set up stands in the street and sell knickknacks and lemonade to the neighbors. Small sums that children collect in this way sometimes prove a very great temptation, and recently three little girls were before the magistrate for having used the money that they had collected for the benefit of some vacation fund for children. Not long ago a group of children engaged in this work were spoken to, and asked to whom they were going to send the money. The only answer any of them could give was, "To a lady up the street." When asked how much money they had collected that day, they said, "Fifty-five cents." Fifty-five cents is not a large amount of money, but if children learn that they can collect such sums of money by putting up a tag and then use the money for themselves without question, it is not the kind of training that should be encouraged. That children can be taught to make an effort to improve the condition of their own class we all know, but in order to do this teaching there must be a responsible head. Surely it is a pity that even one little girl should be sacrificed, even in a good cause. Every one knows, who stops to think of it, that no child of twelve years of age ever recovers her position in her social set who has once stood a condemned culprit before a police magistrate.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

Water-Supply to Schools

Investigation into the conditions of the water-supply of the country schools in Wisconsin revealed five wells out of one hundred as yielding pure water. It is true that God made the country and man made the town, but it is equally true that man has done his best by greed and ignorance to spoil what God has made. Imagine the effect on some school committeemen of demanding an investigation into the condition of the school supply of water! Imagine the presentation of a bill before the town authorities for the scientific care of the supply and waste of water at the school-house! It takes brains to see the relation between the loss through sickness and death and the sanitary conditions surrounding the school-house.

For Cooling Water

The best way to cool water is to place it in a bottle and pack it in ice and salt. After it is thoroughly cool it can be kept so for a long time by wrapping it in a woolen cloth.

Sunlight Soap
SAVES its cost in LABOR ten times over. Rub it on lightly; let the clothes soak a short time; then rinse. It washes Clothes itself and doesn't hurt the clothes.
Pure Soap No Chemicals. No Adulteration.
Lever Bros., Ltd, Hudson and Harrison Sts., New York.

Correspondence

[Continued from page 398]

the creditor portion of the country, which has but so recently secured the legislation which has wrought the result complained of, and since which no debts, purchases, or investments of consequence have been made.

The argument of Dr. van Dyke, as well as the position assumed by you, could equally as well be used in the approval of legislation also refusing free and unlimited mintage to gold, and the consequent results of the appreciation that would thereby necessarily follow.

The Republicans of the West, I believe, are willing to attempt to re-establish bimetallism through international agreement, but most positively protest against the pledge of the Republican National platform to make that a condition precedent, for we believe that there are other ways in which the result can be reached, and that without injury to the honest creditor. The Republicans of this State do not believe that free trade and free silver are compatible, but do believe that under a protective tariff bimetallism is possible. In this State Republicans will vote for McKinley electors, with a declaration for bimetallism, which will be a protest against that portion of the financial platform above alluded to. Dr. van Dyke's letter condemning the Chicago platform, saving and excepting as it treats of the financial question, will be approved by the Republicans of the West. We are one people, under one Government, and must consider the interests of all, that justice may be done. T. F. B.

Silver in Other Countries

To the Editors of The Outlook:

I have been much interested in the letter of Mr. N. O. Nelson on the silver question, and the answers that several of your correspondents have made to it.

Before I visited Japan, two years ago, I was very pronounced in my advocacy of the gold standard, and in feeling that the argument for silver was founded on a complete fallacy. My experience of the conditions now prevailing in our commerce with the East and my studies since have led me to change my views to those of pronounced bimetallism.

In the general discussions of the question I believe some of the most important points are usually overlooked, and that they have been in the answers of your correspondents to Mr. Nelson. Permit me to state what seem to me to be some of the fundamental facts to be considered.

1. The present business depression arises principally from the extreme low prices of agricultural products, by which the purchasing power of their producers is so curtailed that they consume but a small amount of manufactured articles, so, in turn, depressing all lines of business.

2. The principal cause of this is the fact—for it is a fact—that they come in direct competition with the producers of silver countries. The principal consuming nation is England. London merchants can take a certain amount of gold, and, with what will pay the American farmer but fifty-three cents per bushel for his wheat, can purchase sufficient silver to pay the Argentine or Indian farmer one dollar a bushel for his wheat.

3. This dollar in silver is just as good to the farmer of any silver country in payment of labor, or in purchase of native products, or in payment of debts, as it was when silver was worth $1.29 per ounce instead of the present price. This is a fact that every intelligent observer that has been in those countries knows to be true. Of course, it is not as good in purchase of goods from gold countries, but their agricultural classes do not buy imported goods to any extent.

4. This brings out another fact—namely, that the metal which is used as a standard of value in any country makes a fixed point from which all other articles fluctuate up or down, according to the market or supply and demand. Thus, while in gold countries silver is a commodity and now low in price, in silver countries gold is a commodity and is now high in price. The coined silver of silver countries is of just as great money value there to-day as it was before silver depreciated in the markets of the world in payment of local debts or for native produce or labor.

5. This fact operates as a protective tariff of nearly a hundred per cent. upon the products of native factories that come in competition with imported goods. This explains the marvelous increase in manufacturing in Japan, Mexico, and other silver countries. They must take two of their dollars to pay for one dollar's worth of our imported goods. Japan has already begun to export goods that a few years ago she was importing. The flood of Japanese goods pouring into this country and sold at such low prices in every city of the country bears witness to the same truth as to the standard of value. Not only are the natives seizing upon the opportunity for profits, but American and European capitalists, seeing the advantages in these silver countries for manufacturing at such low cost for labor and native material, are everywhere promoting manufacturing enterprises that soon will be in direct competition with the export trade of Europe and America.

6. These facts and the present condition of the commercial world, bound together as it now is by such quick, abundant, and cheap means of transportation, whereby every producing nation is made the direct competitor of every other producing nation, plainly show that the great need of the present time is that the whole commercial world be placed upon the same standards of value, so that these great differences of exchange, which is where it all comes, will no longer disturb commerce.

7. This can be done only by the adoption of bimetallism. All the great Eastern world, over eight hundred millions of people, know nothing of gold as money, and cannot and will not accept the gold standard. By keeping silver at its present low value we are giving them double their natural advantages wherever they come in competition with us, and also deprive them of their ability to purchase our goods.

8. It is clearly in the interest of an importing and creditor nation like England to continue such a condition, which means for her the purchase of the immense supplies she needs in the cheapest markets of the world, the Oriental, or in markets that compete with them, and gives her the advantage of the great difference which exists in the two standards of value, which makes the difference in the rate of exchange, whereby her dollar (or pound) is made two dollars (or pounds) there.

9. It is just as clearly the interest of a producing nation like the United States to do away with this condition which gives its competitors such undue advantage in the market to which they must both go. Only bimetallism can do this.

10. The fact that in the East and in some other silver countries wages of labor are low and the conditions of the masses deplorable has nothing to do with this discussion. Their condition has been the same for hundreds or thousands of years, and depends entirely upon other facts than that they use a silver currency. The low rates of wages they receive only accentuate the difficulty that their competition causes us, because, being paid in silver, even the low wages are reduced one-half when reckoned in terms of gold. In some gold countries, like Italy, the laboring classes are practically in as bad a condition as those of any silver country. V. P.

"Anti-Vivisection"

To the Editors of The Outlook:

I regretted to see Dr. W. E. Leonard's recent contribution to your columns on the subject of vivisection, because, from personal correspondence with Dr. Leonard, I am quite certain that he does not support the views or methods of the anti-vivisection fanatics, now so noisy. If the question of the propriety of vivisection were left to such men as Drs. Pepper, Bowditch, and Mitchell on one side, and Drs. Leonard and Leffingwell on the other, the best interests of society would not suffer; but Dr. Leonard does not appreciate that "anti-vivisection" is being championed by a body of fanatics, half baked in scientific knowledge, bitterly prejudiced, and intolerant of contra argument. Dr. Leonard surely is unaware that the creed of anti-vivisectionists is total suppression of its practice, giving as a reason that physicians cannot be trusted to confine themselves within legal limits. (See publications of the Illinois Anti-Vivisection Society.) Their methods and arguments are substantially those of the late Henry Bergh, of New York, the earliest champion of that cause here, who, in a lecture delivered before a joint committee of the New York Legislature on February 10, 1880, said: "As another proof of the profane extremes to which these dissectors of living animals will go, Robert McDonald, M.D., on being questioned, declared that he had opened the veins of a dying person, remember, and had injected the blood of an animal into them many times, and had met with brilliant success. In other words, this potentate has discovered the means of thwarting the decrees of Providence, where a person was dying, and snatching away from its Maker a soul which He has called away from earth!" This being a fair average sample of the methods of argument resorted to by anti-vivisectionists and by humanitarians generally (bar, perhaps, the extreme of blasphemy), I urge on such sincere men as Drs. Leonard and Leffingwell consideration of the question whether any evils that may arise from the practice of vivisection can equal those inevitable from the views and methods of anti-vivisectionists? It seems to me that laymen can decide for themselves whether advocates of vivisection deserve the charge published by the Illinois Anti-Vivisection Society, "The vivisector is less valuable to the world than the animal he destroys," or "The wretches who commit these infamous crimes"—by thinking what kind of man his family physician is, and inquiring of him what he thinks of the practice. W. WADE.

There's no Reason Why your skirt should look shabby if you use
S·H·& M·
REGISTERED TRADE MARK.
BIAS
VELVETEEN
SKIRT BINDINGS.

They protect the skirt and the shoes and give the richest and most elegant finish.

Don't fail to look for S. H. & M. on the label of every bolt and of the reel especially. Refuse all others.

If your dealer WILL NOT supply you we will.

Samples showing labels and materials mailed free.

"Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new 72 page book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, tells in plain words how to make dresses at home without previous training; mailed for 25c.
S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.

"I never saw a better fashioned gown,
More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable."
—The Taming of the Shrew

Even in Shakespeare's time fashionable gowns were desirable, and in these days our suits and cloaks are popular wherever stylish garments are worn.

Ours are perfect fitting, of splendid quality—excellent styles and the littlest prices at which reliable goods can be sold.

No ready-made goods—but every garment cut and made especially to order by our own method, thus securing that "set" and finish for which our garments are renowned.

We study your needs and your figure. We prepay the express charges to your very door. Our Catalogue and samples are full of hints for the lady who wishes to dress well at moderate cost.

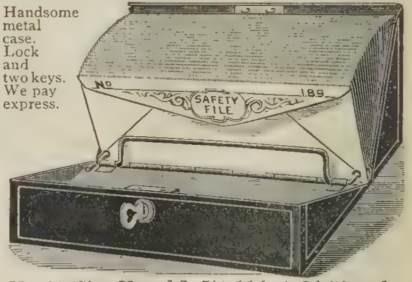
Tailor-Made Suits, $7 up.
Stylish Suits and Cloth Dresses, $7 up.
Newest Jackets, $3.50 up.
Jaunty Capes, $3 up. Plush Capes, $7 up.
Bicycle Suits, $6 up. Fur Capes, $8 up.

A few lines from you will bring by return mail our new Fall and Winter Catalogue, and more than fifty samples of the suitings, cloakings and plushes from which we make our garments. We mail them free, and they will save you many hours of "dressmaker worry."

THE NATIONAL CLOAK CO.,
Ladies' Tailors, 152-154 West 23d St., New York.

Safety Document File

Handsome metal case. Lock and two keys. We pay express.



No. 10 (Size Closed 3x5¼x11 in.), $1.50 each.
No. 20 (" " 4½x5¼x11 "), $1.75 each.
A. C. BARLER MFG. CO. 103 Lake St., Chicago

DEAFNESS

and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums. New scientific invention: different from all other devices. The only safe, simple, comfortable and invisible Ear Drum in the world. Helps where medical skill fails. No wire or string attachment. Write for pamphlet.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Offices: { 155 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
{ R. 171, 1122 Broadway, N. Y.

GOSPEL HYMNS, 1 to 6. Excel. Mus. Ed., $75 per 100; Words Ed., $10 upwards per 100.
Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per $100.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

About People

—Jules Verne's real name is Olchewitz He is a native of Warsaw.

—Dispatches from Constantinople state that the Sultan has conferred the Order of Nichau-i-Chefakat of the second class upon Miss Clara Barton, President of the American Red Cross Society.

—An old man who took part as a boy in the Irish rebellion of 1798 died recently at Clooney, in West Clare. His name was Conway. He was one hundred and eleven years old, and had been a bog-ranger on Lord Inchiquin's estate.

—France's Société des Gens de Lettres has a woman for its oldest member. She is Mme. du Bos d'Elbecq, born in May, 1799, who wrote a number of novels in the forties. She lives at Angers, and still writes vigorous letters to the newspapers.

—Americus Symmes, eighty-five years old, lately died at Louisville, Ky. He was a son of John Cleve Symmes, who was an Arctic explorer and maintained that the world was hollow and that the entrance to the interior could be found at the poles.

—Alphonse Daudet is a southerner, and the cold winds of Paris annoy him greatly. In his study in his house in the Faubourg Saint-Germain a large fire is burning even when the weather is comparatively warm. Daudet is unable to work unless the temperature of the room is to his liking.

—A visitor to Wessex, says "Temple Bar," inquired of an old man if he knew Hardy, and received the following "delicious bit of depreciation" in answer: "Oh, the writen' chap! I've read some of his works. They says 'tis a gift. Seems to me 'tis just writen'—just sitten' down an' writen', and not doen' nothen' at arl. What do 'e do, I ask 'ee? Here be I doen' more proper work than Hardy ever did, an' they don't tark about I, an' say, 'There's a great chap,' like they do about 'e."

—Li Hung Chang is attended by a remarkably attentive servant, who lately was addressed by an English officer in public with "Good-day, commander." "I am no longer commander," he replied; "I am Li Hung Chang's boy." He had been a Chinese naval commander, but, having lost his vessel in the war with Japan, had been degraded and condemned to death. His reprieve was conditioned on his becoming the servant of some high state official. Li Hung Chang has taken him into his service —The author of the beautiful song "Kathleen Mavourneen," Professor F. Nicholas Crouch, died suddenly last week, at the age of eighty-eight, in Portland, Me. None of his many other songs will be remembered; he is famous only as the composer of "Kathleen." His life was a singular and adventurous one. He was at one time and another composer, music-teacher, actor, concert singer, music-hall singer, orchestra 'cellist, manufacturer (iron-mills), manager of opera and oratorio, choirmaster, lecturer, gold-miner, soldier in the Confederate Army, and gardener. His ability and versatility were equaled only by his many reverses of fortune.

—Professor Josiah Dwight Whitney, of Harvard University, died in New London, N. H., on Wednesday of last week. He was one of the greatest of American geologists, as his brother, Professor W. D. Whitney, of Yale, was one of the greatest of American philologists. Mount Whitney, in the Sierra Nevadas, now regarded as the highest mountain in this country, was named after Professor Whitney. He had made geological and topographical surveys of New Hampshire, California, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, and Illinois. He also specially surveyed Lake Superior and the Yosemite Valley. He was an original member of the National Academy of Sciences, and had held his Harvard chair for over thirty years.

—"Few men," says the Philadelphia "Record," "at the age of eighty-six are as hale and hearty as Robert Purvis, the prominent Abolitionist, and one of the leading colored men of the country. Mr. Purvis has helped to make history. He spent the early days of his life in Charleston, S. C., where he was born. His parents moved to Philadelphia while he was quite young, and so most of his education was acquired here. He afterward attended Amherst College, but left at the close of his sophomore year. It was then that he first took an interest in the welfare of the colored race, which finally gained for him quite a reputation as an Abolitionist. He was one of the first signers of the declaration of anti-slavery in 1833, and is the only survivor of the more than sixty persons who were in attendance at that convention."

—The Right Hon. Sir Edmund Monson, British Ambassador to Austria, who has been appointed to succeed Lord Dufferin as Ambassador to France, was born in 1834, and was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford. He served in the diplomatic service from 1856 to 1865. He was at one time stationed at Washington as the secretary to Lord Lyons. Later on he entered the consular service and served in the Azores and in Hungary. In 1879 he resumed his diplomatic career, and was appointed Minister Resident to Uruguay, and in 1884 he was promoted to the legation in the Argentine Republic as Minister Plenipotentiary; later he served in the same capacity in Paraguay, and then in Denmark. In 1888 he was transferred to Athens, and thence in 1892 to Brussels. He was made Ambassador at Vienna in 1893.

Miss Barton in Armenia

The fact that Miss Barton has left Constantinople for a rest with friends in Germany has created the impression that she has closed her relief work for the suffering Armenians and is on her way to the United States. This is not the case. She is in readiness to return to Constantinople in the fall, and has left the relief work in competent hands. All reports from the interior indicate that the suffering and destitution will be very severe as the winter comes on. The experience already gained and the agencies for relief already established will make it possible to conduct the relief work on an increasingly thorough and satisfactory basis. In urging that there should be no relaxation in the relief work Miss Barton herself writes as follows:

"Every practical idea would point to the importance of making it possible for these people to use their time and strength in these summer days and through the early autumn in the best provisional work possible against the cold and hunger of the long winter months, when, without these provisions, nothing is left to them but suffering and starvation."

Dr. Dwight, of Constantinople, writes in regard to Miss Barton: "She has done a splendid work, sensibly and economically managed. Wherever her agents have been the missionaries have expressed the strongest approval of their methods and efficiency. The work done has been of great and permanent importance.

"It is expected that the relief work will become more truly international and official. The Europeans have at last been convinced from their own investigations that horrible suffering will be ushered in with the winter. France is waking up. Germany is going to open orphan asylums at Harpoot, Oorfa, and Cesarea, under the protection of the Government and the care of the Kaiserwerth Deaconesses. Switzerland has Relief Committees at Geneva, Zurich, Basle, and Berne. England is making strenuous efforts to keep up supplies, with a view to have means in the winter when the stress comes."

At least $300,000 has already been contributed by the people of America for the relief work, and about the same amount in Great Britain.

All funds intended for this object should be sent to Brown Bros. & Co., 59 Wall Street, New York, who are the treasurers of the National Armenian Relief Committee and of the Red Cross.

(Signed) SPENCER TRASK,
Chairman Executive Committee.
F. D. GREENE,
Secretary.

Are you Nervous?

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Dr. M. C. GROPPNER, Holyoke, Mass., says: "I am prescribing it in nervous diseases, with the best result. It makes a delicious drink."

New Art Embroidery Book

Entitled "Florence Home Needlework" for 1896. Just issued. It gives explicit instructions for embroidering tea cloths, center pieces and doylies in all the newest and prettiest patterns, including latest designs in the Rose, Jewel, Delft, Empire, Festoon, Fruit, Wild Flower and Leaf Embroideries. It contains full information as to the correct shades of silk to be used for each design, and how to work the piece. Also gives directions for knitting Infant's Shirt and Cap and crocheting a Baby's Bonnet. 96 pages. Over 60 illustrations. Sent for 6 cents in stamps. Be sure to state that you want "Florence Home Needlework" for 1896.

NONOTUCK SILK CO., 86 Bridge St., Florence, Mass.
Copyrighted 1896.

Enameline

Enameline
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO.
NEW YORK, N.Y.
ENAMELINE

The Modern STOVE POLISH.

DUSTLESS, ODORLESS, BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.
Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

Have You Tried TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT. TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

It cures Constipation, Sick Headache and Biliousness in such a gentle, coaxing way that the unpleasant results of more active remedies are avoided. Sold by Druggists for 50 years.

"IT TASTES GOOD, TOO."

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

Bits of Fun

"They say crude oil is becoming exhausted." "Good! Now we shall be spared the infliction of so many crude oil paintings."—Chicago Record.

Jones—I wonder why "churchyards yawn," as Shakespeare says? Smith—Probably some of the epitaphs make them tired.—The Observer.

"Sometimes," said Uncle Eben, "er man puts on er long face an' says he's discouraged when he's simply too lazy to try again."—Washington Star.

The question of the propriety of riding a wheel to church will probably remain an open one until the Pope issues a bicyclical on the subject.—Buffalo Commercial.

"I believe he had two sons; one of them was lost at sea and the other became Vice-President of the United States." "And, of course, neither of them was heard of afterward?"—Truth.

Rose—Couldn't we get up a lottery for the benefit of the church? Daisy—A lottery! Our minister is so opposed to lotteries that he has conscientious scruples about performing the marriage service.—Brooklyn Life.

"What have you named your boy?" "William—just plain William. My wife wanted to name him after that lovely Mr. Bryan, and I wanted to name him after McKinley, so we compromised on plain William, after both of them."—Indianapolis Journal.

The laziest man, the man who never did a stroke of work, who is quietly and uncomplainingly supported by his wife, is always the man who sits on the piazza of a Sunday morning and sings in vociferous tones, "Welcome, sweet day of rest."—The Examiner.

"I say, captain," said a young Englishman on board an American clipper, "that flag of yours has not floated in every breeze and over every sea for a thousand years, has it?" "No, it ain't," replied the captain, "but it has licked one that has."—Youth's Companion.

The infant of the household was in its cradle. The head of the house was at home, peevish and fault-finding. At length he became unendurable. "You've done nothing but make mistakes to-night," he growled. "Yes," she answered meekly; "I began by putting the wrong baby to bed."—Answers.

The very positive man had alluded to somebody as "a crank," when his patient audience of one interrupted him with the inquiry: "What is your idea of a crank, anyhow?" "A crank! Why, a crank, sir, is somebody who insists on trying to convince me, instead of letting me convince him."—Washington Star.

Sir Francis Scott, the commander of the British expedition to Ashanti last winter, addressing his troops expressed his disappointment that they had no chance to show their bravery in battle. "But," added he (and he is not an Irishman), "if there had been fighting there would have been many absent faces here to-day."—Pathfinder.

Dr. Kidd, the Professor of Hebrew at Aberdeen, once had a book presented to him on some very abstruse subject. He read it patiently for a long time, but could make neither head nor tail to it. "But I," he used to say, when he told the story, "I was a match for the fellow. I sent him, in return, a copy of my work on the Trinity."—Christian Life.

In the days when the Clyde was navigable to Glasgow for only very small vessels, a steamer stuck in the mud near Renfrew, and, as was often the case, the skipper was not sparing in strong language at the delay thus occasioned. While waiting for the rising tide, he saw a little girl approaching the river with a bucket to fetch some water. This was too much for the poor captain, and, leaning over the side, he thus addressed her: "If you tak' ae drap o' water oot here till I get afloat, I'll warm yer ear for 't."—Scottish-American.

False Economy

Is practiced by people who buy inferior articles of food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Infant Health is the title of a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Sent free by New York Condensed Milk Co., N. Y.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS.CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

